DAYBREAK IN THE DARK CONTINENT

By Wilson S. Taylor.

For centuries Africa has been groping along in spiritual darkness. Is there any hope for the break of day? Read the book. It will tell you of much that has been done, of present conditions and of future prospects. Bishop Hartzell, the writer of the introduction, says,

"The author is exceptionally well qualified to write on Africa. In addition to extensive previous and subsequent researches, he spent a year as my travelling companion, diligently studying at first hand (on both coasts and in widely separated sections) the continent and its people."

The book contains a number of illustrations showing the methods of life and the changes that have been wrought by the introduction of Christianity; also several maps which are of great value in helping to make the contents intelligible.

AROUND THE WORLD

Germany Wants More Bibles.

Strangest of all strange things is the fact that Germany —the home of rationalism and ultra-liberalism,—is largely increasing its Bible purchases. Mr. Morrison, the active agent of the "British and Foreign Bible Society" in Germany, reports that its sales of the Bible in that country are increasing from year to year, and that fully thirty per cent more Bibles are sold now than ten years ago. This fact shows that God still overrules all things to his glory. Critics may seek to destroy the Living Word, atheists may try to overthrow the faith "once delivered to the saints," and yet God's Word is the one all-sufficient solace of the thousands who believe its promises and trust the Great Giver to supply all their needs.

Disturbances in China.

The recent outbreak of rebellion and brigandage, in the Kwang Tung province, which aroused grave apprehensions, for a time, in the minds of many, is reported, under date of May 3, as having been settled. Railway traffic between Hongkong and Canton has again been resumed. The whole trouble was an uprising against the Manchu dynasty rather than a demonstration against the foreign element. At no time has there been a better feeling, throughout China, concerning the work of American missionaries, than exists at present. State and provincial officials are openly encouraging missionary enterprises at many points, which gives the work a power and influence never possessed before. Surely, a better day is dawning!

Material Prosperity Not Always a Blessing.

Ever since the days when the rich farmer of Bible times pulled down his barns and built greater, comforting his heart with the thought of his great abundance, material prosperity has often been a real barrier to deep and earnest spirituality. An exchange tells about a man in Eastern Indiana who was one of the most devoted Christians until oil was struck on his little farm, and he suddenly found himself rich. He then quit attending church, and when his brethren labored with him, because of his spiritual delinquency, he answered: "A man can not worship God and pump oil at the same time." Somehow it is a hard matter for nations or individuals to get in possession of abounding wealth without becoming puffed up and self-sufficient, and forgetting their dependence upon God. Their possessions become a snare unto them, and they are drawn "into many foolish and hurtful lusts."

Make Plans, but Don't Neglect the Work.

So elaborate are the systematic and carefully arranged methods of work in many of the churches today, that scarcely any time is left for the application of the knowledge gained. Whatever may have been lacking in the work of our fathers,—they did not spend so much time mending their nets that they never cast them. With modern methods and machinery for every species of church work, there is danger lest we forget the evangelistic purpose of our calling. In view of the momentous issues confronting the church today, the watchman on the walls of Zion should call to immediate action, for many of the opportunities will present themselves but once, and can not be put off. The danger of the church today is found in the tendency to quibble about methods, instead of proceeding with action then and there. The planning is all right, but the time has come to work the plans, and to do it energetically.

Actual Results of Missions.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who, by personal experience and research, knows whereof she speaks, says in a recent article that those who criticise missionaries and their work, do not stop to consider the "innumerable small streams that flow from the main rivers of mission work out into the jungles of ignorant, unwashed humanity. Almost any man, woman, or child, in the Orient, of the common masses, so fortunate as to receive an education, can trace it back to the missions." One eminent physician in China, bitterly opposed to missions, is silent regarding the fact that he was assisted through college by an English and also an American missionary society. Even infidels are ready to admit that missionaries have added largely to the world's geographical knowledge, and have, in many instances, given a written language to various races of people who were without one, and would not likely have obtained it otherwise.

Important Legal Decision.

It is not generally known, perhaps, that, before the Catholic Church will consent to the marriage of one of its members to a non-Catholic, the latter must agree, in an ironclad, written agreement, that all children resulting from the union shall be "baptized and educated in the Roman faith, even though the Catholic parent should die." A recent decision of the Circuit Court of St. Louis, however, definitely settles the right of non-Catholics in this matter. In the opinion of the judge no parent can transfer, permanently, his natural rights regarding the training of his child, and the Court of Appeals has just affirmed the decision of the lower court, declaring that such antenuptial promises are absolutely null and void.

A Long-Lost Tribe of Jews.

In eastern Africa a tribe of Jews has been found that dates back to the time of the Dispersion. It is claimed that when Jerusalem fell,—about six hundred years before the birth of Christ,—some of the Jews who were not carried to Babylon, found a home in Ethiopia, where they remain to this day, preserving much of their original history and worship. Although seventy-five generations have followed each other in the busy arena of life, the facial characteristics of these "Falashas,"—as they are called,—are strikingly Jewish. The Sabbath is a day of rest to them, and fifty well-preserved places of worship attest to their zeal in the faith of their fathers. The Jew, wherever found, can be readily recognized, and he is the one living witness to the truthfulness of God's Word.

The Small Colleges.

The criticism is heard occasionally, among our members, that our schools being so small, as compared with the more pretentious institutions, we can not reasonably expect any notable results. No greater mistake could be made. At a recent meeting of noted educators, representing large institutions, it was the consensus of opinion that the day of small colleges, so far from being past, is just at hand. Large enrollments, imposing buildings, million-dollar endowments, may have their advantages, but nothing can compensate for the personal touch and the less intimate fellowship between the student and teacher, so characteristic of the small school. Personality is, after all, a more valuable asset, even, than great libraries, finely-equipped laboratories, and elegant accessories. Each of the schools of the Church of the Brethren is a "home" in every sense of the word,—a real boon for which one seeks vainly in the larger institutions of learning.

Union Revivals Not a Success.

The Chapman and Alexander revival campaign in Toronto, Ontario, held some weeks ago, while well attended and apparently arousing intense interest, does not seem to have been followed by the most permanent results, so far as carefully-compiled reports seem to indicate. The outcome,—much like that of the Chicago campaign,—as tabulated by the Northwestern Christian Advocate, was as follows: "Two-thirds of the pastors reported no additions directly to church or Sunday-school, and no appreciable quickening of religious interest on the part of church members or in the community." While we, as a people, have frequently been censured for our reluctance in taking part in these great union revival efforts, there seems to be, after all, a good reason for such refusals, since, according to our esteemed contemporary, these large gatherings, with their sensational methods, have been "weighed in the balances and found wanting."

The Baltimore Peace Congress.

This notable gathering, which closed its sessions only a few days ago, was one of rich fruitage for every lover of peace. Hereafter the society is to be known as the American Peace Congress, and it will meet regularly every two years. It is planned to secure the practical cooperation of all societies and organizations espousing the principles of peace and arbitration, and thus to further the effectual promulgation of the work. The Congress strongly indorsed the suggestion of Andrew Carnegie, a New York banker, "that all nations prevent, a far as possible, loans being raised by their subjects or citizens in order to enable foreign nations to carry on war." This resolution, if accepted by the United States Peace Commissioners, will be presented at the next Hague Conference for general adoption. As unlimited funds are said to be the sinews of war, it is quite probable that an inability to secure needed war funds may at times prevent, or at least retard, the outbreak of pending hostilities.

An Anti-Gambling Governor.

Occasionally a State Legislature may forget itself and pass a measure distinctly at variance with the best interests of the commonwealth whose welfare they have pledged themselves to conserve. When the Colorado Legislature recently passed a bill to permit and foster gambling at horse races, under State control, they did not take into account that Governor Shafroth is a man of principle, for he promptly vetoed the bill and administered a stinging rebuke to the legislators. He alluded to the passion for gambling as the greatest destroyer of moral sense known to men, leading to embezzlements, robbery, and sometimes to suicide, and closed by saying that in no way could the State participate in such a vicious proceeding. Our country has all too few executives of the make-up of Colorado's Governor. If we had, we might rest assured that righteous principles would abound more and more, to the great discouragement of iniquitous legislators.

The Child Coming to Its Own.

The child is a wellspring of joy in the home, and the most precious treasure of the nation. In past times the rights of childhood were not fully realized, perhaps, but humanity is awakening to its responsibility concerning God's little ones. A few months ago a Child Welfare Exhibit and Conference was held in New York, and it was not considered a sacrifice too great to spend months of toilsome preparation and $78,000 in actual outlay of money for that gathering. Now the same exhibit, with additional features, requiring a further outlay of $35,000, is to be shown in Chicago May 11 to 26. What the child's real world is, and what it ought to be, is to be the one paramount purpose of the Exhibit and Conference. It is a most significant advance in the progress of the race. He who helps a child helps humanity, with a distinctness and certainty which no other help given to human creatures in any other stage of their earth life can possibly give again.

Will Asia Become Christian?

While Lord Curzon, formerly Viceroy of India, has ventured to express the opinion that Asia will not accept Christianity on account of a deep-rooted attachment to existing pagan systems of religion, there are others equally well informed, who express a quite different and more hopeful view. Sir Andrew Frazer, at one time Governor of Bengal, who has known India intimately for nearly forty years, expresses himself as being sure that the influence of Christianity is growing in a most remarkable manner. He thinks that now, as never before, there is an opportunity for most effective mission work throughout Asia. There is a toleration, and even a welcoming of Christian teaching, without precedent. Dr. Imbrie, of Japan, also a man of wide experience in Asiatic affairs, points out the fact that there is hardly any part of Asia where the missionary can not now go with perfect safety, though, years ago, the most stubborn resistance was encountered, and even the life of the missionary was in serious danger. Now, under God's providence, the way is opened, and the day of promise has dawned.

An Alleged Discovery.

Considerable interest was aroused, a few days ago, by the report that the ark of the covenant, together with other articles of importance, had been secretly removed from beneath the sacred stone in the famous Mosque of Omar, in Jerusalem, by a company of English explorers. It was also stated that the seven-branched candlestick and the tables of the law were among the archæological treasures secured. It soon turned out, however, that the alleged discovery had its origin in the fertile brain of the press correspondents rather than in actual fact. It should be remembered that the ark had totally disappeared at a very early period,—the best Bible scholars agreeing that the second temple never contained it. That being the case, the tables of the law, likewise, could not have been in existence either, at that time, and certainly are not now. As to the golden candlestick,—that was taken to Rome by Titus, where it probably remained until 453 A. D., when it was carried to Carthage by Genseric. In 534 A. D. it was carried to Constantinople, from which city it was returned to Jerusalem. Here it remained until 614 A. D., when Chosroes II., King of Persia, took the city, removing all articles of value, and with them,—it is supposed,—the famous golden candlestick. While the various discoveries by archæologists are generally interesting, it is well, at all times, to test the alleged claims by the best authenticated facts of history, to sift out the spurious and untenable.

ESSAYS

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

His One Talent.

He couldn't sing and he couldn't play,
He couldn't speak and he couldn't pray.
He'd try to read, but break right down,
Then sadly grieve at smile or frown.
While some with talents ten begun,
He started out with only one.
"With this," he said, "I'll do my best.
And trust the Lord to do the rest."

His trembling hand and tearful eye
Gave forth a world of sympathy,
When all alone with one distressed,
He whispered words that calmed that breast,
And little children learned to know,
When grieved and troubled, where to go.
He loved the birds, the flowers, the trees,
And, loving him, his friends loved these.

His homely features lost each trace
Of homeliness, and in his face
There beamed a kind and tender light
That made surrounding features bright.
When illness came he smiled at fears,
And bade his friends to dry their tears;
He said "Good-by," and all confess
He made of life a grand success.

Alexander Mack.

An Address Delivered by M. G. Brumbaugh at the Unveiling of the Alexander Mack Memorial Tablet, Germantown Church, Pa., Sunday, 2 P. M., April 9, 1911.

My Christian friends, we gather in this historical church to pay a tardy tribute to a remarkable man. It is rare than one lives in the memory of his kind for a hundred years. It is even rarer that he should be remembered for centuries and with increasing reverence and respect; but when one has so lived that he is not only remembered for a century, but remembered with increasing regard during the centuries and has actually taken a place among the few leaders in the religious freedom of the race, such a man's record is not only remarkable, it is really unique; and such are the facts concerning Alexander Mack, in whose memory we honor ourselves by gathering here this afternoon to dedicate this tablet to the cause for which he lived and to the faith in which he died.

What are the facts in the life of this man,—the things which stood prominently in his life's faith and the influence which he exerted in the history of the religion that makes it worth our while to commemorate him in this fashion? The story of his life is an interesting one. He was born of pious and well-to-do parents at the little village of Schriesheim, not far from Frankfort on the Main, in the upper Palatine of Germany, in the year 1679. When he was quite a young man, the death of his parents placed upon him, by inheritance, the control and ownership of a large estate. He owned vineyards that were both large in area and remunerative in their products. He was also the owner of a large mill which he operated with increasing profit.

In other words, at an early age this young man stood out in his community as a leader, as a man of affairs, as one whom his neighbors consulted and respected and one who had every reason to look forward to a life of comfort and perhaps of wealth, in his own community; but unfortunately for that interesting outline of a possible career, this man was born in an age of religious unrest. He was the inheritor of a condition of affairs that sprang up in Germany at the close of the Seventy Years' War and which terminated in the treaty of Westphalia in 1648. In that treaty three prominent religious factions mutually pledged themselves not to persecute each other but to join in the persecution and the absolute obliteration of every other form of religion that might arise anywhere in Germany. The result of that combination of religious intolerance caused many men to protest, and the Valley of the Rhine was a theater of bloody carnage for over one hundred and fifty years.

It was in the thick of this struggle between the oppressing power of State-recognized religions and the religious societies of a few people, that this remarkable man was born. He looked out over the valley of his nativity, looked out over his own community, his country at large, and he was filled with great unrest. He could not believe that those who had bound themselves by a solemn treaty to persecute others were fittingly representing the quiet, the peace-loving, the tolerant Jesus of Nazareth; and so, without any ado, without any advertisement of his purpose, he quietly disposed of all of his assets and retired with his wife, whom he had married in the year 1700, to the little village of Schwarzenau, where, under the friendly protection of Count Henry, who was a tolerant Prince, he was permitted to live in peace.

Just when he retired to Schwarzenau, nobody seems to know. All that we know is that it occurred sometime before 1708. Here he found gathered men and women who, like himself, were anxious to know something more than the things that then prevailed in the religious thought of his age, and so they mutually agreed that they would cast aside all the creeds of the time, and all the practices of the age, and, with the open Bible before them as their guide, they asked God to lead them into the light. Thus they continued in the study of the Book of God, in prayer, in fasting, and in conference day after day, and perhaps for years, visiting betimes others who, like themselves, had been driven from their homes, and communicating with them and discussing with them the best step to take under the circumstances.

It was in this period of inquiry that Alexander Mack first came in contact with some of the noblest and broadest-minded men of his generation. It was in this period, also, that, by reason of his own training and of his own piety, he early became a leader of those who were seeking the light. He was acknowledged everywhere as one of the few fitted to speak, and so even before the church was organized he was a recognized leader and speaker. Just what subjects were discussed by these men it is not necessary for me, this afternoon, to recite. The story is a long one, but ultimately it resulted in Mack and a few of those who held with him that the proper course of procedure was to follow implicitly, regardless of consequences, the plain teachings of the New Testament Scriptures.

When they had reached that conclusion again, they found a question facing them, because,—although they all agreed that, as the initial step in the organization of the church, it would be necessary to receive the rite of holy baptism,—they differed among themselves as to how that rite should be administered. It was finally settled by Alexander Mack offering this declaration that baptism into the church of God should be by trine immersion and, as he put it, "in running water and with complete submersion."

And so, in this way, the church was organized and sometime in the year of 1708, in the early autumn, a little group of eight of them, after fasting and prayer, went down to the little river in the valley and were baptized in the manner indicated. Mack was not the first of that little group of eight, to be baptized. The others had asked him to administer the rite to them. He protested, saying that, as yet, he had not received the rite himself and he did not wish to administer it to others. In that dilemma they again resorted to prayer and they were comforted in their prayer with the thought that "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." The question then arose as to who should baptize first. After fasting and prayer the four men cast lots, pledging themselves never to divulge who had baptized first. One of them then baptized Alexander Mack, and Alexander Mack baptized the remaining seven, and so these eight members established the doctrine of the Brethren in Schwarzenau, in 1708. There was not a man in that entire group that wanted his name to be used in connection with the church. It was to be the Church of the Brethren of Jesus Christ, and not the church of Alexander Mack, or the church of any other of the group there organized.

The church at Schwarzenau grew and developed. There was also a branch of great influence at the town of Marienborn, and from that there sprang up another congregation at Creyfelt. And when, in 1719, Count Henry died, and persecution was resumed throughout the lower Palatine region, and the entire district round about, the church was sore oppressed to know what to do. It was finally agreed that those at Creyfelt should emigrate to America,—that they should come over here, to this land of freedom and religious toleration, of which William Penn had told them when, in 1672, and again in 1678, he had been up the Valley of the Rhine, and pointed out to these people that he was about to open, in America, a refuge for all those who wished to worship according to the dictates of their own conscience. And so it came to pass that a large group of the Brethren came from Creyfelt, Germany, here to America. They came in the autumn of 1719, and came out here to this little German colony, which was then known as Germanopolis, where Pastorius and his followers had settled more than a generation before. Here, then, this little group found a welcome and began to build again a church of God and a place to worship.

The church, here in Germantown, was not formally organized for some time. The reasons were two. In the first place, when this body of people came they were scattered throughout the Valley, as far up as Falckner's Swamp, Oley, and other outposts of the German colony, and they being in a new country, with very poor roads and the means of travel very meager, it was almost impossible for these immigrants to meet together in anything like a form of worship in one place. There was still another reason why it was difficult for the church to organize, here in Colonial America. There was no ordained minister. The church at Creyfelt had not all come to America and retained there, as its leader, that splendid and eloquent preacher of God, Christian Libe. Among those who came to America was a man who had never been ordained to the ministry, but who had led the singing and was a great leader. That leader was Peter Becker, and, because of his piety and sincerity, it was necessary for him to take hold of the leadership in the matters of the church, and by reason of his extreme good sense and piety, the church was not formally organized here until Christmas Day, 1723. On that memorable day there were six members baptized in the little stream to the west of us here,—the Wissahickon Creek,—in the late afternoon, and immediately following that, in the house of John Gomorry, the twenty-three members, then constituting the membership in this vicinity, sat down to the first communion and love feast in America. Here the men who had fled from Germany, some of whom had been in prisons and in dire distress, were permitted to sit down in this little village of Germantown, after all those years of unrest, and partake of the communion and worship God in their own way.

While this was developing here, in this branch that came from Creyfelt under Peter Becker, the splendid old pioneer of the church, its founder and its first bishop, Alexander Mack, being forced from Schwarzenau, determined to take temporary refuge in that land which has been, throughout the centuries, memorable for its open-hearted hospitality to all those who have been persecuted elsewhere and, just as the Puritans of England fled to Holland, they came in their time of stress and fled down into the heart of Holland, and at West Friesland they continued their work,—the worship of God and the teaching of the faith that was in their lives.

One of the most interesting and yet one of the most difficult chapters in the entire history of the church and in the life of Alexander Mack is the story of his efforts in Holland from 1719 to 1729. We know that he lived there; we know that he spoke German and wrote German; we do not know that he had any knowledge of Holland Dutch, that he could even speak to them in their language. We do not know that he had any means of communicating with them, save by signs and things of that sort until, gradually, he acquired the language of that people, and yet, the remarkable truth remains that in the place book of his son, Alexander Mack, the second, long the bishop of this church in Germantown, there is recorded a list of over three hundred friends whom the young Mack knew during the years of his stay in Holland, showing that, while Alexander Mack was there, an exile in a country and among a people with whom he could not easily communicate, under God's blessing and his own example of Christian piety he gathered together a large number of people who believed with him and worshiped with him.

In the meantime the church here in America was rapidly developing,—first the organization of the church here in Germantown and later on, in the autumn of the next year, the organization of the church at Coventry and then of the church in the Conestoga Valley, and one after the other the remaining churches here. All this time Alexander Mack had remained in that strange land of Holland, and there came into his soul a desire, somehow or other, to get with those of like precious faith, and so he decided, with thirty other families of the Church of the Brethren, to come to America. They sailed from Rotterdam in the spring of 1729. They were sixty-nine days on the Atlantic Ocean,—almost the entire summer,—and late in the month of September, the 29th, the ship "Allen," after that long, stormy passage, came up the Delaware and landed at Race Street wharf in Philadelphia. That is the date of Alexander Mack's coming to America.

When he reached here, what situation confronted him? He had already fled, first from his home country into Schwarzenau, again he had fled to Holland, and again he had fled to America. Three times an exile for his religion. It takes a sturdy soul to endure all that and never murmur.

When Mack came to Germantown he was rejoiced at the development of the church here and at the work of the church at Oley, at Falckner's Swamp, at Coventry, and elsewhere, but he was greatly disturbed at the situation in the Conestoga Valley. There, in the church that was third in order of organization, the leader, Conrad Beissel, had become impressed with certain doctrines which Mack had never taught and which he could never believe, such as keeping the seventh day for the Sabbath and the doctrine of celibacy. So that, before Mack had come into the Delaware Valley, the congregation at Conestoga had divided, and Beissel, with his Seventh Day followers, had gone off to Ephrata to a separate organization. That marks the beginning of the Ephrata Society of the Seventh Day Baptists. It marks also the end of their official relation to the Church of the Brethren. When Mack came, therefore, his first impulse was to win back, if possible, these men and women to the faith which he had taught and which he had lived. He heard that at the Falckner church Beissel was to speak. He went up there and went into the services, and after they were over he waited for Beissel and then undertook, in his Christian piety, to bring about a reconciliation. Beissel told him he had no business to come to that meeting. Of course that made reconciliation impossible. Again, not long after that Alexander Mack journeyed all the way from here to Ephrata to call upon Beissel, to try to bring back harmony and restore them to the faith. Beissel hid himself and would not meet Alexander Mack. The result, as you know, was that there never was a reconciliation, although several years afterwards Beissel wrote a letter, which I happen to have in my possession, pleading with Alexander Mack, and with the Brethren here at Germantown, to be reconciled with them. This was not possible because it contained no expression of repentance. That almost broke the old pioneer's heart. He was much comforted, however, by the return, from Lancaster County, of one of his friends in the Fatherland who had gone to the Millbach, and had commenced to farm. In 1731 this friend of his, from the Fatherland, Christopher Sower, the first, whose tablet adorns the wall of this church, came back from Lancaster County, and settled here as a neighbor to Alexander Mack in Germantown, and who, under the blessings of God and under the encouragement and counsel of Alexander Mack, established here the largest and most important of all the German-American printing presses in Colonial America.

Alexander Mack did not live long after this trying experience of crossing the sea and of meeting with this unfortunate disturbance at Ephrata. He died on the nineteenth day of February, in the year 1735, and was buried in the old upper burying ground, known as Axe's burying ground, on the Avenue here. I think it was in 1894 that some pious followers of his,—members of this and of the congregation in the city,—gathered his scattered ashes from that ground and reverently placed them here, in the cemetery of this church, where they fittingly and properly repose. He was not buried here at the time of his death for the very sufficient reason that there was no churchhouse here at that time, and no burying ground. This cemetery was opened when the yellow fever struck the City of Philadelphia and carried off thousands of its people, and the people opened this ground to accommodate the yellow fever victims in the year 1793, long after Alexander Mack had gone to his rest.

Such, in brief, is the life of this remarkable man. The key-note of his doctrine was this,—There must be in all religious matters no coercion whatever; no man must be compelled, either by law or by church organization, to do that which, in his own conscience and with his own open Bible before him, he feels that he ought not to do. It was a distinct protest against the formalism and the persecution of his time. It was distinctly an effort to establish religious freedom on the basis of individual conscience and absolute devotion to Almighty God, and in that respect this man was unique in his day. He believed it was God's will that people should form a communion of visible people in this world, and so he organized the church, trusting to God to take care of it and to protect it from the mistakes which had been made in the past.

There is another thing for which he stood. I pointed out, a moment ago, that at the treaty of Westphalia the bloody wars were presumably ended. But this treaty, resulting in a branch of ecclesiastics banding together to persecute the others, brought about a new period of carnage in Germany, so that the people of the Rhine Valley had to live under the immediate presence of the horrors of war for more than two hundred years, and Mack, along with other pious men, could not understand how any follower of Jesus Christ could himself be the instrument of persecution. Mack lived the doctrine of nonswearing, the doctrine of peace, the doctrine of good-will to all men, and as he had read these things in the life of the Nazarene, he inaugurated them into the doctrine of the church, so that all the things which the Church of the Brethren hold most dear, came out of the heart of Mack and have been observed through more than two hundred years as he himself formulated them.

Further than that, it is to be remembered that it was not given to many men to establish a form of religion as late in the centuries as Mack established his, which has grown and continues to grow, and which, here in America during the last ten years, has had a more substantial percentage of increase in membership than any other denomination save one. I do not say that we have had more members to join the Church of the Brethren, but that the percentage of increase has been larger than that of any other save one, showing the vitality and the potency of these fundamental doctrines of the Christian Church of the Brethren, as they came from God through Alexander Mack.

It ought to be a cause of gratitude to us, this afternoon, that his teachings have had in them so much of the power of God that they have been a power increasingly to all people. More than that, as you all know, the things that he lived for, the things that brought him to America, the things that he died for, are taught not only here and in the immediate environment of his life, but they are taught today practically around the world; and in the history of the religions of the race no omission of Mack and of his work hereafter can ever be made by any fair and reasonable summary of the work of the Christian church.

In conclusion I want to say, he lived so close to his Master that his whole life was suffused with the spirit of pure Christianity. It is our sacred heritage to follow Jesus Christ, and as sacredly as he it should be our abiding purpose. Let us, in recounting our blessings of today, feel it to be a matter of profound thankfulness that the leader, in the founding of this church,—the church which we love,—was a man so sweet and so gentle in spirit, so noble and pious in character that we may, with deep gratitude, consecrate anew our lives to the religion which he taught, and hold, with sacred reverence, the memory of this man of God,—ALEXANDER MACK.

Going Up To Jerusalem.

BY W. R. MILLER.

Siege and Looting of Kerak.—No. 11.

WE were held here long enough to lift the poor donkey out, nor was it with the greatest amount of Christian patience that we waited, during this avoidable hindrance, for we were passing through dangerous territory and were impatient to pass on quickly. We crossed over the flats and into the bush on the west side. The moon failed us about this time, behind the mountain tops, and we missed its friendly light, still our escort knew the way quite well, even in the dark. We soon turned north along the Sea, crossing the plains of Siddim, and passing by the ruins of Sodom (so-called). Then our course led up a wady, westward, and we began the climb from the Dead Sea basin to the uplands and hills of Hebron. Hour after hour we rode on and on in silence over very rough paths, and through dangerous canyons. Dark as it was, and though our pathway was rough, steep and rocky, there was no accident to man or beast. Occasionally some one, by the light of a match, would note the time. Night seemed to pass quickly. We scarcely realized that morning was upon us, when the first streaks of dawn appeared over the mountains of Moab.

Between seven and eight o'clock our escort halted, indicating that they had completed their part of the contract, and that we were now safely in the hills of Hebron. We paid the bill in mule flesh, for during the afternoon of the day before the Arabs looked the mules over, selecting one which they would be willing to take as pay for the armed escort. That was to place us in safety on the other side. This animal we contracted for with the muleteer who owned him, the price to be paid being $64, payable as soon as we reached Jerusalem. Here we turned the mule over to the Arabs. One of the foot-men, riding the mule, returned with the rest of the escort to their camp, and we, led by one of the Hebron shopkeepers of Kerak, moved on westward. Somehow, that morning, the air seemed so pure, and I never breathed with so little difficulty as when we were riding over those hills of Hebron in safety.

No stop was made until after midday, when we must halt to feed and water the animals. Soon we were in the saddle again, pushing on to a camp of Arabs, whom we hoped to find south of Hebron. About four o'clock we sighted their camp, and made straight for it. Here we found the warmest Arab reception in our experience, thus far. A tent was placed at our disposal, as soon as a flock of sheep could be driven out. They actually swept the place after the sheep had been put out, and we soon made ourselves comfortable. A fire was made in our midst, green coffee was roasted over this fire, the coffee pulverized at once by pounding, and Arabic coffee made and served from the berry, while we waited. We had been in the saddle for eighteen hours, excepting for the short time we stopped to feed the horses, and it will go without saying, that we were tired, yet we stood the journey remarkably well; especially was this true of the ladies of the party. We began the ride Saturday evening at ten o'clock. Riding the remainder of the night and all day Sunday, until four P. M., made a rather long time to sit astride a horse, even when roads and conditions are favorable. We all praised the Lord for the power of endurance with which each one of us was blessed. We not only saved us from the manifold dangers to which we were exposed, but gave us courage to face these dangers, and powers of endurance to stand easily the hardships that came to us. Even after the very fatiguing ride, our cooks soon had the evening meal ready, to which we did justice, and at an early hour we were in bed. One member of the party said he had taken cold, and thought of taking a little quinine; however it was thought best to wait until morning. During the night I heard some very hoarse coughing, and other evidences of a severe cold, and I concluded the quinine surely had been taken. When daylight dawned, I uncovered my head to take in the surroundings, and found a sheep lying at my head. It was this intruder that had been coughing. This old lady, rebelling at being put out of her warm sleeping place into the chilly night air, had quietly crept back during the night, and made her bed where I found her in the morning.

Now, for a moment, I will refer to the friendly camp at the south end of the Sea. During the afternoon (Saturday), there came into camp six Hebronites, who had been shopkeepers in Kerak. They had made their escape from the city on Friday morning, after their shops had been looted, but their lives had been spared. For some reason, or other,—I did not learn what,—the Hebronites enjoy certain privileges among these Arabs. For instance, they may pass through the territory of any of these tribes and not be molested; also in Kerak, during this rebellion, all other shopkeepers were killed with their families, while the Hebron men were saved. In coming to our camp, they passed by Swalim and his tribesmen, who caught and stripped them of everything in their possession, and they came to our camp with only their shirts on. These men reported the streets of Kerak full of dead men; also that the Arabs were fighting among themselves and killing each other over the loot. At the time they left the city, the Governor was still a prisoner in his house, protected by the guns from the Castle.

The remainder of our story is short. We left the last camp,—our sixth night with the Bedouins,—for a six-hour journey to Hebron, and reached there about noon. We brought the first news from Kerak, and every one seemed wild for some intelligence from the besieged city. We soon learned that our friends in Jerusalem were in great suspense about us. So Ralph and I quickly watered and fed our horses, and without lunch, rode to Jerusalem in less than four hours,—a distance of some twenty-two and a half miles, mostly up grade, in order to relieve any and all anxiety. Indeed, when we came to the city, we found the excitement intense, and greater than we supposed.

The Hon. Wm. Coffin, American Consul at Jerusalem, had taken an active interest in our welfare. While we were amid the scenes of peril, he wired the Governor of Damascus that we were in Kerak, and demanded our rescue and protection. The Governor notified the army officers who were marching to Kerak to look for and save the Americans. I know the Consul has the gratitude of every member of the party.

The remainder of our party came up from Hebron to Jerusalem the next day. You may be sure we were as happy and grateful a little band of pilgrims as ever sojourned in the Holy City. Several things still remain to be told, which will be mentioned in our next and final paper.

Present Address, Box 564, Nappanee, Ind.

Our Field, Opportunities and Needs.

This paper was prepared by order of the Field Committee in India. It was read before the General Board at their April meeting and produced a profound impression. Feeling that the Brotherhood should better understand conditions in India, they decided that this paper should have the widest possible circulation. Anyone desiring the same in leaflet form for free distribution can procure copies by addressing the Board at Elgin, Ill.

THAT the field of the Brethren in India is a field of opportunities is a growing impression upon all your missionaries. Further, many opportunities, now open to us, may be closed in the not far distant future, making it imperative that the church arise in the fullness of her strength and claim these opportunities for the Lord.

We are your representatives. We see the wide-open doors and believe that God is calling the church to witness great things. The field is rapidly whitening unto the harvest, but the missionaries will be able to go in and reap only as the church sends recruits, and the means to supply them with the necessary equipment. The responsibility of this great enterprise reaches to every church and home in the Brotherhood. Hold up our hands, and, lifting your hearts in intercession, see the salvation of the Lord. "Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it can not save; neither his ear heavy, that it can not hear."

This is not only a great enterprise, with physical requirements such as "consecrated pocketbooks," but it is a great conflict with Satan. He will contest, and is contesting, every inch of the ground, and it behooves the church to be a united prayer band, interceding at the Throne of Grace for men to be sent into the conflict, for a speedy victory over sin and unrighteousness and for a mighty turning of these people unto the Lord.

Below is a survey of the field and its opportunities, together with our needs as they should be met within the next few years.

"Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to the harvest." "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

Survey of the Field.

1. Territory nearly 200 miles long and seventy-five miles wide, stretching from the Narbudda River on the north to near Bombay on the south, and from the Arabian Sea on the west to the boundaries of Khandesh and Nasik on the East.

2. In addition we have in Khandesh, to the east of Dangs, the populous county of Pimpalner, the natural outlet to East Dangs.

3. Excepting the I. P. Mission at Surat and nearby Bardoli, and a small mission to the south of Bulsar, we have this large territory to ourselves.

4. The total population is upwards of 1,060,000, with well-nigh unto 900,000 of these illiterate.

5. Towns and villages, nearly 3,000. Towns and villages occupied by missionaries and native workers, less than 100. Towns and villages in which Christians live perhaps number 150 more.

6. Of the total of more than 1,000,000 souls, more than 300,000 are of the aboriginal classes and low castes. These are our reachables.

Opportunities—Evangelistic.

1. Fully half of the total population would be ready listeners to the gospel message, while upwards of one-third are such that we could well hope would accept, were the field well manned and worked.

2. The vast, continuous stretch of territory, occupied largely by these reachables, is virgin soil, unspoiled by long contact with the influences of railways, etc.

3. It is the opportunity for the Brethren church to double and redouble her membership. The Brethren church in India need not be a "minority church." We have the same opportunities for large results that any other church or mission has. Divine enthusiasm, consecrated wealth, and the united prayers of the entire Brotherhood will bring forth marvelous results.

4. In Raj Pipla State the Christian community has gained a social status above that of the surrounding heathen Bhils. The sentiment in favor of Christianity is growing, and the amount of evangelistic effort among the 75,000 Bhils, open to the missionary, is limited only by his own strength, workers, and means at his disposal.

5. At Ankleshwar the motto is, "The Bhils for Christ." Hundreds have their eyes on him. Every few days they are coming in from the villages and begging to be received into the church. These report numbers of others of the same mind. The question of raising up workers able to teach and shepherd these people is the burden of Bro. Stover's heart, day and night. The large caste of Kolis is also very hopeful.

6. At Vyara the door is opening. A comparatively large number of the poor have been educated in the Gaekwar's schools. Several have been baptized. Others are influenced and we hope that these will be the source of the workers for the evangelization of their own people, 60,000 strong. In one village six of the best and most influential men have lately become Christian.

7. Dangs is the opportunity of giving a people low down in the scale a Christian civilization. The whole population is illiterate and steeped in superstition and idol worship. Several have been baptized.

8. From an evangelistic standpoint Bulsar and Jalalpur Counties are our hardest sections, though the large caste of fisher people along the coast is a hopeful class.

9. Pimpalner, with its 56,000 population, and a large number of the poor and oppressed, offers excellent opportunities for evangelistic effort. Only a few of the upper classes are literate.

10. Bansda, Dharampur and Jawar are native States with a total population of more than 175,000, and yet untouched by the Gospel.

11. In Chikli and Mohwa Counties are thousands of Dubloes. These are practically in a state of seridom and are very superstitious. At Vyara several of this same class have become Christian, and we can hope that in time there will be large results from among these people.

12. Dahanu and Vada offer large opportunities for the heralds of the Cross. At the former place the openings are increasing day by day. A number have applied for baptism.

NEEDS.—You can help us grasp these opportunities for winning thousands to the cause of Christ by consecrating and sending FIVE missionaries; by increasing the general fund to meet the increasing miscellaneous expenses; by giving $75 a year for the support of lay-evangelists and assistants; $40 for houses in villages for workers and for temporary assembly rooms.

Opportunities—Educationally.

1. Nine hundred thousand illiterates! What an opportunity for primary education, the lever to evangelism! Opportunities for thousands upon thousands of Christian teachers.

2. Likewise the opportunity for directing the higher education of these people into Christian channels. Boarding schools, high schools, training schools. Bible schools and a Christian college are the possibilities of the field.

3. Raj Pipla, Dangs, and Pimpalner, Bansda, Dharampur, Dahanu and Jawar, with an aggregate population of over 400,000, are territories in which the education of large numbers of the "depressed classes" is entirely at the disposal of the church and her missions.

NEEDS.—To meet these many opportunities it is necessary that we raise up and train a large force of indigenous workers. The calls for teachers and evangelists are more than we are now able to supply. Raw material must be taken and shaped into efficient instruments for God's service. To this end the Bible and training school are a necessity. A dormitory of twenty rooms at $120 each must be erected soon. Besides these we need $120 a year for an assistant Bible teacher; $160 a year for head master for teachers' training school; $100 a year for assistant master for teachers' training school, and $60 a year for village schools.

Opportunities—Medical.

1. A general hospital for both men and women. Two doctors, preferably man and wife, together with two nurses.

2. Medical evangelists will find large, open fields. Raj Pipla, with its more than 100,000 people, is a wide-open door for the skilled physician.

3. At Vyara the medical evangelist would soon find himself the most prominent man among another 100,000 or more people.

4. At Dahanu is an equally enviable field for the missionary doctor. Bansda and Dharampur,—contiguous territories with about 150,000 people,—present a pressing opportunity for the doctor and his message of love.

5. Likewise doctors at Pimpalner, Ankleswar, and Vada would find equally open fields and abundant opportunities for worthy service.

6. A qualified nurse with each doctor. Other qualified nurses will find unlimited opportunities as they go from place to place to bear the message of salvation.

NEEDS.—Ten thousand dollars for general hospital. Besides that we will need funds for equipment, outbuildings, and large, roomy quarters for the American workers. Each medical evangelist will need living quarters, dispensary and furnishings and an itinerary equipment.

Opportunities—Industrially.

1. The mass of the people are not only illiterate, but crude in their manners and customs. Industrial improvement must follow in the wake of evangelization, if we hope for the future church to be self-supporting and self-propagating.

2. The opportunity of putting our Christian community to the front in the present industrial awakening.

3. Christian farm colonies at Vuli, in Raj Pipla, at Chakdara and Thuti, in Vyara District, and at Chahkal in Dangs. Bardipada in extreme North Dangs is the only opportunity for river irrigation. It is yet untouched, but the Government would help in the enterprise.

4. The opportunity of making our central industrial establishment at Bulsar the supplier of leaders in all kinds of industrial work throughout our large field.

NEEDS.—Three thousand dollars to enlarge and develop the general industrial establishment work, as newly approved and organized. (One thousand dollars already received, $2,000 yet needed, $1,000 to help mutual aid societies.) People are poor and not able to raise a sufficiently large working capital. Anklesh-war already has one of these but badly needs support. Others will be organized as soon as conditions are satisfactory. Until such a time we must help as best we can. Some of your missionaries are greatly hampered because they must help the needy from personal allowances. Two thousand dollars for lands is needed at several stations. Land is rapidly rising in value. Mission stations soon become building centers and soon the mission must pay exorbitant prices. Such has been our experience at Bulsar already, and unless we are careful will have to be repeated at other places.

A small printing outfit will be a great help in all departments of our work and will be greatly appreciated.

The above is a brief outline of the opportunities of the field and some of the physical requirements.

But let us remember that the salvation of the heathen and the training of a people in the way of righteousness can not be done alone through the medium of "hard cash." "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." "No man can come to me, except the Father . . draw him . . ." Any spiritual enterprise which leaves out God is doomed to failure. He it is who opens the field and makes ready the harvest. He it is who sends the laborers. He it is who supplies the power and strength. It is ours to "pray the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest," and to supply their physical wants.

Is the World Growing Better?

BY JAS. A. SELL.

SINCE the introduction of sin into our world man is as prone to evil as the sparks are to fly upward. The effect of sin is to harden the heart and prepare it for all kinds of wickedness, and if there is no restraining power, the tide of sin sweeps onward, deepening and widening into a seething, boiling river of corruption.

There is nothing that is too pure and sacred for its foul and putrid touch. In fact, it seeks the highest and purest things, on the assumption that if the river is made foul at the fountain, it will be the more destructive and the harder to make pure again on its onward flow. Every page on the world's history is stained with the crimson color of shame and crime. Reforms have been introduced at different times. Sometimes conditions have grown better and then, again, worse.

The greatest reformatory movement the world ever knew was commenced by the Carpenter of Nazareth. His system was new and entirely different from anything ever yet tried. It was not only new and unpopular, but was fiercely assailed. It also found supporters who lived out its principles and taught them to others.

The story of the Babe in the manger, the song of the angels, "Peace on earth, good will to men," the visit of the Wise Men, guided from a distant country by a star; the boyhood, useful life, ignominious death and glorious triumph of Christ over death and the grave, has been told far and wide and has had a tremendous influence in the world. It has changed the attitude of men and nations towards each other.

The change has been simply marvelous. Its gentle but powerful influence has affected many people who are not even orthodox in their faith. Wherever it goes, its reforming influence and uplifting power is felt.

In this respect the world is certainly better now than in time gone by. Nations that once regarded each other as foes are now exchanging commodities on friendly terms. While wars have not entirely ceased, they are becoming less frequent and the burden of the angel's song is becoming more and more a reality.

As the Christian religion advances, human slavery disappears, institutions of learning with the attendant advancement in the useful arts, homes for the poor and unfortunate, humane treatment of prisoners, protection in the ownership of homes, and many other great privileges and blessings, go hand in hand, as the legitimate fruits of principles of well-doing.

Surely this is the golden age of the world! But whether the world is really growing better in true, vital piety, is an open question. Some affirm while others, as stoutly, deny. It cannot be denied that there are gigantic evils. Their force is seen and felt on every hand. The conflict between good and bad is on, and will continue while time lasts.

We, as Christians, are assured by our Leader that the final victory will be ours. Just how and when it will come, is not so plain. The star of hope is still going before the wise, and if they follow, it will fill the world with its glory.

"Shine on beautiful star."

Rights of Committees Sent By Annual Meeting.

BY N. J. BRUBAKER.

Has a committee from Annual Meeting to a local church the right to urge members of adjoining churches who are interested, to vote upon the acceptance of their decision and to coerce them to submit to their decision under penalty of being expelled if they refuse to submit? —Query to the Annual Meeting, published in Messenger, page 234.

THE circumstances giving rise to the query are substantially as follows: A committee from Annual Meeting was sent to a local church to adjust difficulties. Some of those, presenting charges, were members of the said congregation, while others were of adjoining congregations. There were charges and counter-charges.

When the complaints were all presented, the committee rendered their decision. All members present were urged to give their voice as to whether the report should be accepted. Both the members of the local church and those in attendance from adjoining churches were urged to vote, whether to accept the report or reject it. About seventy voted to accept, while thirty-two voted to reject it.

Thereupon all those who opposed the report were held amenable, and pressed to submit, under no other alternative than disfellowship.

Now the query involves several very important principles of church government:

First, have members of adjoining churches the right to pass upon the decision, rendered by an Annual Meeting committee to a local church?

It would seem most apparent that such a precedent would make it possible for adjoining members to thwart the purpose of any such committee and thus stand between the local church and the Annual Meeting, for, were it known that all who desired to attend at the hearing of a report, might vote to accept or reject, there would be no limit to the numbers who might vote and thus override any church or any committee. Adjoining members, who are implicated in the charges and found guilty, ought to have the right to acquiesce or reject, but to let all others do so is a violation of the rights of the congregation.

Secondly, when does the decision of an Annual Meeting committee become final? If it is final as soon as made, and will allow of no rejection nor recourse, like a decision from the Supreme Court, then, of course, all who refuse to submit to it must be dealt with. In that case there could be no way open to rectify a miscarriage of justice through improper investigation, partiality, or undue influences. While this discussion does not impugn the motives of any committee, nor any participants in the matter cited, it does insist that a vote of thirty-two against a report indicates the probability that the conclusion reached is not clearly in harmony with the evidence presented.

Now, shall those who conscientiously believe the decision rendered was not fairly and substantially grounded, be compelled to submit to the report at this juncture? If so, our government is not democratic but commissionary. To be really democratic it would be necessary, in case the committee's report were not accepted unanimously, to present the report to Annual Meeting, to be passed upon by that body. If accepted by Annual Meeting, then all dissenters, found guilty of unchristian conduct, should submit or suffer expulsion. But those who are not found guilty of unchristian conduct in the "findings" of the committee, could not be coerced into unanimity of judgment any more than all minorities at Annual Meeting can be coerced into agreement with the majority.

Guilty men must be made to reform, or else be punished, but it is not an offense, in a Christian government, for every man to vote, when called upon, according to his sincere convictions. If he may not vote that way, he should not be permitted to vote at all. If the decision of an Annual Meeting committee is finally when not unanimously accepted, before it is approved by Annual Meeting, then it would be possible for a committee to arbitrarily overrule a large number of members who conscientiously believe the decision in error, and these members would have no recourse whatever.

It would seem that the genius of our church government demands that local congregations should not be interfered with in matters of their own, and to permit adjoining members, who are neither accused nor accusers, to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of a committee's report, would subvert the very principles of local self-government. It is also quite apparent that no committee's report should, when not unanimously received, be considered final until approved by Annual Meeting.

It is also a violation of democratic government to coerce acquiescence with a given decision, when those who dissent from the decision were not found guilty by the decision, but whose only part in the matter was conscientiously to register their votes against the conclusion reached.

For a committee from Annual Meeting to submit their report to a local church for acceptance or rejection, implies that those who vote have a legal right to accept or reject, and are under Christian obligation to vote as their judgment determines. For a committee to jeopardize the membership of those who exercise such right,—those who are under no condemnation,—without first having their report indorsed by Annual Meeting, is, in effect, to place the fellowship of members, adjoining churches, Districts, and even Annual Meeting itself, in the hands of a committee which might become arbitrary. He that is sent might become greater than they who sent him. The committee would be the supreme power of the church government. This is not in harmony with the genius of our church government. "Tell it to the church" means, in our practice, the whole body, duly assembled in Conference.

The proper solution of this query involves: (1) The non-interference of adjoining members, when neither accused nor accusers, in local church matters. (2) The finality of an Annual Meeting committee's decision, whether it, when not unanimously accepted, may be final without first having been approved by Annual Meeting, or, in other words, the question whether the committee or the Conference is the supreme authority in our church government. (3) The right of a committee to compel uncondemned dissenters to submit to their report before first having their report approved by the Conference which sent them.

THE ROUND TABLE

Love Feast in the Upper Room.

BY I. N. H. BEAHM.

It is a coincidence that many of our churches are so built as to have both a basement and an upper room, in the way of an auditorium, or place of worship. Nevertheless, it is strikingly true in so very many instances. It is unfortunate as well as not properly significant when the love feast itself is observed in the basement, or the lower room.

In addition to some excellent thoughts that have already appeared in the MESSENGER on this matter, I venture a few suggestions. The first love feast as we have it in the Christian era was on a mountain top. It was on Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, which place is the high point of the city, more than a hundred feet higher than Mount Moriah, the site of the Temple. Therefore we have an upper place and an upper room on the upper place.

It is also true that the love feast at Troas was in an upper room. The upper room in Palestine was the guest chamber. The Shunammite built an upper room as the guest chamber for the prophet Elisha, It became customary, therefore, to put the guest into an upper room.

The love feast, in the festivity aspect of the case, is a wedding feast, and all in attendance are guests at the wedding feast. The guest chamber idea seemed to be a very prominent one in the Savior's mind. "The master saith unto thee, Where is the guest chamber?" Luke 22: 11. This interpretation puts the most beautiful coloring on the Lord's supper. I don't like to say, however, that this was most important; but it was one of the attending circumstances which gives a halo and beauty of interpretation, evidently of happiest consideration.

Again, the upper chamber seemed to be the chamber of life. It was the case at Troas. It was the case of the prophet in Shunem, in bringing to life the woman's son. It was the case at Joppa in bringing to life Dorcas. So, while the upper chamber was used as a chamber for the dead, as things then were parting guests, it also was the chamber of death. And the upper room service at Jerusalem, as instituted and observed by our Lord, was largely fraught with the idea of death and the idea of life. The upper chamber is the chamber of death and of life. That is our love feast.

It is exceedingly interesting, therefore, to observe the life and death association of the guest chamber, that is, of the upper room. The entire Christian Passover, in its threefold aspect of feet-washing, the Lord's supper, and the holy communion, serves the highest possibility of seeing and getting into the highest spiritual life. And even if this great triune service is observed on the first floor, it should be, spiritually, an upper room service to every Christian. In spirit they should not be in the basement, but in the upper room,—in the guest chamber.

Now it follows that every material condition and suggestion as to the beauty, the significance and the spirituality, may tend to improve the occasion with the membership and the fellowship. Give the love feast every material advantage in the way of order, quiet, and symbolic intent. I like the church with a basement, and the upper room for worship and love feast occasions.

Two Ways Out of Trouble.

BY J. G. ROYER.

MORE or less trouble comes to every child of God. There are always at least two ways out of trouble.

Of course the first and best thing to do when one is in trouble is to tell God about it,—just as you would tell it to a friend. He hears.

Here is a young Christian. He is forty miles away from home. One day something happens that brings him into trouble. He knows his father can help him out of it. What does he do? Why, he goes to the telephone, calls up his father and tells him all about the trouble. Well, we can speak to God as really as we can speak to an earthly father; and he hears, too. If we can learn to put our trouble into God's hands, and are willing to leave it there, we shall escape a great deal of useless worry.

But there is another thing we may do when we are in trouble. We may try to help somebody else and so help ourselves.

I read about a man who was in great trouble and distress. He brooded over his trouble day after day, until he became very much disheartened. He felt that he was an utter failure,—not fit to live. In this frame of mind he wandered down to the river one day and stood on the bridge, intending to throw himself into the water and end his life.

As he stood there, gazing into the dark water that flowed so silently below, some one threw a little dog from the bridge into the water. The man forgot the desire to destroy his own life in the thought of saving the dog. He at once sprang into the water and rescued the little fellow. Then he went home.

So, if we serve others, we shall find help and healing for ourselves. Indulging in the feeling of discouragement, never helped any one over a difficulty, and never will. The child of God has a sure refuge in time of trouble. "In the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me." "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust." "God is my strength and power." "He is the saving strength of his anointed." "Submit yourselves therefore to God." "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

At Ninety Years.

BY D. L. FORNEY.

OF the aged fathers and mothers of Israel, in our Brotherhood, but few have attained the age of Eld. Samuel Haldeman and wife, of the Reedley congregation, Cal. Bro. Haldeman filled out his ninetieth year Oct. 25, 1910, while his wife, Harriet Haldeman, was ninety years old yesterday, April 24.

Bro. Haldeman was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1820, baptized in 1840, in the Mingo church, and elected to the ministry in the same church in 1847. He has thus served, in the ministry of the church, sixty-four years. His wife was baptized at the same time, and two years later, in 1842, they were married. Thus they have walked together, as husband and wife, for nearly sixty-nine years. Their posterity includes ten children, fifty-nine grandchildren, eighty great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild. Some of these have gone before. Brother and Sister Haldeman have met the ups and downs of life with Christian courage and fortitude, and now, as the evening of life greets their journey, the calmness and serenity of Christian joy gathers as a halo about their pathway.

They are present in the sanctuary almost every Sunday. They take their places in the Sunday-school class, and show that they have previously been with the Master Teacher.

Bro. Haldeman has done but little preaching in the past fifteen years, his voice having partially failed, but his memory is good. He finds much joy in reading the Bible and the GOSPEL MESSENGER. The health of both these aged pilgrims is good. On the evening of April 24, as a number of the brethren and sisters gathered in the home of Brother and Sister C. P. Shaffer,—the latter a granddaughter, with whom they have their home,—both spoke of the blessings of our Heavenly Father, and we, too, praise the Lord for their presence with us.

The Unnatural Way.

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

WHILE our train was stopping for oil at Salton, Cal., a small station on the Southern Pacific, we noticed, by the sign on the depot, that we were 210 feet below sea level, and that, on the other side of the track, was an inland sea a few feet lower still. Upon inquiry we found that this was formerly a small lake of salt water, but that an irrigating company, aided by the government, had introduced, at first, a limited quantity of pure, fresh water from the Colorado River which, in time, broke over its bounds and had become "an elephant on their hands."

Much damage was done by this great inflow, because of the enormous depression at this point. It was finally placed under control, but the only hope for drainage of the surplus water was by way of evaporation.

The first thought that presented itself was a vision of Malachi's promise, that God would open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing, so that there would not be room enough to contain it. The blessings were altogether conditional, however, and when men and women can see more virtue in religious inflows than in selfish aims and worldly aggrandizement of means that perish with the using thereof, the church will witness a second Pentecostal shower of blessings.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

Our Wards in Cuba and Porto Rico.

Matt. 24: 14.

For Sunday Evening, May 21, 1911.

I. Our Wardship.—Gen. 4: 9; Ezek. 3: 18, 19; 2 Cor. 2: 16; Heb. 13: 16.

II. Our Duty to the Weak.—Acts 20: 35; Rom. 15: 1; 1 Cor. 8: 9; 9: 22.

III. The Call of Duty.—Luke 12: 50; John 9: 4; Acts 4: 20; 1 Cor. 9: 16.

IV. The Command.—"Go ye" (Mark 16: 15). "Pray ye" (Matt. 9: 38); "Give ye" (Matt. 14: 16; 1 Cor. 16: 2).

"Surely the isles shall wait for me" (Isa. 60: 9); God looks down upon them (Psa. 53: 2); "Declare his praise in the islands" (Isa. 42: 12). The needed help is promised (Matt. 28: 20; John 14: 26).

Cuba was discovered by Columbus, and visited three times by him. It thus became the property of Spain, and its people, a gentle race, became the wards of Spain. Spain treated them as slaves. All sorts of cruelty was heaped upon them. Ten times the people rose against the Spanish yoke. The last time, the United States, in the name of humanity, took a hand in the struggle. Thus Cuba became our ward. How are we going to treat her? The first gift that she needs is the gift of the Gospel. That means liberty; for where the Spirit of Christ is, there is freedom. As guardian we have great responsibilities. We can perform them well, only as we lead the Cubans to Christ, their Savior. Let us take an imaginary trip to Cuba in an airship. (See Write-up.)

PRAYER MEETING

Why War Should Be Abolished.

Isa. 2: 2-4; Matt. 5: 38-48.

For Week Beginning May 21, 1911.

1. War Militates Against the Brotherhood of Man.—As children of the one Great Father, all men are brethren, and should live together as such. The ideals of war are unchristian,—based on hate, revenge, destruction! Certainly no Christian can afford to learn war. If men do not learn war, they will not practice it. On the other hand, a trained army and an equipped fleet are always more or less hungry for war. Nations that are well prepared for war are liable to be too willing to fight. How happy the nation whose God is the Lord (Psa. 33: 12).

2. True Patriotism Does Not Seek War.—A very subtle way in which the contagion of the war spirit comes to a nation is under the cloak of patriotism or, rather, that misconception of it that says, "My country,—right or wrong." True patriotism is that which seeks the best for its country, and recognizes that nothing is best, in the long run, that is not righteous. A government has no more right to do wrong than an individual. If a nation deliberately insists on choosing war, rather than God's law, then God's law will step in and judge that nation (Prov. 14: 34).

3. The "Golden Age" when Peace is Universal.—"One God, one Savior, one Comforter, one brotherhood,"—the truth conveyed in these words will, if accepted, bring an end to war. Clearer conceptions of man's duty to his brother, arbitration as a means of settling international differences, and an exalted idea of real fellowship,—all these thoughts are gaining headway. Peace "has her victories, no less renowned than war;" it is backed up by undeniable facts, plainly to be seen in the annals of history. If men learn to love their enemies, they will soon have no enemies. Enmity can resist force, logic and wrath, but it can not resist love. It is powerless against love (Isa. 11: 1-10).

HOME AND FAMILY

Consider the Lilies.

He hides within the lily
A strong and tender care,
That wins the earth-born atoms
To glory of the air;
He weaves the shining garments
Unceasingly and still,
Along the quiet waters,
In niches of the hill.

We linger at the vigil
With him who bent the knee
To watch the old-time lilies
In distant Galilee;
And still the worship deepens
And quickens into new,
As brightening down the ages
God's secret thrilleth through.

O toiler of the lily,
Thy touch is in the Man!
No leaf that dawns to petal
But hints the angel-plan.
The flower-horizons open!
The blossom vaster shows!
We hear thy wide worlds echo,—
See how the lily grows!

So the Poor Hath Hope.

Job 3: 16.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

MRS. LADD was poor. No mistake on that point. The house and surroundings proclaimed it and Mrs. Ladd herself admitted it. But the savory smell from the kitchen stove was an indication that a very nourishing dinner was being boiled for her family. The neighbor who had happened in, remarked on leaving, "Meat and groceries have gone up, haven't they?"

It may be that Mrs. Ladd suspected some covert criticism of her dinner; at least she hesitated a moment before replying. "Yes, ma'am, things is awful high, but with growing children and a man a-workin' it don't do to be too poor to feed them so that they can work and grow. I don't want to be wasteful, but I aim to give them enough to nourish them."

We do not know what her neighbor thought of this, but as a theory, Mrs. Ladd's ideas are worth considerable. She could not afford to be so poor that the healthy, growing children should be deprived of nourishing food. Her husband's job depended on the energy, strength and muscle he could put into it, so the savory dinner was a fine investment for this family.

"It don't do to be too poor" is sound philosophy. In every neighborhood, most of the people belong to the common middle class, who work for a living, who save and manage in order to make ends meet, and who must do without many things, in the course of a year, because they can not afford luxuries. And many of us have not yet learned that we sometimes do without things which are vital necessities because we think we can not afford them.

We make mistakes of this kind often, and when we deprive our children of things essential to their growth and development, we are allowing ourselves to be too poor. We can not afford to starve their bodies; we see that clearly. Do we see that it is as awful to starve their minds? When we rob a child of its education because we think he must be at work on the farm, we are permitting ourselves to be too poor. Be fair with the children and look after their mental and spiritual welfare, as well as their bodily development.

What if we are poor in the material things of life? What if the figures in our expense account are always threatening to outnumber those on the credit side of our ledger? What if we must reckon closely in order to keep out of debt? Let us turn away from our ledgers, and, instead of adding figures, add the things which do not enter into bookkeeping. We open our pocketbooks when we want to buy clothes, food, pleasures and comforts; but only a part of life is made up of these things. Let us believe Jesus when he says, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth." And if life does not consist of things which can only be bought with money, it may be that many of us are not so poverty-stricken as we feared. We do not undervalue the things which money can buy, but we ask with Longfellow, "Does our life consist of these things?"

Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone," and so there are other things which we may possess. What about friends? "It don't do to be too poor" to have friends. You say it takes money to keep your friends. Yes, it does, if the keeping alive of the close ties of kinship and affection requires a large outlay in dinners and other forms of hospitality. But your friends should be loyal and true even when you do only that which comes within your means. You can call on your friends and write the letter to the absent ones, and run in to see a sick neighbor. All of these things are often neglected by those who are rich in money, because they have no time, and do not realize that poverty lies in the impoverished nature.

Some rich people are so poor in self-forgetfulness and love that they leave the kindly deed undone and the gracious words of encouragement unsaid. There was one woman in the church who lived in a shabby little house, where the furniture and mode of living were of the very plainest but she seemed to enjoy life far more than most of the wealthier members. She cordially welcomed her friends and shared with them what she had without pretense or apology. Everything was clean, although the lack of money was apparent everywhere. In her poor clothes, plainly made, she welcomed those who came to her for the rare sympathy which made her so helpful to the tempted and tried,—the patience and love which never failed, the long-suffering which made her willing to believe in the sinner and willing to show him a clearer vision of the truth that God is love and needs the love of the sinner.

This poor woman was radiantly happy. A rich neighbor enviously said of her, "She seems to get as much satisfaction out of life as if she were independently rich." This neighbor did not know that there are other poverties far harder to bear than that of being penniless. The poor woman, rich in the love and sympathy she gave her friends, the good works she was willing to do for those about her, was happy in the love and esteem which came back to her.

Some people are poor in this that they possess no contentment, no forgiveness, no patience. They have money, but when a brother trespasses against them, they have no store of forgiveness on which to draw, they cherish an ugly resentment until the insult has been made right. When things go wrong, they have no patience; only a fierce anger at circumstances,—so far from what they desire them to be. And if you have lived with people who are poor in love and understanding, you will see that it is a poverty which is harder to overcome than that of the purse. How sad is the poverty of the self-satisfied ear, that does not hear the voices and needs of men and women calling! How sad the poverty of the vision which perceives not the possibilities of some good cause, nor the beauty of the moonlight. We cannot afford to be poor in these things, or we may find to our sorrow that the "destruction of the poor is their poverty."

"No matter how narrow your limits,
Go forth and make them broad:
You are every one the daughter or son
Crownprince or princess of God."

The Home Destroyer.

BY AUGUST BECK.

My earliest recollections carry me back to my beloved home in far-away Denmark. I had a mother, tender and true, who did all in her power to make home bright and cheerful. Only one thing marred this brightness, a shadow that grew blacker and larger as time went by, until it took all gladness out of mother's heart, all the music from our home. This ever-growing fiend, this home destroyer, was "liquor." It hardened the heart and dulled the mind of him who should have been the conserver of all that which makes a happy home.

Father held a government position, and was known and honored far and wide for his warm heart and strong sense of justice, but an inherited taste for liquor got, at times, the best of him. Wife, children, friends and honor, were, on such occasions, forgotten, and the thirst for liquor got the upper hand. After each debauchery he would, for days, feel ashamed, downcast and irritable. Of all this mother had to bear the brunt, but with loving tenderness and unceasing patience did she meet it all. Never a reproachful word did father hear, and with marvelous skill did she hide father's weakness from neighbors, and especially from us children, but the time came when we commenced to observe these things ourselves,—when we could be no longer deceived.

One Christmas Eve father went to town early in the afternoon. Mother was busy looking after the big Christmas baking and I, in my little bed, at one end of my parents' bedroom, lay awake longer than usual, waiting for a duck made of dough, which mother had promised to bake for me. It was a wild, cold night. The snow, falling ever faster, was driven by the wind against the window-panes in driven sheets. My eyes followed mother as she, from time to time, went to the window, pressing her burning forehead to the panes, while peering out into the ever-growing darkness. "Oh! Christian, come home, come home," she sobbed.

At last she could bear the suspense no longer. A lantern was lighted, and the hired girl sent out to awaken two neighbors, asking them to look for father. This they willingly consented to do. An hour later heavy steps were heard in the hallway. Mother flew to open the door, and in came the men, carrying father between them. They had found him lying unconscious in the snow, a mile from home. By the tracks in the snow they saw that for hours he had gone around and around in a circle, until he fell exhausted to the ground and slept. Had they not found him at the time they did, his sleep would have been eternal. They laid him upon his bed, and softly left the room.

Our sitting-room had a window facing the West. Oh, how many and many a time have I seen mother sit there, waiting and watching from sundown until far into the night! How her heart must have bled to think of her husband leaving wife and home to spend the time, playing and drinking, with his boon companions, but mother never lost hope. "My prayers will be heard in God's own good time," she said, and they were.

When fifteen years old, I went on the sea. From the far North I went to the extreme South, and did not see nor hear from any relative in three years. When, at the end of that time, I suddenly, one day, stood before mother, she threw her arms around my neck and cried: "Oh, my son! Now, that you have come home, my happiness is complete. Father has become a temperance man. He is so different from what he used to be; just like he was long ago, when first I knew him. He has, of late, been writing a good deal for the schools, and the king has rewarded him with the Golden Cross."

So, at last, peace and harmony had come back to our home, but what needless sorrow, shame and waste of time and money, during all those long years of wrestling with the demon,—drink!

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

SPRING RUN, PA.—Our Aid Society met March 15 and reorganized for one year, with Sister Sorena Ruble as president; Sister Belle Rhodes, vice-president; Sister Mary Swigart, secretary; Sister Anna French, treasurer. During the past year we met fourteen times, with an average attendance of nine. At the beginning of the year we had $5.64 in the treasury; collections for the year, $12.40; received for things sold and given away, $6.16; total, $23.54; paid out for cincham, 25 cents; gave to a poor family, $3.54; to Hebron Seminary, $1; to the church at Washington, D. C., $2; to the China famine relief fund, $2; to the Kansas City Mission, $2; paid on the debt of the home church, $5; total, $17.79; leaving $5.75 in the treasury.—S. Ruble, McVeytown, Pa., April 14.

GALVESTON, IND.—During the year ending April 6, 1911, our Sisters' Aid Society met nine times, with an average attendance of twenty-four. The collections amounted to $11.84. The following officers were elected for another year: Sister Jane Burrows, president; Sister Minnie Mummert, vice-president; Sister Mattie Smith, treasurer; Sister Mildred Yerkes, secretary.—Eva Dickey, R. D. 12, Galveston, Ind., April 14.

☞All business and communications intended for the paper should be addressed to the BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE, ELGIN, ILL., and not to any individual connected with it.

It is expected that a church will be organized at Prescott, Mich., the latter part of June.

Bro. Paul Mohler, of Chicago, gave the Messenger sanctum a short call on Monday of this week.

Some information regarding lodging and meals at the St. Joseph Conference will be found on page 301, this issue.

Eastern Pennsylvania sends two papers to the Annual Meeting. They will be found on page 301, this issue.

Bro. S. S. Beaver, of Pennsylvania, changes his address from Centerport, Pa., to Shoemakersville, Pa., R. D. 2.

Bro. D. L. Miller spent one day at Elgin, the early part of last week. We were pleased to find him looking so well.

Bro. O. P. Hoover, wife and mother, were in Elgin over last Sunday. Bro. Hoover occupied the pulpit at the morning service.

Brethren Samuel H. Hertzler and G. N. Falkenstein have been chosen to represent Eastern Pennsylvania on the Standing Committee.

Bro. R. H. Nicodemus, of Chicago, begins a series of meetings at Batavia, Ill., next Sunday, with the intention of continuing two weeks.

Last week it was said that the Historical Society would hold its meeting at St. Joseph on Saturday, June 4. It should have been June 3.

Bro. S. S. Blough, pastor of the congregation at Batavia, this State, will move his family to North Manchester, Ind., the early part of June.

At the late District Meeting of Pennsylvania it was decided to divide the District. A report to that effect will be considered at the St. Joseph Conference.

Bro. James M. Moore, of Chicago, Ill., called at the Messenger sanctum a few days ago. He is now at Astoria, Ill., where he will remain until the end of this week.

Do not fail to read what the Mission Board has to say on page 304, regarding the Conference offering. We can not afford to treat this matter with indifference; there is too much at stake.

The Sunday-school, Christian Workers' and Ministerial Meetings, and also the District Meeting of North Dakota, Eastern Montana and Western Canada will convene in the Salem congregation, N. Dak., July 11, 12 and 13.

During Conference week at St. Joseph, Mo., some services will be held in the Tootle Auditorium, where about 2,000 people may be accommodated very nicely, and the program for these services will be found on page 301, this issue. This Auditorium is about two blocks from the Assembly Hall, where the Conference proper will be held, and can be easily reached.

The District Meeting of Southern Ohio was held last week. No papers were sent to the Annual Conference. Brethren D. M. Garver and D. S. Filbrun will represent the District on the Standing Committee.

At its late District Meeting, held in the Codorus church, May 3, Southern Pennsylvania decided to call for the Annual Meeting in 1912. One paper, which will be found on page 301, was sent to the Conference.

It is suggested that the article, "Our Field Opportunities in the East," page 292, be read in all the congregations before the Annual Meeting offering is lifted. The article will prove interesting to any congregation, and ought to produce good results.

It affords us pleasure to place before our readers the splendid address delivered by Bro. M. G. Brumbaugh at the unveiling of the Alexander Mack Memorial Tablet. In spite of its length it is likely to be read by most of our patrons, and we are sure that it will be highly appreciated.

Bro. E. B. Hoff, of Bethany Bible School, Chicago, and son, spent a few hours in the House last week. Bro. Hoff has promised to do considerable writing for the Messenger along homiletic lines, and we are certain that what he may present, from time to time, will prove helpful.

All those interested in the work of the St. Joseph Conference, especially those who are not planning to attend the meeting, should send five cents and procure a copy of the Conference Booklet, containing a list of all the business intended for the meeting, along with much other valuable information.

We spent last Lord's Day with the members at Naperville, this State, where we met a very appreciative audience at the morning service. In the evening a love feast was held, and a most spiritual feast it prpved to be. The congregation is growing not only in numbers, but in love and good works.

We are informed that a number of the pulpits in St. Joseph, Mo., will be opened to our ministers. To fill these pulpits with preachers who will be a credit to the cause we represent, is a matter of no small consideration, and those accustomed to city work should make it as easy as possible for the committee, having the matter in hand, to find the men they need.

Those engaged in installing copies of the Bible in the rooms of many of the large hotels are to be commended for the part they are taking in placing the Word of God where it will be read and where it will accomplish good. Not everything done in the name of religion is to be encouraged, but we never make a mistake when we commend people for distributing the Scriptures. A general circulation of the Scriptures may sometimes look like casting pearls before swine, but, after all, this must be done if we would have the Gospel preached to all the world.

If any of our ministers do not have a copy of the Fundamentals, they should at once write the Fundamental Publishing Company, 808 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill. The Fundamentals is the title of a series of paper-covered books that deal with the great fundamental questions of the Bible and Christianity, and will be sent free to any minister who applies for them. Volume 4 has been sent out, and in due time another volume will appear. The books deserve a careful reading and should be in the hands of all our ministers. The laity is entitled to copies for fifteen cents each.

We now and then meet with people who, while exceedingly busy, always have plenty of time to pray. In fact, they seem to depend much on prayer, but not to the neglect of their duty. They ask the Lord for what they need, but they do not sit down and wait until the Lord does his part. They do their praying and then proceed to help bring about the very conditions concerning which they talk to the Father. The good Lord can help people of this sort. In fact, he knows it pays to help them. It is easy to grant the lawful wishes of devout men and women who are willing to work for the things they ask the Lord to supply.

At the close of the evening service on Easter Sunday in the Dauphin Street church, Philadelphia, Pa., eight were received into fellowship by confession and baptism. On the Sunday evening following a young man also made the good confession and was buried with Christ in baptism.

Two daily papers in St. Joseph, Mo., the New Press and the Gazette, the former an evening paper, and the latter a morning journal, will publish the Annual Meeting news from day to day, and either of them can be had ten days for twenty-five cents, or both of them for fifty cents. All orders with remittance should be sent to Eld. J. S. Kline, 2919 St. Joseph Avenue, St. Joseph, Mo.

We are requested to say that considerable help will be required at the Annual Meeting, and those having charge of some of the dining rooms would be pleased to correspond with brethren and sisters, who wish to do a certain amount of work, and in turn receive lodging and board, and possibly additional compensation where more work is done. For further particulars address Bro. M. R. Murray, Y. W. C. A. Rooms, St. Joseph, Mo.

We have an interesting letter from Bro. Lemuel Hillery, of Goshen, Ind., who writes us about the death of his dear friend, Bro. George D. Zollers. For nearly forty years they had been close friends, spent many hours in heart-to-heart talks, and the loss to Bro. Hillery seems like a personal affliction. During the winter Bro. Hillery had a fall that came near proving fatal, but while he is slowly recovering from the effects, he is not strong. In fact, he has been a sufferer nearly all his life and hardly knows what it is to be without pain.

We are not recommending any special railroads to those who may attend the Annual Meeting. The Conference can be reached over a number of lines, and all of them will do what is reasonable to make it pleasant for our people. Procure time tables and rates from the different lines, select the one that makes the best time, then prepare to enjoy the trip. A number of neighbors might arrange to travel together, and in this way the trip could be rendered the more pleasant. We hear of points where coaches will be filled, and run right through to the place of meeting. There will also be special trains, and, in fact, when the time comes we may look for a general move toward the Conference from all parts of the Brotherhood.

The interest of India is quite well represented in this issue of the Messenger. On page 299 Bro. J. F. Souders says how he was impressed with the work that is being done, while on page 293 will be found a well-prepared article by the Field Committee of India, that deserves more than ordinary attention. Here the needs of the East are clearly set forth, showing what a wonderful field, now ready to be worked, is open to our people. The article was read before the General Mission Board at its April Meeting, and so favorably impressed them that it was ordered published in both the Messenger and the Missionary Visitor. The article is put up in leaflet form for free distribution, and should be placed in the hands of all those attending our church services.

Several of our readers have suggested that we arrange to have a number of addresses, delivered at the Annual Meeting, reported and published, either in the Messenger or as a part of the Full Report. This matter was carefully considered by the General Mission Board at its April meeting, and it was thought best not to undertake the publishing of these addresses, for the present at least. For the Messenger most of the addresses would be too long, filling not less than two pages. To add them to the Full Report would make it necessary to increase the price considerably, to say nothing of delaying the publication two weeks, and possibly more. And while we can not, at this time, comply with the wishes of those who have conferred with us regarding the matter, still we are likely to publish articles embodying the best thoughts presented in the various addresses.

We wish to call the attention of all those in charge of congregations to the importance of taking up a collection for the Annual Meeting offering. We may not have said as much about this offering as might have been said, but it is understood that the collection should never be overlooked. In the Brotherhood there are not far from 900 congregations, and this should mean at least 1,000 collections, for some congregations have different places for preaching. Every meeting ought to be made at each point. Tell the people what the money is for and they will respond liberally. It makes no difference how small the congregation is,—let the collection be taken.

We learn from special correspondence that the accommodations for feeding the people at the St. Joseph Conference, are going to be ample in every respect. Thousands are to be fed in and near the Assembly Hall, where the Conference convenes from day to day. The large basement is to be fitted up for serving meals. A large room on the main floor, accommodating 500 people, is to be supplied with lunch counters. In front of the building is a fine street, that is to be set apart for the accommodation of those who attend the meeting. Here thousands will be served at lunch counters. The citizens are also opening their homes with a view of furnishing good lodging for all who may be in attendance. The people of South St. Joseph, where the Brethren have a mission church, are arranging to lodge 2,000 visitors. The place can be reached by a good trolley line in about thirty minutes. In view of these preparations that are being made no one need have any fear about finding desirable accommodations.

Railroad Arrangements.

The following letter is self-explanatory. Brethren who attend the Conference from the territory of the Trunk Line Association (see last week's Messenger) will be compelled to return not later than June 27, 1911. D. L. M.

Eld. D. L. Miller,
Chairman, Transportation Committee.
Mount Morris, Ill.

Dear Sir:—Referring to our letter of 26th inst.; beg to advise that it has been found impracticable to file tariffs with the Interstate Commerce Commission in order to make the return limit in connection with the above occasion June 30, and it has therefore been arranged that passengers will have to get back to original starting point not later than June 27. Please amend our letter accordingly. Yours truly,

C. L. Hunter, Vice-Chairman.

Rebaptism.

Our readers have been favored with a very helpful exchange of views regarding the rebaptism question that is to be further considered at the St. Joseph Conference, and the views of different writers have been presented in a good, commendable spirit, for which we are certainly grateful. We trust that at no distant day we may be able to discuss all of our differences in the same spirit. We shall make no attempt directly to discuss the question in this communication. We simply wish to call attention to a few facts as they relate to the history of rebaptism, or the baptism of aliens.

During the first and second centuries there was no controversy regarding the baptism performed by those who were not associated with the general, or Catholic, church. The only mode was trine immersion, and this was looked upon as valid among all those who claimed to be Christians, whether connected with the main body of the church, or some of the many small sects that came into existence, here and there. While the sects or schisms, were not always in love and union with each other, or in union with the Mother church, still adult trine immersion,—the one general practice,—was current everywhere, not because it was performed by an administrator of a particular appointment, but because it was performed according to the rule prescribed by the Great Head of the church.

But about A. D. 218 the advisability of rebaptizing those who had received baptism at the hands of alien administrators, began to be agitated, especially in North Africa and Asia Minor. The controversy increased in interest until A. D. 256, at which time Cyprian, a learned and influential Bishop of Carthage, North Africa, convened a council in his city, to consider the question, and if possible induce the Mother church to discredit alien baptism. The council was not general. Though attended by eighty-six bishops, it was almost wholly a North Africa Synod, and was so regarded by the churches of that age.

As might have been expected under the circumstances, the synod decided against alien baptism, which decision was generally accepted in North Africa, Asia Minor and in parts of Palestine, but was disregarded by the main body of the church. The controversy grew warm, and the church was considerably disturbed. The next year, however, Stephen, Bishop of Rome, Cyprian's principal opponent, was martyred, and a year later Cyprian also suffered in like manner. After this the controversy subsided, and by 348 another synod at Carthage repealed the decision made by Cyprian and his eighty-six bishops, thus practically putting an end to the controversy regarding the validity of trine immersion, when administered by those outside of the general, or Mother church.

St. Augustine, a bishop distinguished alike for learning, eloquence and piety did much in the interest of unity along this line. He held that while trine immersion was of no value to those who received it outside of the Mother church, still it answered the purpose when the penitent was received into the church by the laying on of hands. By the laying on of hands the baptism would be confirmed, and regarded as though it had been administered by the church. Others held that the validity was in the institution itself, and that this institution, authorized by the Head of the church, was valid, whether found in the Mother church or in some of the smaller bodies that had become separated from her, or had sprung up in the different sections of the country.

The latter seems to have been the view held by Alexander Mack and those associated with him in effecting the organization of the Brethren church at Schwarzenau. Their baptism was trine immersion, as instituted by the Savior in Matthew twenty-eighth chapter and nineteenth verse. The rite could have been received at the hands of others, had Mack felt disposed to be at the pains and expense to begin his reformatory movement in that way, for there were then, in Europe and Asia, millions of Christians who had been baptized by the triple action. But the validity being in the institution, preceded by faith and repentance, it was deemed sufficient to restore the apostolic rite and claim for it as much authority as though it had come to Mack and his people through a succession of administrators connected with the apostles themselves.

Mack, as may be easily shown by his writings, did not hold that all the true believers of his time were connected with the movement with which he was identified. He well knew that God had promised to preserve his people in all generations, and that there were those, here and there, who were serving the Lord as best they knew and could, under the circumstances. In fact, there was probably at this very time an organization in England, almost identical with the Brethren in faith and practice (see Gospel Visitor, Vol. 3, page 21). Their further history is unknown, aside from a brief mention made of them by Christopher Sower, Jr., who, while spending a few years in England, had the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with at least some of the members. And what is true of this body may have been true of others, hid away in the wilderness of the world.

The contention, if admitted to be correct, that the validity of New Testament baptism rests on the Divine institution rather than on any particular line of administrators, or any particular line of organic succession, would seem to justify the conclusion that separate, yet true and loyal Christian bodies might spring into existence and be equally authorized to restore and administer the ordinances. The spirit of John 17, however, would teach that all such bodies, having the same faith and practice, should labor together harmoniously, as one organization. This is at least good philosophy, and, in the judgment of not a few, is also good theology.

My Belief.

In places the expression of one's belief has come to be a very common thing. In many cases it is given as a kind of guarantee of the righteousness of personal action. It is a very general opinion, that, if men and women live up to their best belief, they do all that could be expected or demanded, and to do more or less would be wrong. To take a position of this kind, gives fairly good ground for argument if we fail to look into the manner in which we get our belief.

During our late, short stay in the Southland, we came, in our associations, in contact with many cults and religious beliefs, and being known as a minister, our conversations generally drifted into religious channels. After telling to what they belonged and what they did, the people would follow with: "This is my belief." If they would stop there, they would be on their own ground, and would give no special room for opening up a discussion, as we must accord to every one a right to a belief of his own. But following, "This is my belief," almost invariably is the inquiry, "Isn't this yours?" Then the test comes. If it should happen that their belief does not accord with our own, we are expected to tell wherein our belief differs from theirs, which is equivalent to saying: "This is my belief." Then we have two beliefs,—the one different from the other. Which is the better, or are they both equally good? We must settle this point as individuals, or have a third party decide on the merits of our different beliefs. This necessarily could not be satisfactory or final, as the third party has a belief differing from both of ours, which actually was the case on several occasions.

Indeed, in these days of independent thinking and personal beliefs, it is no strange thing to find, in an ordinary company of people, almost as many beliefs as there are persons present. Under such circumstances, if every man's belief can not be accepted as his own standard of right, how shall we proceed to determine whose belief can be made a standard of right for all?

One Lord's Day afternoon a small company of us met in a religious gathering, and in the company at least five different churches or religious organizations were represented. And from the character of the meeting, as expressed by those present, there were many more distinct religious beliefs than there were different churches represented. Could such a body be sufficiently unified in religious thought to worship together in peace and harmony?

Yes, we hear some one say. There is a way, and an only way. What way is this? The only way, you say, is for each and every one to agree to accept the Gospel as the only standard by which all religious service and actions are to be practiced and measured. That is good,—splendid. There can be no better way. The theory is good, the doctrine logical and sound. But how is the theory,—good and logical as it may be,—to be made practical? From what we heard expressed, at the meeting referred to, every one of the five churches represented was ready to affirm that their respective churches accepted the Gospel of Jesus Christ as their only standard of faith and practice.

Again we ask, Whose belief shall be made the standard for all, as to an acceptable religious faith and practice? That the standard, as named, is acknowledged to be right by all, and the theory must be good, because Jesus Christ represents himself as being the way, the truth and the life. And as he was the embodiment of the Word, which is the power of God unto salvation, there can be no other standard for right doing and right living. Therefore, the trouble can not be in the standard by which we may or are to govern our religious lives, but in the way and manner of our approach.

Paul understood the importance of knowing how to approach this standard when he said to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." While there is an unusual interest taken in Bible study, there seems to be a wonderful lack in the proper division of it,—in the making up of our budget of belief. We, as a people, are not careful enough in our study of the Word, or we don't study it with the purpose of knowing what it really teaches, so as to make it harmonize with what we want to believe. To be honest with ourselves, we might as well admit that there are some things taught in the Scriptures that we don't want to believe, because we don't want to do them, and as a result we omit them and place the greater stress on the things that we are willing to accept and do.

It is really remarkable how very earnest some people are in some things, and how completely they ignore other things that are quite as essential and important as doctrinal principles, or as means of grace. They divide the truth but they don't do it rightly. The truth needs division only to place the different parts where they belong—not to evade it or substitute for it something of human origin.

But here comes in "my belief." "My belief" with many is: "He that believeth that Jesus Christ is the Son of God shall be saved." Well, this is truth, and a good thing to believe, but devils believe that much, and yet such belief will not save them. Neither will such belief save us. Another class say, "My belief is, 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.'" Yes, this, too, is a good belief; but such a belief alone is not sufficient to save men and women, because we are to believe, keep and do all the commandments of Jesus. After doing all we are only unprofitable servants and have done only that which was our duty to do.

"But," says another, "my belief is that 'we are saved by grace, and not by works.'" Very true, but to be saved by grace we must place ourselves in such a relation to Jesus Christ that grace can reach us. This is done by believing in Jesus Christ, as the Scriptures say. We delight in obeying those whom we love. Savingly to believe in Jesus Christ means to love him enough to obey him in all things. So, if my belief and your belief is to be a saving belief, we must go to the truth with unbiased minds, and in simple faith accept and desire to do all the essentials of salvation which Jesus has given us in his Word. Then the promise is ours.

Papers Not Paying Expenses.

SOME of the largest denominations are finding it difficult to make their church organs pay expenses. In fact, not a few of them come out in debt at the end of the year, and this, too, in spite of the large circulation they enjoy. Some of these religious journals carry advertisements, have a higher subscription price than the MESSENGER, and still they can not be made to pay expenses, let alone produce a good profit on the investment. Commenting on the Methodist Book Concern, which carries on a large publishing business, a leading religious paper, the Continent, says:

"The reports on the newspapers of the church were not quite so agreeable, but yet slightly more sanguine than the year before. During the year the management of the Northwestern Christian Advocate at Chicago abandoned the old-time policy of relying on the Methodist ministers as its subscription agents, and employed Dan B. Brummitt as circulation manager. Although the church discipline requires all pastors to take subscriptions for their nearest church paper, the duty had not been performed well enough to prevent serious subscription losses, but under the new policy of strictly business management, the Northwestern gained so decidedly that the Book Committee instructed Mr. Brummitt to extend his efforts also to the Central Christian Advocate at Kansas City and the Western at Cincinnati. Even this departure, however, did not hinder the serious consideration in the committee of a proposal to unite these three papers in order to create a single journal stronger than any of them. Indeed, respectful attention was paid to a still more radical suggestion, that Dr. Buckley's great paper, the Christian Advocate of New York, should be included in the combination, and the support given to a single national Methodist paper."

If a leading denomination, that numbers its members by the million, finds it necessary to reduce the number of its church papers, then it would seem to be anything but wisdom for a small religious body to think of increasing her publications. Our Brotherhood was called on, years ago, to support several journals, and none of them proved a financial success. It was, therefore, a wise act, indeed, when the leading papers were consolidated, and we have but one church paper to support. Even then it required more than a dozen years of hard labor and splendid business management to work the paper up to a real creditable circulation. Furthermore, we find it requires just as much hard and careful work to keep the circulation up as it did to work it up in the first place.

And while the MESSENGER has a fine circulation, considering the membership of the church, and while it produces a good profit on the investment, it will be well, at all times, to consider the propriety of carefully protecting and taking the very best possible care of that which we have. With a little careless management it might easily be made a financial burden instead of a financial success. We do well to profit by the experiences of some other churches that hardly know what to do with their many papers.

The Great Schoolhouse Moved.

A LATE issue of the Christian Union contains a paragraph that closes with a significant ring:

Two thousand years ago Palestine was the world's schoolhouse. Here the Jews taught the world something of Jehovah. The plain of Esdraelon was also the world's great battlefield. Here were fought battles that decided the destiny of nations. But the schoolhouse has been moved from Palestine to America; the battlefield from Esdraelon to the Mississippi Valley and the great Northwest. The great issues of the world have changed. Physical force no longer decides the destiny of nations. The world's teacher is no longer the Jew but the Christian. The golden rule is displacing not only the rule of gold but of physical force as well. The strength of a nation is not in battleships and standing armies but is in the Christian character of its citizens. America is the best place on earth to develop Christian citizenship and for that reason the Lord moved the world's great schoolhouse. Foreigners are coming to be taught at a million per year, and from the human point of view it sometimes looks as if they will foreignize us before we Christianize them.

Candidly, are the foreigners, who come to us, to be Christianized, or are we to be foreignized? The rule can be worked both ways, but which way is it to work in this case? But there is another thought. Our people entered the world to help revolutionize popular Christianity. We have been working along this line for more than 200 years. Are we to continue, or is popular Christianity to revolutionize us? The battle is on. The issue is a clear one, and the struggle must continue until one side or the other wins. Shall we revolutionize popular Christianity, or is the Christianity of the day to revolutionize us? This is the problem, so far as the Church of the Brethren is concerned.

Selling Tobacco.

ONE of our patrons wishes to know whether a deacon, engaged in mercantile business, should be permitted to sell tobacco. The selling of tobacco by members was quite fully discussed at the Conference of 1890. See Art. 13. Then it was said that it would seem inconsistent to forbid members selling an article that other members are permitted to use, it being known that some brethren, selling tobacco, preferred to purchase their supplies at stores where tobacco is kept on sale. The Conference has since 1822 strongly advised against the use of tobacco in any form, and has, from time to time, urged that members do not raise or sell tobacco, and on this occasion, 1890, reaffirmed her protest against brethren, engaged in mercantile business, selling the weed, but did not deem it advisable to make it a test of fellowship. The most that can be said on the subject is, that the Conference has placed herself on record as being decidedly opposed to her members engaging in the tobacco traffic. This applies to officials as well as to others, for it is but reasonable to expect more of officials than of the laity. Of course, it is understood that the brother selling tobacco can not represent his church as a delegate at either a District or an Annual Meeting; nor can those using the weed, except for medicinal purposes, be installed into office. Especially is this true of ministers and elders.

The Missionary Church.

HAS it ever occurred to our readers that only a missionary church can live and thrive? A missionary church is a recruiting church. It is a working church. It not only looks after the people in its own territory, but it lends a helping hand to the workers in other fields. A missionary church is never a dying church. Its activity keeps it alive, and the work done enables it to grow. When a church begins to neglect its own territory, it might as well look around for a burial place, for it is on the road to failure. But a real live church will work its own territory, and will sometimes work it so well that there is little left for other churches to do. Candidly, is your church an active, hard-working, missionary church? If not, whose fault is it? This question is intended for the elders, the preachers, the deacons and the laity. If each member will do his part, the church will become a working body. It can not help it. It might be well for the elders and the preachers to meditate on the situation. The trouble may be found with them. It may rest with the deacons or the laity. One thing is certain,—somebody is to blame.

The Orderly Tomb.

ONE of our close Bible students is wondering why the napkin about the head of Jesus was found not lying with the linen clothes, but rolled in a place by itself in the empty tomb (John 20: 7). There is nothing especially significant about the incident, aside from the fact that the empty tomb was found in an orderly condition by those who first visited the place after the resurrection. There was nothing about the tomb to indicate that the body had been stolen or removed in haste. On awakening from his death-sleep the Master probably arranged the clothing he left in an orderly manner, and when the angel rolled back the great stone, he quietly walked from the tomb and went on his way. The tomb was a new one, and Jesus left it in just as orderly a condition as it was found when his lifeless body was placed therein by Joseph and Nicodemus.

Address,
General Mission Board, Elgin, Ill.

CASSTOWN, OHIO, MISSION.

A very pleasant members' meeting was held at this place on Saturday, at 2 P. M., April 22. Bro. J. E. Barnhart, who is our elder, was absent because of bodily affliction. The meeting was wisely directed by Bro. Sylvan Bookwalter, a member of District Mission Board, assisted by Bro. Jacob Sandy.

Included in the business transacted at this time, the writer was chosen church correspondent, and also as delegate to District Meeting, with Sister Priscilla Weddle, alternate.

Since a worker has been located here, the prospects are most encouraging, but the Mission Board feels a greater need, and is anxiously looking for a Spirit-filled minister who may be permanently located on the field. We shall continue to pray that the Holy Spirit may adjust this need.

In compliance with arrangements Bro. Sylvester Lowman, of Dayton, in his very enthusiastic manner, gave an excellent temperance lecture, here in our church, April 13. The attendance was good, but, sad to say, those who need to reform were present. When will men learn to refuse the evil and choose the good, thus turning from darkness to light? May we more earnestly work, watch and pray! Mina H. Bosserman.

April 22.

NOTICE TO TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

In a late Messenger appeared the Temperance program, to be rendered in the Auditorium at St. Joseph on Monday evening, June 5. Without doubt we will have a large audience and an enthusiastic meeting. We want the temperance workers there from all over the Brotherhood.

At that time, also, on bulletin board, will be anounced a meeting at a later hour for the workers alone. All members of temperance committees are invited. The members of the District Committees are invited to be present. At that meeting our difficulties will be discussed, our victories numbered, and plans for the future perfected.

LAST CHANCE! Please order now! Do not delay longer to secure a list of these splendid Winona Temperance Addresses at twenty cents each; ministers, 10 cents. We desire to ship, in a short time, the few that are left, to be sold on the Annual Conference grounds. We have all the remainder of the issue, but not near enough for all. No more will be published. Every minister, committee man, and other workers, should have one. Eighty of these books were sold by one brother at one Sunday-school Convention. A brother recently sold ten at the Elders' Meeting, and had none left for the District Meeting where he says he could have sold many more. Each District Committee should order enough for the ministers in its District. Others should order ten at a time and scatter them. Don't send for but one. Send all orders to the writer. W. M. Howe.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

Sept. 15 my daughter, Nellie, and I left Denver, Colo., for Portland, Oregon, where we arrived three days later. From there I went to visit Centralia, Wash., where I spent a little more than a week in pleasant association with dear acquaintances, whom we had not seen for years.

Still later I decided to visit the little band of members in Seattle, Wash. As they were needing help at this point, the object of our visit was to look the situation over, and if it were satisfactory to all concerned, to locate among them, for a while at least, in this city of about 350,000 souls. We finally decided to assist the little band, and located here Feb. 10.

I took charge of the work April 8, and since that time one has been received by baptism, as was previously reported by the correspondent of this place. Another has applied for membership.

The members here seem to be quite active in the work, and are contributing quite liberally of their means for its support. We see no reason why the church should not continue to grow, if directed by the Spirit, a united effort of the members, and the prayers of God's children everywhere, which we so earnestly crave.

The membership is now about thirty, but largely transient, as is common here in the West, and especially in the cities. It is one of the difficulties we meet with, in the building up of churches. Members are not, as a rule, permanently located, as they are in the East. Members, as well as others, coming to our city, are heartily invited to call at the church on the Lord's Day and worship with us, especially ministers.

All who have children or friends living in the city are invited to write us, giving name, business and street number. Upon receipt of this information we will try to see them, and direct them to the church. For the benefit of strangers we will say that the church is located on Greenwood Avenue, between Seventy-second and Seventy-third Streets. To get there take Phinney Car on Second Avenue in the city, and get off at Seventy-second Street. No transfer is needed.

MISSION WORK IN INDIA.

In view of the fact that I shall be asked a good many questions about our mission work in India, and especially by those who have a deep interest in the work, I may therefore be pardoned if use the opportunity of getting out an extra, a little ahead of my return to America, especially since it has been only a few weeks since I quit India's shores, and the impressions and observations are still fresh in my mind.

The Father's Care.

In the first place I want to express, in this public way, my deep sense of gratitude to my Loving Heavenly Father for his manifold care and protection over me. I traveled, all told, by train, horseback, and by bullock cart, more than a few thousand miles. And I can recall the fact that for the most part this was done under a hot India sun, and not infrequently through plague-stricken districts, and that, save for a slight attack of fever in South India, I had good health. I feel doubly grateful to him. This loving care of the Father was not in answer to my own prayers alone, but also in answer to the prayers of my friends in the homeland, and especially of my dear devoted wife. Time and again did there come to me an inner consciousness that God was indeed answering the prayers of others in my own behalf. I thank God for loved ones in Christ Jesus, who pray for me. To them I owe much of what little I have been able to do.

Christian Courtesy.

I want also to express my appreciation to the various missions we were permitted to visit, and where we were received with so much Christian courtesy and hospitality. I refer not alone to our own Missions in the Gujerat and Marathi districts, but also to the various Methodist, Mennonite, Baptist and other Missions in the Bengal, North Central, Central and Southern Provinces. In fact, everywhere we went we were received most cordially. One is made to feel that in this respect the various missionary organizations are far in advance of the churches they represent at home. It is the case of the child's having advanced beyond the parent. No doubt this can be accounted for, at least in part, by reason of more active service, coupled with church comity. I need not say that this Christian courtesy is very essential to the traveler, if he would feel at home among the people, being that, for how is one to understand, even in some slight manner, the problems, difficulties and successes of missionary activity unless those who know them choose to make them known?

Getting Missionary Information.

True, one may visit the foreign mission field and see for himself, independently of the missionary, as some do, but I am not guessing when I say that he will go home with mistaken ideas and wrong conclusions. Even the most intelligent unlearned missionary audience is in a position to give the more learned traveler a few pointers on mission work, if he be disposed to do so and the other fellow is disposed to take them. In this respect I feel that I was in a position to find out a few things, at least, for in the first place I found the missionaries willing to part with their hard-earned information. In the second place I knew very little of foreign mission work, and said less. Let me say here, to the future visitor of our mission fields (and we would be glad to have many), that your chief business is inquisitory rather than of the advisory nature. The foreign field, like the home field, is in no particular danger of suffering from a dearth of the latter. The former will not do any harm to the missionary or his work and, at the same time, will be of an inestimable value to the visitor.

Mission Problems in India.

Perhaps I should have stated in the beginning that I chose not to confine myself to our own Missions in this article, as may do so later on. I prefer to speak of the mission work in general, as I had opportunity to see it. In the first place I don't find any material difference between missionary work in India from missionary work in France, Asia Minor, Syria, or Arabia. True, there are problems to deal with that are peculiar to each field, but what I mean is, the missionary will find them all equally difficult, that he himself will make mistakes and failures in all of them, and that if he lets the Holy Spirit work in and through him, he will be able to accomplish results in all of them.

Climatical Conditions.

But perchance some one will say, "Is not the climate of India very deadly?" Permit me to answer by saying that the man or woman who is considering the climate of a certain country, had better consider a more serious question, viz., Does the Lord actually want me in any foreign field? Has he, indeed, called me? Don't understand me to say that health is not a consideration. I regard it as of the utmost importance in mission work, but I prefer to leave it where it belongs, viz., in God's hands and not in man's alone. I can not believe that God would overlook the question of the health of men and women when he calls them to the work. And if they do have sickness on the field, is not God able to care for his own? Has he not demonstrated his ability even among our own workers? Dr. Zwemer said in the Lucknow Conference, "When God calls a man to go, it is his business to go. God will look after the outcome." I shall not be saying too much when I say that if the health of the missionary, both before and after going, were left more in God's hands and less in man's, we would have fewer unreturned missionaries. True, God calls some missionaries home that they may there be used in his praise and glory. To such my statement above has no reference.

Existing Conditions.

Now that I have said considerable about God's part in the missionaries' health, let me say somewhat of man's part, and between them you will be able to see my position, I trust. Most Mission Boards are learning by experience that a cheap house for a good missionary is a poor as well as a very expensive proposition, and so they have set about to build good, substantial homes for their workers. This is as it should be. Why not? Does not a well-to-do farmer protect his best machinery with the best shedding. This may suffice to answer the question that is sometimes raised at home, "Should the missionary have a better house to live in than those of us who are not missionaries?" However, I do not wish to make any unnecessary fears concerning the homes of our missionaries. They are not likely to be better than ours at home, for two reasons: (1) A lack of missionary funds. (2) The character of our missionaries. The first is largely in our hands, the second in God's hand. I am just now reminded of the prayer of an old deacon brother who said: "Lord, you keep the parson humble; we can keep him poor." I shall conclude, however, by saying this, that it will be a sad day for foreign missions in India, as elsewhere, when the missionary abuses his privileges by appropriating, to his own selfish comforts, the Lord's money to the extent that many people are doing in the homeland.

The Work Accomplished.

But what about results? This is an interesting, but exceedingly difficult question to answer,—due to the fact that we have so many different standards for measuring results. We do not all see things in the same relative value. Our value of a human soul varies as much today as in the times of Christ. Then it was all the way from a few pieces of silver to more than all the world. Besides, results, as an end in themselves, belong to God and not to man. If faithfulness to them were the reason for continuing missionary work, but as a source of joy and encouragement. Christ himself spoke of soul-winning as a source of joy and rejoicing.

A Rich Reward.

After visiting some of the sacred shrines of Hinduism, like Benares on the Ganges, the Kalphat in Bombay, and others, and seeing the almost countless multitudes that are so steeped in superstition and vice, I almost allowed myself to question the value of missionary effort, after all. It seems like a drop in the ocean. But when I went to the Lord's table and heard statistics, and saw the zeal of the workers, or visited some of the large Christian Mission Schools and saw hundreds of young men and women being trained for Christ and Christian service, or tarried a while at Kedgaon where Pandita Ramabai and her fourteen hundred girls are at work, I said to myself: "Thank God, it does pay." "The game is well worth the candle." Then, too, if I could take you back into the Kingdom for only one fifty years, these lost souls, some of the individual results, as I saw them, you, too, would say: "Thank God, it pays." I wish that more of our ministers would invest their money in a trip to India, rather than in some land scheme. I am sure it will be a good investment for yourself, as well as for the flock you feed. I hope the First District of India will call for Annual Meeting before long, and that we will charter a big steamer and take over a delegate from each local congregation. What I saw at the recent District Meeting at Umalla, in the way of zeal tempered with knowledge, continues, I shall be disappointed if they don't call for Annual Meeting, and more disappointed if their request is not granted.

Parting Thoughts.

But I see that my article has already gotten quite lengthy, and so I will conclude by saying that I left the missionaries all well and happy in their work. They are greatly encouraged over the present outlook, as well as with the response with which their needs are being met by the church at home. Continue to pray for them, that their hands and hearts may be strong for any service.

Brother and Sister Wieand, who were with me in India, and who were of much encouragement to the workers, were both well when I bade them adieu at Bombay, March 16. The trip has been especially beneficial to Bro. Wieand's health. After a week's stay on the island of Ceylon I took the Steamer Prinz Ludwig, March 26, for Hongkong. After a day's stop at Penang and another one at Singapore, we are today, April 3, two days out from Hongkong, with beautiful weather and a smooth sea. If all goes well and the Lord continues to prosper our journey I hope to reach America in time for the Sisters Conference. J. F. Souders.

Aboard the Prinz Ludwig.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

COLORADO.

Hotchkiss.—Any members living in South or East Texas or West Arkansas, that need a minister, will please write to the undersigned, as he wishes to locate in the South on account of his son's health.—George A. Dove, Hotchkiss, Colo., April 29.

Mount Garfield.—April 16 and 17 Bro. Berkebile, of Denver, Colo., met with us and give us three lectures on India. We learned many things from his talks about the customs of the people and their way of living. On Easter Sunday, during the Sunday-school hour, the children gave us a little program, which was well rendered and enjoyed by all.—Clara Clark, Palisade, Colo., April 20.

ILLINOIS.

Woodland.—We met in council April 26. Our elder, Bro. Cyrus Hoff, presided. The meeting was opened by Bro. S. G. Bucher. Two members were received by letter and one letter was granted. Our treasurer, Bro. Jesse Hoff, handed in his resignation, and Bro. Noah Johnson was chosen to take his place. The church has been bought in acre of ground to the meetin-house. Arrangements are being made to lay it out in lots, to be sold. We elected new trustees, Bro. Jesse Keller was elected as president of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Sister Edith Bubb, secretary-treasurer. Bro. Geo. Ruth is our delegate to Annual Meeting; Bro. J. S. Bucher, alternate. Sister Mary Danner, Bro. Dan Johnson and Bro. Jesse Walters are the temperance committee. We had quite an amount of business to dispose of, but we had a very good meeting. The work has begun on the new churchhouse, and we are looking forward to the time when it will be completed.—Fannie B. Stambaugh, Rossmann, Ill., May 3.

INDIANA.

Anderson.—Sister Miller, our District Sunday-school Secretary, visited our Sunday-school, the occasion being graced by a good attendance with earnest interest. Her talk was on "The Responsibility of the Sunday-school." Her talk was very much appreciated. Our school is moving along nicely.—Chas. B. Hoover, 1026 Anderson, April 26.

Four Mile.—We had our love feast April 29. Brethren D. F. Hoover, D. Studebaker and Levi Hoff officiated at the latter officiated. Bro. C. C. Petry was ordained to the office of elder.—Effie Petry, Kitchel, May 1.

Morrison County.—Bro. James H. Morris, of Louisville, Ky., who is attending school at that place, has been preaching for us for several second and fifth Sundays. Last November, preaching three sermons each time. The members at this place are desirable in earnest in the cause. Bro. Morris has organized a Berean band for Bible reading, in which the Sunday-school will take its place. We have held an all-day meeting, and in the evening held our Easter program, which was largely attended. Bro. Morris is elder and superintendent. A committee was chosen for the benefit of the Sunday-school, also a temperance committee. A collection of $1.88 was taken for the North Manchester College. One letter has been received since our last report.—Lydia Zimmerman, Dogwood, Ind., May 4.

Pleasant Valley.—Our church met in council April 26, with Eld. I. L. Berkebile presiding. Letters were granted. Christian Workers' officers were elected, with Bro. Willard Mishler as president, and Sister Emma Weaver secretary. Bro. J. H. Schrock was chosen delegate to Annual Meeting. Our love feast was appointed for May 21.—Mrs. J. Harvey Schrock, R. D. 5, Middlebury, Ind., May 6.

Spring Creek church met in council April 29. Our elder, D. J. Mishler presiding. Brethren Samuel Ackerson and Henry Neff were with us. The report of the annual visit was given, and all in all it was a good meeting. Nine members by letter and two were granted. Our love feast was appointed for June 18, at 6:30 P. M. Bro. J. D. Mishler is our delegate to Annual Meeting; Sister Grace Fox, alternate. Sister Grace Fox is superintendent of the Christian Workers' Meeting. The number of members reported are 176. We are glad for the increase during the past year. Our Sunday-school is growing in interest and attendance.—Ida Miller, Silverlake, Ind., May 6.

Walnut Level.—This church met in council April 29. Our elder, Bro. Daniel Byerly, presided. We will have preaching twice on the first Sunday of each month.—Malinda S. Studebaker, R. D. 2, Bluffton, Ind., May 3.

IOWA.

Des Moines.—Since our last report we have organized a promising grade roll department with Sister Erva Royce as superintendent, and a home department with Sister Cora Brubaker and Sister Lena Bonsteadt as the two members' meeting last Tuesday evening. We arranged to hold our love feast from the 4th and a revival campaign from the 5th to about November. Two letters of membership were read, and several others are expected soon, as we are now conducting systematic giving among us, we decided to adopt the monthly envelope for the raising of funds for incidental expenses, janitor, etc. Bro. Ira D. Parker, a member of the family, from Maxwell, Iowa, have now located with us, for which we are glad.—Virgil C. Flory, 1141 East 12th Street, Des Moines, Iowa, May 4.

Prairie City.—S. B. Miller, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, came to us April 2, and gave us two very interesting discourses each day. "Pompeii," and the other on "Child Rescue" work. The attendance was small on account of rain, but those who were there appreciated Bro. Miller's talks very much. We close a collection for Ministerial Aid for the work in which he is engaged. We are to have a missionary meeting at our church May 7. The missionary sermon will be preached by one of our young ministers, Bro. James Bowlie. The program is to be rendered in the evening. Bro. B. F. Buckingham gave us a splendid discourse today at 11 A. M. Bro. Irvin Buckingham is home from Bethany Bible School. Bro. E. E. Myers, also of Bethany Bible School, stopped over with us Sunday. We are always glad to have Bethany students with us. We had the pleasure of having Bro. Hoffman, of South St. Joseph, Mo., with us on the evenings of April 26 and 27. Their "Consecration" and "City Mission Work" were intensely interesting.—Jennie Alexander, R. D. 2, Monroe, Iowa, April 30.

KANSAS.

Abilene church held their love feast at the Holland house April 23. The attendance was large and we had a very good meeting. Bro. F. E. McCune, our District Sunday-school Secretary, was with us during the feast and spent the following week at the Holland house. The previous week he spent at the Navarro house. Three were received by letter at this meeting. Bro. McCune has since decided to hold a series of meetings at the Holland house, to commence Nov. 12.—W. A. Mourer, Elmo, Kans., April 29.

Altoona.—The brethren and sisters who were a part of the Fredonia congregation met April 19 to complete an organization. Bro. J. S. Clark, of Parsons, Kans., and Bro. Andrew Neher, of McCune, Kans., were the elders appointed to effect the organization. Bro. Neher was chosen church clerk, correspondent and Messenger agent; Bro. Arthur Sutcliff, treasurer; Bro. Ira Neher, Sister J. E. Bright and Sister Longanecker, trustees; Sister Ethel Longanecker, chorister; Bro. Perry Boggs, solicitor; Bro. E. Bright, assistant. Brethren Joel Varner and Frank Boggs, deacons; Bro. J. S. Clark, of Parsons, Kans., elder in charge. Bro. J. S. Clark, foreman. A collection of $8.37 was taken up to defray expenses.—Perry Boggs, R. F. D. 1, Altoona, Kans., April 24.

Eden Valley.—Bro. Steven Berkebile, his wife, and little son, were with us from April 21 to 27. They both gave us some very interesting talks on mission work in India. We were very much encouraged in the work of missions. Our prayers are that they may very soon be with us again to spend in his service.—Bessie D. Miller, St. John, Kans., May 3.

Independence.—The work at this place is very encouraging. The teacher-training class is progressing nicely, with Interest. Bro. M. A. Miller is the teacher. The Sunday-school children rendered a short program on Easter Day. One young adult was baptized on Sunday, April 23, by Bro. H. Root was with us on Friday night and gave us an interesting and instructive lecture on "Home Life." Bro. Root is working in the interest of the Colorado City Mission. Bro. Root is a fine Christian worker.—Ida Ikenberry, April 26.

Kansas City.—Yesterday was a feast of good things for us. Bro. Wm. Eisenbise was with us in the A. M. and he met our South Side Mission. All departments of the work are in good condition. Bro. Spring and Bro. Root are with the Lord's work. Since Dec. 15 twenty-one have been baptized at the Mission.—Mrs. Ida Ikenberry, 1010 Tracy Avenue, Kansas City, Kans., May 1.

Leonard.—Yesterday our church held its preparatory council. Considerable business came before the meeting. The visiting brethren reported the work done at the District Meeting. Bro. B. F. Snyder was elected delegate to Annual Meeting; Bro. D. Edwin Jones, alternate. Two letters of membership were granted.—Ethel Hoff, R. D. 1, Leonard, Kans., April 29.

Morning Star.—In my last report I believe I stated that our love feast would be held on a certain date, instead of reading. We have changed the date of the feast to May 27, at 2 P. M. Bro. Wm. Eisenbise, of Kansas City, was with us, and preached in the evening. April 23 Bro. Chas. Eisenbise, of Kansas City, was with us in the A. M. and gave us a sermon on Jerusalem on Saturday evening, and on Sunday morning he gave us an excellent sermon. On account of sickness, our attendance was not good, but the spirit was good. We had a better.—Salome Harader, Hackberry, Kans., May 3.

Pleasant Hill.—We met in council April 29. A number of ministerial brethren were present. Bro. Ben Forney officiated. Sister Mary Hoff was elected Sunday-school Secretary. It was a good talk, and in the evening Bro. F. E. McCune preached to us. Sister Mary Hoff was a spiritual uplift.—Harry Long, Remona, Kans., May 1.

MARYLAND.

Monocacy.—As our correspondent is on ill health, I take the liberty to send this report. Our love feast was held at the Trinkle meeting-house, May 6. Bro. J. H. Moore, of Frederick, Md., Bro. C. D. Bonsack, of Union Bridge, Md., Bro. W. E. Roop, of Westminster, Md., and Bro. Frank Lipner, of Gettysburg, Pa., were with us. Bro. Nedrow officiated at the communion services. About 110 communed, making a very impressive service. The brethren and sisters were entertained in and around the house during the entire communion service. The weather was very unfavorable, but towards noon the weather cleared and it got warm. Bro. Bonsack preached a short sermon in the A. M. and the meeting all expressed their thankfulness and appreciation to our brethren for coming. Bro. Nedrow was chosen as delegate to attend this meeting.—D. S. Weybright, Thurmont, Md., May 2.

MICHIGAN

Coleman.—Our church met in council April 8 at the home of Bro. D. Hoover. Our elder, Bro. Jacob Hoff, was with us. Three letters were received and one was granted. The church decided to have a love feast in June, but time and place was left to the elder in charge. Bro. Hoover and Bro. Stone schoolhouse have been good and beneficial to all. The attendance has been good. On Sunday, the last number, present was 115.—Bessie Ward, R. D. 3, Beaverton, Mich., April 30.

Lake View.—Our church met in special council April 29, with Bro. George Hoffman presiding. One letter of membership was received. We expect Bro. C. L. Wilkins with us in a series of meetings, to commence about Jan. 1. Two of our Sunday-school scholars were received into the church by baptism since my last report.—Ella Keith, Breckenridge, Mich., May 1.

Prescott.—April 27 the brethren and sisters at this place met and made arrangements for a series of meetings. Our dear souls decided to walk with Christ. At 1 P. M. we met at the bank of the beautiful Rifle river, in which they were baptized. This, we believe, made deep impressions on some, as this was the first baptismal scene here by true immersion. June 24 we expect the adjoining elders here to assist us in organizing this church into a separate congregation. We are now in the midst of a revival effort. We decided to have a love feast on the same date, and extended an invitation to the brethren and sisters of the churches. The meeting will be twelve miles straight east of West Branch. Those coming from the south will be met at Rose City to attend these meetings. will please notify the writer or Bro. Hoffman. We now number thirty-seven, and will forty one members.—E. B. Welrick, Prescott, Mich., May 1.

MISSOURI.

Aurora.—On the morning of April 29, Bro. Wyatt arrived at this place. That night we had preaching by Bro. Bowman, who had come on the evening train. The next morning, April 30, at 9 A. M. we met for S. S. and at 10 A. M. preaching at 11 A. M. At 3 P. M. the members met in council, and Bro. Bowman was elected delegate to Annual Meeting. At 7:30 we met for examination services, and at 7:30 we had our communion services. Sixteen members surrounded the Lord's table. We feel that we have had another season of refreshing.—Clemma Pebley, Aurora, Mo., May 4.

Mineral Creek.—Bro. Andrew Hutchison has been visiting in our midst during the past week, and preached for us each evening. Large and attentive audiences have appreciated the many good things he told us. One was baptized on Wednesday night. Circumstances were such that he could not come for baptism on Thursday and as Thursday evening was set for our love feast, it was his desire to be baptized Wednesday night, after services, in order that he might partake of the feast with us. We, with sickness in hand, many of us on our way to the creek, a short distance from the church, and that place added to the kingdom. After the feast on Thursday night was enjoyed by those present, but, owing to the rainy evening, quite a number were kept at home. At our regular meeting, April 23, Brethren Sherman Jones and James Anderson were called to the office of deacon. Bro. Jones was duly ordained to act at the Lord's table this spring.—Elphia Campbell, Leeton, Mo., May 1.

Monroe City.—Our meeting conducted by our elder, Bro. Leander Smith, closed April 24. Two more united with the church and were baptized. This makes a total of four by baptism, one by letter and two received by letter since our meetings began. Our love feast was well attended. Forty-two communed. We have been greatly strengthened. One year ago we had nineteen members, but now we have thirty-seven. All but two of those who have united with the church during the past year are grown men and women. This will make a big factor in the work of the church. We are bright little Sunday-school girls. Our elder feels very much encouraged by the results of the work done here. We have a good Sunday-school, Christian Workers' Meeting and prayer meeting.—Mary Wine Smith, Nevada, Mo., April 30.

South St. Joseph Mission.—We are looking forward to the assembling of the Annual Conference, and hope to have a great many of our dear brethren and sisters. We contemplate having some entertaining at 842 Kentucky Street, during the Conference, by some of our brethren, and we invite to the same all who are not provided with the members of the Mission.—E. N. Huffman, 502 Kentucky St., St. Joseph, Mo., May 7.

NEBRASKA.

Logan Grove.—Bro. Snell, of Cambridge, Nebr., came to us March 11 and 12 and preached twice. Sunday-school closed with a love feast on Thursday evening, March 23. Bro. Snell labored several days and spoke to us while here. We were strengthened and encouraged. One sister came to be reclaimed, and her husband made the good confession for Christ's sake and was baptized.—Sadie Andrews, Gandy, Nebr., April 16.

NEW MEXICO.

Sunshine church met in council at the home of Brother and Sister Weimer March 4. Our elder, Brother Jacob Hoff, presided. Bro. C. G. Reed left us for his home in Nebraska. Bro. C. Harley Weaver was elected as our clerk. All other officers were retained. The meeting closed with the Sunday following we had a very interesting and enjoyable meeting. Our Sunday-school meeting was "Temperance." Text (2 Peter 1: 5-7). Several good talks were given. Two hours were consumed in the study and discussion of temperance. We decided to hold our love feast June 10 at Yeso. We are also planning to have a series of meetings conducted by the brethren, to be conducted by Brethren Samuel Weimer and Vankirk Maxey.—Miriam A. Maxey, Yeso, N. Mex., April 27.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Ellison church met March 16, with our elder, J. H. Brubaker, presiding. The letter of Bro. Wm. H. Eller was received, which adds to our ministerial help. Two letters of membership were granted. The elder in charge has a plan to organize a Sunday-school in the Fourth of July.—the latter part of May. Our Sunday-school and prayer meetings are well attended. Committees were appointed for the ensuing year in the same. The elder in charge has decided to assist us in a series of meetings which will begin June 28, our love feast to be the close of the series. Bro. Eller, at 2 P. M. Since our council five other letters of membership have been handed in. On Easter the Sunday-school gave a very interesting program, which took the place of the lesson period. After the program Bro. Wm. H. Eller gave a short address, which was very much to the point. A collection of $13.67 was taken for missionary purposes. The attendance was good, and the interest was manifested. Increase, the house being filled on Easter.—Ida Miller, Ellison, N. Dak., April 26.

Notice.—The District Meeting of North Dakota, Eastern Montana and Western Canada will be held July 11, 12 and 13, in the Lima congregation, N. Dak., thirty miles north of Devils Lake on the Farmers' R. R. All inquiries relating to the meeting may be addressed to John A. Myers, church clerk.—J. J. Swihart, elder in charge. Address either as below.—Ida Shively, Lima, N. Dak., May 1.

Notice.—The various churches in the State District will please notice that all material from the churches, to be brought before the District Meeting, must be in the hands of the undersigned by June 1, that it may be published in the query pamphlet before the delegates to the meeting leave home after that date.—D. W. Shock, District Clerk, Box 525, Minot, N. Dak., May 1.

OHIO.

Bear Creek.—Our church met in council April 26. Our elder, Bro. Jacob Hoff, presided. Four letters of membership were granted. Our elder proposed to resign his charge of the church, and a motion was put and carried to that effect at the work. But by unanimous vote of the church he was again placed in charge for a term of two years. The brethren will be expected to labor with him and the congregation is in a very good condition. Bro. W. R. Miller gave us a very interesting talk on the work in Old Mexico, illustrated by stereopticon views. The lectures were well attended, and all enjoyed the talk, and I am sure much good has been done in establishing the truth of the Bible.—Sarah M. Bowser, Bear Creek, Ohio, May 1.

Bellefontaine.—In the late account of District Meeting of Northwestern Ohio it is stated that the writer was a member of the Lewistown church. It should have been Bro. G. A. Snider, who also is the trustee of Manchester College, as well as Bro. Wm. Eisenbise, who was also elected trustee at the District Meeting.—B. F. Snyder, Bellefontaine, Ohio, May 6.

Lima.—On account of a mistake in the date, we should have been gathered into Christ's fold. March 26 four were received by baptism, one a father and three school children, the youngest ten years. April 2 one more was received, the father of the family. Sister more was received, a brother and sister nearly seventy years old. Others are near the kingdom. This is a time of rejoicing.—Mrs. Lizzie Bowser, 1000 Second St., Lima, Ohio, April 26.

West Nimishillen.—Our church met in council April 29. Bro. Noah Longanecker presided. Bro. J. H. Moore was elected delegate to Annual Meeting. The writer was appointed church correspondent. The time for our love feast will be June 17, at 4 P. M. It was also decided to hold a series of meetings in October. Bro. Longanecker remained with us and preached an excellent sermon on Sunday.—Clara Young, Sultman, Ohio, May 1.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Buffalo Valley.—Our love feast will be held June 7 and 8, at 2 P. M. Those coming from the East should take the P. & M. train at Lewisburg. Those coming from the West should take the morning train at Bellefontaine. Both trains are on the Lake Shore and Toledo, Ft. R.—William H. Beer, Millinburg, Pa., May 4.

Huntingdon church met in council May 1. Eld. H. B. Brumbaugh presided. Our love feast is May 7. We have two applicants for baptism. Methods for electing Sunday-school and church officers were discussed. Three young men were called to the ministry. Sister Elizabeth Cyrnal has gone to Johnstown, Pa., to do mission work. We miss her. Last Sunday evening we celebrated the anniversary of the King James version of the Bible. Short addresses were given by Brethren A. H. Haines, J. B. Brumbaugh, T. Z. Myers, O. E. Myers and H. B. Brumbaugh. It is interesting to note how the different versions came about, and to see how God has led in it all. We have an enrollment of over three hundred in our Sunday-school, and the church services are well attended. Several of our members visited the Annual Meeting.—Eleanor J. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa., May 7.

Indian Creek.—Bro. S. E. Hostetler of Meyerdale, Pa., will begin a series of meetings at the Elbethel house, in this congregation, commencing May 27 and continue till June 10, closing with a love feast on June 3. 30.—M. Swihart, Knoxsnyder, Freed, Pa., May 1.

Philadelphia (First Church of the Brethren, Dauphin Street above Broad Street).—On Easter we had special services appropriate for the occasion. In the morning the meeting was on the "Doctrine of Immortality." In the afternoon the services were given over to the children. At the close of the service in the evening eight were baptized. The following Sunday evening a large audience met for communion and was baptized.—Mrs. Sallie B. Schnell, 1006 North Park Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., April 29.

VIRGINIA.

Botetourt.—We held our love feast at the Valley church April 29. There were about 250 communicants. The solemnity of such an occasion makes a lasting impression. We appreciated the presence of Bro. H. J. Woodie, of Franklin County, W. Va., who officiated.—Lottie Crumpacker, R. D. 1, Roanoke, Va., May 6.

Bethania.—The District Meeting of the Second District of Virginia convened April 27 and 28, at the Bethania church, Augusta Co., Va., with Eld. H. G. Miller as Moderator, Eld. A. S. Thomas as Reading Clerk, and Eld. J. E. McCann as Writing Clerk. Considerable business was disposed of. No papers were sent to the Annual Meeting. Eld. J. E. McCann is to represent us on the Standing Committee, with Eld. S. A. Thomas as alternate.—S. Estella Garber, Mt. Sidney, Va., April 29.

Montebello.—We held our council April 22. Our elder, Bro. J. R. Kindig, presided. All of the officers that were elected last year are still retained in office this year. No letters were received nor granted at this council. An excellent sermon was delivered on Sunday.—Emma Layton, Montebello, Va., April 24.

WASHINGTON.

Tacoma.—At our last council a minister and his wife were received by letter. Last Saturday evening we met at the church to partake of the Lord's supper and accompanying ordinances. Sister surrounded by fifty members and enjoyed the feast. A number of members were present from the adjoining churches. Eld. M. F. Wyand, of Centralia, officiated and preached for us the next day at 11 A. M. We have our little church building nearly papered and will be made possible by the Centralia Sunday-school sending us the money for the paper. We have also built on two Sunday-school rooms at the rear of the church, which are very much needed. The rooms were built with money raised by our own Sunday-school. The little children gave up all of the money towards building the rooms instead of having special cards or a treat on Easter.—Sadie A. Stutzman, 712 South Fifty-second Street, Tacoma, Wash., May 4.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Clifty.—We have changed our place of meeting from Pine Bluff to the Sunday Road schoolhouse. We have a union Sunday-school at this place now, which is progressing very nicely. Bro. Lewis Zimmerman is our superintendent; Mr. Naaman Pitzwater, secretary. We have four classes with a fairly good attendance. Eld. J. H. Worstell, of Cowen, W. Va., was with us April 29 and 30. He preached two inspiring sermons. We were glad for his presence. We hope he will come and preach for us again soon. Our next preaching services will be the first Saturday and Sunday in June.—Mary Crist, Box 43, Clifty, W. Va., May 2.

Johnstown.—Bro. A. B. Barnhart, of Hagerstown, Md., was with us April 23. He preached a good sermon in the morning, and gave us an interesting talk in the evening on Palestine, as he saw it on his recent visit to the Bible Lands. We held our council April 24. Our new churchhouse at Mountain Grove was dedicated April 30, by Eld. Caleb Long, of Boonsboro, Md., preached an excellent dedicatory sermon to a full house. Brethren Ritchey and Parrett were also present. A good collection was taken up and the house was dedicated free from debt. A Sunday-school was organized and arrangements made to hold services every Sabbath at that place.—J. W. Williamson, Cherry Run, W. Va., May 2.

WISCONSIN.

Maple Grove.—We have just begun a Bible Institute and evangelistic meetings, conducted by Bro. E. E. Eshelman, of Chicago, Ill. We will have afternoon and evening sessions, to continue probably three weeks. May 20 is the date set for our love feast. We especially invite the Brethren near us to be present.—W. H. Greenawalt, Stanley, Wis., May 1.

Worden church met in council April 22. Eld. John Heckman presided. Sunday-school officers were elected for six months. Bro. J. A. Gearhart was elected superintendent, and also trustee for three years. We expect to hold a series of meetings the latter part of May, following the meeting at Maple Grove, to be conducted by Bro. E. E. Eshelman, of Chicago. We decided to be represented at Annual Meeting.—Cora Eyer, Stanley, Wis., April 27.

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches"

QUERIES FOR ANNUAL MEETING.

Pennsylvania, Eastern.

1. Whereas Annual Meeting has advised strongly against members uniting with Labor Unions, but has not strictly forbidden it, in its last decision (see Art. 9, 1908), therefore we, the Reading church, ask District Meeting:

(1) Whether some leniency can be shown members who, in the judgment of the local church, have joined the Union, not because they were in sympathy with the Union but for the sake of obtaining work in a city where labor is closely organized?

(2) Is it allowable for brethren who are contractors to sign the "Union Wage Scale"?

(3) Are brethren justified in belonging to relief associations or beneficiary societies?

If District Meeting is not disposed to answer the above, then forward to Annual Meeting.

Answer by District Meeting.—Sent to Annual Meeting.

2. Inasmuch as the members of the General Missionary Committee were exempted, in 1904, from serving on any committee work to the churches, which was an act of much wisdom, we, therefore, the Ridgely congregation, petition Annual Meeting, through District Meeting of Eastern Pennsylvania for 1911, that the members of said committee be also exempt from serving on any committee involving church polity.

Answer by District Meeting—Request granted and sent to Annual Meeting.

SOUTHERN PENNSYLVANIA.

The Southern District of Pennsylvania met in Conference at the Black Rock house, Upper Codorus congregation, May 3, and was ready for business at 8: 00 A. M., having organized the evening before, with Eld. J. A. Long as Moderator.

The peaceful, Christian manner in which all business was transacted, proved the presence of the Spirit of God.

The report of committees and officers showed the efficiency and amiability in the Brethren's Home, near Carlisle, Pa., and the prosperity in Home Mission work.

Along with other business, a memorial was appointed to represent our District in the much needed cause of Temperance, according to decision of Annual Meeting.

The Mission Board was appointed a committee to confer with the adjoining church Districts in forming a boundary line into the unoccupied field to the north of our present territory, preparatory to pushing the gospel teachings, as practiced by the Brethren, into places where we are little known.

There were two queries to be sent to the Annual Meeting:

1. A call for the Annual Meeting to be held in the Southern District of Pennsylvania, in the year 1912.

2. We, the Lower Cumberland church, Pa., also we, the Pleasant Hill church, Pa., do petition Annual Conference, through the Southern District Meeting of Pennsylvania, to decide, positively and emphatically, that all elders and ministers, who are known to sympathize with, or to grant the privilege, or justify, or allow, sisters to wear hats for the space of two years, and not execute the decisions of Annual Conference, as found in the Revised Minutes, page 126, Art. 16, of 1897, and page 127, Art. 21, 1881, also including the wearing of jewelry, the elder or minister in such church can not serve or hold office on the Standing Committee, nor serve as delegate to Annual Conference, nor District Meeting.

Answer.—By Lower Cumberland church, Pa., also exactly the same by the Pleasant Hill church, Pa.: They cannot hold office, under those circumstances, as delegates to Standing Committee nor to District Meeting, nor to Annual Meeting.—Passed by District Meeting of Southern Pennsylvania, May 3.

The kind hospitality of the church at Black Rock leaves a warm place in our hearts for that part of God's vineyard.

H. M. Stover, Writing Clerk.

Waynesboro, Pa., May 5.

REBAPTISM.

1. The church is a body of which Christ is the head (Col. 1: 18).

2. The body is one, and has many members. All the members of that body being many compose the one body (1 Cor. 12: 12).

3. The members of that body are not different churches, but members of the same body,—the church. For illustration see verses 15 to 26.

4. The church is an organization as seen by reference to verses 28, 29 and 30.

5. From the proposition I, above, it will appear that Christ is the head of the "church," not "churches," therefore he is the head of "one" body, not several, as also appears in Eph. 4: 4, to which 1 Cor. 1: 13 bears emphatic testimony.

If the "Church of the Brethren" is worthy, as an organized body, Christ is its Head and not the Head of another. Christ is not divided. If we are members of the body of Christ,—the one church,—we are in Christ (1 Cor. 3: 1). Other references might be given.

The way we got into Christ is by baptism (Rom. 6: 3). We can not "believe ourselves" into Christ. We can not "repent ourselves" into Christ. We are "baptized" into Christ.

It is admitted that baptism is a very important ordinance. It is a saving ordinance. Some one has said, "It is the only ordinance for salvation," and I do not deny it "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16: 16; 1 Peter 3: 21).

But it makes a great deal of difference what our faith is and whether the administrator is accepted as being in Christ himself. I will not dilate on this point further than to say: If any one is in Christ, I would be very slow to encourage him to leave his church and unite with the one I belong to. If such a one could convince me that he is really in Christ, while belonging to another body, I would become very busy examining myself whether I am in the faith in Christ.

But such a thought can not, in this connection, be entertained. I find no language better fitted to express my mind here than that of the Apostle of Love. "They went our from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us" (1 John 2: 19).

The fact is they left the body and organized bodies antagonistic to what we accept as the family of the saved. But as being the case, it is incomprehensible how we could accept their works as a medium to induct aliens into the loyal body or family of which Christ is the Head. I have used the word "family," and refer, for my authority, to Eph. 3: 15. Now, to get into this family they must become members by baptism (John 3: 5). There is a difference in being born "into" a family and becoming a member by any device merely to accommodate temporal conditions or requirements.

Some seem to be exercised about the Schwarzenau incident. That does not trouble me. God does not require impossibilities. Bro. Hope had a good way to solve Mack's difficulty. The church came out of the wilderness in 1864, when we were compelled to declare our principles before the authorities.—Joseph Holsopple.

ANNUAL MEETING INFORMATION.

Lodging and Meals.

A systematic canvass of the city was begun May 8, and special effort will be made to ascertain the character of the houses, so that our people might not get into places of questionable reputation. Especially is this necessary since much depends upon the impressions we make here, as to our future work at this place. We caution all, Do not make lodging arrangements with any one not personally known to you.

The price for lodging will vary. This cannot be avoided where the city furnishes the accommodations. Then location and conveniences will come into account. The average price will be fifty cents per night. Breakfast will be served in some of the homes at twenty-five cents.

We are now ready to assign homes, and in making application, you will please advise us how many in party, what price you are willing to pay, whether or not you will want breakfast where your lodge, how many rooms, and how many beds? Do not all expect to get under the eaves of the Auditorium. We will do the best we can to locate you conveniently. We will give preference to the aged and crippled, when so advised, but do not imagine yourself old or infirm.

Let us have your applications as early as possible, to assist us. Ample provision will be made for all who may care to attend. The city is very responsive to our needs.

There will be, in addition to lunch counter service, that will accommodate several thousand in a few minutes, a restaurant, to seat about a thousand at one time, on the grounds.

Program for Tootle Auditorium.

This building, seating about two thousand people, is the Sunday-school headquarters.

LORDSBURG COLLEGE, CALIFORNIA.

The only school of the Church of the Brethren on the Pacific Coast offering to our young people a Literary or Academic training is located at Lordsburg, Cal. For a number of years Lordsburg College was managed as a private enterprise or corporation, but always for the upbuilding of the cause. In order to provide for the training our young people,—as free as possible from worldly influences.

As a private institution the school was under the management of such brethren as I. N. H. Beahm, W. I. T. Hoover, and W. C. Hanawalt.

In the spring of 1908 the District of Southern California and Arizona assumed control of the institution, by request of the former management and owners, at which time the District elected seven Trustees, who, with their successors, have carried the work forward with a fair degree of success. At the present time we have a faculty composed mostly of members of our own church, and the members of the faculty who are not of our church are ladies of splendid character.

In this article I wish to call special attention to our Bible Department. Last year, under the direction of Bro. C. H. Yoder, this department did splendid work. This year Bro. J. P. Dickey has had charge of the Bible work, and the splendid work, so well begun by Bro. Yoder, has been carried forward and strengthened by Bro. Dickey, so that today Lordsburg College Bible School is in a position to offer to our people a course of study that ought to, and will, attract the attention, and enlist the encouragement of all who desire to advance the Master's kingdom.

The Word of God is the principal book taught; all other books are supplementary to the One Book. Brother Dickey exalts the Word.

Teacher-training and Mission Study classes receive special attention, and the interest awakened in the student body, along these lines, is very encouraging.

While all the world is awake to the fact that "time is short," it seems that many people are spending that "time" in preparation for this world only, and neglect to get ready for the "time that is to come".

If our people but knew of the splendid opportunity, here at Lordsburg, to prepare for the great work, even for the greatest work in this world, I am sure that next year would see many more of our young ministers, Sunday-school teachers and Christian Workers taking the courses offered for better preparation in their chosen lines of work.

It is in such training as is given here that one "becomes strong and unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." The heart is set right, the mind is developed and trained, the intellect is strengthened, and the will is brought into subjection to the will of God.

The call for trained workers in the great world field ought to awaken us all to the fact that we, as a church, must act once, and encourage our gifted and noble young people to prepare themselves for this great work. They must be ready to answer these calls and take their places in the front ranks, so that, when the sheaves are gathered for the Garner of the Lord, there may be rejoicing. No more will we need to sing, "Will there be any stars in my crown?" but, rather, "Bringing in the sheaves," as we come rejoicing. May we prepare ourselves to go out into the "harvest field," which is certainly "white" today, as we look upon it, than at any other age in the history of God's people. May we stand side by side, as reapers, working for the Master, going where he wants us to go, saying what he wants us to say, and doing what he wants us to do! In the "school of the prophets" God had trained his workers, and used them. In our Bible schools God is having his workers trained, and will use them. At Lordsburg God is blessing the efforts in this people. Those who are doing the work will help you to be used in this great gathering time. Here our young people may secure an education in an environment free from the worldly influence of most schools.

SEMINOLE, FLORIDA.

We are located about ten miles northwest of St. Petersburg, Fla., on the Peninsula, about two miles from the gulf. This, I think, is the best place I have found in Florida. I have traveled from Jacksonville to Ft. Myers, up the Caloosahatchee River to La Belle; then back to Lakeland, St. Petersburg and Largo.

Wife and I, upon arrival here, rented several furnished rooms. Then we visited various parts of the country, to see for ourselves, and to talk with the people who live here. We found them courteous. They seem glad to have people come to help them clear up the country and improve it.

Here, on this Peninsula, the citrus fruit can be grown quite successfully. There are quite a number of truck farms here. People in that business are doing quite well. Those who like fruit, and have a little money, can live here very easily by buying a grove. I have a little place containing 400 rods.

The land is sandy and easily tilled. People do most of their work during the dry season, which is from Jan. 1 to June 1. During the rainy season most of the people do not do any work in the ground. After that the truck men plant their vegetables for the Holiday market, obtaining big prices.

I will be glad to give the best obtainable information to all desiring it. The climate here is delightful and healthful. There is an invigorating surf beach.

Seminole, Fla., April 23. J. V. Felthouse.

"THE POCKET TESTAMENT LEAGUE."

This is a world-wide organization for the daily reading of at least one chapter of the Bible,—embodying also a promise to carry either a Testament or Bible in the pocket or about the person. There are small pocket Testaments both in the King James Version, and the American Revision, neatly and strongly bound in leather, furnished at cost (50 cents each) at the Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, for all who will join the League. League membership cards are furnished free to those wishing to join in the good work. There are no fees of any kind,—simply an obligation daily to read the Word. The membership card reads thus:

"I hereby accept membership in the Pocket Testament League, and promise that it the my life to read at least one chapter in the Bible each day, and to carry a Testament or Bible with me wherever I go."

If there is a people anywhere that should be awake to a movement of this kind, it ought to be our people. We ought to hail with joy a movement that will help men and women to read daily God's Word. Thousands are joining this League,—both professing Christians and nonprofessors. It is putting God's Word into the minds and hearts of thousands that otherwise would not read it.

In this age of so much reading the Bible is often a neglected book, even by our own people, and if we can stimulate a habit of daily reading just one chapter, the spiritual tone of the church is bound to become better. How many young people would be saved to the church if only this would read the Word of God!

I have been pressing this work upon our people in Virginia, and many are joining the League. I find none more ready to join the League and give it a hearty approval than our ministers, especially our elders. I hope some one in every congregation, throughout the Brotherhood, will feel moved to take hold of this work and get not only every Christian, but every one within reach to join the League in their neighborhood. It can do no harm and will doubtless do much good. No one who joins the League is under obligation to buy a League Testament. He can buy his Testament anywhere; only so he reads one chapter per day.

BEAVER DAM, INDIANA.

April 4 Bro. C. S. Garber, of St. Joseph, Mo., came into our midst, to assist us in a series of revival services at our trinity house, continuing till the evening of the 23rd. when they closed the meeting in this house. Interest was awakened in the neighborhood. Two were baptized.

Bro. Garber depends upon unusual and peculiar subjects and much advertising, to draw his crowds. This one thing, at least, the meetings have so far done for us,—they created a hungering and thirsting for the truth.

On Sunday night, April 16, he preached a sermon on baptism, which stirred some of our neighbors that belong to the Christian church. They sent in a challenge, accordingly, for a debate on baptism. Expectations. But, this being a mission point, and our few members exceedingly weak financially, we could not undertake it. The interest being so great, however, the matter was mentioned at the close of the meetings, whereupon a number of good, substantial men and women pledged $5 each, and Bro. J. G. Stinebaugh, to give $5, each, to secure a debater. So, then, if our friends of the Christian church will furnish a man, there will likely be one of the most interesting debates ever held in this part of Indiana. Surely, these meetings have done much good for us. The community evidently thinks that we have the Gospel in our favor, otherwise these men, who never made a profession, would not have pledged the money to defray the expense on our side.

R. D. Z. Ahron, Ind., April 25. John L. Kline.

PATTERSON, CALIFORNIA.

The little body of workers here is much encouraged. Bro. Gilbert has moved his family here, eleven members. We held our members' meeting at the home of the writer on Sunday evening, and took steps toward having our little band of workers and believers into a church, and also making arrangements to build a chapel on the rear end of the lots donated to us by Mr. Patterson, to be finished up very nicely in a bungalow style, and later using it for a parsonage. We passed the paper last evening, when $10 in money, and $35 worth in work, was subscribed. So you see the people have a mind to work as well as to give. We are making arrangements to hold a series of meetings. We have written to Bro. Jesse Overholtzer to help us. He will begin preaching for us the first Sunday in May. The harvest truly is ripe and ready for more reapers. Some have said that they are searching for more gospel light. Easter Sunday we had fifty-nine at Sunday-school. Our evening services are increasing in attendance and interest. The writer is the only one here, at present, to deliver the messages. May others come and help to sow this good seed. Those who can't come perhaps would like to help in this great cause even in building this little church. Remember us at Patterson, for it surely has been a hard struggle. W. F. Haynes.

COLORADO CITY MISSION, COLO.

Since sending in my last report we have been disappointed in getting the building in which to hold our series of meetings, it having been rented for office purposes. It was the only building available. Our meetings will be postponed for an indefinite time. We certainly need a house of our own in which to worship.

Our pastor, Bro. L. H. Root, will leave for Kansas and North Dakota on a soliciting tour. He will be gone two months. During his absence Bro. J. C. Groff, of Wayne, Colo., has kindly consented to supply the pulpit every two weeks. It is a sacrifice for Bro. Groff and his people, because they, too, can have services only every two weeks.

Sister Root will stay here and keep up the work as far as possible. Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meetings will still be kept up..

Any one who can make it convenient to stop with us over Sunday will be gladly welcomed. Our Mission is on Colorado Avenue in the W. C. T. U. building, in "400" block. All who are going to Conference through Colorado Springs, will please remember that we need their help, presence and encouragement.

Last summer we met many people who did not know of our Mission. On Saturday a great blessing came to us,—the first good rain we have since last September.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord"

Anderson, Bro. Jacob V., born Feb. 7, 1846, died of a complication of diseases April 21, 1911, at his home in the Fairview congregation, Carroll County, Md., aged 65 years, 2 months and 14 days. He united with the Church of the Brethren over forty-one years ago, and has filled the office of deacon forty-five years. He leaves a devoted wife, one son, one daughter, one sister, one half-brother and one half-sister. Services by Bro. D. B. Arnold. Text, Heb. 11: 4. Interment in the Abernathy cemetery near Fairview church.—Lyla Harvey, Union Mills, Md.

Brumbaugh, Bro. John Milton, born Jan. 27, 1836, died April 23, 1911, aged 75 years, 3 months and 26 days. In his early life he united with the Brethren church and lived a faithful life. Funeral services in the church by Bro. Walter Warstler, of the Goshen City church, Ind., and Bro. I. L. Berkey, of the Rock Run congregation, Ind.—Cal. A. Forney, 718 Eighth St., Goshen, Ind.

Dilling, William Henry, son of Friend Homer and Sister Jenny Dilling, born Dec. 3, 1911, in the bounds of the Clover Creek church, Pa., aged 11 years, 7 months and 27 days. Services by Bro. Jesse K. Zook. Text, Heb. 5: 7.—J. G. Meyer, R. F. D. 1, Roaring Spring, Pa.

Elksenbery, Sister Mary, nee Harter, born in Carroll County, Ind., Dec. 25, 1835, died in Nappanee, Ind., April 15, aged 75 years, 8 months and 2 days. In 1857 she was married to Silas Elksenbery. To this union seven children were born, seven children. Soon after their marriage both united with the Church of the Brethren. Her husband and three children preceded her. She was always kind and gentle. Her funeral was marked by a sad accident. As the hearse stopped at the church the team became frightened, broke away from the driver and ran down an embankment, where the team broke loose and the hearse tipped over, the casket containing the body slide from this no serious damage was done, although the congregation was very much excited. Services by the writer, assisted by Rev. Moody, of the Christian church, and Eld. W. H. Pyle.—Mrs. Ida Hood, Greene, Iowa.

Fike, Sister Christina, born Aug. 5, 1829 died at the home of her son, G. D. Fike, near Nampa, Idaho, April 8, 1911, aged 81 years, 8 months and 3 days. She suffered for a long time with cancer of the stomach, but bore her suffering with patience to the end. She was a devoted Christian, and a loving mother. Services by Bro. C. A. Williams.—Rose Bradley, Nampa, Idaho.

Hoke, Bro. George, son of Jacob and Catharine Fryman, born near Pitsburg, Ohio, June 20, 1850, died near Arcanum, Ohio, April 19, 1911, aged 60 years, 10 months and 29 days. He was married to Lydia Flory Oct. 20, 1881. To this union were born three daughters, two of whom survive him. He united with the Church of the Brethren in March, 1896, and lived a consistent life until death, which came very suddenly and wholly unexpected. There is no appreciable suffering. He leaves a faithful wife, two sons, two daughters, one son-in-law and two daughters-in-law.—Jesse Stutsman, from the Abbottsville U. B. church. Interment in the Abbottsville cemetery.—Mrs. Lydia Hoke, Arcanum, Ohio.

Moke, Bro. George, born in Columbiana County, Ohio, April 21, 1839, died April 22, 1911, aged 72 years and 1 day. He came to Elkhart County, Ind., in 1857. April 21, 1861, he was married to Catharine Bussard. To this union was born one daughter. Jan. 24, 1866, Catharine died. In 1868, he married Ann Eliza Stevenson. One son and five daughters were born to this union, two of the children also having died. Bro. Hoke united with the Church of the Brethren at the age of seventeen. He called him to from the work of deacon Sept. 29, 1884, in which he labored successfully until death. Services at Elkhart Valley by C. C. Eshelby and the writer. Text, John 14: 1-3.—Frank Kreider, R. D. 6, Goshen, Ind.

Morner, Sister Rosanna, nee Wellinger, died April 15, 1911, near Mount Morris, Ill., aged 74 years and 4 months. Her aged husband preceded her in death about nine months ago. Sister Morner was a member of the Church of the Brethren for about forty years. Services at the house by the writer. Interment in the Mount Pleasant cemetery.—Robert T. Hull, Somerset, Pa.

Kaufman, Sister Fianna, nee Meilinger, born Oct. 16, 1841, in Lancaster County, Pa., died at her home in Nappanee, Marshall Co., Ind., April 25, 1911, aged 69 years, 6 months and 9 days. She was married in marriage to Dr. David Kaufman. To this union one son and one daughter were born. She leaves her husband, two children, four brothers and one sister. May, 1868, she united with the Church of the Brethren, in which she was an active member until the end. She was always ready to do good wherever opportunity presented itself. The day before her sickness set in she had prepared a basket of provisions to take to a poor aged lady at the County House, but the hand of affliction hindered. Services by the writer, assisted by J. R. Smith, at the home, assisted by Bro. Irvin Weaver and the pastor of the U. B. church, Rev. John Lahr.—Ida M. Young, Nappanee, Ind.

Keck, Bro. Chester, son of Brother Joseph and Sarah Keck, born Jan. 3, 1891, was killed at his home in the Turkey creek congregation, Ind., April 27, 1911, aged 20 years, 3 months and 14 days. He leaves a father, mother and two brothers. One sister preceded him in death. He united with the church in January, 1905. Since that time he lived a consistent life. Services at the Union Center house by Bro. Peter Stuckman, assisted by the writer. Text, Job 14: 14.—Henry Wysong, Nappanee, Ind.

Kensey, John David, youngest son of Bro. Walter and Sister Mary Kensey, died of lung trouble at his home near Mattawana, Pa., April 23, 1911, aged 2 years, 6 months and 19 days. He leaves his parents and two small brothers. Services at the Pine Glen church, Pa., by Bro. J. C. Swigart, assisted by Bro. Samuel Yoder, after which interment was made in the Pine Glen cemetery.—Ida M. Miller, Mattawana, Pa.

Kilmer, Mrs. Ida E., youngest daughter of Eld. J. D. Haughtelin, born near Panora, Iowa, June 18, 1877, died March 23, 1911, aged 33 years, 10 months and 5 days. She was married to D. B. Kilmer Jan. 23, 1901. To them were born four children, all of them dying in infancy. She had been in feeble health for several years. A year ago she went with her husband and family to Clifton, Colo. March 2d she underwent a third critical operation, from which she died the next day. She was converted and united with the Church of the Brethren at the age of twelve years. About five years ago she changed her membership to the Baptist church. Her husband brought her body to Panora, Iowa, for interment. Services at the Brethren church by Rev. L. L. Smith, of the Baptist church, assisted by Bro. M. Dearduff. Interment in the nearby cemetery. She leaves a faithful husband and three stepsons, to whom she had become endeared as a faithful mother; also her aged parents, one sister and four brothers. She knew about seven hours before the end came that she could not get well, but was conscious and talked to the last, admonishing her friends around her to be faithful. She bade them good-bye, gave her eyes and peacefully passed away.—J. D. Haughtelin, Panora, Iowa.

Kingery, Sister Patience, nee Cooper, born in VanBuren County, Mich., Sept. 15, 1838, died April 14, 1911, at her home near Fullerton, Kans. She was left motherless at the age of four years, and an orphan at seventeen. She then went to Three Oaks, Mich., to live with her sister, Matilda, who she was married to Peter W. D. Kingery June 24, 1858. To this union were born seven sons and four daughters. She united with the Methodist church at the age of nineteen, and the following year she united with the Brethren church, of which her husband was a member. She has lived in this faith ever since. She was anointed April 3 by Elders M. Keller and John Clapper. She moved with her husband and family to Newton, Kans., in 1874, and in 1879 to Fullerton, Kans., where she has since resided. She leaves five sons, four daughters and one sister. Her life has been one of self-sacrifice and love, cheering all whom she knew. She had sublime faith, as expressed by her, that "God will wipe away all tears, and that there will be no partings nor sorrow over yonder," hoping that she would see her husband, and requested her family to meet them in heaven. Services in the home by Eld. M. Keller, assisted by Rev. C. N. Ridenour. Text, 2 Cor. 5: 1, 2.—Mrs. Mae Kingery Shook, Larned, Kans.

Miller, Sister Lorinda, of the Lick Creek congregation, Ind., died at the home of her daughter, in Prairietown, Ind., April 24, 1911, aged 79 years 6 months and 13 days. Many years ago she united with the Church of the Brethren in this congregation, where she held her membership until death overtook her death. Five daughters, two sons and a number of other near relatives survive her. Her husband, Bro. Eli Miller, preceded her in death about two years. Services were conducted at the home of her daughter in Clay City, Ind., by the writer, assisted by Bro. C. W. Miniger. Text, Luke 16: 19-26.—B. F. Goshorn, Clay City, Ind.

Miller, Sister Mary, born Oct. 24, 1833, died April 26, 1911, aged 77 years 6 months and 2 days. She was a member of the Church of the Brethren nearly all her life. She was united in marriage to George S. Miller in 1851. Eight children were born to them. Her husband and six children preceded her in the Glessner cemetery. Services at the church by Brethren Levi Hoke and Walter Warstler. Text, Rev. 22: 14. This was Sister Miller's selection before her death.—Cal. A. Forney, 715 South Sixth St., Goshen, Ind.

Seldomridge, Bro. John F., son of Brother Albert J. and Sister Hanna Seldomridge, born Sept. 8, 1887, died April 18, 1911, at the home of his parents, 891 Columbia Avenue, Lancaster, Pa., aged 23 years, 7 months and 14 days. Bro. John was a member of the Church of the Brethren about twelve years. He leaves his parents, three brothers and two sisters. Services at the home of his parents; also at Rohrlands church by the home minister. Text, 2 Chron. 34: 1-2; Psa. 72: 24. Interment in the adjoining cemetery.—H. B. Yoder, 343 Charlotte St., Lancaster, Pa.

Shafer, Sister Christina, nee Hoppe-gartner, born in Ohio, Nov. 28, 1849, died of cancer at her home in Ladysmith, Wis., April 16, 1911, aged 61 years. She was married to John Shafer. To them were born two children. In 1878 she married Henry Shafer. Two sons and one daughter were born to them. She is survived by her husband, four children, two sisters and one brother. Services in the M. E. church by Rev. J. E. Wilson, assisted by our elder, Bro. T. D. Vaught. Interment in the Riverside cemetery.—Mrs. Viola Michael, Box 16, Conrath, Wis.

Shawley, Bro. Jonathan, died in the bounds of the Middle Creek congregation, Somerset Co., Pa., April 24, 1911, aged 82 years 4 months. Services at the house by the writer. Interment in the Bakersville cemetery.—Robert T. Hull, Somerset, Pa.

Shriner, Eliza, nee Roland, born Oct. 17, 1843, died April 18, 1911, aged 67 years, 6 months and 1 day. She was a member of the Old Order Brethren. So, also, was her husband, who preceded her several years ago. They were blessed with seven children, eight of whom are living. Services at Elkhart Valley by the writer and Jonas Miller, of the Old Order church. Text, Job 19: 25. Interment in the Prairie Street cemetery.—Frank Kreider, Goshen, Ind.

Snyder, Bro. Marshall B., son of Bro. Chas. and Mattie Snyder, born July 14, 1894, died April 16, 1911, aged 16 years, 10 months and 8 days. Nov. 11, 1906, he was married to Sister Mary Ann Hoke. To this union was born two daughters, the youngest having preceded him in death but two months ago. He united with the church of the Brethren at an early age, and lived a faithful life to the cause he loved so well. Before his departure he requested to have a glimpse of "the home of the soul," and has gone with the full assurance of enjoying that home. His last words of warning were: "Prepare to meet me there." He leaves his wife, one daughter, his parents, two brothers and two sisters. He died at the hospital after a severe operation. Services at the Church of the Brethren by Eld. E. B. Bagwell. Text, Rev. 14: 13.—S. Z. Leckrone, Elkhart, Ind.

Strickler, Nancy Jane, daughter of Baptist and Tamar Hardy, born in Keen Township, Adams Co., Ill., Feb. 24, 1835, died April 26, 1911. June 5, 1856, she was married to Henry W. Strickler, of Fayette County, Pa. To this union were born six children, four of whom are living, three sons (one of them a minister) and one daughter. Sister Strickler united with the Brethren church in June, 1877. She was a helpmeet to her husband in assisting him a number of times in the sacred anointing service. She also assisted him in baptizing an invalid who was unable to walk to the water. Her last words were that she was going to the heavenly city to live forever.—W. H. Strickler, Lorraine, Ill.

OUR SATURDAY NIGHT

BY J. H. MOORE

IN THE INTRODUCTION TO THIS BOOK THE AUTHOR SAYS:

"The chapters composing this little volume were written at different times during a period of over twenty-five years of active editorial life." Some of them were composed on the spur of the moment, and thus are the best, having been born from a sudden inspiration and not made through long and forced effort.

EACH CHAPTER IS A POINTED LESSON

on some moral or religious topic, vividly illustrated by actual experiences from the author's life. Those who have read some or all of the chapters, which appeared from time to time in the various publications with which the author was connected, say that they are the cream of his writings along these lines. Everyone should read this book in order to have impressed upon the mind the valuable truths contained therein.

THE ONLY WAY IN WHICH THE BOOK CAN BE OBTAINED

is in connection with a subscription to the "Gospel Messenger." Subscribers who renew will get the book for 35c extra. The Gospel Messenger and book only $1.85.

Mr. World and Miss Church-Member

A Twentieth Century Allegory.

By Rev. W. S. Harris.

It is a forcible allegory, somewhat after the style of Pilgrim's Progress, but in no sense an imitation of it. Fathers and mothers, it is the book that you should get for your son and daughter, and at the same time read it yourself. You will be stronger for the church after having read it. It illustrates vividly how Satan lures the church member, step by step, from the pure Gospel, till finally he is lost forever.

Illustrated by 18 full-page drawings, the work of Bro. Ezra Dell.

First Steps for Little Feet

By Charles Foster.

This book has been prepared to give children their first lessons in the Bible. It contains only such short, easy words, and tells with such clearness and simplicity the prospects of Christian faith that little men of five and six years of age can understand and learn from it. Bible stories are presented and the little learners are carried along through the Gospels—being made familiar with the chief incidents of CHRIST'S LIFE ON EARTH. A list of scripture is printed at the close of each chapter or lesson, which may be of great assistance in driving home the lesson. The book contains 110 pages, with 11 colored frontispieces and 110 illustrations. Printed from large clear type. Substantially bound in cloth.

DAYBREAK IN THE DARK CONTINENT

By WILSON S. NAYLOR

As a mission field, ripe for the harvest, Africa is now attracting unusual attention. This fact makes this book a timely one. No one is better fitted than the author of this volume to write a comprehensive treatment of the three fields now in Africa have been quite extensive. It is an excellent book for mission study classes. It contains many illustrations, pen sketches, chronological and statistical tables, charts and suggestions, a two-page map, with key and a concise index. It will do any one good to read it. We all ought to know more about the conditions of our fellow beings in heathen lands. This book is a great eye opener. 260 pages, cloth 57c.

OUR CONFERENCE OFFERING

EACH year brings its own burdens of care, and one is almost led to believe that the last one was heavier than any preceding. And in like manner many have come to look upon the annual return of Conference,—each one is fraught with greater questions and more far-reaching results. But no matter how great the problems, and what may be the result, as long as God is with us, what need we fear?

And it is the gathering together in the name of the Lord and for the accomplishment of his work that the appeal for a missionary offering comes with greatest weight. It was our Lord who said, "Go," and this being the final purpose of all our endeavor, no more fitting time for giving a hearty and liberal offering unto the Lord can be made than at this time. Further, as we interest ourselves in the sending of the Gospel into all the world, so are we better fitted to deal with all the problems of the church at home. Missionary activity gives true perspective in the world conquest for Christ.

The call of the General Mission Board has gone forth, "Who will go to China, to India, to Europe?" To this has come the reply, from a number of our noble sons and daughters, who have said to the Board and will say to this coming Conference, "Here am I, send me." At that great Missionary Day, on Monday, June 5, from perhaps a dozen homes, there will be the offering of better than gold. Children who are near and dear to fond parents will be given willingly for the field of service.

Not all will thus give; not all can. But every one can pray and every one can give of their means. When trouble your hearts—for it will go, then it is the church's duty to rise to her privilege to send them,—to supply the means that they should go. Will we do it?

Behold, what is in your hand, brother, sister! Do you not see the fruit of your labor in goodly increase? Is it yours, all yours? Have you set apart, on the first day of each week, as the Lord has prospered you, for the Lord's work, and now have you a liberal offering all ready for him at this coming call of evangelization? If not, then we beseech you by the mercies of God, that you NOW make an offering commensurate with your blessings, and send it forth for the kingdom's sake.

Brother, sister, naught should keep one from this glorious privilege of giving liberally. Satan may say, "This is not right, or that is not right, and hence you have an excuse." Nay, verily, his appeal is wrong. We have our marching orders to go forward in the King's business, and the King is not pleased that we stop ALL THE TIME to polish our shields and sharpen our swords. Indeed, we have learned by experience that these brighten better by use than in any other way. So let us lay aside the weights and cares that so easily beset us from making an offering, and make a liberal one in the name of the Lord and be happy and obedient thereby.

A special letter is sent this week to each congregation through its bishop or pastor. Last year some congregations did not contribute. Let there be no neglect this year. Throw into the offering and send through your delegate to Conference that which will make heaven rejoice and you be glad. If a reader should be isolated and thereby have not the opportunity to send with his congregation, let him send direct to the General Mission Board, Elgin, Illinois, up to and not later than May 30. After that date send to the General Mission Board, St. Joseph, Missouri, care of Brethren's Conference. In either case we shall see that it is counted in the general offering.

You can make your offering to any special fund under the care of the General Board,—such as India or China Missions, but if it comes unstructured, we shall understand that you want it to go to the World-wide Fund. A receipt will be sent to donors for all donations sent through congregations, or where clearly identified. Those known direct from the collection baskets at the conference can not be receipted.

Remember also, whether you send direct or through the offering of the congregation, every one giving a dollar or more is entitled to one subscription to the Missionary Visitor one year, either for himself or some friend. Send the subscription along with the offering and it will be properly cared for.

And now, may the grace of giving abound unto every one as he places on the altar of service some of that wherewith the Lord has blessed him.

"I gave my life for thee,
My precious blood I've shed;
That thou mightest ransomed be
And quickened from the dead.
I gave, I gave my life for thee
What hast thou given to me?"

Home Department of the Sunday School

The need of the Home Department is not limited to any locality. It is needed in every church no matter where that church may be. It is sadly needed in the great metropolis, with its unchurched millions. It is needed in the towns with their thousands outside of the Sunday-school. It is needed in the village and rural communities, where only a few are indifferent. It is needed in your school. It will work in every community whether city or country, where one or more persons are out of the Sunday-school.

AROUND THE WORLD

Anti-Gospel Influences in India.

Lamentable, indeed, it is that Satan and his forces find ways and means to nullify, if possible, the strenuous efforts of the missionary in heathen lands. At Delhi, India, the Moslems have opened a school where their preachers are taught all the varied objections of infidels against Christianity, thus enabling them to oppose the gospel workers the more effectually. It appears that this school is furnished with all the various noted works of infidels in America and Europe. These publications, upon being translated, are thoroughly studied and widely circulated, to the great injury of Christian progress. And yet, while Satan can hinder the work to some extent, the servants of the Lord have One who is mightier than all those who oppose, and in the end the truth will be triumphant.

Startling Losses.

Thorough investigation of the causes that led to the recent conflagration in a New York factory by which nearly 150 girls lost their lives, seems to indicate that a lighted cigar, carelessly thrown among inflammable material, was to blame for the start of the deplorable affair. Now it is reported that the Bangor, Me., fire, with its loss of some $6,000,000, was started by a cigaret stub, thrown into some hay in a room where men were playing poker on a Sunday afternoon. There would seem to be abundant reason why smoking should be entirely prohibited in places where human life is thereby imperiled, but, candidly speaking, is there a single good reason why any one should engage in a practice so manifestly injurious to his own health, and of so great a danger to his fellowmen?

China's New Cabinet.

At last the long-awaited edict, abolishing the grand council of the ancient empire and substituting a constitutional cabinet of ten members, has been issued, and by it China enters upon a new era of its national existence. It is a long stride forward in more satisfactory and settled conditions, removing much of the dissatisfaction among the people. Somehow the progress of the age has thrown its subtle influence upon even the remotest parts of staid old China, and from the dormancy of past ages the people are arising to new opportunities and more diversified knowledge. It is claimed that the insurrection in the Canton neighborhood has been largely quelled by the prospect for better civic conditions, to be anticipated from the edict just issued, and still other reforms contemplated.

Waldensians to Have a Church at Rome.

Perhaps no other religious body has felt the hand of persecution as severely and unrestingly as the Waldensians. The Roman Church, in past centuries, used every expedient to exterminate the little band of believers, but failed to succeed, and now, by the beneficence of a wealthy American lady, who is donating $200,000 for the purpose, a well-endowed church is to be built in Rome for the use of the Waldensians. It is to be situated in the best part of the city, and to seat 1,200 people. That such a building can be erected in the very center of the Papal Hierarchy, is one of the marvels of the age. Doubtless it is a thorn in the flesh to many Romanists who bitterly resent the encroachments of Protestantism upon the ecclesiastical stronghold of the "Holy Catholic Church." But the days of the Inquisition are past, and evangelical Christianity may now proclaim the truth on the very streets of Rome.

Churches as Sabbath Desecrators.

That there should be so much needless work connected with the elaborate decorations of some of the fashionable churches, preparatory to the Sunday services on special occasions, seems somewhat strange, and yet it is undoubtedly true. Previous to the recent Easter celebrations in scores of city churches, small armies of decorators worked all through the early hours of Easter morning in order that the congregation of worshipers might have the privilege of enjoying the most elaborate and costly floral decorations. It is this unrealled-for desecration of the Lord's Day that has aroused the "Women's National Sabbath Alliance" to issue a formal protest against such practices. There is no question that the excessive and unseemly display in the Lord's house should be deprecated, engendering, as it does, a love of ostentation, and creating a spirit of rivalry in providing "attractions" altogether unseemly to a place of worship.

Another Triumph for the Sacred Record.

The recent discoveries of Dr. Max Richter on the Island of Cyprus are but another link in the mighty chain that securely holds the anchor of our glorious hope. By Bible students Cyprus will be chiefly remembered in connection with Paul's voyage to Rome, and Dr. Richter's researches are said to throw much light on the Bible record. He says this of his discoveries: "I am perfectly justified in declaring this to be the most important archæological find of recent years." In these days of infidelity and materialism, when the statements of the Sacred Record are attacked on every side, it is refreshing to note that the humble excavator, with his spade, is getting to be a mighty witness for the truth of God's Word, confirming the Bible story in every particular.

The Plague in China Abating.

Recent reports from China bring the encouraging information that, thanks to the combined efforts of American medical missionaries and other mission helpers, the plague in North China is now under complete control, and that the dread disease has been almost entirely stamped out in Manchuria. While, at first, there was considerable objection to the cooperation of the foreign doctors, this was gradually overcome, and now the Chinese gratefully acknowledge the valuable help extended to them by western civilization. They have received a practical object lesson of the fact that "knowledge is power." Will they be as ready to heed the still more important lesson that Christ, when received into the heart of the penitent believer, is "the power unto everlasting life"?

A Most Remarkable Meeting.

The coming July the first meeting of the "Universal Races Congress" is to convene at London. Believing that a better understanding between the various component elements of the world's vast population will greatly promote international peace, is the aim of this congress to discuss, in the light of modern knowledge, the best methods of attaining that most desirable end. It is urged that too long have the people of the East and the West been divided by prejudice and a lack of coöperation, and that now it is high time to arrive at a better understanding. Efforts of this kind are always in order. In all the affairs of life,—in those of the church as well as of the state,—we need efforts along "constructional" or "building-up" lines. We have had enough of the opposite variety.

The Prevalence of Graft and Bribery.

So widely-spread are the various forms of dishonesty today that some have almost arrived at the conclusion that a wave of crime is passing over our fair land, threatening the very pillars of our national existence. It is well, however, in these days of startling disclosures, to remember that it is rather a wave of searching investigation that is laying bare certain forms of corruption. For years graft and bribery flourished unscathed, but the way of the transgressor is not as safe today as it was in the past. The public conscience has become awakened. No longer will the people tolerate the questionable methods employed by the tricky and venal politician or the "promoter of doubtful enterprises." There is reason to hope that, following the astounding revelations of the daily press, there will be a corresponding purification of business and administrative methods,—a revival of the rugged honesty and integrity so commendably prevalent in the days of our fathers.

Secret Orders in China.

While Masons may proudly boast to be the oldest secret order, going back,—as they claim,—even to the days of Hiram, king of Tyre, it seems to be a well-authenticated fact that secret societies in China flourished centuries before they existed elsewhere. "The Triad," or "Society of Heaven and Earth," is a most ancient order, full of such murderous intent that practically every revolutionary uprising has been traced to their vicious agencies. So obnoxious to the Government is this rebellious order that any man found in China with a ticket of the society in his possession, is forthwith beheaded. Practically two-thirds of all Chinese in the United States belong to the Triads, and should the call come to join the revolutionary forces of China, they would have to respond, and assist in an attempt to overthrow the present dynasty. Some of the worst Chinese criminals have at times escaped conviction in our American courts because of the protection given them by the Triad society. Secrecy always manifests itself by its fruits, the world over.

More Real Sympathy Is Needed.

At a recent funeral in a western city the friends of the family contributed flowers to the value of more than $300. While the love and admiration, thus shown to the departed father of the little family, was perhaps commendable, as usually considered, there was another side of the picture, well worth serious attention. The widow, a most estimable woman, was left almost penniless. Had even a part only, of the generous sum paid for flowers, been bestowed upon her, in this sad hour of her bereavement, it would have been most sincerely appreciated. As it is, she must struggle along as best she can. While it is well to give expression to our sympathy on funeral occasions, let us remember the real needs of the bereaved ones, and act accordingly. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father" seeks the greatest good of "the fatherless and widows in their affliction." Such a desire will not express itself in an expensive floral display while the more substantial home comforts are lacking, compelling the bereaved ones to face the grudging charities of a cold world.

"Uncle Sam" Helping the Brewer.

The "Daily Consular and Trade Reports," a Government publication to aid American manufacturers in the introduction and sale of their goods in foreign countries, is taking a special interest, in recent issues, to push the sales of American beer. Ignoring the startling testimony of its own Supreme Court, and the terrible indictment of the drink curse as a most pernicious evil, morally and economically, the Federal Government has kept its eye fixed on the rapidly-increasing internal revenue from intoxicants, and, naturally enough, it feels obliged to extend the traffic in every way possible by means of the widely-ramified consular service. One thing is clear,—the liquor men could have no ally more powerful than "Uncle Sam," and they are making the most of the favors shown them. But what an example to set before other nations! The faithful foreign missionary struggles in vain against the vile drink traffic, when the foremost Christian nation openly espouses and promotes the manufacture and sale of that which "steals away man's brains" and leaves him poor indeed.

The Fading Glory of War.

Some of the daily papers are speaking in a highly eulogistic strain of the recently-reported utterance of Col. Roosevelt and others, who aver that it is their desire "to die on the gory field of battle" to show the intensity of their patriotism." In this supposedly civilized age, when right and justice should adjust all differences, there is certainly no reason why brute force should rule supreme, and least of all should we exalt the struggling victor of the battle field to the ranks of the world's real heroes. All the human sacrifices and sorrows that follow in the wake of war, while they may make the world weep, are viewed with equanimity by kings and presidents, as long as they themselves are safe. Baron d'Estournelle de Constant, the distinguished European peace advocate, has openly charged that the actual losses of human life, in the great "royal game" of war, have been purposely concealed and misrepresented by those in authority, lest the truth should appall and shock, and lead to revolution. Truly, there is no glory in war! The best service to humanity is rendered by devoting one's life to its welfare, and blessing all mankind by the cheering emanations of love.

A Promoter of Peace.

While many of the sensational newspapers and military enthusiasts of this country persist in predicting a possible Japanese invasion of our islands in the Pacific, American residents on these islands, and even in Japan itself, know nothing whatever of impending hostilities. Mr. Theodor Richards, publisher of "The Friend," a peace publication in Honolulu, Hawaii Islands, recently visited Tokyo, there to establish a Japanese edition of his paper, to be devoted "to the clearing of misunderstandings which, during the past few years have cast a gloom over American-Japanese relations." As a further effort to that end Mr. Richards is offering scholarships in the "Mid-Pacific Institute," at Honolulu, to such Japanese youths as desire to become acquainted with American conditions and educational privileges. These scholarships extend for a period of four years, each being accompanied by a stipend of $400, in addition to $200, to cover traveling expenses from Japan to Honolulu and return. Mr. Richards, in explaining his mission, says: "I am working for peace. Talk unceasingly of friendliness and you bring it to pass. Reiterated professions of peace and brotherhood tend to preserve them."

The Missionary Call.

SELECTED BY MRS. E. J. PREDMORE.

The church of Christ united,
In spirit and in aim,
Is one of faith and teaching,
With hope and zeal the same.
The nations, too, are longing
For universal peace,
When right and truth shall triumph,
And war and strife shall cease.

The Spirit without measure
Is poured upon all lands;
And people, long in fetters,
Are stretching forth their hands;
Imploring us to hasten
With truth which makes men free,
Which brings them peace and pardon,
Life, light and liberty.

For this the hosts are marshaled,
With banners all unfurled,
Their serried ranks united
For conquest of the world.
The men of rank and fortune
Are leading in the fray,
Which gives to every creature
The Gospel of today.

Shall we, so richly dowered,
In this broad Christian land,
Keep back the gospel message,
Withhold the liberal hand?
Nay, we,—our sons and daughters,—
All gladly heed the call,
And lay upon the altar
Ourselves, our gifts, our all.

The Boy Problem.

BY D. D. CULLER.

These days we hear a great deal about the problem of taking care of the boy. Sometimes one is tempted to ask, "Were there no boys in the previous ages?" for the subject, these days, seems to monopolize the thought of some of our fathers to such an extent that one is almost persuaded that the problem never existed before. However, I think the problem of taking proper care of the boy existed as keenly in the ages past as at present, and I could hardly agree with some of my friends that the solution of the problem for the age was not as good as it possibly can be for our own age.

I would not depreciate, at all, the value of the study of the nature and the construction of a boy's mental and physical makeup. But to crush in a wholesale way the rearing which we had at the hands of our fathers, seems to me to cast an uncalled-for discredit upon the efforts of our ancestors. Human nature in all ages is much the same, and boys, since the time of Moses and Samuel, are boys, and though we may believe ourselves to have solved the problem of the proper culture of the boy for our own times and for our own conditions, yet I think that our ancestors, in their day and age, were not inapt in their own training of the boys that came to their homes, and that they were not insensitive to the big problems that face the boy in his critical years.

Perhaps the boy has not always had the sympathy from the stronger sex that he should have had, but this has been more a matter of oversight than a matter of indifference on the part of fathers. I am much inclined to believe that the sympathy which our age pleads the father should give to the boy, is very much compensated in past ages by the excessive sympathy of the mother. I can not but feel that the motherhood of America is less keenly sensitive to the problem than was the motherhood of a century ago. This condition is largely due, as I can see it, to the more attractive fields of activity for the womanhood and motherhood of America. It is no more sad than it is true, that in many of our homes the sympathy of the mother is rather for the political affairs, the club room problems, and the peculiar woman problems of her sex and sect, than she is sensitive for the needs of her sons.

Though the indifference and harsh sternness of the previous ages, from the side of the fathers, may, in a measure be deplored, yet, when justly considered, it does have some recompense in the installation of a manly independence and a heroic, dauntless air, begetting for the boy a fearless, determined will to battle against any odds.

That the boy needed sympathy for his failures and for his moods of despondency, was necessary, but that sympathy he received from the tender caress and the maternal care of his mother who was queen of the home. I do not conceive that the problem of taking care of the boy is any harder in our own age than in ages past, neither do I conceive it any easier. We are men and, as fathers, have the rearing of our sons. These sons are boys of the same nature as boys have always been. Of course, our environments are different and our problems are a little different, necessarily so; but we must conceive ourselves a great deal weaker than our fathers if we conceive our problem to be greater than theirs, or we must conceive ourselves a great deal wiser and more diplomatic than our fathers, if we conceive our problem much less difficult than theirs. As the complications of life arise, I believe our advantages in wisdom, strength and power will enable us to cope with the more intricate problems.

I can not agree with those who insist that our boys are worse than boys were fifty years ago, or a hundred years ago. I think them tempted in many ways as the boys fifty years ago were tempted. I think their weaknesses are the weaknesses of their parents and grandparents, but I believe their strength also to be the strength of the successes of their predecessors.

That some of our boys should fail, is inevitable from the very nature of life itself. That some should prove incompetent and incapable of solving the problems of our own age, is just as clearly true and indisputable. That of all of the problems of our age, some, at least, will be imperfectly solved and others ignored, one may very certainly conclude from the teachings of the past; yet I feel confident that a number of the problems will be well solved and the adjustment of the ability of boys will be somewhere nearly adequate to the demands.

The question of how the boy should be trained, in order that he may become a useful citizen, is no less the problem today than formerly. Perhaps, if we solve the problem as well as those parents of former ages solved it, we shall have done well. Each age has its own peculiar problems, and while human nature remains the same, and while, in many respects, the difficulties facing the boy remain the same, yet it remains equally true that each generation will have its own solution, as to methods and materials to be used in the development of manhood in the boy.

I can not solve the problem of the proper training of the boy for the generations that are to come. I would not want to solve it even if I could, for I realize that, however well my father may have reared, that did, in no way, relieve me from the problems facing me in the rearing of my own boy.

So the future generations must solve their own problems that pertain to the boy, as well as the problems which pertain to other matters. This much I do think may well be considered, however, that the boy needs sympathy and needs kindly direction. Even with grown-ups sympathy has a wonderful power in developing latent talent. The energy which the boy possesses should be turned into right channels. Right conduct can be most easily secured by directing his energies into lines of useful employment and by casting his presence among healthful associations. Street gossip and store-box stories can not easily be hid by starched linen or thrashed away by beechen limbs. It should be remembered that a boy is a bundle of nerves. Just like older people, he is irritable. A soothing word to him is like oil upon the water.

It should be remembered, also, that a boy is all energy, all life. He must be doing something. Idleness is intolerable. Just to sit down and be good is, to say the least, unendurably tantalizing. It should be remembered, too, that when boys are alone they are not always in good company. They had better be in good company a part of a holiday than to be alone and wearied and disgusted in loneliness. Some boys suffer in silence, others burst out in indignation and a stormy disapproval. Most boys are reasonable, if you reason kindly with them. They may not see points in morals as quickly as we who are older but still, if we give them a chance they can see the right and can be influenced to do it.

The matter of raising the boy is taken by too many as a matter which is to be gotten through with as easily as possible. So, if he is in the public school, or if he is fishing, or if he is at the neighbor's, visiting, the father is perfectly satisfied. But the father should not be too busy if he wants to raise his boy properly. It does not take the son long to find out that the father is too busy to be bothered with him, and he soon proceeds to take care of himself. A self-made boy will be a self-made man; no one would care to assume the responsibility of having directed him.

Mt. Morris, Ill.

Optimism Versus Pessimism.

BY OTHO WINGER.

From one point of view people may be classified as optimists and pessimists. These terms are familiar enough, but people use them with different meanings. Light-hearted persons, happy-go-lucky people, and those who submissively take to just anything that is the order of the day are frequently called optimists. Down-hearted persons, soured-on-the-world people, and those who are at variance with everything they meet are called pessimists. But there is a broader meaning for these terms, especially for optimism.

I should call Paul an optimist when he says in Rom. 8:28, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." Paul could say this because his great experience had taught him the truth of the statement. Other men, with far less experience in real life, coming upon the scene of some of the apostle's trials, might question his sincerity in this statement; but it was only their ignorance that prevented them from seeing the whole truth.

Optimism is the ability to take the most hopeful view of a situation. It surveys the field as a whole, and does not form a hasty decision from insufficient observation. It sees the whole truth, while pessimism sees but half of the truth. It is true that sometimes this broad view can only result in a very unpleasant picture, but if there is any good at all, optimism finds it.

The pessimist comes away from the thorn-bush with a thorn in his thumb; the optimist saw the same thorn but brought away a rose. The former sees nothing but the ugly mud after the shower; the latter loses sight of the mud, in his joy at seeing refreshened nature springing forth into new life. The pessimist stood on the western prairie and saw nothing but a dreary, desolate-looking stretch of land; he came back east with discouraging reports—he is still a renter. The optimist saw back of the apparent, uninviting view, the wonderful possibilities of the place, settled down there, and today he is rich.

Twelve men were sent to spy out the land that God had designed as the home of a mighty people. After an investigation they returned and made their report. Twelve made their attention centered only upon the giant men and giant fortresses. They were pessimists. The other two were optimists. They, too, saw the giant men and fortresses, but they were charmed by the wonderful possibilities of the land, and they were encouraged with God's promises. The multitude, to their sorrow, listened to the pessimists.

The pessimist looks out upon the heathen world, and says, "What is the use to try to help them?" It is a hopeless picture to him. But a William Carey, an Adoniram Judson, or a Wilbur Stover sees the wonderful change that will take place when the Gospel of Jesus Christ finds its way into the hearts of benighted souls. The pessimist saw no vision for the colored race of the South. Booker T. Washington, though he knew the weakness of the colored man, yet he saw good in him, and went to work to relieve his condition. Optimism inspires a man with a spirit of helpfulness; pessimism paralyzes action.

A careful study of history can not but make a man more hopeful about many conditions at present. We see the poor oppressed in many places, but it would be hard to find a time in the history of the world when the condition of the poor was as good as it is at present. We become discouraged when we read of the white slave traffic and social impurity; but a careful study of the real history of much of the past will cause any woman to thank God that she did not live in those good(?) old times. We see skepticism growing in many schools and even in the pulpit. A just cause, indeed, for the Christian to be alarmed and aroused to greater activity, but no reason whatever for him to think that everything is going to ruin. Unbelief has always been in the church, in some form, from the days of Thomas to the present.

There are many today who have grave apprehensions and doubts concerning the future of the church. Each year brings new difficulties and dangers. Satan still makes his inroads with telling effect. Every Christian should feel deeply concerned about the welfare of the church, and should ever be alarmed at the departures from the principles and practices of primitive Christianity. But some get so discouraged with the outlook that healthy action is paralyzed. They see only the dark side of the picture. They make life miserable for themselves, and for everybody around them.

Elijah was once in such a mood. He had been very zealous for the welfare of Israel, but it seemed all of no avail. Every one was departing from the faith —but himself. Imagine his surprise when God told him that there were yet seven thousand faithful ones in Israel, and that it was his duty to get up and go to work again. There are many things in the church today for which to be thankful. There are discouragements, it is true. Evil too often seems to triumph. But much of this triumph is due to the fact that Christians do not trust God to give them the victory. We fear the giants and are not bold to move on to the promised blessings.

To the child of God there is no such thing as fail. He sees beyond the present to the ultimate triumph of good. God will take care of those who trust him and he will abundantly reward them at his own appointed time.

> Wrong forever on the throne;

Going Up to Jerusalem.

BY W. R. MILLER.

Siege and Looting of Kerak.—No. 12. Conclusion.

THE man in the cistern, what of him? When I tell you that he was the concern and burden of every heart, I am saying the truth. When it became absolutely necessary for us to leave Kerak, carrying the secret of his hiding-place with us,—and from this hiding place there was no apparent means of escape,— it gave us many heartaches. Such thoughts as these came to us, many times, Was he still in that dark place, slowly starving to death? Had the rains come, and was the cistern slowly filling with water? Had he remained there, calling for help, until his voice had failed? These, with not a few other possibilities, were constantly forcing themselves upon us.

About three weeks after returning to Jerusalem a man from Kerak brought this story of the officer in the cistern. He had been heard calling for help, and was assisted out of his hiding place on the evening of the day we had left, by some Arab Christians, and was hidden in a cave beneath their house for two days; then the Arabs got on his trail. At night the Christians, for their own safety, took him out and informed him, that he must flee out into the country somewhere, which he attempted to do, but after several hours was captured by the Arabs. He sent word to his wife that if she would send them $250 in gold, they would spare her husband. The money was sent at once, but they sent back for another $250, and this time the poor woman sent all she had,—about $150. Then his captors violated all their promises and pledges, made to the woman, by cutting off the man's head, and carrying it to Kerak, where it was kicked about the streets for days. Finally some one buried it under a wall, but the Arabs found it, and again it was made a football, until it had lost all semblance of a human head.

I wish to speak, in a special way, of the mission work done among the Arabs at Kerak, since, as has already been said, there is a strange fatality apparently hanging over the heads of these people. Notwithstanding nation after nation has tried to conquer them, they are still "dwelling in the presence of their brethren." Such means of subduing them has and must fail in the light of God's Word relative to them. But the friends made by Mr. Forder, during those years of mission work among these very people, who are in rebellion at this time, proves that they will respond to love and kindness, such as are taught in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. God did surely use this friendship as a means of saving our lives while in Kerak, and if, out of our experience, there should be started a mission among the Arabs at Kerak, each of us would doubly rejoice for having had such an experience.

Several of our party were asked to make some investigations relative to starting a Mission in Jerusalem, which has been done, but I believe it was the consensus of opinion of every one of us at Kerak, that there was no better opening than at this abandoned point. This is not the report of the committee however.

Here I wish to quote from a letter of Miss G. L. J. Paterson, who has spent some two years in the work at Kerak, and is now located as an independent worker at Burkin, between Nablus and Nazareth:

> Village Mission, Burkin, Palestine, Jan. 26, 1911.
> When Mr. Miller asked me to write what I know about Kerak and its needs, my first thought was one of regret, for I knew I would not half express what I feel in my heart about it, but my second thought was one of gladness that the privilege of writing, even something of what I think, was given to me. I gladly do my best.
> Naturally my readers may wonder where I met Mr. Miller, and why he asked me to write about Kerak, when my sphere of work is up in Galilee. The first query I answer first. About three weeks ago we had the unexpected pleasure of a visit from Mr. Miller, and that of his son and his friend (C. W. Eisenbise). Their coming seemed to us an answer to prayer, as, from the time we first heard of the uprising in Kerak, we were most anxious to get a true account of what had taken place. So imagine how glad we were to welcome our friends from Chicago, and how deeply interested we were to hear about their experiences, and the wonderful way in which our Loving Heavenly Father delivered them. We were grateful to Mr. Forder for sending them to us on their way up-country. Their coming was a real uplift to us, for as they told of their difficulties and deliverances; also the gracious way in which God allowed them to see the fruit of Mr. Forder's faithful labors among the Arabs, years ago, our hearts were full of praise, for it was one more proof that our God is faithful. It was a clear message to us to take courage, and to go forward in spite of difficulties, as we, too, may see fruit "after many days."
> Now I shall answer your second query and explain why Kerak holds such a warm place in my thoughts and prayers. I first came out to this country with my sister and brother-in-law, who were missionaries in Kerak, meaning to work there with them, if God willed. But it pleased Him to take my beloved sister to himself a few months later, and she is buried in the little cemetery there. I remained in Kerak, taking charge of her children till my brother-in-law married again. During my stay there I was very much impressed by the importance of Kerak as a station for mission work in itself, as well as being a splendid center for reaching many Arab tribes, and also a starting point, should God lead the way, into Arabia. One can not but feel strongly that it was a mistake to withdraw the workers from such a place, but one feels also that God may have had some wise purpose in allowing it, in order to give to others the joy of reaping what the earlier workers have sown.
> There is no need to speak of the value of the work, done there by Mr. Forder and his fellow-workers, for the result of that work has been clearly seen by Mr. Miller and his party. My brother-in-law was a medical missionary in Kerak for about ten years, and I know how much the people,—both rich and poor,—appreciated all he did for them.
> Since the C. M. S. were obliged to withdraw from Kerak, earnest prayers have been going up from many of God's children that he will send other workers, and all who care for the future of that needy place must keep on praying and believing, until the answer comes.
> Georgina L. J. Paterson.

I would to God, that some of our rich Brethren could see this great and crying need, and would be made willing to spend some of their riches for these poor lost souls over in Moab. May God speed the day when it shall be done!

In summing up our experiences on this trip,—from Monday morning, Dec. 5, the beginning of the siege and looting of Kerak, until we were safely in Hebron, eight days later, there was, to our mind, a continual, unbroken exhibition of God's miraculous and Divine care for his children. While it is true that God did not send the destroying angel of the Lord to our relief, as he did to Hezekiah, on that memorable night when 185,000 of Sennacherib's Assyrian army were "dead corpses" before Jerusalem, yet none the less was his power manifested in the preservation of our lives, and to him we ascribe all praise, honor, power, and great glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Free Ministry.

BY GEO. F. CHEMBERLEIN.

THERE is no such thing as a free ministry. Every effort costs something. In the very nature of things there is a fixed price that must be paid by some one in the efforts of ministerial service. I solemnly challenge any one to point out a single case of "free ministry" in all the records of Divine revelation or human achievement. There is no such thing. There never was, and there never will be, unless the laws of service, that have stood through all the ages past and form our present standards of effort and action, are repealed, and a totally different order of things is given us. The ministry of Abraham, Moses, Elijah, and all the worthies in the galaxy of God cost somebody something.

Jesus' cost his life and much suffering. Gaze into the home, the face, and the heart of the man you think is or has been successful in the ministry, and who, you know, has done the work unaided, and there you will find the price paid.

"But," you say, "did not Paul work with his hands so as not to hinder the Gospel?" Such was his claim, but he never argued it was a just distribution of the price of service. Let us hear him: I Cor. 9: 14, 15, Am. Rev., "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel. But I have used none of these things, —and I write not these things that it may be so done in my case." 2 Cor. 11: 7, Am. Rev., "Did I commit a sin in abasing myself that ye might be exalted because I preached to you the gospel of God for nought? I robbed other churches, taking wages of them that I might minister unto you." Such is his message to the Corinthians and to "all that call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in every place."

His "free ministry" to this rich church, immersed in commercialism, cost him or others the price. He says he robbed others to do the work. Will you weigh that statement? When a service is done for you for which you are unwilling to pay, and the servant must stand the price, it is robbery. Hundreds of our ministers have robbed others to serve. Here is a vein full of pathos,—a mine of untold sorrows and struggles and disappointments, known only to God and the men who did the work and their homes.

That the "free ministry" imposes a needless sacrifice upon the minister in addition to the divinely-imposed sacrifice is the least of its evils. It corrupts the church. No man can be a true man who does not meet his obligations squarely. To be true, to be right, is to be right with both God and man. The Corinthian church was the nonpaying church. It is within her borders and among her proud, carnal members that we find the disorder and schisms and heresies. That strange combination, unprofitable to the world, of rich spiritual gifts resting in carnal hearts, is the message their life gives to the world. Contrast with her, if you please, the church at Philippi, a paying church,—one that followed Paul on his journeys with her offerings,—and note the difference. In Paul's letter not one word of complaint against her is uttered. She had "the fellowship in the furtherance of the gospel," a "love that abounded more and more," a spirit of discernment so that she "approved the things that are excellent," "sincere and void of offence," "being filled with the fruits of righteousness which are through Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God."

Sit down now and read this Philippian letter as a letter written to a paying church. Let it breathe its message of loyalty, of unity, of bravery, of perfect obedience, of fellowship with the sufferings and work of the ministry, of purity, of truth, of joy, of steadfastness, of love, into your soul. Its message will lift you above the sordidness and carnality of Corinth.

The Importance of Understanding Regeneration.

BY QUINCY LECKRONE.

THE world is governed and will be judged by a compound system of law and grace. The law regards every man as good or bad, obedient or disobedient. Grace expects a change and regards every man as regenerate or unregenerate.

The distinction between the regenerate and the unregenerate should be fully admitted and completely carried out, in order that the church may maintain its original purity unblemished, for a religion of heavenly origin, debased by selfish admixtures of sensual ideas and practices, is certainly most deplorable.

The regenerate and the unregenerate are opposite factors or conditions that no power can amalgamate. They can not unite.

Grace, or the gift of God, opened the way for regeneration, the new birth, new life in the hearts of men, which new life will conform without compromise to the order of things, as required by the New Dispensation,—the covenant of grace.

Not to recognize these two factors, and not to segregate them, obscures from the believer who would be a servant, the true aim of his service, and in proportion as we lose sight of the distinction, there develops a tendency to rank gifts,—accomplishments,—above grace.

We are dazzled by great names, great deeds. We cultivate what brings us into public view. Few only are content to work where none but the all-beholding Eye sees, while many are content to appear modest, meek and obscure, only because they are satisfied with doing nothing. The strife is for seats on the platform, greetings in the marketplace, general recognition, and popular applause.

The design of the great redemption is not in an imperfect church, greatly extended, but in a holy church, triumphant in holding the doctrine of the New Covenant. Nothing inferior will obtain the promise.

In our "Walk about Zion" (Psa. 48), did we see its real beauty? Did we read "the Lord is here," "He is in his holy temple"? Or did we see a desire and feel a tendency to speculate, to move on beyond revelation, to measure the church by the wishes and wisdom of the world?

The unregenerate mind makes no distinction between law and grace, between the form and the spirit, sees not the probability of having a form of godliness without the power thereof.

What, indeed, would be the result if the Turk were to adopt Catholicism, or if China were to yield to the spirit of the age, or if the church were to measure up to the wishes of the world? Evidently each would lose its identity, and in the church would be destroyed the fundamental principles of our sacred theology. Human depravity, the atonement of Christ, and the new birth, all recognize a difference between the regenerate and the unregenerate, the saint and the sinner, while the new theology, conditioned upon the judgment of men, makes not a saint but a modified sinner, makes holiness desirable only when sin is inconvenient, lowers the power of the Word and exalts reason, makes the Bible of no authority unless sanctioned by the philosophy of men.

These tendencies destroy spirituality, without which no one can be a member of the true body of Christ. The church of Christ is a spiritual body, but it is shown to the world only through the medium of ordinances which deal with literal elements. Only as these elements are touched by the Spirit, do they impart grace to man, and, furthermore, the Spirit touches only such elements as may be aroused through the ordinances which God has set apart for his purpose. If men were regenerate, they would be satisfied with what God has ordained, but being unregenerate they see not the design of God, hence strive to make the church conform to their unregenerate vision. This puts the true church on trial and, indeed, its greatest trials have been since the death of Christ. There have been deceivers of unparalleled subtlety, scoffers of the bitterest malignity, false teachers with damnable heresies, bigoted councils, boasting of authority. So great has been the confusion that the righteous shall scarcely be saved. This is the desert. Joy and peace and rest are not here. The flowers and fruits of paradise will not grow in this soil. The song of the redeemed is not sung here.

But the desert has its Mt. Sinai, with smoke and lightning and thunder, revealing the presence of God. It has its Mt. Pisgah, from which faith can discern the coming glory. The pillar of cloud and fire still leads the way, and over all this towers the cross of Christ, the Prince of Peace, with outstretched arms, saying, "Come unto me, all ye ends of the earth."

The Marks of the Lord Jesus Christ.

BY W. R. DEETER.

"I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus" (Gal. 6: 17).

In different ages and ways persons bear a mark or marks that indicate their position and relation in life. Some are honorable and some dishonorable.

Cain wore a mark of dishonor,—the mark of a murderer,—and yet that mark was a protection to him (Gen. 4: 15). Then there was the mark of the beast (Rev. 20: 4). His mark was in the forehead and the hands. It belonged to those who were not approved of God and who could have no part in the first resurrection.

Solomon tells of a mark in the eyes: "Who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine" (Prov. 23: 29, 30). These marks are frequent and only too true. These are the marks of dishonor. But Paul speaks of marks of a different character. He calls them "marks of the Lord Jesus."

When anything good or bad is done to God's people, Jesus accepts it as done to himself. "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25: 40). "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me" (Matt. 25: 45).

When Saul was on his way to Damascus, with persecution and even murder in his heart, and with legal authority in his pocket, the Lord stopped his mad career and said, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Saul asked, "Who art thou, Lord?" "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest."

It is clear that when Saul persecuted the Lord's people, he persecuted Christ. In all these quotations we have the same lesson, that in doing anything for God's people, Christ acknowledges the same thing done to him, or if we neglect the poor and do not administer to their wants, we do the same to Christ.

After Paul's conversion, he received what he gave others before his conversion,—stripes and imprisonment. More than one person received "marks of Jesus" by his hand, or at least by his consent.

At Lystra Paul and Barnabas scarcely restrained the people from offering sacrifices to them. The people were ready to deck them with garlands, and sacrifice their choicest oxen to them, but turned under the influence of unbelieving Jews. Then they were ready to stone Paul. They did their cruel work and thought he was dead. God graciously restored him, but the scars remained and it was on this occasion that he received some of the marks of Jesus Christ.

At Philippi Paul received more marks of honor, because he cast an evil spirit out of a young damsel. Here Paul and Silas were whipped and imprisoned, but they were happy to be counted worthy. Not only were they whipped but imprisoned, but when they went into the inner prison, Christ went with them, and they could testify to the fact that they had marks and imprisonments of Christ.

God can readily turn the evil work of men to his honor, and for the good of men. This imprisonment led to the conversion of the jailer,—a thing least expected by their enemies.

Paul had many marks of honor. "Five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned," etc. (2 Cor. 11: 24, 25).

It was the custom of men owning slaves, at that time, to brand them, so that if they would try to escape they could be easily found again. Thus every servant of Christ bears in his body the marks of Jesus, in his spirit and character. Any one who is a servant of Christ has his body in subjection to the inner man. His spiritual nature predominates and his body is servant instead of master. It goes where the spirit dictates and does what the Spirit of God orders.

The worldly man and woman have their marks, so it is not hard to locate them. Take a woman with one of the monstrous, heavily-plumed hats of today, and with "rats" in her hair underneath, and she bears the marks of the world and the evil one. So it is with the man whose god is his money. His conversation is about bonds, mortgages, interest, etc. Marks of worldliness can only lead to destruction, while the marks of Jesus Christ are marks of honor, and end in eternal joys at God's right hand.

Some Reflections.

BY C. C. JOHNSON.

SOMETIMES I wonder whether those of us who have either temporarily or permanently abandoned the immediate work of the church's ministry or the church's educational staff, have any right to think seriously of what we should like to see in the way of development in the polity and activities of the church. Perhaps the church at large is rather unconscious of our existence, since we have become business men, high-school teachers, or professors in other colleges; and perhaps the church is justified in feeling that we are deserters from the beautiful cause to which we had already devoted much of our energy. But be that as it may, I think I voice the sentiment of my fellow-ex-ministerial or ex-teacher brethren when I say that our devotion to the essential and vital principles and institutions of the Church of the Brethren intensifies with the years, even though, in our localities and circumstances, we may not have much occasion to witness to the truth as we know it.

Located, as many of us are, in what the good old Brethren might be inclined to call the centers of "worldliness," and involved as we are in certain business, social, religious, and political affairs that are uncommon to the more rural communities, it is but natural that we should make some adjustments to this new environment. But the undercurrents of one's life are sometimes more significant to him and to those who know him best, than are the over-currents in which the world sees him moving. So it is, I think, very often with those of us who might be called the "apostates," if it were not that we still know ourselves to be inwardly as much interested as ever.

One of the ends to which, I trust, the Brotherhood will aim, in the not distant future, is the establishment of a distinct Bible School in India for the advanced training of native workers. The nucleus for such a school, in the way of buildings, teachers, and prospective students, seems to be already noticeable. But the development and completion of the idea are in the future. Surely, if the return of Bro. Blough means anything more prominent than another, it is the emphasis of the proper education of choice spirits in India for work among their own people. The call and the equipment of the Spirit bear a very close relationship to that mental and social equipment which, in itself, has frequently more of real spiritual content than we are yet willing to admit.

And in this connection it is not out of place to urge again, that more of our noble young men and women should devote their lives to the uplift of needy souls in foreign lands, and begin now by making strong collegiate preparation. There are those of us whose hearts burn within us, as we realize that either our unworthiness or our circumstances, or perhaps our inclinations, caused us to be denied a share in this glorious service. There always will be a call for money; but there will always be the louder and really scriptural call for "laborers." The personal element is the largest factor in any enterprise.

Another matter that must, sooner or later, force itself upon the consideration of the church as a truly vital issue is that of our schools and colleges. In the first place I am glad to feel that the era of opposition, criticism, and uncertainty as to the sincerity of the brethren in and behind the educational institutions of the church has practically passed.

In the creation of the Central Board of Education, as it might be called, lie the elements of vast constructive possibilities. Matters of dress, athletics, and textbooks are largely local and must be left largely to the wisdom of the local management of the schools, but the perpetuation of healthy moral, social, religious, and distinctive Brethren church conditions in our schools can be aided immensely by the visits of the Board. The theoretic, vital connection of the school with the church is made a practical organic reality right in the midst of the varied activities of the institution. The dignified and courteous bearing of these representatives of the church at large, as they appear before the student body, adds great weight to their spiritual and churchly mission to the schools.

But work,—real work,—presents itself to this school committee, as they are confronted with so many institutions all bearing the name of "college." They must recognize the difference between a business school, a music school, a Bible school, a normal school, a college preparatory school, and a college, whether these be all under the same management or apart from one another. Even if the committee were only religious in its function, it could not make proper religious recommendations without taking educational business matters into account.

In this field the question as to who owns the schools does not figure at all, by the side of the questions: How many of these institutions should be colleges? Which of them should be colleges in the light of location, in the light of material equipment, and in the light of purely scholarly ideals? What part should the committee and the church at large take in differentiating colleges from schools? If it seems wise to designate a certain institution as a school, is its service to the church by so much rendered necessarily less significant? How shall the necessary endowment of colleges be brought about? Would some action, on the part of the committee, assist well-to-do brethren in making bequests? Since not all of the institutions can be colleges, and since not all of them at once are at all likely to raise their endowments and other features to the point necessary for participation in the Carnegie or the Rockefeller funds, might it not be wise to effect some kind of an agreement among the schools of the Brethren, in order that at least one or two of them might participate in these great gifts?

It is but natural that one who has spent half his life as a student and teacher in one of the schools of the Brethren should have answers for these questions, but the hope just now is to get the Brotherhood into the mood of inquiry about these things. In the proper solution of these real problems the church must profit immeasurably; and so it is not improper to turn to the Educational Committee of the church for some recommendations along these lines.

Just now I am not posted as to the purposes of the Publishing House with regard to the publication of music for our church and Sunday-school services. Far be it from me to pose as an authority in the field of music; and yet, may I be pardoned for suggesting some things with reference to our hymns and songs? Perhaps, what I have in mind has more special reference to the selection of music to fit themes and occasions than to the publication of hymn-books and song-books; but the publishers may take note also.

The hymns of the ancient church are as much our heritage as the heritage of the Catholics, the Lutherans, or the Presbyterians; and if the minister or director of music were to indicate something of the historic setting of these old hymns and their authors, it would add dignity and significance to the singing. A hymn that has weathered the storms with the church, embodies the aspirations, the hopes, the inspirations, the ideals, and the very genius of our sacred religion. Born, as they have been, in the intense spiritual experiences of their authors and perhaps under extraordinary conditions in the church's life, these old hymns such as "The Benedictus," "The Magnificat," "Creator Spiritus," "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," "Jerusalem, My Happy Home," "In Heavenly Love Abiding," "My God, My Father, Cheering Name," "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah," "The Spacious Firmament on High," "O, for a Thousand Tongues to Sing," and scores of others of this character contain mighty values for worship in the sanctuary.

Right here I am tempted to enter upon an exact classification of different types of music; but I shall desist. What I want to impress upon us is this, that jingle music, music to march-time, boisterous chorus music, and the like, are almost always out of place in dignified worship. They may perform a very proper function in a revival meeting, and may be quite essential as part of the musical program of the Sunday-school, but they rarely suit for the consecrational and deeply spiritual atmosphere of a prayer meeting. Such songs may, perhaps, be always in place with the Salvation Army.

In this connection it should be said that a whole congregation rarely ever does or can sing such tender and delicate lines as "Abide With Me," "Peace Like a River," "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me," "Cross of Christ, O Sacred Tree," "Purer in Heart," "Lead, Kindly Light," "Sun of My Soul," "I Would Not Live Alway," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and "My Jesus, I Love Thee." These hymns get into the personal feelings so deeply and with such varied significance that very few persons can sing them in the same time and with anything like the same expression.

Music is one of the most effective and highly-developed forms of religious expression that the Christian religion has worked out. I know of no other religion that uses it so extensively or with such marked effect. It, somehow, satisfies the spirit of man in a way that can not be accomplished by outward ceremony or spoken words. This being true, the careful selection of music and the excellent rendition of it should be a matter of real concern.

I could not close this little series of reflections without expressing my sincere hope that the report of the committee on the subject of rebaptism of persons who have been baptized by trine immersion, by administrators who believe this to be the only and original form of baptism, will be accepted at the coming Annual Meeting. While I am aware that baptism was confused very frequently, even in Apostolic and Patristic times with the idea of entrance into the church, I certainly hope that we shall all soon come to the only proper idea of the rite and regard it as the sign of a new spiritual life in Christ Jesus.

Baptized or newly-born spirits join the church of their choice after they are baptized. Strive as we may, no branch of the Christian church can ever establish its identity with the spiritual body that Christ recognizes as his own. A properly-baptized person is in that spiritually elect company of the Master as truly as any number of repeated baptisms could place him there. And so it seems to me we do violence to the rightful conception of our own church on the one hand, and we place ourselves in the position of judging the sincerity of a person's faith and repentance before God, on the other hand, when we force the person, already properly baptized by a believer in trine immersion, to be rebaptized, in order to enter our church. Our own church, as any other church, ought not to presume too far upon God's function in a man's spiritualization; neither should any church, no matter how faithfully it adhere to the doctrines and practices of scripturally primitive Christianity, enter too intimately into the sanctuary of a man's personal spirit, in order to ascertain the exact nature of his faith, or the degree of genuineness in his repentance.

Two Thoughts on Giving.

BY J. M. BLOUGH.

1. Giving as an Act of Worship.—If we could look upon our giving to the Lord as a part of our worship, I feel sure we would feel eager to give more frequently and also more liberally. In proportion to the part we take in worship are we blessed. I am one who feels that a Sunday service is not complete unless an offering is lifted. It is one part of the service in which all can take part, and in it lies a great blessing for the congregation. Will God honor our money and accept it as an act of worship? Why not? See Philpp. 4: 18, in which Paul recognizes the gift he received as a sacrifice well-pleasing to God.

Think of it! If we are willing to lay our money on the altar of God, he is willing to accept it as a sacrifice, and if a sacrifice, why not honor in our services? The church that neglects the offering, misses a blessing; the member who fails to give, loses the blessing.

Think of coming several miles to church to put a penny in the collection! How much worship is there in this? If some one has no more to give, then God be praised. It is as the widow's mite. But if hundreds of dollars are kept back, then how? God compares the offering with what the person keeps,—remember that. The Jews had to give the best and a lot of it. Should we do less?

It seems to me that the day of penny collections is past. It may do for children but not for others. Some railroads and business houses have quit using pennies altogether. At least a nickel, and better yet, a dime or a dollar, would look more as if we meant to worship God. Too often we try to ease our conscience instead of worshiping God in giving, I fear. We ought to have more worship in giving, consecrated giving of money. How much worship will all of us have in the Annual Meeting collection at St. Joseph?

2. Systematic Giving.—Just as soon as we look upon giving as an act of worship, we will engage in it as regularly and systematically as we do in our other acts of worship. It is my opinion that until we have the regular weekly offering to the Lord, the church will not have sufficient money to carry on the work for which she is responsible, and the Mission Boards will go begging.

Regular giving is the Bible way, too. See 1 Cor. 16: 2, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." See, it is a weekly offering, and if we make it an act of worship, as we may, why not do it weekly? People who are canvassed once a year for mission money will satisfy themselves by giving one dollar, who, if taught and canvassed to give a weekly offering, would surely not give less than five cents a week, which would amount to $2.60 a year. See the difference? Brethren, the Bible way is the best. It has been tried in many congregations with splendid success.

And who could not give at least five cents a week? Would that be "as God hath prospered you"? I am sure many would be too conscientious to stop with five cents a week. But suppose we had just five cents a week from every member of the church, what a nice sum of money we would have,—over $200,000. And who would be the poorer? Just one street-car fare a week; just one spool of thread a week. Why not? Then the church could soon evangelize the 3,000,000 heathen for whom she is responsible, and great would be the joy on earth and in heaven. For many of our members five cents a week would not begin to be one-tenth of their income. Christians ought really give even more than the Jews. Thirty of our India brethren are willing to give one-tenth of their meagre income to the Lord; how many in America will join them? Only regular, systematic giving as God has prospered us will bring the world to Christ and secure for us the full blessing.

THE ROUND TABLE

The Pessimist.

BY JACOB FUNK.

It is comparatively easy to become a pessimist. There are so many times when things go wrong, and so many occasions when the dark side looks big, that, unless we are on our guard, we will, like Elijah under the juniper tree, think that the census of the righteous could be easily taken.

It is true that from Adam down to the people of today man has furnished abundant evidence that, if left to himself, conditions would soon become intolerable. Even the Lord himself seemed, on several occasions, to have been very much discouraged with man, for he said to Moses, on one occasion, after Israel had sinned, "Now therefore let me alone that my wrath may wax hot against them, and I will make of thee a great nation."

It is very doubtful if the descendants of Moses would have turned out any better than the Children of Israel did, for the history of all times and all peoples has been a living demonstration of the fact that "the heart of man is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." In the face of these facts, what is there to hinder a man from becoming a pessimist? Much every way.

Moses, in one of his darkest hours, said, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up from among your brethren like unto me." Elijah's imaginary troubles were seven thousand times larger than his real ones. Isaiah, after delivering a strong invective against the sinful people of his day, could still see the silver lining in the cloud and declared that the day would come when "the earth would be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Even the Apostle Paul could rejoice, though beaten with rods, stoned, shipwrecked, in divers perils, not the least of which were perils among false brethren. Yet such an one was caught up to the third heaven, and the Master himself came and said "Lo, I am with you alway."

To the man in the midst of the conflict these words come with wonderful consoling power. The voice across the tempestuous Sea of Galilee, saying to the frightened disciples, "It is I; be not afraid," is the same voice coming to the disciple of today, allaying his fear and increasing his faith.

Who would be a pessimist? Not he who has for his leader the Christ, who knows not defeat. With Christ as our Leader we may, like Paul, "be troubled on every side yet not distressed, perplexed, but not in despair, cast down but not destroyed."

Our "Ifs and Ands."

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

These are ripples on life's ocean and indicate internal disturbance and friction. Out of harmony is out of sympathy; and this produces the friction. Friction produces heat, and heat is the result of fire.

On different occasions we noticed a fine, floating sign on the river at Logansport, and, like others, wondered why it did not wash away; but, finally, decided that it was safely anchored to something in the bottom of the river, and had only so much liberty.

We need anchorage as well, and nothing is so safe as the "Rock of Ages."

It is natural to suppose that we would be different under different environments and so we would, but it all depends upon the anchorage. If we represent a minority, and that minority should be wrong, then our assistance in said cause would mean simply one more "kicker."

The tendency in religious work is to loosen the reins in church discipline and be like the "people around us," but that was Israel's fatal mistake and where indulged too far, has crippled us.

The argument was, that if we were not so strict and dogmatical, we could get more members and run more smoothly, but where it was tried it proved a failure,—perhaps, not so much in numbers, as in spirituality, and hundreds who embraced that doctrine now long and pray for a return to the old-fashioned religion of our fathers.

Our predecessors fell short, according to our interpretation of the Scriptures, in some respects, but we must believe that they lived up to their honest convictions and walked in the light as God measured it out to them, and died happy.

There were some who, by faith, saw our day and even farther along the way, and did all in their power to usher in the coming kingdom, but they learned, as we all shall learn, sooner or later, that, leaders can go no faster than the people follow.

There is no decent apology, however, for backtrailing; for the watchword is "Forward," and is simply an echo of the past. If we were all as much concerned about lost souls as some seem to be about lost customs and traditions, this world could be easily evangelized in this generation.

War and Peace.

BY EZRA FLORY.

Jesus said to his disciples, as a last will and testament, "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you" (John 14: 27). For centuries the world has been searching for peace, but deep, abiding satisfaction has not been found save in Jesus Christ. The world can not give peace. The peace of Europe, it is said, cost over $67,500,000,000 in the last twenty-five years.

Recently a proposition was made in the Reichstag that the German Government take immediate steps to bring about an agreement among the nations to put a limit to the size of armies and navies. The Reichstag voted it down. The United States, also, has recently decided to fortify the Panama Canal. And so things go on in the world.

As yet there has been no answer to the philosophy of Lowell's satire:

> "Ez fer war, I call it murder,
> There you hev it plain and flat;
> I don't want to go no further > Than my Testyment fer that.
> God hez sed so plump an' fairly,
> It's ez long ez it is broad,
> An' you've gut to git up airly
> Ef you want to take in God.
> "Taint your eppylets an' fethers
> Make the thing a grain more right;
> 'Taint afollerin' your bell-wethers
> Will excuse ye in his sight.
> Ef you take a sword an' dror it,
> An' go stick a feller thru,
> Guv'ment ain't to answer for it,
> God'll send the bill to you."

The Great Temperance Call.

BY NORA D. BURKETT.

Oh, ye Christians, rally to the front! Put on the armor of King Emmanuel! Go forth to battle! The temperance victory will and must come,—as in the days of Elisha,—through God. The devil is mighty, but God is almighty, and will triumph in the end. The church has the balance of power. She must muster her votes and cast them always on the side of principle and right. Then this mighty kingdom of evil will soon totter and fall. Though by fraud and insincerity we may lose many a battle, we shall never lose the ultimate, glorious victory.

Order the battle now! Whom shall we put to the front? Our young people, to be sure. Father, mother, Sunday-school teacher, how are you teaching those boys and girls? Are you teaching them the defensive or the offensive side of the warfare? There is too much of the defensive on the part of the soldiers of God. Though it has its place, it is the brave soldier who presses boldly forward, that brings low the enemies of the Most High. Why not equip and train the young for active service against the saloon and liquor traffic? God, through them, will win the battle, and we shall see the fall of King Alcohol!

Life is a quarry, out of which we are to mold and chisel and complete a character.

Light and Darkness.

BY IDA M. HELM.

"When thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light" (Luke 11: 34).

If we are professed children of God, though still in darkness, perhaps our eye is not single. It may be that some worldly impediment has blurred our spiritual vision, and things look dark that otherwise we could see clearly. So long as there is too high an esteem of self, and a desire for the applause of men, or any selfish motive, we can not clearly see God's will concerning us. We must come to the Great Physician, and yield ourselves entirely to the remedy he applies, and a cure will be effected. Our whole body will "be full of light, having no part dark. The whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light."

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

Self-Centered or Christ-Centered.

Philpp. 1: 21; 3: 7; 4: 11-13.

For Sunday Evening, May 28, 1911.

I. Self-centered Lives.—Gen. 4: 9; Ex. 2: 17; Isa. 56: 11; Matt. 23: 4; Mark 10: 37; Philpp. 2: 26.

II. Unselfishness.—Gen. 13: 9; Num. 11: 29; Rom. 15: 3; 1 Cor. 10: 33.

III. Willing to Sacrifice.—Matt. 16: 25; 19: 21; Rom. 14: 21; Philpp. 2: 4.

IV. Willing to Serve.—Neh. 11: 2; Isa. 6: 8; 2 Cor. 8: 3; 1 Thess. 2: 8.

1. Let some young Worker relate the fate of selfishness as found in Num. 16: 1-14, 31-33.

2. Let another relate the result of doing one's own will, as given in Jonah 1: 1-17.

3. Let a third read "Living Christ" as given by Paul in Col. 3: 1-14.

4. The experience of the prodigal illustrates the self-centered life. He disregarded his father's advice. He sought pleasure; he found pain. He sought luxury; he found want.

5. The Christ-centered life surrenders the entire life—time, energies, business, all,—to the will, not of self, but of the Master.

PRAYER MEETING

Candles Under Bushels.

Matt. 5: 14-16.

For Week Beginning May 28, 1911.

1. Christians as Light-Bearers.—As Christ is the light of the world, so Christians are the light of the world. But they light the world only as Christ is in them and is allowed to shine forth. The bushel of false modesty is as bad as the bushel of sloth. St. Augustine says, "Christians are the light lighted, Christ is the light illuminating others." We are saved to save others; our hearts are lighted that we may light others. We are saved to serve; we should live "not to be ministered unto, but to minister" (Matt. 20: 25-28).

2. It Is Christlike to Serve.—Jesus said, "I am in the midst of you as he that serveth." "My Father worketh even until now, and I work." His whole life exemplified this spirit of service. On the cruel cross he gave up his life as an unselfish surrender for the salvation of others (John 12: 32).

3. A Shining Life Is a Life of Power.—The religion that keeps the speech pure and honest, the temper sweet and kindly, the actions considerate and unselfish—such a walk and conversation is a constant telling of the gospel story. —the good news to men. "A good example," said an old African preacher, "is the tallest kind of preaching." He was surely right. Each disciple of Christ is to "do all the good he can, to all the people he can, in all the ways he he can, as long as ever he can" (John 15: 7, 8).

4. Some "Bushels" That We Must Guard Against.—(1) "The bushel of greed" (Jude 11-23). By this the believer falls into spiritual decay, sad to contemplate. (2) "The bushel of fear" (Jonah 1: 1-17). Fleeing from duty is the sure road to danger and difficulty. (3) "The bushel of discouragement" (1 Kings 19: 1-8). Remember the juniper tree! (4) "The bushel of doubt" (2 Chron. 16: 1-10). (5) "The bushel of cowardice" (Matt. 26: 57-75). (6) "The bushel of ease" (Amos 6: 1-6).

HOME AND FAMILY

Things Which Go Toward Making the Home Ideal.

BY MARY RICHARDS.

"What is home with none to meet us,
None to welcome, none to greet us?
Home is sweet and only sweet,
When there's one we love to meet."

HOME is the first institution God created. He made Adam, and then created Eve for his helpmeet. Man was not made to live alone but in families.

An ideal home is a Christian home, implying marriage, mutual affection, piety, gentleness, meekness and forbearance,—a type of heaven itself. Unkind words are never heard nor even thought of but, instead, each is always anxious for the other's happiness.

Children in the home are gifts from God, entrusted to our care. We should be careful always to tell them the truth, even in the smallest matters. We, as parents, owe to our children the influence of a true, real, Christian life,—a shadow woven about them now, will hover over them in years to come, and will never be eliminated.

When I think of my former home and of mother (who is now in the spirit world), of the tender, unspoken love, and the many sacrifices made for me and never thought of, it fills my heart with tenderness and my eyes with tears. How important that even our smallest children should never hear a harsh word! They learn a thousand times more quickly by example than by precept.

A little child was once with its mother in a home where the husband and wife always called each other pet names. The wife became somewhat indignant, and spoke harshly to the husband. The child quickly looked at its mother and said, "Why, mamma, she called him dear, but she talked cross to him."

Government in the home is necessary. By this I do not mean to frown at the merry outbursts of innocent hilarity, to be continually scolding, or to punish simply because you have been inconvenienced, but watch for the first rising of sin, and subdue it; also subdue the first rebellion against rightful authority. Punish for a fault because it is of a sinful nature. Reprove with calmness and composure. Punish as often as you threaten, and threaten as often as you intend to and can perform. In other words, say what you mean and do as you say.

Children all need teaching. When you take away one pleasure, give them something better, and tell them why the one forbidden is not permitted. Our homes should be schools of devotion, reverence, tender affection and true politeness.

Grown people, as well as children, like to be appreciated. When you receive a favor from any member of the family, never fail to return a smile and a "Thank you." When given something good to eat and appreciate it, express yourself to that effect. It is a good thing to correct each other in your use of language in the home, for if this is done from little up, it will always come natural to use proper language.

When any of the family deserve praise, give it. One sentence of honest praise, bestowed at the right time, is worth a whole volley of scolding. Too many people keep their pleasant thoughts and kind words bottled and sealed while their loved ones are living, and when they are dead break the bottle over the coffin, and bathe the shroud in fragrance. Give your flowers while they can be appreciated.

The home government and teaching is the foundation stone for all we can ever hope for our children to be, in time and eternity.

Children reared in a home like this, should obey, and always honor and respect their parents. They should be thankful that God has spared them to have made them what they are.

Brothers and sisters should always be thoughtful for each other's happiness. They will not be permitted long to live as an unbroken family. 'Twill only be a few years at the best till some may be called to the spirit world, some to the mission field, some here, some there. We never know what may be in the near future for us. The young man who has always been in the habit of caring for his sister, will unknowingly manifest his manly character to those about him, and the young lady who has the good fortune of becoming his for life, will reap the golden fruit thereof.

May heaven help us, whether we be father, mother, or child to do our part to make our homes ideal.

Our Mothers: A Tribute.

BY JOHN R. SNYDER.

"The mind that ocean's secrets knows,
Perfumes the lily, paints the rose,
That counts each star that shines above,
Alone can fathom mother's love."

IT was a beautiful and delicate bit of sentiment that prompted the observance of a special day in honor of the mothers of our land. Little did Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, think, when a few years ago, she set apart a special day to do honor to her mother, who had gone on before, that her suggestion would be taken up and become nation-wide in its observance. But it was so. The beauty of the suggestion appealed to every heart, and from east and west, from north and south, wherever motherhood is honored and revered, there, in some service, will the name of "mother" be honored.

As a nation we are given to the celebration of great events and notable personages. Birthdays, anniversaries and achievements are recognized as being worthy of special recognition. But it remained for this woman from the "City of Brotherly Love" to set in motion this movement in honor of the motherhood of the land which has sprung so quickly into universal favor and observance.

"Mother's Day! O welcome sight!
Over all our land,
Fair carnations pure and white
Are seen on every hand.
Hearts grow tender for awhile;
Loving memories are stirred
Of a mother's gentle smile,
Of her faithful call and word."

The name of "mother" is a sacred name. There is no other name born of earth to equal it. Ever since the lips of the first child were taught to lisp that endearing word, it has suggested the divine. How one almost shrinks with righteous anger when he hears the name desecrated by some unthinking person! To what depths a son or daughter must have fallen who would carelessly cast a reflection upon the holy name of mother. It is well, once a year at least, to draw in the distracting cares of life, and commemorate and celebrate her who gave us life.

In these days we hear much about power, authority and influence in high places. But stronger than all the "power behind the throne," to influence for good and for righteousness, is the silent hand, yea it may be, the unseen hand of a mother, for some one has said and said it well,—

"The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world."

Men high in authority, kings and rulers of nations, and men whose names are emblazoned on the pages of history have offered tribute at the shrine of motherhood, and confessed that whatever good they may have accomplished has come through the influence of one who was a "mother indeed." Then let us not be slack in our expression nor let us wait until those eyes have closed in their last eternal sleep, to tell her in words that can not be spoken or written that her love to us has found a counterpart in our own love to her, and all that is holy and righteous.

"This will a mother's heart repay,
If that loved hand,
Amidst life's doubtful battle-fray,
By grace sustained shall often say,
Next to God's hand,
All of true happiness we know
Mother, to thy strong love we owe."

There is no human love like the mother love. It has been exemplified over and over again. A young man may start out in the world on the wrong path. He may go into deep sin. He may come into unbelief. His crimes and misdeeds may cause prison doors to swing open and close upon his liberties,—all the price of his sin. But a mother's love will penetrate it all. He may shut out of his life the beautiful, the holy, the good. He may deny his Lord and his Word. He may sear his conscience as with a hot iron. But there is a picture he can not efface, even in the deepest sin, and that is the face of a holy mother.

Not long ago, in our city, a young man was apprehended for a crime. He had transgressed the law of the land. Punishment awaited him. But this was not what seemed to weigh most heavily on his mind. It was, "O don't tell my mother. It will kill her." Sad, indeed, was it that he had not thought of that before. O young man! If you are tempted to do wrong, think of that one whom you call "mother." Bring from the album of your memory her pure face and it will give you courage to overcome many a temptation. A mother's love abideth forever. It never dies.

"A mother's love,—how sweet the name!
What is a mother's love?
A noble, pure and tender flame
Enkindled from above.
To bless a heart of earthly mold;
The warmest love that can grow cold;
This is a mother's love."

O young man, young woman, we beseech you, we pray you, that, for a moment at least, you will stop in the mad rush for pleasure and gaiety and think of her who went down into the "valley and shadow of death" that you might have life. How can you speak lightly or unfeelingly to her or of her, whose furrowed brow, weakening form and gray hairs are tokens of the opening chasm just ahead. Think of the sleepless nights, the days of worry and hours of sorrow through which she has passed for you! Why not, if you have not already done so before, bring to her a tribute of your love for her care? It may be small, but filled with a heart's love it becomes the gift of a potentate. It may be only a pure, white blossom but,—

"O men with mothers living,
Remember them today
And send a white carnation
To brighten up their way.
Those pure and lovely blossoms
Will hold a magic spell—
Oh, let them speak a message true
Your lips can never tell."

To many who read these lines mother has passed over. She has joined the angel band. Oh, sad must be the thought of those who look back and see where they have dishonored the name of her who gave them life! What a hallowed spot is "mother's grave"! Her body hallows an otherwise unnoticed piece of ground. Men, busy men, men of affairs, travel hundreds of miles each year that they may look upon this holy mound of earth and cast upon it a flower. I know nothing of what it means, to stand by this little plot in some cemetery, for my mother still lives. But I have seen men who came from the stirring scenes of life become strangely silent as they stood by "mother's grave." And why not? The grave only marks the visible stopping place of the ones we loved and revered. Somehow it seems that we are nearer to them. Then let the evergreen wreaths and the roses and carnations be spread as a token of love, but, dear reader, if "mother" has not passed over, let her have some of these tokens while with you.

"O, mother,
When the evening pale
Bows, like a mariner on the dim, blue wave,
I stay to hear the night winds wail
Around thy grave."

The beautiful story of President McKinley's love for his mother has been told from sea to sea. His message, "Tell mother I'll be there," sent to her when she was dying, has become a classic and is preserved in song and sermon. O young man or young woman, if your mother has passed over, can you truly and sincerely send the message to her, borne on angel wings: "Tell mother I'll be there"? If you can not, why not, at this celebration of Mother's Day make your heart your offering and take mother's God and mother's Bible to be your God and your Bible? It will be the noblest tribute you can offer, and one that will cause tears of rejoicing in heaven and on earth.

☞All business and communications intended for the paper should be addressed to the BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE, ELGIN, ILL., and not to any individual connected with it.

Two more issues of the MESSENGER, then we shall be off for the Annual Meeting.

BRO. JOHN W. MILLER, of Chicago, filled the pulpit in the Elgin church last Sunday morning.

BRO. A. C. SNOWBERGER, late of Des Moines, Iowa, is expected to locate near El Centro, Cal., the coming fall.

As the fruits of a splendid revival held in the Quinter church, Kans., by Bro. D. A. Crist, nineteen were added to the fold.

STEPS will be taken to build a churchhouse in Hollidaysburg, Pa., a lot having already been purchased for the purpose.

SOUTHERN PENNSYLVANIA will be represented on the Standing Committee by Brethren J. A. Long and William A. Anthony.

BRO. J. M. MOHLER is engaged in a protracted meeting in the Claar congregation, Pa., and will continue at least until the end of this week.

WE are now booking orders for the Full Report of the St. Joseph Conference, and would be pleased to hear from all those desiring copies.

BRO. J. F. SOUDERS reached San Francisco, Cal., May 5, and went from there to Preston, Minn., thus completing his trip around the world.

IN the list of the State Districts and members of the Standing Committee, as given last week, line No. 4 should have read Western Colorado and Utah.

THE members at Fredonia, Kans., are in the midst of a glorious revival, conducted by Bro. R. Shroyer, of New Berlin, Ohio. So writes Bro. E. E. Joyce under date of May 8.

THE AMERICAN PEACE SOCIETY has changed its national headquarters from Boston, Mass., to Washington, D. C., and should hereafter be addressed at 313-314 Colorado Building.

BRO. RICHARD A. DASSDORF, of Jones Mills, Pa., writes us that Bro. Walter Hamilton, of West Virginia, is locating near him, and this means a good preacher for his home congregation.

ON page 315, this issue, will be found some "General Information" that will prove helpful to those attending the St. Joseph Conference. Those who do not preserve the MESSENGER, and do not happen to have the Conference Booklet, will do well to clip the article and carry it with them when they start to Annual Meeting.

BRETHREN J. H. Longanecker and John Herr, instead of Brethren Samuel H. Hertzler and G. N. Falkenstein, are to represent Eastern Pennsylvania on the Standing Committee. The latter are alternates. The letter giving these facts was misread, hence the mistake which appears in the list of the members of the Standing Committee, as published last week.

ALL of our patrons should have a copy of the Full Report of the St. Joseph Conference. There will be things said and done at that meeting that will be worth reading. We are now booking orders.

THE mission work is moving forward encouragingly at Redondo Beach, Cal. Bro. Geo. H. Bashor recently held a series of meetings in the city and seven were added to the church by confession and baptism.

BRO. SAMUEL BOWSER, member of the Standing Committee from Northern Iowa, Southern Minnesota and South Dakota, is at Lineboro, Md., where he will remain until he starts to the St. Joseph Conference.

BRO. C. B. SMITH, of Red Cloud, Nebr., is now located at Morrill, Kans., where he will be in charge of the church and her interests for at least one year. His correspondents will please note his change of address.

BRO. J. L. GUTHRIE writes us that since the death of his wife he has changed his address from Waring, Texas, to Briceton, Ohio, and that he is now planning to do some evangelistic work during the coming fall and winter.

THE members of Greensburg, Pa., have arranged to canvass Western Pennsylvania for funds to aid in erecting a very-much-needed meetinghouse. Permission to make this canvass was granted by the late District Meeting.

EVERY member of the Standing Committee should reach St. Joseph in time to hear Bro. D. L. Miller's address on Wednesday evening, May 31. The Standing Committee will meet in its room in the Auditorium, the next morning, and organize.

WE hope to mail the Conference Booklet the last of this week. In addition to filling all orders received, a copy will be mailed free to each member of the Standing Committee, and the retiring officers of the last Committee. To all others ordering the price is five cents.

WE can use a young man in our bindery, about seventeen to nineteen years of age. A good opportunity is offered to learn a good trade. A boy with city experience is preferred. Moderate wages to start, but chances of advancement. Address, Business Manager, Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA has been divided into two Districts, subject, of course, to the approval of the St. Joseph Conference. The new District is to be known as Southeastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Eastern New York. It is composed of twelve congregations and has 1,553 members. A meeting was held in the old mother church at Germantown, May 12, and Bro. J. T. Myers was chosen to represent the District on the Standing Committee.

BRO. W. R. MILLER writes us from the Howard church, Ind., where he has a splendid interest in his Bible Land talks. He tells us that while lecturing in the Salamonie church a brother arose in the audience and said he would give $500 in the interest of missions if the church there would raise a like sum. The members set about raising their part and now the Mission Board is likely to receive $1,000 from the Salamonie congregation. This manner of raising money comes under the head of "provoking one another unto good works."

IT certainly means something when a leading journal like the Independent mentions seven peace books in one issue, giving the name and author of each book, along with the price and publisher. Not only so, but the books are highly recommended, and their purpose is duly emphasized. War is becoming unpopular, though nations are steadily increasing their fighting forces. Men of scholarship are encouraged to write in support of peace, and their books find a ready sale. Newspapers that are widely read are throwing their influence on the side of peace principles, while not a few ministers are preaching in favor of abolishing war. This is encouraging, and may possibly lead up to the great era of peace when wars shall be unknown among the nations of earth.

BRO. S. C. MILLER, editor of the INGLENOOK, conducted services at Rockford, Ill., last Sunday morning and evening. Bro. P. R. Keltner, the pastor, was absent at the time, attending the feast at Yellow Creek.

WE have a nice vest-pocket New Testament, bound in leather, two and three-fourths inches wide, four and one-half inches long and only half an inch thick, that we can send by mail for thirty-five cents. It is just the thing for those who want a book that can be carried in an ordinary vest pocket. There is no necessity of sending elsewhere for a pocket Testament. This one will answer every purpose. It has no references. Those desiring a book containing references should send sixty cents and procure a copy of the Gish Testament, which is four inches wide, six and one-half inches long and three-quarters of an inch thick. It has larger print than the former.

SUNDAY, May 28, is set apart as Peace or Arbitration Day. On this day we are expected to have sermons on the peace question in all the churches in the United States. In all probability the day will be quite generally observed by the churches, and the people of this country will hear more in the interest of peace than they have ever been permitted to hear in any one day. Beginning with the churches on the Atlantic Coast the earnest cry for peace on earth and good will toward men will sweep over the whole land and cease only when the Pacific Coast is reached. Let all of our ministers prepare something for that day. The people should know that the Gospel teaches peace, and that we, as a people, stand for peace and arbitration.

WE have a short letter from an earnest preacher, who has been in this world more than seventy-two years. He had promised us some articles for the MESSENGER, but writes us that his time is so thoroughly taken up with study, preaching, some literary work he has on hand, and looking after the church work in his home congregation, that he can not do for the MESSENGER what he should like to do. This would sound well enough for a man in the prime of life, but it is unusual for a preacher past seventy to write that way. But, candidly, we enjoy letters from the old fathers, who are so busy that they can hardly find time to write. We like the idea of men working as long as the Lord permits them to live, looking upon this as the ideal life.

SOME of our earnest readers suggest that fasting and prayer on Sunday, June 4, should not be limited to those who attend the Conference, but that the day should be observed by the members at home also. This was the purpose of the recommendation sent to the Annual Conference, and approved in 1909, wherein it is required "that the Sunday before the business session of the Annual Meeting be spent as a day of fasting and prayer, both by the council assembled and by the churches at home, for a deeper spirit of union among God's people, and more of the power of the Spirit upon the church (Acts 13: 2, 3). More praying and fasting at home, as well as at the Conference would prove helpful to God's people as a preparation for the great work entrusted to them.

AN elder is elected a member of the Standing Committee. Before Conference convenes he requests letters for himself and family, and moves into another State, where he has purchased property and proposes to make his home. Being a nonresident elder, can he serve as a member of the Standing Committee, representing the District that elected him? Every now and then this question comes up, and yet there should be no occasion for it, for the reason that the Annual Meeting of 1903, Art. 1, decided and said: "Resolved, That every State District be represented on Standing Committee by a member living in the District he represents, or by letter." By this we are to understand that each member of the Standing Committee must be a bona fide resident of the State District that he represents. Should he move out of his District, and establish his residence in another District, he loses his right to serve on the Standing Committee; and his place should be taken by the alternate.

LAST week we called attention to the St. Joseph News-Press, an evening paper, and also the Gazette, a morning journal, that are planning to publish the usual Conference news that we look for in dailies. Either paper may be had ten days for twenty-five cents, and all orders should be sent to Bro. J. S. Kline, 2919 St. Joseph Ave., St. Joseph, Mo. Some of the brethren will assist in gathering such news as will prove interesting to our people.

OUR foreign missionaries who are on furlough from their fields of labor, and visiting the various churches, are diffusing a widespread interest in missions by their graphic descriptions of conditions and needs in heathen lands. We are wondering, however, whether all the congregations are realizing the great amount of inspiration to be gained by means of these visits, since many of the churches have not yet taken the trouble to invite these missionary heralds. By all means secure at least one of these consecrated workers, fresh from the field, to fan the flame of missionary enthusiasm within your ranks.

IT has been well said that the most effectual work of any Sunday-school teacher must be done on his knees, and that the most elaborate plans for Sunday-school success are bound to fail if there is not a heart of love. "Though he have the gift of tongues of men and of angels, though he have all the mysteries of child psychology, and the knowledge of modern pedagogy, though he have all geniality so as to remove embarrassment, but have not a heart filled with love for God and the souls of the lost, he is worse than sounding brass and a clanging cymbal.—he is nothing. And now abideth child psychology, modern pedagogy, and love, these three; but the greatest of these is love."

How John Baptized.

"I take the Gospel Messenger and have carefully read the articles on 'Baptism.' In your issue of May 6, page 282, you state, 'The form of John's baptism, which our people should know, was not single immersion.' I am a Baptist and was immersed once backwards 'in water unto repentance,' 'in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' Will you kindly give a tangible formula of the words that John used at each three dips? Did John dip Jesus three times; and if so, did he use the same formula of words for him, at each dip, as he used in baptizing the people of Jerusalem and Judea? If not, what formula did John use for him?"

We are not told what formula John used when he administered the rite to Jesus and others who demanded baptism at his hands. But since he was a man sent from God, and his baptism was from heaven, we would naturally suppose that his formula would be the same as Jesus gave to his apostles, when he commissioned them to disciple all nations, "Baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." There is certainly no good reason for presuming that John would bring one formula from heaven, and Jesus another. Since we know, as a matter of certainty, what formula Jesus authorized, we can safely infer what form of words were employed by John.

We are, therefore, led to conclude that John baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, dipping his candidate at the mention of each name. This was in perfect keeping with what John taught respecting the three persons of the Trinity. He instructed his hearers regarding the Father and the Son, as well as the Holy Ghost. It was proper that Jesus should be baptized into these three names. There was nothing inconsistent about his being baptized in his own name. Aside from Father and Holy Ghost, no greater name could be found. Then, by what process of reasoning could one arrive at the conclusion that Jesus was baptized one way and then instructed his disciples to baptize another? What would be the consistency in John bringing one form of baptism from heaven and Jesus bringing a different form? This would impress one with the thought that there is a lack of harmony in heaven.

That the formula given by Jesus demands a triple action must be set down as a proposition that is practically settled, for the reason that the weight of evidence is most decidedly on that side of the question. All the ancient writers, and especially those familiar with the formula in Greek, who have expressed an opinion on the subject, affirm that Jesus taught a threefold immersion, when he told his apostles to disciple all nations, "baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Furthermore, single immersion was not introduced until about A. D. 360, while backward immersion came into existence sometime during the Reformation. These facts and conclusions, as stated, place single immersion for John the Baptist out of the question. Reasoning from the premises, there is but one logical conclusion, viz., that John baptized all his applicants, including Jesus, into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, employing the three-fold action. This is in perfect accord with a statement made by the distinguished pedobaptist historian, Dr. Wall, who, quoting from an ancient liturgy, says: "The Son of God gave his own example to all believers, when he was thrice dipped in the waters of Jordan."—"History of Infant Baptism," Vol. I, page 578.

The Union of Believers.

WHEN closing his personal ministry on this earth, Jesus assigned to his chosen apostles three important duties. One was to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, and to teach the converted to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them. The third is brought out in his memorable prayer, John 17, where he prayed for the unity of all believers in every age and clime. His prayer was not for the apostles alone, but for all those who should believe on him through their word. The Word, or the Gospel, was to be preached among all nations, so that the people could hear the words of life and have an opportunity of accepting Christ and obeying his commandments. They were to be taught all things that Jesus had commanded; then urged to labor for unity. All believers were to be encouraged to be one in Christ, to be one as the Father and Son are one, that the world might believe that Jesus is the Christ, and was sent by the Father (John 17: 21).

These important duties still rest with the church of Christ on earth. It is the duty of the faithful to preach the Gospel in all the world, to teach the regenerated all things that Jesus commanded, and to labor for the union of all believers. For this world there is but one Gospel, one Spirit and one body. There is but one Lord, one faith, and one baptism (Eph. 4: 5). It was the design of the Master, and for this he prayed, that all those who believe on him through the Word should be one. He had no thought of a divided Christianity.

It is just as much our duty to work for the oneness of all believers as it is to convert the heathen, or to preach the whole Gospel, and probably one is no more important than the others. All those who accept Jesus as their Savior should not only love and obey him, but they ought to be able to worship together in Spirit and in truth. For all of them there is but the one Lord, and there should be only the one faith, as well as the one baptism. There is no more reason for another faith and for another baptism than there is for a second Lord. And what we are saying of faith and baptism may well apply to every duty and institution enjoined by the New Testament.

So far as faith is concerned, all Christians should believe alike. This would mean one faith. All should submit to the same baptism as recommended by Paul. The same Spirit of oneness ought to characterize us in our relation to each other as well as in our relation to every duty mentioned in the Word of God. This should make all of God's children one. There would then be no chance for divisions.

Why should not the Brethren make a specialty of laboring for the union of all believers on this basis? We have devoted more than two hundred years to preaching the whole Gospel to those within our reach, but we have not emphasized what the Master prayed for, regarding the union of all those who believe in him. In this respect we may possibly have neglected a great opportunity. One thing is certain: No Christian body in this country can have better reasons for encouraging the union of believers on the whole Gospel than the Brethren. In the beginning of our work we adopted the New Testament as our creed, and we can well insist on all others adopting the same creed. In fact, it is the only creed on which the different churches could possibly unite. It is most assuredly the creed on which the apostles would insist, were they to reappear among us.

Were the New Testament made a basis of union, with the understanding that there is to be one Lord, one faith and one baptism, along with obeying all of the things set forth in the Written Word, the incidentals might, in due time, be worked out in a very creditable manner. Of course, everything would have to be settled by the "Thus saith the Lord," with the understanding that unity should be sought in faith rather than in opinion. If honest people can be induced to believe alike, regarding the fundamentals in Christianity, they can well afford to be charitable respecting their opinions. Or, in other words, if they are united on Gospel principles, there is no reason why they should permit methods to separate them.

When it comes to Christian unity we have a right to insist on the New Testament fundamentals. They are the real essentials of the religion taught by Jesus. These fundamentals are the basis of faith, and without them there can be no genuine faith. But this can not, as a rule, be said of opinions, methods or contingencies. People may differ in their opinions about Jesus, and still believe that he is the Christ, the Son of God. They might differ in their methods of observing the religious rite of feet-washing, and still unite in maintaining that the rite is a New Testament sacrament, to be observed by all the saints. They may differ sharply about contingencies that may arise now and then, as Paul and Barnabas at one time differed, and yet be sound in the faith.

In view of these facts, and others that might be given, it behooves all converted men and women to study the basis of Christian unity, with a view of bringing all honest believers closer together. Especially should this be the case with those who strongly resemble each other in faith and practice. If they can be induced to come closer to the New Testament ideals, they will, in time, surely find themselves harmoniously occupying the same platform, and thus the Master's prayer would be answered. Then considerations of this sort should prompt the members of the same body to make more of their many points of agreement, and less of the few points about which they may differ. If this is done they may rest assured that they are on the way to perfect unity, and that, in the end, the world will be led to believe that Jesus is the Christ, and that God has sent him.

Petitioning Annual Conference Regarding Reports of Committees.

IT has become somewhat common to petition the Conference with reference to reports in the hands of committees to be submitted for consideration; and the tendency to do so, it would seem, is on the increase. Now, frankly admitting the right of petition, is it the proper thing to do? A careful consideration of the facts will show, I think, that it is not a wise and fair practice.

When committees are appointed to prepare reports for the Conference, it becomes their duty, whether or not it be so stated in their commission, to make a diligent investigation of the subjects in hand, and to report their findings. This is the real purpose of committee work. It is to have the findings of the most careful research. And only after a painstaking study of the subjects committed to them, are committees justified in submitting reports. Then their reports should go before the open Conference on their merits, and those presenting them should have the privilege of explaining the nature and meaning of their reports and the reasons therefor. This is fair to the reports and courteous to those making them. It is decidedly unfair to the reports and discourteous to the committees to attempt to prejudice the Conference in favor of reports or against them before they are submitted and the reasons therefor given. In fact, it is an attempt to suppress investigation, and certainly, that is bad.

After the reports are submitted and explained as fully as necessary, in the judgment of those presenting them, then they are properly and fairly in the hands of the Conference for consideration. Now it becomes the duty of the Conference to take them up and discuss their merits fairly and fully, without fear or favor. Now is the time to speak,—to speak fully and frankly. At this point all consideration of committees ceases; they then stand in the same relation to the reports as other members of the Conference; and if reports have no merit they should be voted down, no matter who makes them. Reports should have a fair chance, and then, if they can not stand, they should fall.

In a few instances petitions, regarding reports not yet made public, have been prepared. These petitions were written, of course, absolutely without knowledge of what the reports, in question, would be; and as wonderful as it is, a few District Meetings have passed them on their way to the Conference. It is a marvel in this age of enlightenment and vaunted fair play. What is the explanation? Is it suspicion of the committees? Are those upon whom the Conference lays the heaviest burdens and greatest responsibilities held in mistrust? If not, then what? And are there those who will sacrifice wisdom and fairness to the extent of making a blind effort to forestall they know not what? Would it not be infinitely better to labor and pray with and for those, struggling under these heavy burdens, with the fear of God before them?

To petition Conference, whether the petitions be written before or after the reports are made public, is to presuppose that the Conference will not have sufficient wisdom to deal intelligently with the findings of committees. It is to presume that the Conference does not fully comprehend the highest interests of the kingdom of God, touching the matters in hand, and therefore instruction should be administered. It presumes also that the local church, through the District Meeting, is able to give the necessary enlightenment.

It sometimes happens, I confess, that individuals and local bodies have a clearer knowledge of things than the general body; but, certainly, this is not the rule. In the general Conference it is supposed that the aggregate wisdom of the church is represented; and on this principle, we ought to have confidence that the Conference, unaided by petitions, will know how to deal intelligently with reports of committees.

Or are the petitioners mistrustful of the integrity of the Conference? Granting that there is sufficient wisdom in the general body to act intelligently, are there fears that the Conference will be unfaithful to its knowledge and convictions? Is this implied in petitioning? If not, then why petition? If the Conference is intelligent, having sufficient wisdom to deal wisely with reports, and if there is faithfulness to follow the light of wisdom as God gives it, then why petition? Why not rest in the wisdom and honor of the Conference?

One more point. It must be known that reports of committees are deferred business. It is first to be considered in the order of business. It is disposed of before the petitions and queries are taken up. The petitions bearing on reports are, therefore, without effect. They are useless. According to the established order of business, the way is not open for them to reach the mark aimed at.

What is said in these lines does not apply to reports of committees accepted by the Conference and placed on the minutes for further consideration. Such reports are the property of the church at large through the Conference, held open for further investigation, the whole church being charged with the investigation. In such cases discussion is the end in view, and this may be done very properly by petition, in part at least, if there is a way opened to be heard. H. C. B.

In the Fold.

The one thing which we as parents most desire is to have our children do well. And in this doing well we do not include only, or mainly, what is counted as worldly success. There is something more important than that kind of success; and that something is their success in the spiritual life. All of us think that way, though at times our actions would seem to indicate the contrary. But our children, even when given the right start, do not always continue in the right way. This is the case more often in spiritual than in temporal things; and the reason is not far to seek.

Have you ever known parents to wrestle long and earnestly in prayer that their children might make the wise choice during a series of meetings? All of us have; and we have known some to become so deeply concerned that they could scarcely eat or sleep until the matter was settled. That was good for both parent and child: it brought them closer together and closer to God; and there is no doubt that these prayers have been, through God, the means of turning many a wayward or careless son or daughter into the right path. Let us have more prayers, more outpourings of the soul's deepest and holiest desires, for the young. It will be good for all of us.

But have you known parents to stop working and praying for their children after they were once in the fold? This seems to be the case sometimes; as if getting them into the church were an end instead of a means. Entering the fold is not salvation, though it is a most important step toward securing that which we all so much desire. We have seen some parents whose whole bearing seemed to indicate that their responsibility for the spiritual well-being of their children ceased when once they had made a start in the divine life. But that was a sad mistake. If the devil tempted our Savior immediately after he was baptized, is it reasonable to suppose that he will leave our children untempted after they have come out and taken a stand for God? If we think any such thing we shall some day awaken to our folly, and the awakening will not be a time of rejoicing for us.

Joining the church is a good thing, a right thing; but it is only a beginning, not an end. It does not insure salvation; it does not free one from the temptations of life. It gives one greater strength to overcome, for it connects one with the source of all power. But even then more wrestlings, more prayers are needed. The command to teach all things follows the command to baptize. Besides, our own observation and experience prove to us beyond a shadow of a doubt that teaching is needed after one has entered the fold. The church is more easy for the devil to enter than the sheepfold is for the wolf. There is a real, though not tangible, wall around the fold. But our adversary found a way of getting into it at the beginning; for one of the twelve is called a devil. To think of these things is to become awakened to a deeper sense of our duties and responsibilities, and of our opportunities.

We do not want, and must not have any fewer or less fervent prayers for the conversion of the children; quite the contrary. But in addition to these we want prayers for them after conversion; we want intelligent, persistent, consecrated teaching of the young after they have entered the fold. In this we have come short in the past. It is our business to do better in the future. But in our efforts to do better let us not forget that the church is not the place for amusement or mere entertainment. Its mission is higher and holier than that; and so is ours if we have really and truly been born again. In the fold is not a place of absolute safety; yet it is the safest place in the world. It is the place where children in Christ are trained to become men and women of God. If it is not such a place with us now, it is because we have come short of our duty. G. M.

Collecting Money at Conference.

At most of our Annual Conferences will be found members, going around collecting money for various purposes. Sometimes it is for a mission, for a meetinghouse or for some charitable work. A dime from each person approached, in the course of a few days, amounts to a good deal; and while that which is given may not inconvenience any one, yet this method of collecting money is a violation of the rules of the Conference. In order to protect those attending the Annual Meeting, it has been ruled time and again that no collection shall be taken, and no money raised on the grounds by private solicitation, without the consent of the Standing Committee. We are saying this for the benefit of those who may attend the St. Joseph meeting. Should any one privately solicit them for money, they should ask the party to show the written permission granted by the Standing Committee. This, of course, does not apply to the agents of well-recognized institutions among us, who may wish to confer with friends regarding donations and offerings that would be considered legitimate almost any place, but it does apply to a class of solicitors who avail themselves of the splendid opportunity to appeal to the sympathy of strangers. As regards money for missions, meetinghouses and charitable works generally, there are well-established ways by which help can be procured, and those needing help along these lines should proceed in the regular way, and not annoy those who attend the Conference. This thing of brethren and sisters going among the people day after day, soliciting funds, has at times proved decidedly annoying. No one likes to refuse to give a nickel or a dime when solicited, and yet he may not give with as good feeling as he should. The more there is given in this way, the less we may expect at the big collection to be taken at the close of the Missionary Meeting on Monday, June 5.

The Value of Skill.

In Elgin we have a few hospitals where a number of patients are treated by skillful physicians and cared for by trained nurses. For the good of patients, it occasionally becomes necessary to remove an injured limb. It may be a leg, an arm, or only a finger, but in the process of removing any part of the body the greatest possible care is taken. Nothing is done hastily, or rudely. But before an operation is undertaken, the patient is put in condition for the operation, and is then taken proper care of after the diseased member has been removed. Even the amputated part is handled carefully and treated with humane consideration. We sometimes wonder what might be the result if the same care were exercised when it becomes necessary to remove an unfaithful member from the body of Christ on earth. What would be the impression on the members of the church, if all those taking part in the excommunicating act would go about their work as carefully and as tenderly as do those who operate on a patient at the hospital? Then, think of the value of spiritual skill, and of the regard that should be had for the church as well as for the members removed. It occurs to us that in far too many instances churches have failed to exercise the care that should be exercised on occasions of this sort. There has not always been the skill, the care and tenderness, that becometh the people of God. May there not be much room for improvement in our methods of removing members that can no longer be retained in the body?

Temporary Officers.

It would probably be a good idea, when selecting temporary officers for church work, if the elder, or pastor, having charge of the meeting, would say something regarding the duties to be performed by the different persons to be chosen, and the qualifications they should possess. The lack of efficient temporary officers and other workers generally causes church work to drag. An energetic church treasurer, one who sees that the members pay their dues promptly, sees that all the bills are settled, and makes a good report to the church, showing what has been collected, what has been paid out, and the amount on hand, is a decided help to any congregation. A good church clerk is a matter of more importance than most members think. This is true of the church trustees, as well as of others who have special work assigned to them. Not all members of the congregation know the value of an active, businesslike Messenger agent. The ideal agent makes it his or her business to get the paper into every family where there are members, and to the extent that this is done, new life will be infused into every church. An active church correspondent will see that the congregation receives proper attention in our columns, and in this way the members are helped and interested. The importance of calling the attention of the members to matters of this sort, when selecting officers and helpers, ought not to be overlooked.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION OF SOUTHERN IDAHO.

The various Brethren churches of Southern Idaho have for several years been holding regular Sunday-school Conventions with much good coming therefrom. April 29 this yearly meeting was held in the Boise Valley church. The officers elected for the ensuing year are: Eld. J. E. Shamberger, president; Bro. S. S. Neher, secretary; Bro. Jacob Betts, treasurer.

The forenoon of the meeting was devoted to business and rules pertaining to its future work. At noon the several hundred attendants were invited to the basement of the church, where a bountiful meal was spread for all. At 1:15 P. M. the meeting was again called to order and continued in session until 4:30.

The afternoon meeting was devoted especially to the encouragement and uplift of the Sunday-school. Much thought was given, showing the need of more consecration of its teachers and officers. One vital truth taught was, that as the Sunday-school is the nursery of the church, so the home is the nursery of the Sunday-school, and the home is where consecration should begin. The family altar should not be neglected, but made a fountain of living water for all.

After a most earnest and spiritual meeting the delegates voted to accept the call from Twin Falls church for the place of the next convention in April, 1912.

The Boise Valley church had been thoughtful in selecting the evening of this same day for holding its love feast, thus giving each Sunday-school worker a renewed spirit of consecration. S. S. Neher, Sec.

A HINT TO CONFERENCE GOERS.

Much has been said about our good Annual Conference at Winona Lake, and much more might be said. However I feel like saying something on a phase of the subject. I am not pessimistic, but when I see an evil that might as well be remedied, I believe in helping to remove that evil, if possible.

During our last Annual Conference a large number of the hearers were greatly disturbed by the continual moving in and out of a certain class of people. As it is so near time for our next Conference, I thought this a good time to speak of it that it may be fresh in the minds of those who attend the meeting.

It seems to me that when people go into the Auditorium and are comfortably seated, they should be able to remain there at least through one session. Even though the subject under discussion does not interest you, please sit still for the sake of some one else.

It certainly is annoying to those who are anxious to hear, to be continually disturbed by these restless people. More than once have I been listening to a speaker, and just as he was making a good point, I was obliged to get up or move out, in order to let some one out who could not sit still any longer. I am certain, too, that when I say this I am giving the experience of scores of others. I heard it talked about by a great many different people.

If people do not care to hear the discussions in a meeting, they would much better stay out of the Auditorium than to go in for a few minutes, and then out again, thus getting nothing themselves and spoiling the meeting for some one else.

It does seem to me we should show as much reverence in the Auditorium at our Annual Conference as we do in our home houses of worship. I do wish some people would be a little more considerate of others,—take a little more interest themselves and thus help to change the condition which is so very annoying at every Annual Conference. May a hint to the wise be sufficient!

GENERAL INFORMATION FOR THE ST. JOSEPH CONFERENCE.

The meeting will be held in the large, fire-proof Auditorium on Fourth Street, between Faraon and Robidoux Streets. The Auditorium was built by public subscription, for the upbuilding of the citizens. It is situated on the border line between the business and residence sections,—away from the hustle of business and yet within easy access.

St. Joseph has quite a number of the leading railroad systems entering her small but very neat Union Depot. Thus the meeting is easily accessible to all, from the East, West, North or South. You are under no obligation to any one road but can take your choice.

The people of the city are noted for their hospitality, and will care for all who wish to come, at prices in keeping with the accommodations. The lodging committee will be located at the entrance to the Auditorium, and boys will be provided by the City Convention Committee to act as escorts to all who may desire it. These boys will be uniformed, that they may be known. Their service is volunteered and without pay. Lodging may be had at from twenty-five to seventy-five cents per night.

In the basement of the Auditorium warm meals will be served on the cafeteria plan. There will be room to seat about 800 to 1,000 at a time. In the large banquet hall in the south end of the building, a lunch counter will accommodate about 500. The street in front of the building has been condemned to traffic during our meeting, and a large lunch stand will be run there, where provisions such as are usually sold at these places may be had. Meals may be had at restaurants and hotels near by at twenty-five cents and upward.

A check stand will be maintained in the Auditorium for the convenience of those who may wish to take advantage of it.

When landing at the Union Depot, if lodging has not been previously secured, take a Krug Park car going north, and come direct to the Auditorium. Leave the car at Fourth and Francis, and walk two blocks north.

Telegraph and local and long distance telephone service will be rendered on the ground.

The Standing Committee will be located in a room in the western section of the Auditorium.

A Bureau of Information will be located in connection with the Committee of Arrangements headquarters.

Mail may be sent General Delivery and secured by calling at the postoffice eight blocks away or may be addressed in care of Committee of Arrangements, Auditorium, St. Joseph, and the carriers will deliver. No provision has been made to maintain a postoffice on the grounds.

The Committee of Arrangements is composed of Brethren J. S. Kline, Chairman, E. G. Rodabaugh, Secretary, E. E. Shumaker, Treasurer, Jacob Shamberger and W. G. Andes. J. S. Kline.

MARKLE, INDIANA.

On Easter Sunday the members and friends at this place directed their attention wholly to the resurrection of our Lord. The Sunday-school lesson first awakened our minds and hearts to the spirit of love, and a new life in Christ Jesus, for the spiritual blessings to a sin-lost world.

Bro. George L. Studebaker, of North Manchester, Ind., delivered the morning sermon. His subject was, "The Resurrection." He spoke of the Easter, referring also to the Christian and second resurrections, as alluded to by the apostle. Most truly we should exercise a greater degree of watchfulness, in order that we might be participants of the first resurrection of the saints in Christ Jesus.

The attention listened to Brother Studebaker's discourse, our minds went back to a time about twenty years ago, when he was a resident minister of the Word of God in the Markle congregation. A few of the aged fathers and mothers in Christ are still among the number for whom he labored, while quite a few have passed over the river of death. Several younger or middle-aged brethren and sisters, who at that time were from ten to fifteen years of age, and outside the fold, are now members of the Church of the Brethren.

We were impressed with the fact that he still preaches the same doctrine he preached then. We thought of the Scripture which tells us that "the time will come when men will not endure sound doctrine," but then will be a falling away from the faith. Christ said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." It seems that the time has come when men and women will not endure sound doctrine. The Word of God, how ever, will judge us at the last day.

We were made to wonder how many are still preaching the Word in its purity, as it was taught years ago, based upon the teachings of Jesus Christ, as he himself impressed them upon his disciples. We were convinced that the instructions he gave unto to his disciples were intended for us as well as for them. In the upper room, when he ate the last supper with the twelve, he said unto them: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." In the great commission he told his disciples that they should disciple all nations, teaching them to do whatsoever he had commanded them to do. Bro. Studebaker is still the same earnest, loyal minister of the Gospel that he was years ago. May we, who have been blessed by years, follow the good example of these faithful messengers of the Lord, fathers and mothers in Christ, and the blessings will follow us to the end of the earth. Let us take God at his Word, so that we may be ready to meet Christ at his coming.

In the evening the Christian Workers rendered a well-prepared Easter program, which was very interesting, and much spirituality was manifested. The program consisted of Easter songs, recitations, a reading, and two Easter talks, given by Bro. D. B. Garber and the writer, after which Bro. Studebaker preached the evening sermon. His subject was "Obedience and Disobedience."

On the evening of April 29 we held our love feast. A goodly number were present and partook of the emblems of our Lord and Savior, looking forward, with an eye of faith, to the time when we shall meet him in heaven at "the marriage supper of the lamb." Ministering brethren with us were Bro. L. D. Eikenberry, of North Manchester, Ind.; Brethren Aaron Moss and Noah Shideler, of Loon Creek, Ind.; also Bro. D. B. Garber, our home minister.

Bro. Eikenberry preached for us the following Sunday morning on the subject, "Our Spiritual Growth," teaching us that we must be cleansed through the atoning blood of the Lamb, and grow in grace, going on unto perfection.

Truly, these meetings with those of like precious faith, fill us with the fullness of love and union, and strengthen us in the faith of Jesus our Lord. Lillian Earhart.

PREPARING FOR ANNUAL MEETING.

Certainly it is the prayer of every one that the coming Annual Meeting may be a great spiritual feast, and pleasing to God in every way. Now, who is responsible for making it so? Surely God is willing to do his part. I am certain that the Committee of Arrangements are doing their utmost to make the meeting a success. But more than this is necessary. Brother, sister, it depends upon each of us, as individual members of our Brotherhood. We must give ourselves to prayer and consecration, and that from now on up to the Conference, and right through it, without ceasing. Now this is for all whether you can attend or not. Those who remain at home can be of just as powerful an influence at the throne of grace as those who attend. Remember it was the sick woman, while lying upon her bed, who so laid hold on God by prayer that a wonderful revival came to her old home town. May every one, then, at his home, continue in prayer.

Again it seems to me that it would be well if all our ministers, in their churches, would call the attention of their people to this important subject, that of us together, as one body, might labor for the peace and prosperity of Zion. It is a blessed privilege that even in our absence we may help the work of God. Who will do it?

Of course, much depends upon those who shall attend, whether the meeting be a blessing or no. Improper conduct on the way or at the meeting, idle talking or harsh words, or anything unbecoming will destroy spirituality and the real purpose of the meeting. Let all there be prayer, humility, loving words, and a meek and quiet disposition. Such conduct will aid God in his work of grace. Especially should all who may speak, whether on the program or impromptu, remember, in the Annual Conference, give themselves to prayer and consecration, so that the Spirit may frame every thought and sentence. So may all who hear pray for the speakers as well as for themselves, that there be no one vessel to hinder the meeting. Then let us be careful and thoughtful! Let us begin to pray at once, and we will be prepared for a glorious meeting. God grant it! Amen!

J. M. Blough.

Address, while on furlough, Johnstown, Pa.

Our lives are little, and are made of little things; but little things done through a great motive are great. The many little sacrifices we can make, if they are made for Christ and in the spirit of Christ, he takes and makes them a part of his cross, and the little triumphs we win for him he makes a part of his crown.

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

TREVILLANS, VA.—April 19, 1911, the sisters of Trevillans congregation met in the Sisters' Aid Society. Sister Emma Glick, president; Sister Mollie Myers, treasurer; the writer, secretary. We had a full meet now at one of the homes of the members. Our object is to make prayer coverings, quilts and any other useful articles. Our numbers are few at this place. We trust that, by earnest effort and the help of the Lord, we may do much for the good cause.—Merle Shumaker, Secretary Trevillans, Va., April 29.

LOWER CUMBERLAND, PA.—The Mechanicsburg Aid Society met for the second time during the past year, with Sister Sadie Arbegast as president. Articles made and sold: Eight wall dusters, twenty-seven bonnets, fifteen aprons and two quilts. Amount received from same amounted to $18.41; collections for the year, $16.22; money in the hands of the treasurer, $50.00; making a total of $116.73; money spent for goods and donated, $76.69; leaving a balance of $40.04. We donated a box of clothing to the Chicago Mission. We reorganized for another year April 8, with the following officers: Sister Hettie Hoffer, president; Sister Effie Stambaugh, vice-president; Sister Lizzie Derrick, secretary; Sister Mary Long, assistant secretary; Sadie Mohler, treasurer.—Lizzie Derrick, Secretary, Mechanicsburg, Pa., April 27.

NEW HAVEN, MICH.—Our Sisters' Aid Society, from Jan. 1, 1910, to Jan. 1, 1911, has been very successful. We met the second Thursday of every month, with an average attendance of ten. We have accomplished much in making children's clothing, quilts and comforters. During the past year we sent two boxes of clothing, consisting of four comforters and seventy-three garments, to Hastings Street church, Chicago. We reorganized Jan. 12 for one year, with Sisters Lizzie Chambers, president; Sister Anna Platt, vice-president; Sister Ellen Albaugh, secretary-treasurer. Thus far this year we have held six meetings, made 118 garments, quilted one quilt and made one comforter. We have also donated two boxes, consisting of 127 garments, one pair of shoes and one comforter to the mission at Grand Rapids, Mich.—Ellen Albaugh, Secretary, Carson City, Mich., April 23.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country.

ARKANSAS.

Austin.—Our church met in council March 18. Our elder presided. We now number twenty members. We feel grateful to our Heavenly Father for the little band of earnest workers that this place. Our love feast will be on the 22d and our special council on the 19th. Our elder, Bro. Lilly, gave us a good sermon on Sunday. His subject was "Peace."—Alice Woodiel, Austin, Ark., May 10.

CALIFORNIA.

South Los Angeles.—The sisters of this church have their mothers' meeting the last Friday of each month. The mothers of this city seem very much interested, and frequently express their appreciation of the benefit derived thereby. At our church meeting after the regular business of the Aid Society Work, give us a valuable and interesting address on "The White Slave Traffic." A collection of $5.30 was taken and given to Bro. Pfingerstal, to be used the work. Sister J. Z. Gilbert, of East Los Angeles, gave a very valuable address at our April meeting. Her subject "The Mothers and Children Should Read."—Martha M. Brubaker, 2140 West Thirty-first St., Los Angeles, Cal., May 6.

COLORADO.

Lowland church met in council April 23. Our elder, Bro. R. E. Keller, presided. Two letters were granted. We decided to hold our love feast May 20, at 6 P. M. Since my last report five have been baptized. Others are still lingering near. We expect to commence building our new churchhouse soon.—Nellyre Nice, Wayne, Colo., May 8.

Sterling.—Last year's report we have organized a Christian Workers' Meeting, which has been well attended each time. Our Sunday-school has also made a decided improvement, and we feel greatly encouraged. One dear soul has been buried with Christ in baptism. Our love feast was held last evening, and was attended by an attentive and interested audience.—Stella G. Turner, Iliff, Colo., May 13.

IDAHO.

Boise Valley church passed another milestone in her history last Saturday when she, with thirteen delegates and a number of visitors, met in semi-annual council and Convention for Southern Idaho. The attendance was decidedly the best, so far, that the writer has personally attended, and while quite a little time was used to attend to some business, no time was lost in the topics read. The time for meeting was changed to annual, the next meetings to be held in the Payette church. In case we are officially granted the request of the District of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, to divide it into three State Districts, it was decided, by the elders present, to hold the Idaho District Meeting at Boise and Western Montana here Aug. 3. Our love feast was held in the evening, and a decided hit was made in one of the strong churches in the East as we looked over the 116 members present during the Lord's Supper and also at this time. Two young sisters were buried with Christ in baptism on Easter Sunday.—Orpha Hetle, Nampa, Idaho, May 3.

ILLINOIS

Bethel.—April 18 Bro. Geo. Hilton gave us a splendid address on "The Outlook in China." This was one of the best missionary talks ever given in the church. Several Chinese brethren from Chicago accompanied Bro. Hilton. They sang hymns in English and in their own tongue. One brother gave a short talk on "Our Responsibility to the Heathen." The collection was taken for China. Sunday, May 7, at 6:30 P. M., we held our love feast. Bro. J. H. Moore, of Lanark, Ill., was with us and assisted our elder, Brethren I. C. Snavely and H. M. Barkdoll. During our morning service Bro. Moore gave a splendid missionary sermon, showing the great need of heart-cleansing for the partaking of the Lord's supper and communion. Our present pastor, Bro. I. C. Snavely, will remain in his another year.—Estella Eyh, R. D. 3, Naperville, Ill., May 9.

Martin Creek church met in council May 9, with Bro. C. A. Gruber presiding. One letter of membership was granted. Brethren S. S. and J. J. Swigart, Sister Amelia Leinard, are the Christian Workers' Committee. Brethren C. A. Gruber, J. J. Scrogum and S. S. Mellinger are the temperance committee. We had quite an amount of business to dispose of, but we had a very good meeting.—J. J. Scrogum, Hartford, Ill., May 10.

Pleasant Hill.—April 29 we held our love feast. Bro. J. M. Blough officiated. On Sunday morning Bro. Blough preached an inspiring sermon. On Sunday and Monday night he lectured on India. Tuesday, May 2, our church met in council. The Virden Committee gave a very favorable report and submitted a plane for further consideration in the work, which were accepted by the church. Bro. G. Otis Stutsman was elected to the second term as Sunday-school superintendent. Bro. Stutsman and family have now located in Mount Vernon, Ill., where they have charge of the mission. Three letters of membership were received. Our elder is granted Sunday evening, May 7, Bro. Blough was again with us and gave a lecture on "The Needs and Opportunities of India." An offering of $40.29 was given for the India mission work.—Vinna C. Harshbarger, Girard, Ill., May 9.

INDIANA.

Bethel.—We met in council at our house in town May 6, at 2 P. M. A sermon by Bro. Enoch Eby, of Ind., owing to the funeral of Bro. Isaac Smith being held at the Dunkard house. Our elder, Bro. Manly Deeter, presided. One letter of membership was received. Bro. W. S. Long is elected representative us at Annual Meeting, with Sister Ida Deeter, alternate.—Martha Long, R. 9, Milford, Ind., May 8.

Fountain church met in council April 26. Our elder, Bro. Peter Hoover, of Mexico, Ind., presided. We had a pleasant reunion with our dear elder on the night of the 26th. He gave us some splendid sermons, and we enjoyed his presence. He gave us some light on the subject we never thought of before, and we thank him greatly for it. We decided to have our love feast June 26, at 7:30 P. M. As we are few in number, here at this place, we heartily invite all our dear brethren and sisters, especially ministers, to come. Let us help by word and prayer; also give us your presence, if possible.—Manda Eshelman, Nebraska, Ind., May 8.

Killbuck church held her love feast May 6. Although it was a very busy time, the attendance was good. The spiritual feast was enjoyed by all. Bro. L. T. Holsinger officiated. Brethren Wm. Young, J. E. Shoemaker and J. D. Hoover present. Bro. Holsinger came to us April 29 and preached for us, closing on May 7 with one more applicant for baptism and others near the kingdom.—Mrs. Margaret R. D. 12, Muncie, Ind., May 9.

Landessville.—We held our love feast on Sunday, May 7. The day was delightful and we had a glorious meeting. Over one hundred members surrounded the Lord's table. We had a goodly crowd of spectators, all showing us the very best of order. Five ministering brethren besides our pastor, Bro. Norris, were with us. Bro. Benj. Garber officiated, and we feel that the Lord's spirit led him in all he did. We are greatly pleased with the sermon he gave us on Sunday morning. Bro. J. A. Miller preached for us in the afternoon, which was very good also. We thank God for the many blessings he bestows upon us.—Adella Endicley, Landess, Ind., May 8.

Lower Deer Creek.—Our church met in council May 6. Our elder, Bro. Wm. Hershberger, presided. One letter of membership was granted, and a brother was restored to church fellowship. Bro. J. G. Stineabaugh was chosen as our delegate to Annual Meeting; Bro. Ira Spitler, alternate. It was decided to hold our Preachers' Meeting, Oct. 19, and to conduct a series of meetings for us in October.—Sadie Hoff, R. D. 7, Converse, Ind., May 8.

Ridge Schoolhouse.—April 30 Bro. Jacob Heistand, of near Walkerton, Ind., preached for us immediately after Sunday-school. The attendance was good. He will be with us again May 28.—Hattie Carbaugh, Bremen, Ind., May 3.

Springfield.—Our church met in council on Saturday. Our elder, I. L. Berkey, met with us. Our love feast will be June 17, at 6 P. M. We have elected Bro. Jesse Calvert as Annual Meeting. We received two letters of membership,—Bro. Joseph Miller, a minister, and second wife, and his wife. Eld. Berkey will be with us over next Sunday.—Etta Elson, Wawaka, Ind., May 8.

IOWA.

Cedar Rapids.—Our love feast was held May 7. A number of visitors enjoyed the meeting with us. Among the visitors were Bro. W. H. Eisenbise, of Morrill, Ill., Bro. John Zuck, of Clarence, Iowa, Bro. Long, of Garrison, Iowa, and Brethren Wm. and Jacob Hershberger. Bro. W. H. Eisenbise preached in the morning. In the afternoon we held our Sunday-school mission meeting. Bro. Wm. Hershberger Miller was elected to the ministry, and Brethren Geo. York and Brethren Miller were elected deacons. Bro. Miller was duly installed, but one of the deacons being absent, his installation was deferred until later.—Grace Trimble, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, May 13.

Osceola.—Our little band of faithful workers surrounded the Lord's table May 6. We visiting brethren assisted us in the meeting. The meeting was conducted by our home ministers, Bro. Wm. Hershberger and his wife spring, which is a help to our Sunday-school, as our membership was almost entirely composed of children. Bro. Hershberger has moved into the town, who is willing to make house-to-house visits. We have five members living in Clarinda, a town of seven miles in the country.—Emma Folger, Osceola, Iowa, May 13.

South English.—Our love feast was held April 30. We met us and gave us three sermons prior to our love feast, May 6. Bro. Henry Brower presided. About sixty-five members surrounded the Lord's table. Bro. Frank Crumpacker, of Ind., advanced to the second degree of the ministry.—Bertha Shelly, R. D. 2, Ollie, Iowa, May 9.

KANSAS.

Chanute.—At their regular quarterly meeting, Jan. 1, the members of this church decided to hold our love feast March 26, but today we decided to postpone it until June 10, at 7 P. M. We have a ministerial meeting the 9th, and invite us. We will try to have our local Sunday-school meeting just following, and have dinner on the ground. We will have a special council, called by Eld. J. S. Clark April 2. Bro. A. G. Leslie was reinstated into the second degree of the ministry. Our elder, Bro. Jesse Calvert, is expected to be with us soon. Our Sunday-school is still growing slowly but surely. By the help of God we hope to make it a success.—Minnie Rich, Southeastern Kansas—J. H. Holloway, Chanute, Kans., May 8.

Kansas Center.—Our church met in council May 6. Bro. M. M. Keltner, of Ind., presided. Bro. D. L. Miller, of Ind., was chosen as our delegate to Annual Meeting. Last Sunday we had baptism. Bro. Keltner has been with us, and is living to put on Christ in baptism. Our number is small, but we feel that the Master is with us.—Lucy Boone, R. D. 6, Box 45, Hutchinson, Kans.

Navarre.—April 16 we met at this place in a Sunday-school Meeting. Bro. J. H. Moore, of Lanark, Ill., Southern Kansas Sunday-school Secretary, was present. He gave us some very good thoughts on the Sunday-school work, which we have endeavored to continued all day. In the morning he talked on the Sunday-school session, and in the afternoon on the duties of officers. He served and enjoyed very much. The afternoon was spent in discussing various problems of Sunday-school work, which was very helpful to us. We have decided to hold our love feast the week until Friday evening. Bro. McClure certainly put some of the Gospel into his sermons. We enjoyed his visit and that was sown will bring forth fruit.—J. C. Forney, Navarre, Kans., May 8.

Peabody.—We held our council May 5. Eld. J. J. Yoder presided. Brethren Wm. Hoover and Jacob Hoover held a short Meeting; Bro. W. H. Depler, alternate. Our love feast was held May 6. Brethren present were Brethren D. Royer and J. Thomas. Thirty-three members surrounded the Lord's table. Bro. J. J. Yoder preached on Sunday evening, which was much enjoyed.—Mrs. Ida Hoover, Peabody, Kans., May 10.

Pleasant View.—We held our love feast April 29. While our number was not so large, still a loving unity of the brethren was present. Bro. Jacob Hoover officiated as our elder. May 7 Bro. John, of McPherson, Kans., gave us two splendid sermons, preaching for us at 10 A. M. and Pleasant Grove. He brought two small girls along with him, and succeeded in finding trial homes for both. The elder girl came to live with Bro. Jacob. He is looking for a home for here. They were glad to meet again.—Wilmer Keedy, Dunlap, Kans., May 8.

Quinter.—April 29 we met in special council, with Bro. Geo. Eby presiding. Bro. Jacob Hoover was present. Our four wens granted. The church decided to represent at the Annual Meeting. Bro. Jacob Hoover was delegated, with Bro. S. S. Mohler, and Bro. T. P. Oxley. The services at Quinter are being held at this place by our elder, Bro. D. A. Crist, closed on Friday evening. The church is growing because nineteen dear souls were made willing to come out on the Lord's side. We feel to love Bro. Crist for his faithfulness. May 6. Bro. Berkebile, from India gave us a most interesting and helpful talk on India. He has been there in very good lectures on conditions in India.—Joseph L. Bowman, Quinter, Kans., May 8.

Salem.—Our love feast, held here May 6, was not so well attended because of the inclemency of the weather, but a good and some sickness in the neighborhood. But we had a very good meeting. Bro. A. J. Miller presided. On Sunday morning Bro. L. A. Bahnsen was called to the ministry. Bro. Miller is to a well-filled house.—Josephine McGonigle, Nickerson, Kans., May 8.

Scott Valley.—We held our love feast May 6. Brethren H. P. Moherman, D. Royer and J. Thomas, of Bro. Mo., Cune officiated. Thirty-five members surrounded the Lord's table. Bro. Royer preached for us at the 11 o'clock morning meeting. Bro. P. G. Edwards, our District Sunday-school Secretary, was present. We learned many things which will help us in our Sunday-school work.—Mrs. Lucinda Wilcox, R. R. Yoder, of Sabetha, Kans., to hold a series of meetings for us, to begin the second Sunday in June.—Scott Valley, Kans., May 10.

White Rock.—Our church met in council May 6, with our elder, Bro. S. S. Myers, presiding. Bro. S. L. Myers was chosen as delegate to Annual Meeting. We expect to have our series of meetings in September. Our love feast will be held Nov. 3. We decided to have a council May 28, for the purpose of electing deacons and a minister. Six letters have been granted since our last council meeting, and three were received. Bro. Earl Myers, who recently returned from Bethany Bible School, gave us an interesting talk May 7 on his work there. Sister Ida Myers, of this place, writer was chosen as church correspondent to the Gospel Messenger.—Mrs. Edna Myers, White Rock, Kans., May 8.

Wichita church met in council May 12, with a good attendance. Bro. Jacob Funk is our delegate to Annual Meeting; Eld. S. M. Brown, alternate. We decided to hold our first love feast at our new mission church, on the West Side, May 27. It is a very neat and well-equipped building. The basement is divided into Sunday-school rooms. April 9 Bro. W. H. Leaman, of Monmouth, Kans., preached a splendid dedicatory sermon, and then continued a two weeks' meeting of good, interesting sermons. The outlook is good.—Susie Jacques, 1109 Wabash Ave., Wichita, Kans., May 13.

MARYLAND.

Deaton.—Our church met in council April 28. Our elder, Bro. G. S. Ralrigh, presided. Much business came before the meeting and was disposed of. Eleven letters of membership were granted. Brethren Wm. Fike, Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting were elected. Bro. Solomon Longanacker is Sunday-school superintendent. Eld. Ralph Thawley, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. We held our love feast on Saturday night, which was largely attended. Visiting ministers present were: Brethren S. K. Bile, L. A. Plate, Eld. J. H. Cline, William Lyon, and C. H. Brumbaugh officiated. On Friday evening, prior to the communion, two were received by baptism.—Edna P. Fentz, Deaton, Md., May 8.

Fairview (Maryland)—April 30 we were made to rejoice when two were received by baptism. Bro. Wm. Hess hope this may cause many others to accept Christ.—Lyla Harvey, Fairview, W. Va., May 6.

Hagerstown.—Sunday, April 30, the Hagerstown church enjoyed an interesting experience. Eld. Peter Nead, 84 years, 10:45, by Bro. W. D. Keller, Washington, D. C., formerly pastor of this church, gave us a very interesting discourse on the subject of "Christian Citizenship." In the afternoon, at 2 P. M., a Sunday-school Meeting was held, at which time topics relative to Sunday-school work were discussed. The evening service was in charge of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Two very interesting addresses were considered. The attendance at each session was large and the services throughout were characterized by interested attendance. Bro. Keller and wife remained with us a few days, visiting the sick and aged. May 1 Bro. Keller preached for us Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. We are always glad to have Bro. Keller with us, and hope to have him with us often. We expect to hold our children's day service June 11. Bro. J. C. Myers, Daleville, Va., who has been called to the pastorate of the Hagerstown church, will take charge of the work the first part of July.—Gamona L. Krider, 8 S. Mulberry St., Hagerstown, Md., May 9.

Locust Grove.—We have just closed a very interesting series of meetings, conducted by Bro. P. D. Sanger, of Greensboro, Pa., continuing two weeks. We had a well-filled house every night, and the interest was good. Bro. Sanger preached practical and soul-stirring. We have had no accessions, but were all strengthened spiritually.—Maggie E. Ecker, Mt. Airy, Md., May 8.

Longmeadow.—May 7 Bro. A. R. Barnhart lectured to an appreciative audience on "The Call to the Ministry." He takes these inspire a greater desire to read the Bible, and to be true in every relation of life. Our love feast will be 6:30 was taken for the Old Folks' Home.—K. Mae Rowland, Longmeadow, Md., May 9.

Pipe Creek.—Our love feast was held May 6. It was one of the best we have had. A number of ministers were present. Bro. A. P. Snader officiated. Bro. W. R. Yount, of Blue Ridge College, Union Bridge, Md., gave us a splendid address on Sunday evening. We had ideal weather on both days. We feel much encouraged to press on in the work of the Lord.—Elisa I. Englar, New Windsor, Md., May 13.

MICHIGAN.

Little Traverse church met in council April 14. Our elder, Bro. Geo. E. Deardorff, was with us and gave us words of encouragement. Though we are very few in number, yet we trust that with the help of the Lord we will labor on board and upward. We are helping to carry on a union Sunday-school, which is conducted every Sunday in the school house, one and one-half miles from the writer's home. Bro. L. B. Stutsman is Secretary of this work. Bro. Stutsman has moved into our midst from Tennessee.—Mrs. Isaiah Stutsman, R. D. 1, Bellaire, Mich., May 10.

Muskegon.—We have returned to our place at Muskegon, and yesterday we reorganized our Sunday-school with twenty-seven present. Sister Lucinda Wilcox is our Sunday-school, but we need some teachers. We would be glad to hear from any brethren or sisters who feel like they can help in this work.—Herbert Morehouse, R. D. 7, Muskegon, Mich., May 8.

Saginaw.—Our little band of workers enjoyed a love feast April 29. Brethren Deardorff and J. E. Ulery were present. Eld. Ulery officiated. He was called here to attend our Township Sunday-school convention. A number took part in the services for the first time, which they enjoyed very much.—Bertha Albaugh, R. D. 1, Banister, Mich., May 10.

MISSOURI.

Kidder.—May 6 Bro. M. E. Stair, of Polo, Mo., and Bro. Walter Mason, of Stet, Mo., came to our place. Bro. Mason preached for us at 10:30 A. M. Bro. Stair preached at Polo, Mo., was with us on Sunday, and assisted in organizing our Sunday-school. Bro. Stair is Sunday-school superintendent. Bro. Jacob Henricks is our delegate to Annual Meeting.—Mrs. Hannah Hoover, Kidder, Mo., May 8.

Rockingham church met in council May 6. Two letters were received and granted. Bro. Jacob E. Bowman was chosen delegate to Annual Meeting, with Bro. Jacob Hogan as alternate. Our love feast will be May 20. We extend a call to A. Hutchison to be with us.—Vera Rodabaugh, Stet, Mo., May 10.

NEBRASKA.

Alvo church met in special council April 29. All business passed off satisfactorily. On account of failing health, Eld. J. L. Switzer, of Lincoln, Nebr., has laid down his ministerial work for the present. Eld. D. G. Couser was elected Sunday-school secretary for the present. Four letters of membership were granted.—Edyth Snavely Kitzel, Elmwood, Nebr., May 8.

Arcadia.—April 11 Bro. I. B. Wagoner, our District Sunday-school Secretary, met with us and gave us an interesting address on Sunday-school work. We have a temperance committee organized as follows: Sister Eva Pike, president; Bro. J. H. Sommers, secretary, and Sister Ella Hall, treasurer. Lookout member. May 21 our Sunday-school scholars will render a temperance program, instead of the regular Sunday-school lesson.—J. J. Tawzer, Arcadia, Nebr., May 10.

OKLAHOMA.

Minot.—Four were recently received by baptism. Two sisters who had gone to the hospital for operations, are rapidly making recovery, and we hope will soon be back to their activity again. Four members have gone out of town, since our last report, to live at other places, and one has passed on at present, is thirty. Some brethren passed through this place, but did not know of services being held here. Our meetings are conducted in the courthouse each Sunday morning and evening.—D. W. Shock, Box 526, Minot, N. Dak., May 8.

Pleasant Valley church met in council May 6, with our elder presiding. One letter of membership was received. Brethren Thomas Allan and A. H. Blocher were chosen as delegates to Annual Meeting, with Brethren Jacob Hoover and Virgil Vancil, alternates. Our love feast is to be July 1. Our Sunday-school is now preparing very nicely. Bro. Warren Slabaugh, of Wenatchee, Wash., was with us April 16 and preached at the Hill House in the morning and that evening at York.—Anna Vasey, Cor. Sec., York, Pa.

Surrey.—Bro. D. S. Wolf preached our semiannual missionary sermon on Sunday morning, after which a missionary collection of $20.64 was taken, to be sent to Annual Meeting. The church unanimously decided to contribute it to the China fund. The half hour before the Sunday evening sermon is devoted to Scripture reading, with short comments on the same. Our Wednesday evening Bible class continues with interest.—Manerva Lambert, Surrey, N. Dak., May 10.

OHIO.

Akron.—May 7 the members of this church were strengthened by the addition of four persons by baptism. Two of them are grandchildren of one of our aged members. We are praying for others who seem almost persuaded.—Jennie M. Shriver, 807 Coburn St., Akron, Ohio.

Black River church met in council May 6. Our elder, Bro. A. B. Workman, presided. Three letters were granted. Bro. J. M. Price was elected delegate to Annual Meeting, with Bro. John Yoder as alternate. Bro. James Murray was chosen as leader for the coming year. Our church contributed $25 to the Akron Mission. We decided to have a series of meetings with Bro. Charles Noll, beginning May 20.

Green Spring.—We met in council today, with our elder, Bro. H. L. Dickey, presiding. Communion services were held before the meeting. Bro. L. H. Dickey was chosen as our elder for another year. One letter was granted. Bro. W. W. Bock, Sisters Ethel Dukes and Mary Miller were chosen as a Christian Workers' Meeting committee. We elected a Temperance Committee, consisting of Brethren Wm. Teeters, Ed. Miller and G. W. Bock. They are to cooperate with the general Temperance Committee. Our love feast occurs May 27. We have been favored with several sermons by Ed. George of Mount of Northern Indiana. Brethren are greatly appreciated. He was with us at our council meeting, and also expected to be with us in communion services soon. Our love feast will be held May 27, at 10:30 A. M., at the Sugar Grove house.—Ethel Dukes, Green Spring, Ohio, May 8.

Louisville.—This church held a members' meeting May 4. Bro. A. S. Workman, who had been called here from his home in North Manchester, Ind., to anoint an aged sister, presided over the meeting. The Lord's work in this place is greatly regarded, on account of having no resident minister or elder to take charge of the work. However, we have had some good preaching every four weeks at the Ridge meetinghouse. The appointments are filled by Brethren Wm. Hoffman and Aaron I. Heestand, both of Smithville, Ohio. For this we feel very thankful. There also appointments to be filled regularly with Bro. D. Martin as superintendent; Bro. John Pryor, secretary.—Jennie Roseborough, R. D. 1, Box 17, Perryville, Ohio, May 10.

Marble Furnace.—Bro. B. F. Honeyman came to us April 15 and held a series of meetings, preaching the word in earnest with power. Owing to measles being in the neighborhood some were kept from attending, but we had a good attendance and the best of attention. The church has been much strengthened. Bro. Honeyman left many warm admirers. We expect a glorious harvest from the good seed sown. The song services were conducted by Bro. A. A. Couser, who also assisted in the meeting.—Quinter Rumsey, R. D. 5, Peebles, Ohio, May 8.

Owl Creek church met in council May 6. Our elder, Bro. A. I. Heestand, was with us, but his term of office having expired on that date, Bro. S. B. Strausbaugh was elected to that position. On Sunday two converts united with the church by baptism. Our congregation is to be favored with a Sunday-school and preaching service at a schoolhouse in the neighborhood, situated from congregation. Much interest is manifested in the work.—Anna M. Hively, Frederickstown, Ohio, May 9.

Sidney.—We certainly have great reasons to praise the Lord for the abundant blessings he is bestowing upon us. April 23 we had the pleasure of having the Sunday-school scholars buried with Christ in baptism. Our Sunday-school is well attended and the interest is good. Our membership present May 7 was 103; collection, $3.40. We have received love offerings since our last report. The brethren' meeting each Wednesday evening. We have been studying Heb. 10: 24, dividing it into three topics, viz., the pastor, by giving splendid instructions to old and young, thus unifying the members in Christ Jesus.—Mrs. J. M. Breneman, Sidney, Ohio, May 8.

OKLAHOMA

Big Creek.—We held our love feast May 6. Sixty-five members communed. Visiting ministers present were Brethren N. S. Gripe and D. E. Cripe. The latter officiated. He also preached for us on Sunday morning in a large room. Bro. A. L. Edgecomb was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. Bro. A. J. Detrick was chosen as delegate to Annual Meeting. A collection of $3.00 was taken, to be sent to Annual Meeting.—Mrs. Mollie Fillmore, Cushing, Okla., May 10.

Elk City.—Few congregations enjoy a growth more rapid than does the Elk City church. Two years ago this was a mission point and the writer was maintained by the Board. By immigration and additions by baptism it now has a membership as one of the strongest in the District. We have a commodious churchhouse, with a number of class rooms and a baptistery. We have a city mission worker employed and she is doing a good work. Our number in Sunday-school seldom falls below the one hundred mark. The Christian Workers are becoming a prominent feature. We decided to use a portion of this fund to donate to foreign missions we are interested. We now have five ministers located here, and at a special council meeting, last Saturday, we set apart, for purpose of laying out work, so that none of the ministers need to be idle. Each minister agreed to do his part. We have had three ministerial appointments, and now we decided on four more. Let work ever be our motto, and the Lord will surely bless us.—Ida M. Yoder, Elk City, Okla., May 8.

Thomas.—The work on the addition of our churchhouse is progressing nicely. We have decided to hold our love feast June 16.—Elsie K. Sanger, Thomas, Okla., May 10.

Tulsa.—Our church met in council May 6. Two letters were granted. We have no spring love feast, but have decided to hold a basket meet, June 1. The two ministers met in the second degree of the ministry. Our elder, Bro. William P. Bosserman, presided.—W. H. Milham, R. D. 2, Speermoore, Okla., May 7.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Bladensburg.—Our love feast will be held May 27, at 6 P. M. This will be preceded by services each evening, beginning May 23. Bro. J. A. Myers preached two very acceptable sermons on Sunday.—H. S. Replogle, R. D. 1, Bedford, Pa., May 12.

Greensburg Mission met in council May 1 for organization. Elders D. H. Walker and Wm. M. Howe were with us and conducted the organization. The name adopted by the congregation is, "Greensburg Church of the Brethren." Eld. Wm. M. Howe, of Johnstown, Pa., was elected elder in charge. Brethren Homer P. Galentine and Walter Moore were elected deacons, who, with Sister Galentine, were duly installed. Bro. Walter Moore was elected secretary; Bro. William M. Pletcher, treasurer; Brethren Homer Galentine, William M. Pletcher, James Osterwise, C. B. Stoner and Walter Moore, trustees. We are grateful for the privilege granted us by the District Board of the Western District of Pennsylvania, to solicit the District for funds to build a new church. We are now considering place for building. Hope that the solicitors may get much encouragement from the entire District, that the necessary funds may soon be raised, to begin work on this much-needed house. Our present chapel is too small to do efficient work. The enrollment of the Sunday-school is eighty-seven. This number crowds the house, making it very difficult to teach the different classes. The field here is a good one for the Church of the Brethren. We are hoping to get a tent much needed in this city.—Address 136 Washington Street, Greensburg, Pa., May 8.

Hollidaysburg.—At our recent council meeting our Mission, by the sanction of the District Mission Board, has purchased a lot for the purpose of building a church. The price being $650. Our small number of about thirty members, including the children, are not in circumstances to contribute much to this undertaking; yet we have fair prospects of meeting this debt within a year. This, in part, is made possible by aid received from members at a distance and from some members of our congregation, who express their kindly feeling toward us in this way. We look to the future, not far distant, our fond expectations of having a church building may be realized. The amount received to date the amount,—almost $500,—which was given us for this purpose at our District Meeting, and the collection taken on Saturday the Lord will put it into the hearts of his people further to support this undertaking. Our regular services at present are held in a hall on the second floor of an apartment building. We expect Bro. Jesse Hall, of Roaring Spring, to conduct a protracted meeting for us, beginning May 21. Our love feast will be held June 11.—Mrs. Rosa Rice, Hollidaysburg, Pa., May 8.

Philadelphia (Bethany Mission, 3255 Kensington Avenue).—May 4 the membership of the Bethany Mission Sunday-school (three being mothers) were received into the fold of Christ by baptism. Bro. F. B. Brown, pastor, also administered the mission at District Meeting.—Mrs. Sallie Schnell, 1906 North Park Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., May 13.

Spring Creek.—Our love feast was held May 9 and 10. Following the love feast meeting, on May 11, at the water's edge outside of the churchhouse, under the open canopy of heaven. This church is surrounded by lovely shade trees, and it is a joy to hear the gospel preached in a grove. At 2 P. M. the evening services began. Eld. S. R. Zug, of Elizabethtown, Pa., preached. He is pastor of the Mount Joy church, and we felt glad for his presence. He is a standard-bearer and will be held in high esteem.—Address Eld. J. M. Zug, R. D. 3, S. C. Miller, of Chicago, Ill., Eld. J. H. Witmer, Eld. E. M. Wenger, Bro. Jacob Hoover, Bro. Samuel Hoover, Bro. Thomas Patrick, of Hanoverdale, Pa., and Bro. John C. Zug, who is a member of the Mount Joy church, were also with us and attended. Some of our members have passed to the great beyond since our last love feast. Some communed for the first time. Our congregation is growing in the Master's work. He does us again. He was at Bethany Bible School and enjoyed the work there. He is a man of God, consecrated to the work, and was baptized by Eld. J. H. Longenecker. May 7 services were held at Bethany Mission by Eld. S. C. Miller, of Chicago, Ill., who delivered a sermon. After services four were baptized by Eld. Samuel Wenger. He also administered the ordinance at District Meeting at Manheim, Pa. Our dear elder, Bro. J. H. Longenecker, is still in Philadelphia, Pa., and will be with us next council meeting will convene May 27 at the Canowago house. Several of our members will attend the Annual Meeting at Eld. Bro. Wenger's, Elizabethtown, Pa., commencing May 16.—Mrs. Sallie Schnell, 1906 North Park Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., May 13.

West Greentree.—We held our love feast May 8 and 9, at Greentree. The feast was well attended and a large number of members communed. The following ministers were in attendance of ministers from other congregations were present. Eld. S. Knox Harbaugh, of Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., Pa., officiated at the communion services. April 30 four persons were added to our membership by baptism.—S. B. McDannel, Elizabethtown, Pa., May 10.

TENNESSEE.

French Broad.—My last report was love feast. Eld. A. E. Nead, of Limestone, Tenn., officiated, assisted by Bro. I. F. Whitson, of Fountain City, Tenn. The services were very impressive. Only a spiritual feast. We had a number of visiting brethren and sisters. May 7, at 11 A. M., Bro. I. F. Whitson addressed the Sunday-school, and in the evening Eld. E. Nead delivered one of his very best sermons from the theme, "Christ Our Example." Text: 1 Peter 2: 21. Subject for next attention.—Katie McCrary, R. D. 1, White Pine, Tenn., May 10.

Zoar.—Our church met in council May 6, with Eld. Bro. C. H. Diehl. His text was Rev. 29: 6. His discourse was very instructive, and the audience was very attentive and seemingly well pleased. Our council was pleasant. Our congregation seems to be increasing from time to time, and we hope to see a spiritual growth in the near future. The subject of the day was one that should impress all people, viz: Where shall I spend Eternity?—Ida Ellen Hartsell, Jonesboro, Tenn., May 10.

Mossy Creek church met in council May 6, with Eld. S. J. Bowman presiding. Elders C. H. Diehl and J. C. Bashor were with us and conducted the services of the communion season. Three letters of membership were granted. An election for ministers was held and resulted in the election of brethren Jesse Bowman and Wm. Clark. Bro. Clark was installed, but Bro. White's installation will be later, as he is now in charge of another field. Eld. J. C. Bashor filled Saturday night from the subject, "Where Shall I Spend Eternity?" On Sunday Eld. C. H. Diehl preached in an effective audience. We now have three churches in this congregation. We have a membership of about two hundred and fifty. We also have preaching once a month at two mission points.—Angie Clark, R. D. 2, Johnson City, Tenn., May 11.

Monday.—Monday.—We met in council May 6. Our elder, Bro. F. M. Correll, presided. Business was properly attended to. Our new church is nearing completion. Sunday-school. A good collection was reported. Since spring has opened we have a good attendance. Extend a hearty welcome to those of like precious faith who wish to visit us.—W. H. Wine, D. 1, Box 12, Harriman, Tenn., May 11.

VIRGINIA.

Nokesville church met in council May 6. Eld. M. G. Early presiding. Elders I. M. Neff and A. Conner were with us. Much business was attended to. Seven letters of membership were received and two were granted. Bro. J. F. Graybill was elected to the eldership and Bro. Jesse Rhamy was elected to the ministry. A continuation of this council was held May 13. Bro. J. F. Graybill was appointed superintendent of Christian Workers' Meeting at Hebron Seminary, and Bro. A. H. Flory was elected to the same office at the Valley church. As Bro. J. F. Graybill will soon leave us, he resigned his office as assistant superintendent of Sunday-school at Hebron Seminary. Bro. O. L. Miller was elected in his place. Brethren W. F. Hale and D. F. Kerlin were elected delegates to Annual Meeting.—Barbara E. Miller, Nokesville, Va., May 12.

Valley.—We met in council May 6. Eld. Ananias Harman presided. One was restored to fellowship and one letter was granted. Sister Lizzie Spangler was elected Sunday S. The following Sunday Brethren A. J. Weddle and A. N. Hylton preached the funeral of Bro. Eli Bultphin. A large and attentive audience was present.—Lizzie Spangler, R. D. 2, Box 84, Floyd, Va., May 15.

WASHINGTON.

Olympia.—May 6 we held our spring love feast. One hundred surrounded the Lord's tables. A number of visiting brethren from the neighboring churches were present. Eld. W. Pitts, of Seattle, officiated. The last council meeting, at 10:30, we convened in a very interesting Sunday-school Convention of the Centralia, Seattle, Tacoma and Olympia churches. At 2:30 P. M. we had a Christian Workers' Convention. Topics assigned were ably discussed. This was the fourth convention we have had among these four churches. The interest and attendance are growing. At 8 P. M. Bro. Pitts delivered an able discourse on "Christian Encouragement."—Caddie Wagner, Olympia, Wash., May 10.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Chestnut Grove.—We held our regular council at the Pleasant View house May 6, with Eld. J. S. Zigler presiding. One letter of membership was granted. Sister Alice Mackey is our delegate to Annual Meeting; Bro. J. W. McAvoy, alternate. Our District Meeting convenes May 16 and will be June 13, at Pleasant View. We expect to have a love feast in connection. May 20.—Anna F. Sanger, Box 45, Bragg ville, W. Va., May 11.

REBAPTISM

We read in Eph. 4: 5, that there is "one Lord, one faith and one baptism." There is but one Lord in whom we are to have one true faith. Paul would have understand there is but one faith that will lead us to the one Lord.

According to the custom of the Church of the Brethren, on receiving an applicant for baptism, he is questioned as to his faith, to see if he is of the same faith as the Brethren. Or, in other words, he acknowledges the faith of the Brethren to be the true faith. Now I believe it must be accepted that when an applicant is baptized into a church he must accept the faith of the church as the true faith. I say, "Baptized into a church," for the Scriptures tell us that many of us have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. 3: 27). The church is the body of Christ. So we are baptized into the body of Christ or the church.

Now with these facts we see that when one is baptized, he accepts the faith of the church, into which he is baptized, to be the true faith. But if, after having espoused that faith, he finds he has not espoused the true faith, can our church accept him without rebaptizing him? My answer is, No.

First, because he (the applicant) has not put on Christ and loving wife and a devoted mother to her children. It always gave her the greatest pleasure to do something to make some one happy. Besides rearing eight of her own children, she took into her home a sister's child, who was left motherless at a tender age, and reared her as one of her own daughters. A heartbroken husband, eight children, two sisters and one brother survive. Services in the Church of the Brethren at Covington, Ohio, by Bro. George W. Flory. Interment in the Highland cemetery near by.—J. B. Frey, Milltown, Pa.

Hester, Mrs. Maria H., born in Montgomery County, Ohio, died at home near Potter Egeland, N. Dak., April 11, 1911, aged 66 years, 2 months and 7 days. She moved with parents to Indiana where, in 1830, she was married to S. W. Heater. She united with the church in the age of eighteen years but later on held her membership with the Lutherans. On Saturday morning, as above, she was taken with paralysis and was unconscious till death. She and her husband came here about four years ago to live with their son-in-law as an only child. She leaves a grief-stricken husband, a son and a number of brothers and sisters in the East.—Mrs. Ida Pleasant View church by Bro. Geo. Stevens. Interment in the cemetery near the church.—Alice Stevens, Egeland, N. Dak.

Miller, James, born in Virginia, March 5, 1851, died at his home in Milford, Ind., April 30, 1911, aged 60 years, 1 month and 12 days. His death was due to dropsy and heart disease. He was united to Sister Elizabeth Price April 6, 1871. He leaves a wife, six sons, one daughter and three brothers. Services at the Bethel church by Bro. Peter Hostetler assisted by Bid. Manly Dexter. Interment in Island cemetery.—Etta Neff, R. D. 1, Milford, Ind.

Moward, Sister Elizabeth, born in Toronto, Canada, May 6, 1840, died in the bounds of the Stannyrock congregation, Sunnyside, Wash., April 19, 1911, aged 75 years, 11 months and 4 days. In 1858 she was married to William Howard, to which union six children were born. About 1884 she was moved to Gage County, Nebr., where she lived thirty-three years. From this place she moved to the State of Washington in 1902. She united with the Church of the Brethren seventy-six years ago and was a faithful member to the end. Services by the writer, assisted by others. Text, Rev. 14: 13.—D. Eshelman, Zillah, Wash.

Kurtz, Bro. Henry, born April 27, 1866, died at his home near Goodrich, April 23, 1911, aged 44 years, 11 months and 27 days. He was married to Sister Alice Carper Feb. 26, 1888. To this union were born three sons. He united with the church in the Brethren in his youth and was elected to the deacon's office in May, 1901, in which he served faithfully till death. His three sons survive him. Services in the Brethren's field church by Eld. James Murray, assisted by Eld. Chas. Lindsey and the home ministers. Interment in the Kurtz cemetery. 14: 13.—Alice C. Mumsaw, Mogadore, Ohio.

Lehman, Harold Josiah, son of Eld. Josiah and Sister Lizzie Lehman, died of diphtheria April 22, 1911, aged 2 years, 5 months and 17 days. Funeral services were held on account of eighteen hours. Services by Bro. A. Neher. Text, Matt. 19: 14. Interment in the Summit View cemetery, Guthrie, Okla.—Birdie E. Lehman, Guthrie, Okla.

McFarland, John L., born in Hancock County, Ind., July 5, 1837, died April 23, 1911, aged 73 years, 9 months and 13 days. He was married to Della M. Gardner Dec. 30, 1893. To this union were born thirteen children. Two sons and three daughters preceded him. He leaves a wife, eight children, one brother, one sister and one half-brother. Services at the Beech Grove church by Brethren Shepherd and Norris. Interment in the Beech Grove cemetery.—Hattie Shull, Ingalls, Ind.

Martin, Bro. David, born in Montgomery County, Ohio, May 26, 1823, died April 23, 1911, aged 87 years, 10 months and 27 days. He lived in Montgomery County, Ohio, and was married to Sarah Miller Jan. 23, 1845. This union was blessed with three sons and five daughters. He was a consistent Christian, and his life was an example of simplicity. He lived a quiet and cheerful spirit, and strong convictions. He maintained a strict adherence to the orthodox principles taught in the Scriptures. He leaves a wife, three sons, five daughters and one stepsister. Services by Eld. W. J. Shoup, of the Old Order Brethren church.—Samuel Ulery, Jamestown, Ohio.

Monroe, Sister Amanda C., born March 18, 1845, died April 18, 1911, at Mexico, Mo., aged 66 years, 1 month and 0 days. Her husband and family survive. She was a faithful member of the Church of the Brethren. Services by Eld. C. S. Garber at the home of her son.—E. N. Huffman, 502 Kentucky Ave., St. Joseph, Mo.

Sumner, Sarah, born in Columbiana County, Ohio, April 17, 1836, died of heart failure at South Bend, Ind., April 14, 1911. She was brought back to Kansas, where the last funeral was held. Interment in the cemetery near by. Services by Bro. C. A. Shank.—Ogden Nursery Co.

Suthpin, Bro. Eli, died near Floyd, Va., March 13, 1911, aged 72 years, 11 months and 17 days. He had lived in Floyd for about twenty years, having left about a year ago to visit in Virginia. He was a member of the Church of the Brethren for about thirty years. Memorial services were conducted at the Girard church by Eld. M. Flory, assisted by Eld. I. J. Harshbarger.—Ida C. Teet, Floyd, Va. 1-4. Bro. Suthpin's death was being held in Virginia at the same hour and from the same text.—Ida C. Harshbarger, Floyd, Va.

Tyson, Mary E., died of diphtheria March 13, 1911, at the home of her father, Mrs. Samuel Tyson, near Ogden, Pa., aged about 57 years. She was buried on Tuesday afternoon the following, after burying ground. Services at the house by the writer. April 20 a memorial service was held in her honor. Sister Tyson died with hope and was much loved by her. An appropriate sermon was preached from the text, 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8, by the writer, followed with remarks by Eld. Jacob Myers, who had known Sister Tyson for years and was a faithful and consistent member of the Church of the Brethren for many years. She attended all the services of the church for some years.—T. R. Coffman, Parkerford, Pa.

Westerman, Nannie, daughter of Lynds John and May Westerman, died in the bounds of the Farrenberg church, Mo., of cramp colic, aged 18 months. Short services by the writer. Text, Luke 18 and Psa. 51. Interment in the Brethren cemetery at Farrenberg.—N. W. Eisenbise, Farrenberg, Mo.

Watts, Catharine, daughter of Josiah Winters, born July 14, 1833, died April 29, 1911, aged 77 years, 9 months and 14 days. She was married to Adam Owen in Indiana, Nov. 12, 1857. In 1885 she came with her husband and family to Kansas and settled at Belle Plaine, Sumner Co., where she lived until her death. Soon after she came to Kansas, her husband died and left her with a large family. She was the mother of nine children. Most of them were with her during her last sickness, and affectionately cared for her. Sister Owen united with the Brethren church when she was a girl, and she was a consistent member at the time of her death. She was loved by her children, respected by her acquaintances, and died a happy and peaceful death. Services by the writer, at the church at Belle Plaine by the writer, assisted by Rev. Herbert of the M. E. church.—William Johnson, Wichita, Kans.

Zern, Bro. Jacob, born in Hamilton County, Ohio, Dec. 5, 1837, died at the home of his son-in-law, A. Schunaman, in Holyoke, Colo., April 24, 1911, aged 73 years, 4 months and 19 days. He was married to Katharine Kleper in 1859. To this union were born twelve children, eight of whom preceded him. He leaves an aged wife, two sons and two daughters. Bro. Zern was in the second degree of the ministry and was a faithful member of the Church of the Brethren for a good many years. He was a kind and loving Christian and was always ready to do his part. Services by the Baptist minister. Interment in the Holyoke cemetery.—Maude C. Rinek, Haxtum, Colo.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED

El Centro.—The church at this place has taken on new life. Sunday evening, May 7, marked the close of an interesting revival, and was the first one ever held in this part of the great Imperial Valley. Eld. W. E. Trostle, of Pasadena, Cal., labored faithfully among us for almost three weeks. The entire community has been stirred, and the church is much built up and encouraged. The influence of these meetings will go on through the years, and eternity alone will reveal the harvest. Three have already come out on the Lord's side, and one was reclaimed. A number of others are near the kingdom,—counting the cost. On the evening of May 6 we enjoyed an inspiring love feast. Many testimonies attested witnessed the service for the first time. Since our last report four have been received by the church, a former member of the church. Sno Snowberger to locate near us this fall, to assist in the work of the Lord in this new and growing field. The church at this place is planning for the erection of a much-needed churchhouse. Bro. Snowberger has been appointed to build the interior of this District for contributions for this work.—Emma E. Platt, El Centro, Cal., May 8.

Mohler.—Setting apart of ministers, as divided from the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, was granted at the District Meeting of Eastern Pennsylvania May 4. We met in the old Brethren church at Germantown, May 12 and organized into a District, to be called, "Southeastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Eastern New York" subject to confirmation by the approval of our Annual Conference. The best of spirit prevailed, and every church in the new District was represented. The new District has 1,653 members enrolled, with 19 churches. Bro. J. T. Myers was chosen to represent our new District on the Standing Committee at St. Joseph. If our work is approved.—M. C. Swigart, Writing Clerk, 6611 Germantown Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., May 12.

Coon River.—Our love feast of the 6th and 7th inst. was said by many to have been one of the best they ever attended. The weather and roads were ideal. The attendance was large. About one hundred and eighty members were at the tables. Visiting ministers were present from Panther, Dallas Center and Des Moines Valley churches. Eld. S. M. Goughnour, of Ankeny, officiated, Sunday morning, by request. Bro. Goughnour occupied the Sunday-school time in a description of his trip through Europe. It was both interesting and edifying. On Sunday forenoon Bro. M. W. Bikenberry, of Dallas Center, Iowa, gave a most helpful address on the "Cost and Value of Christianity." He was followed by Eld. Samuel Badger, of the Panther church, with very appropriate remarks of caution. While Christianity cost its Founder and early disciples much, it is worth more to many lands, it is perilous to confess Christ, in Iowa we know so little about persecution that there is danger of our undervaluing our religious privileges because they don't cost us very much. Our church decided to celebrate Independence Day, by having preaching services in the forenoon and a program in the afternoon, and also one in the evening, thereby giving our young people and others an opportunity to have a sane and profitable Fourth, instead of the usual boisterous and fatiguing manner of spending the day.—J. D. Haughtelin, Panora, Iowa, May 7.

Loganville.—The love feast, held May 9 and 10, was largely attended. Brethren Levi S. Garber, Jacob Myers, and Samuel Bowser, were with us. Bro. Bowser ordained. A collection of $12.40 for World-wide Missions was taken to be sent to Annual Meeting.—J. L. Myers, Loganville, Pa., May 15.

Ogans Creek.—The members of this church met in council on the afternoon of May 13, with our elder, Bro. Geo. Swihart, presiding. Ten were received, and it was decided to hold our communion Sept. 9, beginning at 2 o'clock. The writer was elected delegate to Annual Meeting, with Bro. Elmer Gilbert, alternate. Sister Mettie Kreider was elected Sunday-school superintendent, and Sister Jennie Morris secretary. Bro. Zack Emeric was elected church trustee.—Sallie E. Gump, R. D. 1, North Manchester, Ind., May 14.

Portland church met on the evening of May 11 in regular business meeting at the home of Bro. L. J. Porter, with Eld. J. Wimmer in charge. All business passed off pleasantly. The trustees for the church property were advised to look after a location for the building of a church. The writer was elected as delegate for Annual Meeting with Bro. L. J. Porter, alternate. The church decided to hold its love feast July 1, at 6 P. M. Donations were received for World-wide Missions, which will be sent to Annual Meeting with our delegate.—Amanda Wilmore, Portland, Texas, May 12.

Redondo Beach Mission.—We have just closed a most enjoyable series of meetings at this place. Bro. Geo. Bashor, of Los Angeles, Cal., faithfully preached the Word in demonstration of the Spirit and with power. He gave us twenty soul-inspiring sermons. As an immediate result of his efforts seven have been added to the church by confession and baptism, which good work has been more than started are near the kingdom. The doctrinal sermons have been especially helpful to the work at this place.—Opey Mathias, 411 North Elena Ave., Redondo Beach, Cal., May 11.

ANNUAL MEETING AT ST. JOSEPH, MO.

About three weeks more and the trains will be landing delegates and visitors to our city to attend the coming Conference. The St. Joseph Convention Committee is hard at work, making every preparation for the coming visitors. The Auditorium is being fitted with every convenience for comfort of the brethren and sisters.

We are now making reservations for accommodations and those applying or writing for information, will please enclose stamp or postage for return mailing and prompt reply. It is quite necessary that as many as possible make their reservations in advance, but there will be plenty of places left, to choose from upon arrival, and secure good accommodations. The people are responding liberally and we hope to have the list complete before this reaches the Messenger readers.

Another article will appear in next issue, regarding information as to how to get to the main building, etc.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER
AND
OUR SATURDAY NIGHT

For $1.85 we will send you the Messenger for one year and a copy of Our Saturday Night. This is only 35c for the book which contains 192 pages.

The Gospel Messenger

is a religious paper of superior merit. Our Saturday Night is a book that will interest and help you. The Messenger, being the official organ of the Church of Brethren, is of special interest to members of the church, though many not identified with our Brotherhood read it with interest and appreciation. The things of most vital interest to the church are communicated through the columns of this paper only. Its writing is being appreciated more and more, as the increase of the list of subscribers indicates. The Messenger is indispensable as a religious educator and spiritual counselor. One brother says: "It has been a forerunner to conversion and church unity in city and rural districts."

Our Saturday Night

is a collection of the ripe fruit of a master mind. Following are a few phrases from those who have read the book: "Interesting and instructive." "Good for various moods." "Good reading and will do good." "Good from beginning to end." "I am charmed with it." "Replete with warnings, illustrations, examples and counsels." What more need be said? You must read it to learn its real merits. Get it now. It is going rapidly.

But Do Not Forget

it is not for sale. A subscription to the Gospel Messenger is the only means of obtaining this charming little volume.

The Messenger one year, $1.50; the book, 35 cents; both, $1.85.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

"SET FOR THE DEFENSE OF THE GOSPEL."—Phil. 1: 17.

Vol. 50. (Old Series) Vol. 60. Elgin, Ill., May 27, 1911. No. 21.

AROUND THE WORLD

The Christian Sabbath for China.

According to a recent cablegram China is seriously considering the adoption of the first day of the week as one of rest and moral improvement. For some years Chinese statesmen have been close observers of Western nations, and among other things they have been impressed with the value of the Christian Sabbath as a conserver of all that is best in a nation's vital resources and moral upbuilding, and they propose to make use of a factor so essential to the prosperity of a nation. Upon the thinking class of Chinese, Christianity has undoubtedly made a profound and favorable impression, which is clearly evidenced by the move above referred to, as well as by recent tributes of respect to missionary activity and beneficence.

Commendable Legislation.

With a view of avoiding all possible tendency to dishonesty in its legislative bodies, Wisconsin has passed a bill by which no legislator can support the bill of another member on condition that he receive like aid for some bill in which he is interested,—such action being considered felony, punishable by fine or imprisonment. This enactment hits at one of the most widespread and serious evils of the day,—one that has given rise to some of the most pernicious results. A great deal of the trouble experienced in the various relations of life is due to the same spirit of selfishness and dishonesty, condemned by the Wisconsin bill. If our acts, though right enough in themselves, are guided by personal advantage only, our hearts are the very incarnation of selfishness.

A Stern Rebuke to Monopoly.

While the promoters of "high finance" may seek to control the sale of various commodities "in restraint of trade," the Supreme Court of the United States has recently put the seal of its disapproval on all methods of that kind. For years the Standard Oil Company has sought to evade responsibility for its violations of the anti-trust law. Court after court has considered the matter, until now the highest court of the land has declared that the illegal combination must be dissolved. It should be a lesson to all who, in the desire for financial aggrandizement, trample under foot the laws of the land as well as the holy precepts of the still higher court of heaven. Nothing is more certain than the fact that "every transgression meets with a just recompense of reward," though we need to be reminded of it, occasionally, in the whirl of business activity.

What a Tract Will Do.

We, as a people, have yet to learn the great value of tracts, properly and tactfully distributed. An actual incident, that occurred in a California town, will serve to indicate at least one phase of the work. A pastor, during the rainy days of a week, distributed Frances A. Haversgal's "Why I go to Church on Rainy Sundays." The following Sunday it rained, and while, ordinarily, there would have been no services on such a day, at this time there was a full attendance. Further inquiry developed the fact that practically all the members had read the tract, were influenced by it, and determined to be present at the service. We are impressed with the thought that a most excellent work might be done if all our members, en route to and from the St. Joseph Conference, would make use of the opportunity for effective tract distribution. If you do not happen to have a supply of suitable tracts, use the Messenger. An intelligent effort is sure to bring results.

The State With a Record.

We are admonished to "give honor to whom it is due," and when we at this time say a few words in praise of Kansas and her remarkable prohibition record, we do so only to stir up other States to take a like happy condition. We are told of over a half million young men and women in Kansas, past twenty-one years of age, who have never seen a saloon in that State. We are assured that there is not a newspaper in the State that will stoop so low as to publish a liquor advertisement. One-third of the counties have not a prisoner in their jails, nor do they have a pauper in their poor-houses. One-half the counties of Kansas did not send a convict to the penitentiary last year. In the per capita valuation of assessed property Kansas stands first of all the States in the Union. Saloon defenders may say what they please, as to the failures of prohibition. There is a concrete example of temperance success in the flourishing condition of Kansas.

Serious Results of the Tobacco Habit.

While medical authorities are practically united in the verdict that tobacco is highly injurious to most of those who are unfortunate enough to have contracted the habit, it is not usual to hear so clear a denunciation as was recently given by Dr. Samuel Bailey, of Mount Ayr, Iowa, in an address before the Iowa State Medical Association. He declares that by the use of tobacco the entire nervous system is undermined, and that even the moral tone and the mental vigor of the tobacco habitué are seriously impaired. The doctor asserts that, after long years of careful observation, he can testify to the fact that the use of tobacco in the earlier years is responsible for many of the troubles so common in the later period of life.

Homes for the Little Ones.

The Divine plan does not contemplate the herding of motherless and fatherless little ones in large institutional buildings, for we are told that it is the Lord's way "to place the solitary in families." It is in recognition of this fact that the overcrowded cities of the Middle States for their many homeless boys and girls among the childless people of the South and West. Recently a car load of New York babies was sent to Houston, Tex., but so great was the demand for the little ones that not half the people could be supplied, though only the best of homes were considered in the distribution. It is a comforting thought that the children, thus given to homes, are now happy recipients of tenderest parental care.

War Losing Its Charms.

While the State of Texas derives nearly a million of dollars a year from the saloons being furnished the army now within her borders, there is a wide-spread dissatisfaction among her citizens because of the continued presence of the troops. A petition, signed by more than 63,000 voters, has been forwarded to President Taft, asking that there be a speedy withdrawal of the soldiers. It is urged that the best interests of the State are not subserved by the present demonstration along the border. Her citizens are lovers of peace, desire to rear their children under like surroundings, and they do not relish the unenviable notoriety into which their State has been brought by the military demonstration along the frontier. The people are doing some solid thinking these days, and even the glare and glitter of army life can not hide the real horror of war, and all that follows in its train.

Agricultural Training for Ministers.

It is announced that the University of Maine offers a short course in agriculture for pastors and other social workers. It is planned to make the course broad and effective enough that the minister may be of the greatest possible use to the country charges over which he may be called to preside. The contemplated plan is an indication of the increasing "back-to-the-farm" movement, and the fact is fully recognized that in such places the minister can be most successful if, in addition to his ministerial fitness, he can also demonstrate a practical knowledge of agriculture. Now, in this respect the Church of the Brethren is remarkably fortunate. Most of her ministers have a practical knowledge of farming, and can, therefore, readily adapt themselves to the country pastorates. Hundreds of them can, with but slight assistance from the membership, make their way readily, when stationed in country charges, and do aggressive work for the cause. All that is needed is a systematic distribution of our forces and a willingness to work.

Peace in Mexico.

The long drawn out hostilities in our neighbor republic to the southwest ended May 21, when officially designated representatives of the Mexican Government and the revolutionists signed a peace agreement. Practically all points, demanded by the people Nov. 20, are now conceded by the Mexican authorities. President Diaz and Vice-President Corral,—objectionable to most of the people,—are to resign. This, together with a number of pressing reforms, will doubtless do much to restore quietness and harmony. All armed forces are now to be disbanded, and the people are to try all settle down to the serious task of restoring the nation to its wonted condition of tranquility and order, so rudely disturbed by the ravages of war. Mexicans express themselves as having had quite enough of war. It has impoverished the country to the extent of millions of dollars, and ruthlessly sacrificed many lives. In the end no more has been gained than might have been secured at the start, by a proper effort of those in control. The lesson is plain and readily to be learned, but will humanity ever profit by the experience gained?

Divorces Discouraged by English Ruler.

Following the precedent of Queen Victoria, who set her face strongly against divorces obtained upon unscriptural grounds, King George and Queen Mary have declared their strong determination to follow a like policy. King Edward was inclined to grant considerable latitude along this line, but the present ruler proposes to "hew close to the line, let the chips fall where they may." The official announcement is that "no divorced persons will be received at court," has spread consternation among many in the highest circles of society, to whom such an exclusion is a matter of considerable moment. That the present occupant of England's throne has the courage of his convictions, is a most admirable trait, that he lends the aid of his influence to an effective declaration in favor of the sacredness of the marriage vow, is a most salutary example to the people of the great kingdom over which he rules, as well as the world at large.

The Dangers of Aviation.

Divine Writ assures us: "Man hath sought out many inventions," which, in the light of modern development, is undoubtedly true, though with it there is the inevitable penalty of sacrifice in life and property. Hitherto the bold navigator of the air has been the chief sufferer, when some deficiency of his frail craft hurled him to the ground. May 21, however, on the occasion of the proposed race of airships from Paris, France, to Madrid, Spain, a monoplane, the driver of which had lost control, plunged into a group of members of the French Cabinet, who were just at the crowd of 200,000, to witness the start of the various airships. Mr. H. M. Berteaux, Minister of War, was instantly killed, and others of the Cabinet were more or less injured. It is to be regretted that most of the aviation events, as in the above case, are held on Sunday, thus adding to the already too prevalent desecration of the day. While such a practice is quite common in France, several States of the Union have already taken cognizance of the matter, and ruled that no aviation contests shall be held on the Lord's Day.

America's Largest Sunday-school.

Everybody, probably, is interested in the best way of doing things, and a Sunday-school that is able to enroll in its membership over half of the population of a town of 9,340 inhabitants, is worth looking into. Such is the M. E. Sunday-school at Brazil, Ind., with its 4,897 members. Fourteen years ago it was plodding along, like many another school today, with 228 members. But its superintendent had a vision of greater possibilities, and, aided by the pastor and a faithful body of teachers, he proceeded to carry out his plans. No flashy or unworthy methods were used. Among the principles governing the school are these: No paid socials; no prizes; no contests between departments or classes; no teachers are allowed to attend theaters, dances, card parties, or engage in anything else of questionable propriety; no class distinctions, —rich and poor meet on a common level. Their men's Bible Class has a membership of 1,200. We are wondering just why any of our Brethren Sunday-schools might not be equally successful. Given a live superintendent and a consecrated body of teachers, there is no reason why, under the Lord's blessing, we could not attain as good results as the Indiana school. Will we make the effort?

Dishonesty Never Pays.

In our last we referred to the alleged discoveries at Jerusalem, which upon further investigation, proved to be gross misrepresentations. At least, they were of no such importance as was claimed by the various journals. True it is, however, that thousands of dollars were freely spent by the "Anglo-American Syndicate" which, by bribery of the Turkish officials, sought to secure some articles of great value, thought to be concealed beneath the temple platform. Owing to the intense indignation, however, aroused among the Moslems by the proposed removal of relics, the syndicate was obliged to abandon further explorations, and withdraw from Palestine altogether,—a penalty which, under the circumstances, they were glad to pay. The Governor of Jerusalem and other officials, implicated in the affair, have been relieved of their positions. Turkey may not be up in the latest methods of civic administration, but it knows what to do with cases of downright dishonesty. Incidentally the occurrence should be a lesson to all who may have occasion to travel in Bible Lands, especially on exploration expeditions. To "provide things honest in the sight of all men" is a most excellent way to let your light shine; then, too, it avoids all possible trouble with the authorities.

It Isn't the Start Alone.

It isn't the start alone that counts, it isn't the start alone;
It's the place you hold at the end, by which the worth of your work is known;
The dancing horse and the prancing horse may be proud ere the race is run,
But they never receive a cheer, if they lag at the rear, when the race is done.
A fool may start for a lofty goal and hurry ahead, and still
Be a fool if he quits, with the end he sought, beyond him over the hill.

If the cable that stretches through the sea from the distant, foreign shore,
Fell short by a hundred little feet, and cables were made no more,
Its uncoiled lengths would fail to serve; no answering instrument
Would respond to the call from the far-off land, where eager heads are bent!
It's the end that counts—the end at last—your start may be fine, oh friend,
But the world will finally judge you by the place you hold at the end.

The bride, whose face is aglow with pride as she passes along the aisle,
Beholding the grand display of wealth and the fine display of style,
May weep in the years that wait; while she that in poor, coarse raiment is wed
May still have the love that's dear to her heart when the hair gleams white on her head;
And the wonder who stands at the head of his class may falter or stumble or fall,
And end as the servant of him at the foot—the start that you make isn't all.

The fields may be green in the spring, where the grain is damp with the dew at dawn,
But what if the hills be parched and bare when the harvest time come on?
The path you take may be smooth at the start, and level and straight and wide,
But far away it may wind about where robbers in ambush hide!
Oh, look to the end—the far-away end—ere ever the die is thrown
For it isn't the start alone that counts—it isn't the start alone.

Brotherly Love.

BY NETTIE C. WEYBRIGHT.

"We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren" (1 John 3: 14).

It is no small matter to know or not to know that we have the assurance that we have passed out of the dead state, through sin, into the new life in Christ Jesus. Upon this fact rests our all,—our whole concern, spiritually. Without this assurance our spiritual life is robbed of peace,—a joy unspeakable. This assurance, we are here told, is ours if we love the brethren. What a noble reward! What wonderful reward the Lord always gives us for obedience on our part! This command,—to love the brethren,—is a new commandment (John 13: 34), which Christ "not only commends as amiable and pleasant, not only counsels as excellent and profitable, but commands it, and makes it one of the fundamental laws of his kingdom." "By this," Christ says, "shall all men know that ye are my disciples."

Brotherly love is a distinctive characteristic of the Christian. While a Christian should and does love all men, he will have a special love for the children of the King,—his own brethren and sisters in Christ,—those of the household of faith. A Christian's love for his brethren should be deeper, more sincere and sympathetic than the love of sinners for each other ever could be. If we have a special friend, we naturally feel a special kindliness for those whom he counts most dear to himself. For us to say anything that would wound them, would, in the same manner, make our Master sad. Even so Christ has a very special love for his bride,—the members of this body. He says they are his own brethren and sisters. Then, what an awful thing it is, for any of us, to speak disrespectfully of even the least among the members of this glorious body,—the church! Merely calling them "brethren" is not enough, for we must not "love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth" (1 John 3: 18). Our love must be deeper than that. How great a part of our life's work, as Christians, is embodied in this command to love one another, is shown in Paul's words to the Romans (13: 8), "For he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law."

But how are we to know, or how may others know that we really do, from the heart, fervently love the brethren? Let each one of us stop and look into our own hearts and lives, and see what we find there. Paul says, in Rom. 13: 10, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."

"Love worketh no ill,"—what does this mean to me,—what to you? Is there a brother in the church anywhere whom we do not love? If so, why not? May there even be a brother in the ministry, concerning whom we have said unkind things? Is there a brother who is giving his time, labor and all for the good he can do, doing Christian work, teaching, preaching and in various other ways, working for Christ and his own, while the rest of us stand idly by, scoffing, criticising, trying to find fault with him and his teaching,—in fact, using all our powers to counteract the good he is doing? Let us beware. Are we guileless in this? Are our hands clear entirely?

It is quite evident that even in the church today such men as this, who are doing more for the church than most of us are able to realize, are constantly hindered in their work by brethren who have not yet learned that "love worketh no ill," but are going around, scattering far and wide the seeds of unkindliness that they themselves feel toward these brethren. These unkind feelings often arise from no other cause than ignorance or misunderstandings of the motives, ideas and teachings of these godly brethren. Let us be careful lest Satan himself use us in tearing down the good work of the Christian man or woman. "Woe to him by whom the offense cometh."

If we know of brethren who are doing or teaching what we consider to be wrong, let us pray earnestly for them that they may be led aright, rather than use our influence to cause others to feel and say evil things concerning them.

As we think on these things, how many of us need to fall humbly before the Great Judge, to beg forgiveness for our sins of not rightly loving the brethren, for grace to cleanse our hearts of this impurity, and to begin anew to serve God who is love by loving his children.

Then, how exceedingly important that we strive really to love one another as Christ commanded! This is commanded so many times that one faithful Bible student has said, "Love to one another is the sum of God's commandment, the original and fundamental message of Christianity,—Christ's new and all-inclusive commandment. It is the bond that unites all the virtues together into a perfect whole." How awful a condition it is, not to have this love in our hearts!

In 1 John 4: 8 we have this striking statement, "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love," and in 3: 14 of the same epistle we have these words, "He that loveth not abideth in death." We are by nature children of wrath and heirs of death. He that loves not his brother, yet stands under the curse and condemnation of the law. Indeed, using the reasoning of John, the beloved disciple, "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" This love for our brethren, even under circumstances when it is hard to love, is not an attribute of the natural man, it is not a fruit that is native to the soil of the human heart, but is the fruit of the Spirit. Do we claim to have the Spirit ruling our hearts? Then we must surely love our brethren. If we would learn to love as we should, we must let Christ live his life in our hearts. Then all will be changed. "Let brotherly love continue!"

Turn on the Light.

BY JACOB FUNK.

THE greatest good that man can possibly do is to unfold to his fellowman the goodness of God, and the greatest injury that can be inflicted on mortal beings is to refuse to reveal to them the power of his love. God has designed that we be open channels of truth and influence, and nowhere in man's formation is there a place for secreting knowledge. "No man can meet the full measure of his mission who is willing to be a reservoir of truth without an outlet." And just in proportion as man is willing to unfold the goodness of God to all, regardless of caste, color or condition, will he be the blessing that the Creator designed he should be.

It must not be presumed that secrecy always results in evil; indeed it has its place and sphere in the universe of God, but to wrest secrecy from its place and use, is sure to result in evil.

Where, then, does secrecy belong and who may use it? We read in Deut. 29: 29, "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God. But those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever that we may do all the words of this law."

This is God's prerogative and it is folly for man to assume equality with God in this respect, or to aspire to the place of God as the keeper of secrets. God has opened the treasury of heaven that all who will may enter, but having once entered, he dare not close the door, or hold the key, or bar the way to any who are walking in darkness, if they desire to come to the light. Why should any one desire to withhold any good thing from his fellow-man or why should he desire to belong to an institution that has secrecy as an element? It could not be for a spiritual motive, for Jesus Christ is the Head of the institution that exemplifies spirituality, and no one has, as yet, declaimed that he is the Head of any secret organization.

It can not be to advance morality, for by no plausible reasoning can morality best be advanced by secret or hidden methods. Morality can best be advanced by openly, publicly and continually showing the sin and degradation of immorality, to so expose this monster in its hideousness as to cause society to shrink from it.

It can not be to advance temperance, for only if the secret methods of the brewer, the saloonkeeper, the bartender, are exposed and his evils made known, is temperance forwarded.

In fact it can not be said that secrecy, in any way, contributes to good citizenship. On the other hand, an evil-minded person finds in secrecy a powerful weapon for the forwarding of his purpose. Laws are flagrantly violated under the protection of secrecy. Our courts give evidence of the fact that graft and corruption have flourished in their most heinous forms, with secrecy, as a close ally. In other words, secrecy is a tool that all evildoers use, while men who follow righteousness find in secrecy nothing worthy of support. Hence the Master said, "In secret have I said nothing."

Pastoral Work In School-Churches.

BY OLIN F. SHAW.

THE farm and the shop, the home and the church, provide ample opportunity for the development of the physical and the social faculties of the young, and when American colleges come to be used for the development of these faculties, rather than for the intellectual and the moral, they cease to have any lawful excuse for their existence. And when goodness and virtue cease to be held as of infinitely more importance than gold, and character even than intellect, colleges among the Brethren will have forfeited their most lawful excuse for their existence. For many other schools, already well established, are, through large bequests and endowments, much better equipped to give our young a so-called practical education, or the development of the physical or intellectual, than a number of our schools may ever hope to be. This is not an argument to prove that the Brethren colleges should neglect the development of the strength of the physically weak, and the maintaining of those who are strong while in school. It would be well if each of our schools were provided with a well-equipped gymnasium, and if each student were requested to do at least one hour of gymnasium work each day.

The lopsidedness of much of our present-day educational system is one of the sins of the age, and, in some respects, to the writer, all but an unpardonable sin. On the one hand there is danger of becoming so absorbed in physical exercises, through field contests, etc., as greatly to neglect the development of the intellectual, and on the other hand there is the extreme of merciless cramming, to the neglect of both soul and body. First, in our public and high schools, where the thought of failing in examination, and falling behind the class, is held over the heads of children as a "big stick" till, with the nervously inclined, it becomes almost a nightmare,—others, who are naturally slow to learn (but who, not infrequently, become much the better scholars) are led to regard a failure to keep up with the class equal to becoming a fool, and to lose much, if not all, of their interest in school. Second, the practice of certain other institutions, scarcely worthy to be called colleges, which,—aiming to make money, rather than to promote the development of intellect and character,—take young people and cram them for a few months or a year and push them out into a position. Of such it may be said, "Verily, they have their reward," in that they succeed financially, but do incalculable wrong to the young: (a) By holding before them that wealth and position are the only worthy ends to be sought in an education; (b) An intellect, ever so well developed, in a physical wreck is useless. And a finely-developed intellect without moral ballast is not only lopsided but is dangerous. Our educational system is, therefore, a matter of profound importance to both church and state.

As a church we are already committed to the policy of education, and this is neither the time nor the place to discuss that proposition. Let the church be quick to recognize the fact that her future fortunes and destiny hang upon our college-trained boys and girls. Their circle is to be one of ever-widening influence. They, we may hope, are to be our future instructors in our colleges, and will determine largely what the output from them is to be. They, in a large measure, are to fill our pulpits in the future; and by them our Sunday-schools will be superintended, and the classes taught. They, too, will be the authors of our church literature. Let the church also be quick to recognize the importance of a thorough and efficient pastoral work in the school-churches, in connection with the schools. The marked influence one might have on the student life, in developing the devotional spirit and training for the use of the church, deserves serious consideration. The field to be occupied by one in such a position is in part as follows:

First. Perhaps the most important education a college can bestow upon a student is thoroughly to imbue him or her with an aspiration to be and to do something. This is not only to awaken the dormant powers of those not already quickened, but to add materially to the energies of those already somewhat endued with such a spirit. That, in all of their aspirations, they may have sufficient moral ballast, and their usefulness may be saved to the church, it is highly important that they be under the influence of a church in a healthy condition, and full of the spirit of work. I can conceive of nothing that is so likely to beget a morbid condition, spiritually, as to be under the influence of a church with a sickly, diseased membership. To keep the school-churches in a glow of health, and the student body under the most wholesome influence, will require the constant attention of a wise, efficient, painstaking pastor and elder. It is a position which, if not filled by the president, is, perhaps, second only to his office, as far as moral influence goes.

Second. To beget and foster a healthy condition in a church, nothing will do more good than to have every one at work. This, therefore, requires a kind of generalship, especially in a school-church, with the energies of a student body to direct.

Third. The student period of life is the time, above all others, when young people should be training for service, and it is highly important that every available opportunity for work be utilized in the home church and adjoining fields. It is his, therefore, to create and direct missionary spirit in the church and school by doing practical work.

Fourth. While in school, students should be receiving their ideals for service, and it is of the utmost importance that before this body,—both of ministers and ministers-to-be,—the office of the ministry be magnified, and that the spirituality and devotional spirit of the church and student body be put on the highest plane possible. For this place one of the ablest and most competent ministers of the Brotherhood should be sought,—one who is a natural leader.

Fifth. In the light of all modern research, and conflicting opinions concerning the teachings of the Bible to be able, forcibly and intelligently, to interpret the Bible to a student body. No amount of emphasis, that I might be able to place upon this phase of his work, would overestimate its importance. This is a second reason why the place should be filled by a most competent man.

While this place could be filled most creditably and practicably by the president, there are two important reasons why it could not be done by one of the regular instructors:

(a) To be able intelligently to feed the flock would require a great deal of time in his study for research; also a correspondingly large amount of time for visitation.

(b) The work of teaching and of preaching are two entirely different fields of activity, and to be habitually engaged in the work of teaching is to lose the spirit of preaching, and become more, each day, a teacher. If this work were given to the president, his hands should be entirely loosed from teaching.

These words are written for the thoughtful consideration of all those who are not only interested in our schools, but in the general welfare of the church.

The Twelve Apostles Again.

BY J. HARMAN STOVER.

SOME months past, I wrote a short article under the heading, "How Many Apostles?" It embodied the conclusions reached after an investigation, brought about by the challenging of our form of church organization by a Latter Day Saint.

I never dreamed of stirring up controversy, but hoped to arouse a spirit of investigation. Four articles following mine, with private correspondence, pro and con, would indicate that it is a subject worthy of close investigation.

Wishing all the light I could get, I have carefully studied each article in the light of Scripture, fearing I had advanced a wrong idea. And now, carefully guarding against any expression that might be construed to mean an attempt to refute any statement our dear brethren have made, who think differently, I am honestly and more fully convinced than before, that there were but twelve apostles; that there never were to be but twelve; that these were Divinely called; that is, called by the voice of Christ, man having no voice, vote or choice in the matter; that they were to do a Divine work, unlawful for any other man to do; that they were to write the Will (Word) of Christ and put it on record; that this "Law of the Spirit of life,"—with its evidencing ordinances and decrees, ordained of them (Acts 16: 4),—were to be delivered to the churches,—thus confirming the churches (Acts 15: 40-41). Paul did this delivering (1 Cor. 11: 2), choosing Silas as helper and companion. This done, the Apostles ceased. We have the Written Will delivered to us.

Paul was a real, genuinely called apostle, called by the voice of the Lord himself (Acts 9: 3-6). Paul saw the Lord who called him (1 Cor. 9: 1).

As to Barnabas, Silas, and others, being called apostles, I believe it was in that comparative sense which the laws of rhetoric and expression grant in every language,—of giving the superlative in sense to reach the proper appreciation of the comparative. Christ often availed himself of this license of language. At one time he used the term "sons of thunder"; again he spoke of the camel and the needle's eye.

Men in every century of the Christian era, because of ability, zeal, etc., have been termed apostles. I have heard brethren, in referring to Bro. Johnny Kline, say, "That apostle of the Brethren church in the Valley of Virginia." But Paul was a really called apostle, to help in the making and delivery of a book upon which we risk our eternal destiny.

If Matthias was an apostle, there were thirteen. If there were thirteen there were more. If so, when did they cease, and why did they ever cease to keep the "Twelve" in the church? The language of 1 Cor. 12: 28 would indicate that they ceased when the Written Word became a tangible thing,—a law of utility, the real functionary of ecclesiastical action,—the work of the "Twelve" was fulfilled.

"Tarry" means "wait" not "work." "Till ye be endued with power" simply states the negative; they did not have power (sanction—heavenly permission) to work.

If the Pentecostal descent of the Holy Spirit was for the bestowal of the gift of tongues only, what is his mission with the one upon whom we lay hands now?

The only change I would make, could I write my former article again, would be to underscore more.

Behold the Man!

BY J. D. HAUGHTELIN.

AFTER enjoying the Easter service, commemorating the glorious victory of the resurrection, it may be well to take a review of the labor and suffering that led up to that victory.

Long before Christ's advent into the world, Jesus was spoken of as "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" (Isa. 53: 3). After he had finished his mission on earth, the apostle, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, said he was made "perfect through suffering." His loving-kindness and marvelous miracles were often misinterpreted by his persecutors. His immaculate conception was an astounding miracle. Joseph was puzzled, but, heeding the counsel of God, brought joy where sorrow was anticipated. Though his birth was heralded by the rejoicing angelic band, soon the enemy planned his destruction. What sorrow was brought forth by that edict! "Rachel weeping for her children" (Matt. 2: 18).

Christ being the Son of God, the Father could have paralyzed every arm raised to harm the child, but he was the Son of Man as well, and the flight into Egypt was God's plan of using human means, and instructing man.

At the age of twelve years, while in the temple, Christ astonished all who heard him. He indicated his Divinity by the question, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business" (Luke 2: 49)? "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man" (V. 52).

Though it was told before his birth that he should be of Divine origin, he was never announced as the Son of God until his baptism. Prior to this time, humanity was predominant. As a carpenter he worked like other carpenters. As a man he was perfect—without sin. As soon as it was announced that he was the Son of God, he was attacked by Satan. The first recorded temptation commences, "If thou be the Son of God" (Matt. 4: 2). His reply to the three recorded temptations, "It is written," gives us the weapon whereby to conquer that same old tempter who attacks every disciple of Jesus. He can not stand many thrusts of the "Sword of the Spirit." Well did the apostle advise, "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil" (Eph. 6: 11).

After the temptations, Christ presented further proofs that he was the Son of God by his miracles. Nicodemus declared, "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him" (John 3: 2). He alone could say, "If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father" (John 15: 24). He alone could make the challenge, "Which of you convinceth (Gr., convicts) me of sin" (John 8: 46)? When it was declared, "He is a good man," his enemies replied, "Nay; but he deceiveth the people" (John 7: 12). Thereby they admitted that he appeared as a good man, without any proof to the contrary.

Christ's agony in the garden was perhaps the most intense suffering he ever endured. Note the despairing declaration, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death" (Matt. 26: 38). A little later on, "being in agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling to the ground" (Luke 22: 44).

Thus, for three long hours, did he agonize alone (for his disciples slept for sorrow), when "there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him" (V. 43). Then "cometh Judas, one of the twelve" (Mark 14: 43), "and they all forsook him, and fled" (V. 50).

Finally, by the help of "lewd fellows of the baser sort," his enemies succeeded in having him arrested as an evildoer. First he is taken before Annas. "Annas sent him bound unto Caiaphas the high priest" (John 18: 24). Being questioned concerning his disciples and doctrine he replied, "In secret have I said nothing. . . . They know what I have said."

For this frank answer an officer struck him. There seems to have been no restraint to the cruelty and insolence of those officers and soldiers. Even Pilate, while he repeatedly declared him innocent and without fault, and spoke of him as "that just person," himself ordered the scourging of the uncondemned prisoner. The soldiers crowned him with thorns, arrayed him in gorgeous apparel and mockingly worshiped him. Then, growing bold and desperate, they struck him over that thorn-crowned head. Behold him coming forth! His innocent blood is trickling down over his hallowed face. "Being reviled he reviled not again."

By tumult, threats and intimidation, they succeeded in getting Pilate to grant their demand to have him crucified. See him going forth, carrying his cross until he falls. "Behold the man!" Now see them strip him and stretch him on the rugged cross. Behold them as they drive the cruel spikes through his innocent hands and harmless feet. See them raise the cross and drop the base into the socket prepared for it. For six long hours, in agony, he is taunted, jeered, mocked! Hear him pray, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." For the last three hours of this awful tragedy the sun was darkened.

Now comes the climax. Hear him cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Why all this suffering and agony? Brother, sister, it was to save me,—to save you! We have been bought with a price,—not silver or gold, but the precious blood of the Lamb of God. Sinner, he has purchased a pardon for you. Will you accept it? If you reject him before men he will reject you before God and the holy angels. "Behold the man!"

May a Christian Dance?

BY EZRA FLORY.

"Of course he may. He may swear and lie, too; but it would not make him a better Christian. Surely, Christian, you may dance; but dancing will never identify you as a Christian. What puzzles us is that you ask the question so often. Christians who don't dance never ask it. Yes, Christian, dance if you can't live without it. Join hands with Salome, Herodias, and circle to the left. But don't be surprised if you are taken for a goat."—Robert J. Burdette.

HERE are the Bible references on dancing: Ex. 15: 20; 32: 19; Judges 11: 23, 34; 21: 21, 23; 1 Sam. 18: 6; 21: 11; 30: 16; 2 Sam. 6: 14, 16; Job 21: 7-11; Psa. 30: 11; 149: 3; 150: 4; Jer. 31: 4, 13; Lam. 5: 15; Matt. 11: 17 (Luke 7: 32); Matt. 14: 6 (Mark 6: 22); Luke 15: 25. From these references with their settings we notice the following:

1. That it was a religious act.

2. That it was the expression of joy at religious feasts and victories.

3. That it took place in the daytime, in the open air.

4. That the sexes never danced together.

5. That men seldom danced.

6. That dancing for amusement was regarded as disreputable, fit only for the "vain fellows."

7. The only instances in the Bible of dancing for amusement are the worldly families in Job, and that of Herodias, the daughter of the murderess.

8. The Bible absolutely nowhere sanctions such a thing as the modern dance.

9. The modern dance is a contrivance for the mingling of sensuous music and sexual excitement.

10. The modern dance is the round dance with all its indecencies, debauchery and defilement. People do not go to the dance to give expression to religious feeling of joy, but to have a "good time."

But, says some one, "The Bible says, 'A time to dance.'" So it does; and in the same connection it says, "A time to kill." What is that time? How is it to be conducted? Who are to engage in it? These questions will solve themselves when the whole context is taken into consideration. In Exodus we read of the people "rising up to play (harlot) about the golden calf." Job 21: 11, "They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. . . . And they say unto God, Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways."

It is unnecessary to give statistics and testimony to prove that more than three-fourths of the ruined girls of our land start the downward way in the dance.

There comes one who says he attends only a select dance. Some may be more revolting than others, it is true, but all have for their end the same purpose when the truth is spoken. Still another says she attends the dance in order to be graceful. Says Dr. Brooks, "Compare the natural grace of a pure girl, taught by a pure mother and a native grace of delicacy, with the disgusting affection and brazen effrontery of a pert miss who has been taught by a foreign dancing-master not to blush, and you can judge for yourself whether there is any force in the oft-repeated plea that children should be sent to a dancing-school to learn manners."

The dance is dangerous because:

1. Its fascination keeps unconverted souls from Christ.

2. It dulls spiritual life.

3. It unfits the Christian to be useful for God. It destroys his testimony.

4. It is a feeder of the brothel.

5. It is one of the great traps used by the "White Slave" pimp.

6. It is dangerous to health. It was never organized to promote health. The dance as it now is, is a violation of the soundest hygienic laws.

A Solution of the Ministerial Problem.

BY I. J. ROSENBERGER.

THIS is a Bible question and can only be solved by the aid of Divine Truth. To attempt a solution by consulting desires is futile, for desires and opinions are as unstable as water, hence are inadequate to the solution of this question. Besides, we need not rely on such uncertain helps, for we are "thoroughly furnished unto every good work." I propose to solve this question by tracing the teaching and practice of the apostles. I shall deal with my subject in the following propositions:

I. The Apostolic Churches Had a Plurality in Their Ministry.

The preachers at Antioch are listed thus: "Now there were in the church at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, . . . and Saul." It will be remembered that the Jerusalem council sent a committee,—Judas and Silas,—to settle a difficulty in this church. After they had delivered their message, "they were let go in peace, . . . notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still. Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also." Hence the old church at Antioch had a plurality in her ministry.

When Paul was on his way to Jerusalem, Luke says: "And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus and called the elders of the church." Paul, in addressing his epistle to the Church at Philippi, says: "To all the saints which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." Here is further evidence of a plurality in the ministry of the apostolic churches. When Paul and Barnabas had completed their first missionary journey, Luke says: "They returned again to Lystra, Iconium and Antioch. And when they had ordained elders in every church," etc. Paul says to Titus: "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee." Hence the churches that Paul organized, and appointed to be organized, had a plurality in their ministry. This was Paul's universal custom. He did not have one custom for country churches and another for cities, for he says: "As I teach everywhere in every church." Again: "So ordain I in all the churches." This plurality in the ministry of the apostolic churches precludes all idea of a salaried or itinerant system in the apostolic churches.

Christ, in sending his disciples, sent them "two and two." Reasons for this plural ministry system are most excellent:

(a) One man, ruling in matters of state, is not considered safe. Even our legislative bodies consist of two,—the upper and the lower houses. The same danger needs to be watched in church government. I have a letter from a minister, giving me their sad experience along this line,—one man's rule.

(b) All lines of government are, in a measure, difficult to execute. This is true of state and church, cities, schools and families. What a safe and effective control there is in that church which is cared for by a judicious, watchful elder, with his assistants and half a dozen deacons, such as Paul defines. Dear reader, can you not point to just such organizations in our Brotherhood? They have existed from the early history of our church. Their system is apostolic, and hence can not be improved upon.

II. Those Giving All Their Time to the Interests of the Church Are Entitled to Their Support.

Christ says: "The workman is worthy of his meat." Paul says: "The Lord hath ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." Mark the language, "should live," that is, "have their support." Parallels to these texts are so numerous, and the truth of my proposition is so plain that further quotations are not necessary. In fact, I never knew it otherwise, than that brethren and sisters, on missions for the church, were entitled to contributions. Of those heathens on the island of Melita Paul says: "When we departed they laded us with such things as were necessary." But there are those who are not satisfied with Gospel support and demand salaries. A salary is obtained by bargain and contract, as you negotiate for stock, land or merchandise. These things are engaged in for their gain or profit. They are legitimate lines by which to make money, but the church's mission is to save souls and not to make money. Christ, at his first coming, found merchandising in the temple, and he gave it a most scathing rebuke. Peter says: "They will make merchandise of you." This money-making, merchandising in the church will surely meet with as sore a rebuke at Christ's second coming, as it did at his first. Some evangelists make as much money as the presidents of the United States. The church should be a place of self-denial and sacrifice, and not a place to make money, hence the support that the apostles received was not on a salaried basis.

III. The Scriptures Do Not Contemplate Compensation for Services Rendered.

When Abraham returned from the slaughter of the kings, he refused any compensation in spoil, saying: "I will take nothing, save that which the young men have eaten." Abraham and his men were God's servants, hence were entitled to their meat,—their support. Elisha at once declined Naaman's proffered compensation for his great cure. The affrighted monarch offered Daniel a most liberal compensation if he would read the handwriting. Listen to Daniel's reply: "Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another, yet I will read the writing for the king." You will notice that not only is no compensation contemplated, but none is desired.

As Paul is chiefly quoted in support of a salaried system, let me quote some sketches from his writings for our information on this point. When Paul left Athens and came to Corinth, he met Aquila and Priscilla. It is said: "Because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought: for by their occupation they were tentmakers. And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." That is, he labored on the week days and preached on the Sabbath. Again Paul says: "To this present hour we both hunger and thirst, . . . and have no certain dwelling place; and labor, working with our own hands." And again: "For ye remember, brethren, our labor and travail, for laboring night and day,—because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the Gospel of God." "Neither did we eat any man's bread for naught, but wrought with labor and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you. Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us." Paul further says: "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." These extracts from Paul's life show that he got support when it was needed and not a salary.

IV. A Salaried System of the Ministry Destroys One of Her Sweetest Enjoyments, i. e., Sacrifice.

What pleasure it is for God's faithful servants to dwell upon and remember their sacrifice for the Lord's cause! Good old Samuel beautifully sums up his life of sacrifice, in the evening of his day, thus: "Whose ox have I taken? . . . Whom have I oppressed? . . . They said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken anything from any man's hand."

Paul's wonderful life of sacrifice is set forth in part in these words: "I have coveted no man's silver or gold. Yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered to my necessities, and to them that were with me." What sunshine such lives of sacrifice do let into the soul, as our sun is going down! The lily hands of the salaried clergy today would scarcely evidence what Paul's hands did, as he held them up to the Ephesian elders. True, at times the care and responsibility of the ministry seems to be great. The duty of bishops and deacons, as given by Paul, shows that there is more required of officials than of the laity. The priests were to bear the ark on their shoulders. This symbolized the increased duty of the officials under the Gospel. The comfort I take is this, that their reward will be greater.

V. The Salaried System of the Ministry, Which Includes the Itinerant System, Has the Following Objections:

(a) We have brethren of some age, yet active, who by their earnest labors have helped to build up flourishing congregations. Such were called of God and commissioned by the Holy Ghost. This new system would retire all such, which will much disturb the enjoyment of their church home.

(b) A salaried ministry eventually destroys the executive power of the church. I know of no church, under a full-fledged, salaried system, that makes much if any pretense to executive government in their assemblies. Some of our own congregations that have been under this salaried system, have experienced a serious loss in their government. Such ministers will be made to feel that they must favor their paymasters. Under such influence the executive will steadily weaken. The foregoing is a clear defense of Annual Meeting decision, Art. 19, 1882, which provides for contributions to ministers as needed, but no salary.

(c) I quote from "Bible Salvation," by Rev. A. Sims, D. D., of the M. E. Church: "Our great dangers, as we see them, are assimilation with the world, neglect of the poor, substitution for the fact of godliness, abandonment of discipline, a hireling ministry and an impure Gospel which, summed up, is a fashionable church. The early Methodist ministers went forth to sacrifice for Christ. They sought not places of ease and influence, but of privation and suffering. They gloried not in big salaries, fine parsonages and refined congregations, but in the souls they had won for Christ. But, oh, how changed! . . . Methodists formerly dealt with great central truths. Now the pulpits deal largely in generalities and in popular lectures."—Pages 11 and 13.

The great John Wesley left the following conditional prophecy for his brethren. "If the time arrives that money will enter into the work and influence of the bishops and ministers of the Methodist church, then Ichabod will be written over every church door."

Three New Books for Our Ministers.

BY J. H. B. WILLIAMS,
Secretary of Gish Committee.

THE Gish Fund Committee takes pleasure in announcing to our ministry that there are three new books now available, and ready for distribution on the usual reduced terms for our ministers. Each new book is cause for additional gratitude to Brother and Sister Gish, whose money makes the Fund possible. These three volumes have been selected by the Committee with a desire to supply such as will be of lasting benefit to the minister in his study. A short paragraph on each will afford but a meagre description of their value.

Schaff's History, Vol. VI.

In general terms we need not discuss the merits of this book, our ministers already having had access to Volumes I and II. Suffice it to say that Volume VI is written in the same clear, honest, able, helpful style as are the other two already on the list. The volume embraces, besides a general introduction to modern church history, the productive period of the German Reformation, from its beginning to the Diet of Augsburg (1530) and the death of Luther (1546), and has been selected especially with the idea that our ministers may thus have an opportunity to study the beginnings of the Reformation, and the sowing of the seed which later was to produce the Church of the Brethren. To ministers of the Church of the Brethren this book is sent for eighty-eight cents. The regular retail price of the volume is $4.00.

Blaikie's Manual of Bible History.

This volume is one of the most compact, readable and reliable church histories now on the market. The purpose of the book is to enable Bible readers and students to grasp the whole course of Bible History. While following the stream of the Bible narrative, it also keeps in view the great spiritual purpose of the Book. The work carefully describes the chief countries, towns and other scenes of Bible history, as they occur, and also glances at the parallel history of the other leading nations of the world, showing what was going on elsewhere, while the history of the Bible was being enacted. To our ministers this book, containing over 500 pages, is sent for thirty cents. The regular retail price of this book is $1.50. With "Smith's Bible Dictionary," also on the Gish list, this book will rank side by side.

Funk's War vs. Peace.

In these days, when universal peace is receiving encouragement and sanction from the leading nations of the world, and when the kingdom of mutual love, once dreamed of, now promises to become a reality, this book is very timely. Written by one of our own able ministers the volume is one that should be on the study table of every minister in our church. The book contains five chapters: The Causes of War, The Evils of War, The Cost of War, A Brief History of the Peace Movement, and Ways of Advancing Peace. To our ministers this book, containing 175 pages, is sent for fifteen cents. The retail price is seventy-five cents.

In this connection it might be well to announce that Volume I of "Schaff's History," as well as the little book "Alone With God," will be taken from the Gish Fund list April 1, 1912.

We hope that our ministers will take immediate advantage of the three new books now offered and send at once for them, addressing Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois, where the orders will receive prompt attention.

Conduct in the House of Worship.

BY J. M. BLOUGH.

How many of us stop to consider that when we go to the house of worship we are going to meet God? It does seem to me that if we would stop to think about it, some of us would surely do differently. And if we do not go to meet God, why do we go at all? Is it simply to meet people, to see and to be seen, or to be entertained? Gor forbid! We go to the sanctuary to meet God; hence, how careful we should be of our conduct!

In many of our churches it is customary for the members to have a regular "sociable" before the service begins, and they think it is all right to keep on talking to one another until the minister announces a hymn. Frequently the confusion is so great that the minister has to talk very loud in order to be heard. What, do we need a hymn to call us to order in the house of God? Just think of it! Is it becoming that we should first visit with one another in the house of worship, before we meet God? Our God is not a God of confusion. Is it not a shame that we are so thoughtless in God's house?

True, we are a social people and we like to greet one another, but would it not be more becoming if we would meet God first, and greet one another after the service is over? What is the subject of conversation generally? Is it such as will aid the spirit of devotion? Or is it about worldly things,—crops, weather, neighbors, politics, etc.? Consider, consider!

Then, again, when the weather is nice some will stand outside, or sit under a shade tree, and have a "good time" in loud conversation until the service begins. They seem to think that until some one begins to sing there is nothing else to do. And sometimes there are scarcely enough members inside even to carry a tune.

Then, too, at some places, the young men and boys stay out till the service is in progress,—even the first prayer is finished. Then they come in together and naturally disturb the meeting. I pity them, but I pity their parents more. When, O when, will God's people consider? How much effort have parents and ministers made to correct this? Perhaps the example is bad.

The Better Way.

I am glad there is a better way, which is more becoming the people of God. And on this point we can learn from other churches. I write it to their praise, but to our shame. The better way is to come quietly and reverently to the house of God. Go in as soon as you arrive, sit down in your place at once, bow your head in a silent prayer; then read your Bible or sit in meditation and reverence, until the service opens. This, I assure you, will be a better preparation for the service than to engage in questionable conversation, and visitors will think more of you and your church, and God can bless you more. How I wish and pray that all of us might learn proper conduct in the house of God!

A Suggestion.

Let us remember that at the St. Joseph Conference we are in the midst of other church people, and continually under their eye, and in their auditoriums. If we behave unbecomingly in their Auditorium, and show a lack of respect for the house of worship, we need not be surprised if they consider us rude. Let us go into every service reverently, and sit in quiet meditation, as much so as possible. This is the way to gain the respect of the St. Joseph people and the blessing of God as well.

Many of the churches deeply deplore that, in the striving for "up-to-date improvements," there has been a serious loss of the "old-fashioned things," spiritually speaking, upon which it is so very hard to improve that we may well be satisfied to let them remain as they were,—time-tested and sure. Some of the modern ways and methods greatly please the eye and tickle the fancy, but where is the old-time power that ought to be felt in the assembly of God's people, and move the hearts to mighty impulses of righteousness? The fact is that the "old-time religion" is as good and appropriate today as ever. It has the old-fashioned ring to it, and it will surely reach the hearts of the people who listen "in the good old-fashioned way." Why not cling to "the old paths and walk therein?" There has been too much "seeking out of many devices," and a consequent neglect of the Word which "liveth and abideth forever."

THE ROUND TABLE

All for Others, Nothing for Himself.

BY J. G. ROYER.

I HAVE never been abroad and never expect to be, but I should like to call attention to an epitaph which some of the readers of the MESSENGER, who have been abroad, may have seen.

In the little village of Birr, in Switzerland, there is a rough, unhewn stone, with a tablet affixed. On the tablet is this inscription: "Savior of the poor, father of orphans, educator of humanity; man, Christian, citizen. All for others, nothing for himself."

The man thus commemorated was Johann Heinrich Pestalozzi, a poor Swiss schoolmaster. When a boy only six years old, his father, who was a physician of small means, died, and so the boy's training depended chiefly upon his mother. In early youth young Pestalozzi manifested those characteristics which distinguished him through life,—piety, sympathy for the poor and degraded, a love of children, and an uncompromising sense of justice.

In compliance with the wishes of his grandfather, who was a Protestant clergyman, he studied for the ministry. But his very first effort at preaching proved such a decided failure that he abandoned the pulpit and gave free rein to his longings for the improvement of his country's lower classes. He opened what may be considered the first industrial school for the poor. He gathered about him a number of ragged, half-starved children,—children whom war had made orphans and homeless. He lived with them the life of the poor. He played with them, and prayed with them, and earnestly instructed them during the day. In the evening he begged food for them. At night, as they slept, he washed and mended their clothes. He had learned from his blessed Master what it was to love children, and, like his Master, he won the distinction of living like a beggar that he might teach beggars to live like men.

Today many institutions bear his name, and men honor themselves in honoring the memory of Pestalozzi, the poor Swiss schoolmaster.

Reader, learn:

1. That he lives best who lives least for self and most for others.

2. That no one should start out with the notion that poor and obscure men and women are necessarily a failure.

3. That many of the greatest benefactors of the world have been those who had no money.

4. That helping others to help themselves is worth more than gifts of money.

Mt. Morris, Ill.

Should Brethren Vote at Political Elections?

BY DANIEL NISWANDER.

THE writer is aware that the Brethren are divided on this question. If I should be called on to answer it, according to my convictions, I would have to answer it with an emphatic No, and will here try to give some of my reasons.

Jesus says, "My kingdom is not of this world" (John 18: 36). In praying to the Father for his disciples Christ says: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John 17: 14). Now, if Christ's kingdom is not of this world, and his followers are not of the world, it is clear to my mind that we, who claim to be his followers, have no right to vote at the political elections of the world. We are subjects of another kingdom.

When one comes from a foreign nation and wishes to become a citizen of the United States, he has to comply with the naturalization laws, take the oath of allegiance, etc. And if he afterwards takes part in the political affairs of the nation whence he came, he is counted a traitor. So we, when we applied for admission into the kingdom of Christ, were required to comply with the naturalization laws. While we did not take the oath, we did vow allegiance, which should be as binding as the oath. Thus we were made subjects of Christ's kingdom. I fail to see how we can be subjects of two kingdoms at the same time.

We are commanded to pray for our rulers (1 Tim. 2: 2); but I have never found where we were commanded to help place them in office. By voting we do, to some extent, violate our nonresistant principles.

Another reason: The Brethren who think they must vote do not see alike, but vote in direct opposition to one another. Taking this into consideration, I doubt very much whether there ever was an election in which, if the Brethren's votes had all been thrown out, it would have made any difference in the result. If this be true, it seems to me we would better all stay away from the polls and let the kingdoms of this world take care of their own business, for I feel sure that we can do a vast amount more good at the altar of prayer than we could at the ballot box.

Now I have not written this for the sake of argument or controversy, but out of a heart of love for the cause of Christ and his kingdom.

The Children's Hour.

BY OLIVE MILLER.

AMONG the various movements that were inaugurated at the Winona Conference, perhaps none proved more worthy of perpetuation than the children's service. During the Conference week these were held twice each day, and hundreds of children were in attendance. Little pilgrims, indeed, they seemed, as they assembled from far and near and ascended the terraces which led to the Westminster hotel. Here, in the Chapel, they were taken in charge by those who, through their consecration to the Lord's work made these services possible.

It would be impossible, in this limited space, to enumerate the various features of these meetings, but suffice it to say, that these services were made so interesting and uplifting that not only were the children fascinated, but the older girls and boys became eager listeners, and adults, both men and women, formed no small part of the audience. Many times standing room was at a premium.

Who can measure the good that these services accomplished? The very fact that they were planned for the children and for them primarily, was sufficient evidence to these little ones of the church's interest in their spiritual welfare. The exercises gave them something noble to think about and to take home with them. They learned spiritual songs, they recited Scriptural quotations, they took part in the prayer service, and gave intelligent response to those who addressed them. To some of these children, no doubt, this was a new and delightful experience, and as long as they live they will cherish the memory of Westminster Chapel, with its hallowed associations, which meant so much to them in the formative period of their lives.

It was not without some misgivings that the plan of these children's meetings was worked out. To secure speakers for children is a difficult task, but the results of the efforts put forth surely exceeded the expectations of all who had labored and sacrificed and prayed that much good might be accomplished.

We trust that the "Children's Hour" this year will be even more successful than last, and may the blessings of God, our Father, rest upon all who shall direct this work!

The Most Lovely Face.

BY NORA D. BURKETT.

We were much interested in a picture and editorial in a recent MESSENGER, "The Loveliest Grandmother." How unique! Then we fell to thinking: What makes a lovely face? Bright eyes that look upon you with merriment, sweet smiles that circle the mouth, that always speaks kind words, an intelligent look that always sees humanity's needs, ears that can hear all of its woes and not complain, or tell unnecessary things that will not help another,—all of these, and even more, go to make a lovely face.

Dear sisters, ye who wish to become the loveliest grandmothers, or to be lovely now, be sure to do kind deeds, think good thoughts, live pure lives, and read good literature. Do not repeat the evil things you may hear, not even from a friend, for often they are misleading and untrue. Do all which may fall to your lot, be it ever so small. Just remember that many small things will be the great things some day. The great secret of a beautiful face is happiness within Conference Thoughts.

BY C. M. WENGER.

THE near approach of our Annual Conference causes our mind to be absorbed in the various phases of the meeting, and our interest for its success should be well manifested. The Christian fellowship, love and loyalty, here seen, greatly strengthen the tie that binds, and are a great, spiritual uplift to those who attend.

Much of the spiritual tone of the meeting, and the reverence shown, are due to suitable location and environments. It would be well for Standing Committee to learn whether the State District applying has suitable grounds available, in considering the call.

Conference has directed that Assembly or Chautauqua Grounds be given the preference, whenever available, and such a location should be an inducement for granting the meeting.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

A Study in Will-Power.

Acts 20: 17-24.

For Sunday Evening, June 4, 1911.

Let the leader distinguish between a strong will and obstinacy and stubbornness, giving one or two instances of each.

The following instances of weakness and strength may be assigned to Workers the week before:

I. Strong Joshua.—Joshua 24: 15.
II. Weak Aaron.—Ex. 32: 1, 2.
III. Strong Moses.—Ex. 32: 19-21.
IV. Weak Jehoshaphat.—1 Kings 22.
V. Strong Paul.—Acts 21: 13.
VI. Weak Pilate.—Matt. 27: 24.

Note.—(1) Name other Bible instances and discuss them. (2) Name instances in history. (3) Is the boy that yields to the temptation of using tobacco, weak or strong? The girl that munches gum at church—weak or strong? (4) Point out some of the dangers to which a weak will exposes one. Tell how to strengthen the will.

PRAYER MEETING

Christ Winning the World.

John 12: 20-32.

For Week Beginning June 4, 1911.

1. The Cheering Prospect.—The whole world is now practically open for the reception of the Gospel. The Bible is printed in over three hundred dialects and languages. There are wonderfully increased facilities for intercommunication. Wonderful revivals, with Pentecostal power, are frequent in heathen lands. The increase in membership in heathen countries is thirty times greater than at home, in proportion to the number of ministers employed (John 3: 14-18; Eph. 2: 11-19).

2. Momentous Changes.—Napoleon said: "When China is moved, it will change the face of the globe," basing his prophecy on the fact that China, with one-fourth of earth's inhabitants, is a factor of power. But India, Japan and Africa are also moving. Should not every Christian arise in his strength and answer his own prayers by taking this world for Christ, his king (Eph. 3: 14-21)?

3. Our Part in the Work.—Claiming to be fellow-workers together with Christ, great responsibilities are resting upon us. Only by unreserved consecration to the work can we hope to escape the just censure of "High Heaven." An officer of the British army declares that the members of that body could place a proclamation given them into the hand of every person of the world inside of eighteen months. Christianity has failed to do a similar task in eighteen hundred years. It is high time to be up and doing. Why not go forward, as a united band, to the mighty conquest of the great world field (Matt. 28: 19, 20)?

HOME AND FAMILY

The Call.

Have you heard the call, my brother,—
The call of some orphan child,
Asking a place by your hearthstone,
With mother-love, gentle and mild?

Are you heeding the call, my brother?
Have you opened your heart and home
To some lonely little orphan,
Bidding it tenderly, "come"?

Christ in his loving compassion
Said: "Suffer the children to come."
He pressed them close to his bosom
And blessed each dear little one.

Then open the door of your heart,
Let the Savior dwell within,
And many a homeless orphan
Will be saved from destruction and sin.

The Hundredth One.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

SANKEY sang the song of "the ninety and nine who safely lay in the shelter of the fold." He sang it far and wide, until there are few parables of our Lord better known than this one, with all it holds of comfort and warning. And we are glad that it is true that the majority of people manage to live, somehow, in measurable content, and enjoy some of the good things of life. If they are not rich in money, they are well off in other ways, for we are not thinking of the spiritual significance of the parable.

The vast majority of people have much to be thankful for. Good health and good homes and kind friends are the portion of the ninety and nine. But here and there is the hundredth one who is lacking in some of the graces of mind or body, perhaps, or else he has become embittered and disheartened and at odds with the world. The hundredth one is somewhere, away from the ninety and nine, it may be in the lonely desert where none may ask him of his failure, or it may be in some dangerous place where death comes speedily to those who dare to risk their lives.

It is not the ninety and nine who need our care. They are safe in the fold. They are many and can, to a certain extent, take care of themselves. The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost. The hundredth one is lost and needs our help. The plain business of humanity, of men and women, is to go and seek and save this hundredth one. But do we do it? Yes, we make a great effort to save the one who wanders off alone, and keeps a long distance away from the fold. We save one now and then. We have reform schools, and jails and other places, to punish them. And when once they are behind prison walls there is but little hope of their coming back to the fold. Oh, for more patience in dealing with this one, who differs from the rest and is difficult to manage, and worries us! He is unable to cope with the industrial conditions of today, and so, sometimes, he becomes a pauper. He is the brother for whom God has made us responsible; we are his keeper. His hovel may be down at the corners, where saloons are thickest. What of that? What are you doing to save him? He may be a homesick boy, a homeless man, a girl out of work; we need to go after and save this hundredth one.

In the church the ninety and nine are usually in their places on Sunday morning, ready to encourage and help the minister in every way possible. They love the house of the Lord and are willing servants of his. They are ready to help the hundredth one back to the fold and save him here and now for a life of happy usefulness. There may have been some of the ninety and nine in ancient times, and in far-away lands, who sat with folded hands, piously contemplative, and thought of the good, the beautiful and the pure, as Paul commanded. They were so isolated that they would not let their minds dwell on the outrageous wickedness of men in authority, and the vice of reeking alleys, the suffering of the helpless and downtrodden in all the lands and seven seas. They did not want to think of these things, much less would they leave their cells to go to alleviate these deplorable conditions. They were saints, ever bowing before the crucifix or the altar. Today we do not believe in their methods. The ninety and nine in the fold do not come by their halos so easily. Today they must step out in the front ranks of the battle against sin; they must step down in the choking dust of the course; they labor in the vineyard through the heat and burden of the day. If any man is better than another, he proves it by stooping down and with a firm hand helping his groveling brother to arise and stand upon his feet, and to become a man.

The hundredth one in the home should be supported and helped by the strength of the better members of the family. We are all so familiar with the crimes of Absalom, who was the "hundredth one" in David's family. His mother was a princess, and it may have been that fact which made Absalom aspire to the throne. He was very attractive,—the hundredth one often is. "In all Israel there was none to be so much praised for beauty as Absalom." But he was bold and bad and wicked; he deliberately tried to undermine his father's reputation and regard among his people, and then resort to arms to gain the throne for himself. He had no more honor for God than he had for his father. David was getting old and his treatment of Absalom was weak; and neither punished him for his crimes nor restored him to favor, and so the young man went on his downward career. There are fathers who do worse than David. They, by words and habits, give to their sons a love for brutal sports and stimulants. They sow to the wind and reap the whirlwind. The hundredth one has the idea that it is more fun to sin than to be good. His lip curls contemptuously when the talk is of good men and what they do. He wants nothing to do with the ninety and nine; he wants to be known as a bad man. And it is not until the lights are out, and the noise of Belshazzar's feast dies away, and leaves the banquet hall deserted, that he begins to see what he has lost. He has missed the road and it is too late to retrace his steps.

July 6, 1189, an English king died of grief. His son who should have reigned in his stead proved to be another Absalom. He aspired to the throne and rebelled against his father. The king pardoned him fully and freely, but it was all in vain. Hard and treacherous to the heart's core, nothing won him or bound him to truth and loyalty. He fled to France at last and from there tried to usurp his father's place. At last, when dying, the father sent him the signet ring of forgiveness once more. Two other sons conspired against the king,—even the youngest and best beloved. Is it any wonder that the old king, worn out with sorrow, died at last? Oh, the hundredth one is a terrible problem! All the worst crimes of the world have been committed by him; the misery and wretchedness is due to him. Unless we can convert him to God and a useful life, the situation is staggering.

Let us renew our efforts. If one has wandered away, let us try to reclaim him. If one is growing restless under the quiet protection of the fold, let us help him to find joy in well-doing. In the negro dialect we have a few verses which tell us of the loving shepherd's care. The shepherd is looking out over the meadows where the long night rain has made everything gloomy, and he asks the hireling shepherd whether the sheep have all come in. The hireling shepherd answers that some of the sheep are black and thin and poor, but the rest are all brought in.

"Den de massa ob de sheepfol'
Dat guards de sheepfol' bin,
Goes down in de gloomerin' meadows,
Whar de long night rain begin.
So he lets down de bars of de sheepfol'
Callin' sof', 'Come in. Come in.'
Callin' sof', 'Come in. Come in.'

"Den up t'ro de gloomerin' meadows,
T'ro de col' night rain an win'
And up t'ro de gloomerin' rain-pal,
Whar de sleet fa' piercin' thin
De po' los' sheep ob de sheepfol'
Dey all comes gadderin' in."

Destroy Your Enemies.

BY WEALTHY A. BURKHOLDER.

It is recorded of a Chinese Emperor that, on being told that his enemies had revolted in one of the distant provinces, he said to his officers, "Come, follow me, and we will quickly destroy them." He marched forward, and the rebels submitted upon his approach.

All now thought that he would take revenge, and were surprised to see the captives treated with kindness and humanity.

"How is this?" said the chief officer. "Is this the manner in which your majesty fulfills his promise? Your royal word was given that your enemies should be destroyed, and behold, you have pardoned them all, and even caressed some of them."

"I promised," replied the emperor, "to destroy my enemies; I have fulfilled my word; for, see, they are enemies no longer; I have made friends of them."

"If thine enemy hunger, feed him . . . for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." Possibly it would be a good plan for many today to take lessons from the Chinese Emperor who, years ago, destroyed his enemies by treating them kindly. Too often it happens that the very definite instructions in the Book do not have the desired effect, simply because they are not practiced, and object lessons, like the above, must be had before being convinced.

It is simply surprising how unforgiving it is possible to be, and at the same time profess to be followers of Christ! There is no uncertainty, and no mistake in the teaching on this subject, and yet there are many who are slow to profit by it. Our Lord and Master has given us the example of destroying enemies, and as his subjects we should give earnest heed. He emphatically declares that unless we forgive men and women their mistakes and trespasses, he will not forgive us. Startling, but he means what he says.

After all, what good accrues from harboring feelings of spite and revenge? Who is any better by carrying a feeling of bitterness toward any one, much less toward one whom we profess to love? Certainly you can forgive if you want to, and you need not hinder the Lord's work by always remembering other people's mistakes. We all make blunders as we pass along, and we would like very much for those observing to throw the mantle of charity upon them, and entirely hide them. "As ye would have men do to you, do ye even so to them." This is the Golden Rule, and it is one of the commandments we are admonished to keep. Now, if we know our duty, let us try to do it, because it is only in the doing that the blessing comes. All over the land the Lord's work is often hindered because people harbor grudges and are not willing to forgive their neighbors and brethren. "So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts, forgive not every one his brother their trespasses."

Do not say you can not forgive. It's a poor religion that does not enable us to obey such a plain command. Of your own strength you can not, but in Philpp. 4: 19 we have these words, "But my God shall supply all your need." If you need grace to forgive, ask, and you will receive.

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

MORRILL, KANS.—We organized a Sisters' Mission Circle Oct. 27, 1898, and have been doing what we could ever since. We have sent donations to most of the cities where there is a Church of the Brethren. Our average attendance is eight. We meet every Thursday afternoon. We are glad to have our president, Sister Lizzie Lichty, with us again. She returned from California last Saturday. We hope to give a better report sometime in the future.—Mrs. Salina Kimmel, Secretary, Morrill, Kans., May 8.

BLACK SWAMP, OHIO.—The following is a report of our Sisters' Aid Society ending April 1, 1911. We met the second Thursday of each month. Our work was mostly sewing carpet rags, making aprons and other garments, piecing quilts and making comforts. We had a balance on hand, at the beginning of the year, of $14.60. We received during the year $19.41; paid for material and other expenses $7.96; amount in the treasury, $26.36. We reelected our officers for another year, with Sister Maggie Crago, president; Sister Asenath Baker, vice-president; Sister Ella E. Garner, secretary; Sister Emma Garner, treasurer. Sisters Elizabeth Wagoner and Asenath Baker are a committee. May the Lord help us to do more and better work this coming year!—Ella E. Garner, R. D. 1, Walbridge, Ohio, May 8.

Bro. Galen B. Royer has just returned from a business trip to Roanoke, Va.

The correct address of Bro. James M. Neff is Springville, Cal.; not Springfield or Daunt.

Bro. James M. Moore is conducting a series of meetings at Grundy Center, Iowa. He reports an encouraging interest.

As the fruits of a series of meetings at Portland, Oregon, conducted by Bro. E. M. Studebaker, six were gathered into the fold.

Bro. G. E. Yoder, of Elk Lick., Pa., is engaged in a revival at Uniontown, this State, and reports a good attendance and an encouraging interest.

The first copy of "Kingdom Songs," just from the bindery, was laid on our desk only a short time before closing this page. It is a beauty, and will please our patrons at first sight.

Since June 4 is a day of fasting and prayer for all the churches in the Brotherhood, we wonder if any of our members will be thoughtless enough to arrange for a big dinner on that day.

Bro. W. M. Howe, the pastor, devoted one week to a series of meetings before the feast at the Walnut Grove house, Johnstown, Pa., and six entered the fold by confession and baptism.

Bro. M. S. Frantz, of Hartman, Colo., did some effectual evangelistic work at Monitor, Kans., which resulted in ten young people putting on Christ in baptism, and one is awaiting the rite.

A series of meetings at Cave Rock, a mission point in the Botetourt congregation, Va., conducted by Bro. J. W. Ikenberry, closed with five applicants for membership, and one reclaimed.

Some of the elders and pastors are announcing to their congregations that Sunday, June 4, is set apart as a day of fasting and prayer among our people. This should be done in all parts of the Brotherhood.

Some of the churches are lifting splendid collections for the Annual Meeting offering. We hear of a congregation, not seven years old, that raised nearly $100. This means much more than $1 to the member.

The Gish Committee is now in a position to supply our ministers with three more new books. We call attention to the announcement on page 325, this issue. Wide-awake ministers can not afford to ignore such a fine proposition.

Bro. John F. Cline, an elder residing at McPherson, Kans., was killed May 8 by the caving in of a sand bank. He emigrated from Rockingham County, Va., to Kansas, and for a number of years was quite active in the ministry, giving considerable attention to work on the mission field.

Since our last report from Vyara, India, twelve natives have been baptized. The outlook at this point is very promising, though,—as Bro. A. W. Ross writes,—there should be more helpers, and the need of a Bible school is felt keenly.

Since Bro. J. T. Myers' health will not permit him to attend the St. Joseph Conference, his place on the Standing Committee will be filled by Bro. J. Kurtz Miller, the alternate. The information did not reach us until the Conference Booklet was printed.

Since Bro. C. B. Smith has left Red Cloud, Nebr., and located at Morrill, Kans., Bro. J. Edwin Jarboe is alone in charge of the work at Red Cloud. We are told that he would greatly appreciate the assistance of some minister who cares to make that part of the West his home.

On another page we are publishing the obituary of Bro. Andrew Bashor, of McAlisterville, Pa., who died very suddenly. He served the church in the ministry about fifty years, was in the eldership twenty-five years and had charge of the Lost Creek church. He was active and faithful in the work of his Master.

Our people need not bring their Hymnals to the St. Joseph Conference. Our fine, new song book, "Kingdom Songs," will be used exclusively. The book contains 290 splendid songs. Some of them are for temperance and other lines of work, while a large number are especially adapted to the Sunday-school.

On page 329, under the heading, "How Is Your Church?" Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh is making a splendid suggestion, but instead of preparing such information for the News Department, which is usually crowded, we would instruct our correspondents to prepare it for the Round Table page. In fact, we would be pleased to hear from scores of churches along the line mentioned. Let us know how you are getting along. What is proving helpful to your work, and what are your hindrances?

Bro. I. B. Trout reports a pleasant trip to New Carlisle, Ohio, his home church while he lived in that State. He was present at the largely-attended feast, and says that he is greatly encouraged over the outlook of the congregation. Here may be found a number of fine young members of good culture and a high order of spirituality, such as would be a credit to any community. Many of these young people have settled down in life, and this gives the congregation an element of strength and prosperity.

Sister Amanda Witmore, of Portland, Texas, writes us that she and her husband, Jacob Witmore, are reading the Bible through this year. This does not mean that they have never read the Book through before, but they are going through it again, by reading a few chapters each day. They are not only reading the Book, but they are studying it as they go. We are wondering how many of our patrons have read the Bible through since the beginning of the year. We should like to hear from all of them.

The first new school catalogue to reach us this spring is the Annual Catalog of Mount Morris College, a neat publication of fifty-three pages. Some of our school-men may not think so, but when we have a little leisure, we sometimes take pleasure in leafing through the catalogs of the Brethren schools, just to see what is in them. If some of the parents who read the Messenger would spend a few hours studying some of these catalogs, they would surely feel like sending their boys and girls to one of the Brethren schools.

On page 334 our dear Bro. Strickler, of Loraine, Ill., has, in a pathetic way, something to say regarding the death of his wife. It will be observed that she sometimes assisted him in the anointing services, a thing that the wife of an elder may very consistently do in the absence of an elder or a minister to assist in the work. In the absence of an official to aid him, an elder can call any member to his assistance, and in case of necessity can, of course, call on his wife. Just how much of this is done on the frontier fields, will never be made known, but the Lord knows it all.

A correspondent at one of our mission points proposes to furnish visiting preachers with a list of the subjects that have been treated by former ministers, so there need be no repeating of subjects. The idea is a new one, and yet it has merits. It is just a little embarrassing for a congregation to have several visiting ministers follow each other, all discoursing on the same topic.

Eld. S. H. Bashor, of Waterloo, Iowa, at one time associated with us on the editorial staff of the Brethren at Work, and widely known by thousands of our readers as an active evangelist of thirty years ago, called at the Messenger sanctum last week. He is connected with the Progressive Brethren, but, on account of his health, seldom preaches. His time is taken up with other matters. He had not been in our office for over thirty years, and our conversation drifted to the scenes of the past. He speaks kindly of the Brethren, and especially of his old comrades.

Some of our readers are in the habit of writing letters or cards of condolence to those bereft of their loved ones. The custom is a good one, and should be encouraged. It is said that Sister Zollers, of South Bend, Ind., received over one hundred letters from people who were deeply affected by the sudden death of her husband, Bro. Geo. D. Zollers. This is only an instance of how thoughtful our patrons have been, on many occasions of this character. They will never know how their letters lighten the burdens of those weighed down with the great sorrows that come into their lives.

The Friends are at work organizing churches among their converted Indians in Washington and Idaho. They have a good influence among the Indians, and for generations have made mission work among them a specialty. It is encouraging to note that one of the leading Indian Bishops has placed a ban on tobacco, and now the use of the weed is to be discontinued among the different tribes. First the use of whiskey was stopped, then immorality, upon the part of both men and women, was done away with, and now, since the use of tobacco has been declared one of the evils of the land, another step in the interest of the clean and simple life will be insisted upon. A movement of this sort should put the tobacco users among the whites to thinking.

We are now filling orders for the new song book, known as "Kingdom Songs." The book is adapted to the use of the Sunday-school, the prayer meeting, Christian Workers' Societies and, in fact, to all occasions of praise. It is well printed, neatly bound, and contains a fine selection of songs,—the very best to be had. We feel confident that it will please our people from one end of the land to the other. The book was made with a view of filling a long-felt want in the Brotherhood. It is to be hoped that it will be quite generally adopted. The price is thirty-five cents a copy, prepaid; $3.50 a dozen, prepaid, and $25 a hundred, not prepaid. When ordering say whether round notes or shaped notes are desired. The book will be used at the St. Joseph Conference to the exclusion of all others.

This will be the last issue of the Messenger to reach our patrons before thousands of them start to the Annual Meeting at St. Joseph. We are wishing all those, attending the Conference, a safe and pleasant trip, and we trust that we shall all have the pleasure of enjoying one of the best National Conferences yet held in the Brotherhood. Much, indeed, will depend upon the spirit that we take to the meeting. If we go in the spirit that characterized the Master in all his labors, we may rest assured that love and harmony will be the predominating influences of the gathering. If we go resolved to lay self aside and labor only for the honor and the glory of God, the Holy Spirit can and will work with us in accomplishing that which will advance the interests of the kingdom. We certainly should never permit our differences to interfere with the unity that should characterize the children of God. We should move fast along the lines of agreement, but on all matters of difference we should learn to move slowly.

We hear of a minister who may not do much preaching for a while. He is not planning to make money, but he says that he does not understand his Bible well enough to preach the Gospel as it should be presented to the people. He now proposes to devote a few years to a careful study of the Word. Like Timothy, he is to study so as to show himself approved unto God, that he may be able to rightly divide the Word of Truth. The brother is to be commended for his course. The Lord needs preachers, and he needs them badly, but he wants men who know how to feed the flock of God as it should be fed.

An aged minister writes us saying that he sat by the bedside of his devoted wife and saw the light of life go out. As he viewed the scene it seemed like a beautiful sunset in the evening of a long and useful life. He is sad, because he is lonely, but happy to think how pleasant was the going of the companion of his youth, the mother of his children, and the angel of his household. He says that his heart is filled with joy when he contemplates the touching incidents connected with the passing of a charming soul from the scenes of earth to the unsurpassed beauties in the land of pure delight. He takes the ideal view of death. A new world of thought is opened up to him. Death has been robbed of its terrors, and his soul is filled with delight while awaiting his turn to enter the land where saints immortal reign.

Railroad Rates to Annual Meeting.

The following letter, just received from the Southwestern Passenger Association, will be of interest to our Brethren and friends in Oklahoma. D. L. M.

Eld. D. L. Miller,
Ch'rm'n, Committee on Transportation,
Mount Morris, Ill.,

Dear Sir:—Referring to my letter of March 28th, advising that interested lines had individually authorized AN OPEN RATE OF TWO CENTS PER MILE for the round trip from all points in Missouri, Kansas and Arkansas, (under the jurisdiction of this Association) to St. Joseph, Mo., and return, account of the above occasion; tickets to be on sale May 30 to June 5, inclusive, 1911, limited for return to reach original starting point prior to midnight of June 30, 1911: For your information beg to advise that our lines have also individually authorized the following fares and arrangements from points in Oklahoma, to St. Joseph, Mo., and return, for this meeting.

OPEN RATE OF TWO CENTS PER MILE in each direction for the round trip from all points in Oklahoma, to St. Joseph, Mo., and return; tickets to be on sale May 30 to June 5, inclusive, 1911, limited for return to reach original starting point prior to midnight of June 28, 1911. Tickets to be good going commencing date of sale and for continuous passage in each direction.

Trusting that same will meet with your approval, we are,

Respectfully,
J. E. Hannegan,
Chairman.

Feet-Washing as a Religious Rite.

Some one wrote Prof. J. M. McGarvey, of Lexington, Kentucky, for information regarding the feet-washing referred to in John 13:14. McGarvey's answer was published in the Christian Standard, and then copied into the Christian Evangelist, being highly commended by the editor, who looks upon the answer as "presenting admirably the hollow mockery of observing as a church ordinance, an ancient act of hospitality from which its original meaning and spirit have long since departed!" The so-called admirable answer reads as follows:

A brother asks me, "What is your teaching against feet-washing as a church ordinance?" I answer, There is no intimation in the New Testament that it was ever enjoined or observed as such. When the Lord washed the feet of his disciples, he did it while they were seated in a private house at supper, and after a walk, in which their feet were soiled. He told them, "As I have washed your feet ye also ought to wash one another's feet." But he did not wash their feet in the church assembly, or when they had no need of it for comfort. If, then, we meet in the church with our feet clean, and covered with stockings and patent-leather shoes and go through a useless and ridiculous performance of baring our feet and washing them, we do not as he did, but more as the Corinthians did when they turned the Lord's Supper into a feast, and some of them drank too much wine. Wash one another's feet when they need it, and when there is no servant at hand to do it.

Now it so happens that the practice of washing one another's feet never was an ancient act of hospitality, and it seems strange that the editor of the Evangelist and Prof. McGarvey do not know it. Ancient visitors, when supplied with water, washed their own feet, and possibly servants washed the feet of their masters, but, aside from the editor and the professor, who ever heard of the ancients washing one another's feet? Since the editor and the professor are good at citing Scripture, when treating some other subjects, it would be to their credit to name the chapter and verse in support of the ancients washing one another's feet.

We are told that, after walking in the dust and getting their feet soiled, it was needful that the apostles should have them washed. This is regarded as up-to-date Jerusalem ethics. Now it is remarkable that no one ever thought about Jesus having his feet cleansed, for he had been in the dust just as much as the apostles. Then, since he was at the head of the table, and was supposed to conform fully to the home ethics of his time, it would seem very inconsistent for him to preside at the festive board with soiled feet, while all the apostles, including the traitor, Judas, had clean feet. In view of feet-washing for outward cleansing only, this would have been a breach of good manners,—almost an unpardonable breach.

But Mr. McGarvey sees nothing but outward cleansing in the feet-washing of John 13. In this respect he is no better off than Peter was before he received the Holy Ghost, for Jesus told him, "What I do thou knowest not now" (v. 7), implying, of course, as stated, that he should know later. Peter was not slow about learning his lesson, for in this instance he readily submitted after another explanation, and was anxious to have his feet washed. He then, for the first time, saw that there was something in the rite. We are sorry that the professor has not studied the New Testament with a like result.

But we are informed that the services took place in a private house, and not in a church assembly, and for this reason feet-washing is not a religious rite to be observed in the church. Very well, what about the loaf and cup? Were they not instituted in the same place, and at the same time? If feet-washing is to be ruled out because of the place, pray, tell us why the loaf and cup should not be ruled out for the same reason. It is strange logic that would retain one and rule out the other.

Then, suppose the saints do go to church with clean, well-dressed feet, what does that have to do with a service that the Master intended to have a spiritual import? One might as well think of discarding the loaf and cup, because he had just eaten before coming to meeting, all that any mortal needs to satisfy hunger.

But why all this evasion of the plain "thus saith the Lord"? Jesus told the disciples that they ought to wash one another's feet, evidently in the light of its spiritual import, for he had given them an example that they should do as he had done to them. What more does the Bible student need? When the Master says a man should do a thing, that ought to be the end of all controversy.

As for a further intimation of the rite, after its institution in the upper room, one has read his New Testament to little advantage if he does not see more than the common custom in 1 Tim. 5: 10, where we read about the widow washing "the saints' feet." The mere fact that the act was confined to the saints, shows clearly that it was a religious rite, the continuation of the rite that was established by Jesus in Jerusalem.

How Is Your Church?

While the Messenger devotes a page or more each week to church news, it seems to us that the character of the news might undergo some change for variety's sake, if nothing more. It seems to us that a statement as to how we are getting along, as individual churches or congregations, would not only be interesting but also helpful. Are we successful in our work? Are we increasing in number, and in spiritual life as well? If not, what are some of the hindering causes? We live in different States and are surrounded by different peoples and nationalities,—some in the rural districts, others in towns and cities. This means that we must rub up against, and deal with, different customs, habits and modes of thought which, necessarily, more or less affect our church life and our manner of doing things. They also have much to do with our successes, our joys, our discouragements and our sorrows. We all have our battles to fight against a common enemy.

But this common enemy has many forms of approach, and to meet and overcome them we must not only recognize the fact that the character of the enemies which we have to meet greatly differs, but also that the means used in meeting their attacks must correspondingly differ. And these are some of the things which we may learn by giving an occasional write-up of what we are doing and how we are getting along.

Under the heading, "How Is Your Own Church?" the Christian Herald has been devoting several columns each week to news of this kind; and to us it has been very interesting, and instructive as well. From these items we learn the experiences, the successes and the struggles of other churches, and in what they consist. As far as we have been reading them, we find that in most cases they are very similar to our own; so that, no matter how much we may be divided into sects and cults, Satan is working in all of them.

But what are some of the troubles? From Albany, Oregon, the reporter says: "We have a pleasure-seeking community. We have 6,000 inhabitants and ten churches. Three of them have an average attendance of twenty-five, and the other seven have about one hundred at each service. These are little more than a club. The lodge and moving-picture shows, skating rinks and the theater are the plague of Albany." This sounds very familiar and common, because all these things are the common curse of most of our town and city churches.

A pastor at Malden, N. Y., says he found his church there low in spirituality. The money needed had been largely raised by fairs, festivals, etc., but he has been trying to bring his people to the gospel standard way of giving: "The church has been reawakened. We preach a whole Gospel and the temperance cause is earnestly advocated. Yes, festivals and fairs are generally made use of to get money for the Lord's cause by a fun-loving church. And a whole Gospel is the best remedy."

Another church, from Lemoore, Cal., reports: "The reason why we have so little power in our church is because it has turned its power over to the lodges. They are doing the work the church was called to do. And when even the ministers belong to them, what can we expect?"

Sure, my brother, you are right. What can we expect? If the lodge is better than the church of Jesus Christ, why not join the services of the two and hold them together? In this way the lodge might bring the church up to the higher standard, and they might thus be helpful to each other. The reporter closes with this couplet:

> "The church and the lodge,
> Can't go hand in hand;
> The one must fall
> While the other shall stand."

A church from Eastern Ohio says: "What do you think of a church that will have a Ladies' Aid Society Supper on Wednesday evening to make money, on Thursday evening a preparatory service for communion, and on Friday evening a Brotherhood banquet? Next Sabbath it has communion,—all inside of a few days. These are all held in the church. We, as church people, are losing our reverence for the house of God."

We make notes of these few from the many given, because they contain some of the most prominent sins that are worming their way into the churches and robbing them of their God-given power. The lodges, fairs, festivals, shows, skating rinks, dancing halls and the theaters are among the prominent evils that are facing the church today, and it is well that we continue to stand firmly against them.

The other evening a prominent citizen from the lower end of the city came up on the hill, where most of our people reside, and, as he looked around, he said;

"What lovely homes you people have up here! It is so pretty, quiet and peaceful. You have nothing to bother you,—no lodges to attend, no Red Men, Eagles and Elks to trouble about." "No," said we, "we love and enjoy our homes, and therefore we try to make them pleasant and attractive." So we all ought to do. The Christian religion,—the church of Jesus Christ,—is all that any of us need. Having this, we have all that is essential to human happiness, both for the time that now is and for that which is to come. It is sufficient for all our social wants and relations, and it is our only place where we can look for our spiritual needs and desires.

And, as to how our church is, we have some things to discourage, but many more things to encourage us. The Lord has given us a new, convenient and comfortable house in which to worship, wholly consecrated to his service. The services are interesting, powerful and uplifting. Our attendance is good, and slowly we are growing in number. Our late communion season,—the first one held in our new house,—was one among our very best. We hope that the new life and strength may be a blessing that will abide with us for many days to come. H. B. B.

Old Folks' Homes and Orphanages.

It would be interesting to know how much money the church, as a whole, has invested in old folks' homes and orphanages. This represents, to some extent, the interest felt. Of course, there is much labor, in one form and another, invested in these institutions, not represented in dollars and cents, so that the dollar mark is not the final gauge. Then, too, there are those who feel keen interest, but are without means with which to express it.

The old folks' homes far exceed the orphanages both in number and the amount of money they represent. The former has become rather general over the Brotherhood, while the latter is just in its incipiency. Many of the State Districts own homes, either separately or jointly; while only a few of them own orphanages in any shape. This is owing, in part at least, to the fact that more effort has been made in behalf of the old folks' home movement, and for much longer time than the orphanage movement. Besides, our people are readily touched with a sense of distress on the part of the aged and helpless.

It is commendable to provide homes and comforts for the aged, the infirm and the poor. Be it far from us to condemn it. Jesus commended it. He said, "For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." Moses taught, "For the poor shall never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thy hand wide to thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land." Verily, the poor have not ceased in the land, nor shall they, and the obligation of the rich to them is plainly set forth. Both the law and the Gospel justify the use of means in the best form to provide for the poor and helpless; and old folks' homes may be the best way of doing it. I shall not assume the province of determining.

But the question I wish to raise, is as to the relative support the church is giving old folks' homes and orphanages. Much more has been done, and is being done now, for old folks' homes than orphanages. Is it the wise thing to do? Is it more charitable to care for the helpless aged, than the helpless young? And is it a good business proposition? These are very proper questions, and should be considered without fear or favor. No advantage should be taken, and, certainly, it is not the intention to say anything to hurt anybody.

I would answer all these question, No. It is not wise; it is not more charitable to provide for the helpless old than the helpless young; and certainly, it is not a good business proposition. It is right to provide the necessary comforts of life for the helpless old, as we have already observed; but it is not necessary to do more. This done, the purpose of the institution is reached; and it is not to be supposed that those who are proper subjects for such an institution would expect more. In some cases this principle is overlooked, and elaborate, expensive homes are built, which is not in keeping with the spirit of the institution; nor is it judicious in consideration of the urgent demand for money in every line of Christian endeavor. Money should always be spent with the view of accomplishing the greatest good and bringing to God the greatest honor.

The orphanage work opens a great field. Work among the young, in general, has always been the church's greatest field, and it must continue to be so. In the young lies the hope of the future. The orphans of the land—this class of the young especially—offers a great field. There are so many, many children the subjects of misfortune in its multitudinous forms. Many are not well born,—a heritage that, by right, belongs to every child,—and this misfortune must be overcome, as far as possible, by right training. Many children, born against the will of their parents, are neglected, deserted, rendered helpless, thrown upon the mercy of the public. Many of these, if given half a chance, grow up to be good and useful men and women. Many of these poor, helpless children, thrown out on the mercy of the world and finding none, are forced to habits of vice, fall into the company of the vicious and go to everlasting ruin, and who is responsible?

Here is a great field for charity and also for the profitable investment of money. Looking at the question from a business point of view, it would appear that this field can not have too much attention. The lives of these children are in the future, and money spent on them may be expected to yield fruitful returns. It is to provide for the future by caring for life at the proper time. Moreover, it is the surest way of bringing persons into the church. Very few orphans fail to go to the people who cared for them, when they seek church membership. It is the natural thing,—the thing to be expected.

It is clear, as the facts show, that orphanage work appeals to the church with much power. While the church, in the past, has given more support to old folks' homes than orphanages, this condition should be changed for the future, as commendable as old folks' homes are. A wise use should be made of the means with which we are entrusted. It should be apportioned on the basis of the relative value of things; and on this basis the young lead all other interests.

Citizenship.

Can one be a subject of the kingdom of heaven and a citizen of an earthly government at the same time? This probably depends upon the kind of earthly government referred to. If, in order to claim the rights and protection of citizenship, one must sacrifice Christian principles, then it follows that a true subject of the kingdom of heaven can not conscientiously claim citizenship in such a government. But in a government like the United States, where a citizen is not only unmolested, but is protected in the enjoyment of his religion, one may very conscientiously claim to be a citizen of the earthly government and also a subject of the kingdom of Christ. In the government of the United States one may vote or not,—just as he pleases,—and yet claim all the protection guaranteed to those who take the most active part in the affairs of the nation. Of each man the government makes two imperative demands: One is that he pays his taxes, and the other that he obeys the laws. He can vote or not, as he sees proper. In either case, in the event of war, he is by law exempt from military duty, if he belongs to a church that is opposed to war. As a matter of fact, every man, entitled to a vote in this country, is a citizen whether he wants to be or not. His religion has nothing to do with his citizenship, provided he pays his taxes and obeys the laws. If his conscience will not permit him to vote, that is all right with the government, but he remains a citizen all the same.

Marrying Out of the Church.

A minister who has spent years preaching the Gospel, writes us that his heart is sad because his daughter, a fine Christian woman, has married a man who is not a member of the church and, with his young wife, has chosen a location a hundred miles from where any of the Brethren live. This simply means that in time the devout young sister may be lost to the church, and that the children that come to her home will know little about the Brethren and what they teach. The young woman may possibly remain true to the church, but with an unconverted husband and surrounded by adverse influences, the chances are against her. But this is the result of members marrying outside of the church. The risk is a serious one, and, so far as possible, parents should in time advise their children against such a course. In large congregations, where young brethren and young sisters marry the unconverted children of Brethren families, the risk is not so great. But when a young brother or a young sister marries an outsider, who knows little or nothing about the Brethren, the situation, viewed from the spiritual side of life, becomes alarming. In this way the church has lost some of her most promising young people.

Consistency in Rebuking.

The editor of the Gospel Herald, Scottdale, Pa., thinks that, because we pointed out the inconsistency of tobacco users admonishing members for not attiring themselves as they should, we are opposed to calling sisters to account for fashionable dressing until the tobacco users reform. What we said was intended to convey no such an idea. He might as well accuse the Savior of not being in favor of extracting the mote from the eye until all the beams have been removed, just because he said that the man having a beam in his eye should not undertake to extract the mote from the brother's eye. The position we set forth is the right one, viz., that men who are following some of the fashions of the world should not undertake to admonish those who are following the fashions in some other respects. It is not the case of the pot calling the kettle black. It is a case of the black pot trying to clean up the black kettle,—a thing that can not be done that way. Men and women who rebuke others will do well to first see that the beam is removed from their own eye. This is not only good Christian ethics, but it is the very best of philosophy.

Where Are We Going?

A sister, after reading what was said in the Messenger about "To Whom Shall We Go?" says that what concerns her most is, Where are we going? She does not refer to our mission, educational, Sunday-school and other lines of helpful work, but to the disposition, upon the part of some of the members, to drift worldward. Some of them have gotten started in the direction of the world, and she is wondering where a stopping place will be found. The question is an important one, and we may well pause and ask, Where are we going and what shall the end be? We can drift until we become swallowed up by the world. But even that is not the end, for still later comes the day of reckoning. Candidly, where is the church going? Is she to drift with those who are headed towards the world, or is she to right about and stand for the good old gospel principles? To stand for the right means to succeed, while to drift worldward means failure.

Better Manners.

Since it is understood that the boy who is polite enough to remove his hat when he enters the house, is a better boy than the one who pays no attention to such things, and since the girl who says "please" and "thank you" is a much nicer girl than the one who cares nothing for pleasant ways, why not teach such things to children when they are young? Paul says, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." By this we may understand that good manners are not to be neglected. The polite boy has a better heart than the boy who is coarse in his ways and cares nothing for good manners. The girl who cultivates graceful ways in her own home, as well as elsewhere, is always a better-looking girl than the one who pays no regard to the little, lady-like acts. If these things were better understood by children, as well as by parents, there would be more nice people in the world than there are.

WORK AMONG THE COLORED RACE.

The Church of the Brethren at Denver is endeavoring to maintain an Orphanage and an Old Folks' Home and a "Mission Training School" for the negro race. While in Denver, this past winter, it was my privilege personally to come in touch with the work now being done there for the colored people.

The Workers.

For the past eight years Bro. Rhodes (col.) has been sacrificing in order to carry on this work. He is a college graduate, from Louisville, Ky., and seems to be a leader of his race. He is now a minister in the second degree, and is a faithful, consistent Christian. Since his baptism twenty others have been baptized.

Sister Campbell, the present matron of the Home, is a natural-born leader, and a graduate from a college at Nashville, Tenn. With such leaders available at the beginning of the work, there is certainly open, to the Brethren church, among the negro people, a great door of opportunity, and we are glad that the church is going to grasp it, before it passes by and is taken by others.

The Aim of the Work.

The primary object for the uplifting of any people should be the salvation of souls, and while the industrial side is not to be neglected, the value of the "Mission Training School" is to be especially emphasized.

It is the aim of the Mission Board of Northwestern Kansas and Northeastern Colorado, who have direct charge of the work, to prepare workers from among the best material, more energetic negroes, to go out among their own people, both in the United States as well as, later on, in Africa.

A Wide Field.

In Denver alone there are 10,000 of the negro people who need the Gospel as taught and practiced by the Brethren church. Already a call has come from another part of the Brotherhood, asking if the Brethren at Denver have any workers ready for them, as they wish to start work among the negro people, and as time goes by, such calls will be more numerous. Ought we not to be ready to supply them?

We, as a people, believe in the whole Gospel and that it ought to be carried to all people. Will we not enter this open door?

This institution is to be open for any negro orphans or old people in the United States, as long as there is room.

Industrial Development.

A small farm, that is within reach of the Denver city market, has been purchased, thus insuring an excellent market for all produce. Bro. Long, a man of good business ability, and possessing practical experience of irrigation farming, has been secured to superintend the work. With the excellent soil and plenty of irrigation available, and with a good market for vegetables and berries, a large part, and perhaps all, of the running expenses of the institution will be raised on the farm, when once it is established. At the same time the boys and girls are being taught good, honest toil is dignifying, and it is a real joy to see how they take hold of the work.

Encouraging Prospects.

When I was at the farm, one of the oldest boys was plowing. He had had only two or three days' experience but he plowed like an experienced farmer. This training is certainly an important part of the work, and should appeal to us as a church which has in plenty of good, hard work, and that, to be a symmetrical Christian, means to be trained in heart, head and hand.

The demand upon the management, to take promising orphan boys and girls to train and educate as workers, is now far in excess of the present accommodations.

Three or four of the boys are now members of the church, and their exemplary lives are such as to command the respect of the white people in the immediate vicinity of the Home.

Proper Training.

A high standard is ever held before the boys and girls by Bro. Rhodes. He teaches them that if they wish to amount to anything they must live so that people can trust them and love them.

Bro. Rhodes believes in the negro keeping his place, and he teaches the boys to do this. "By so doing," he says, "the white man will respect us." A better trained class of boys and girls one could not find anywhere. They are very happy in their new quarters, even though they are exceedingly crowded. Much of the furniture is piled up in the back yard for lack of room in the house, while the children are compelled to sleep on the floor and in the closets.

Under Authority of Mission Board.

The General Mission Board has sanctioned the work and given the privilege to canvass the Brotherhood for $15,000. But this amount will not be sufficient to buy the land and put up the needed building, although securing $10,000 ought to be erected this summer. May there be a liberal response to the needs of this worthy cause!

Purpose of the Institution.

The purpose of the work is found in Art. 1, Sec. 3, of the Constitution and By-laws.

"This Home shall be for the accommodation of orphan and homeless colored children, and old, infirm folks of the negro race, and for training and teaching the inmates as missionaries to establish the pure Gospel among the negro people."

Urgent Needs.

1. Funds to pay for the farm.

2. Several hundred dollars to put down a good, deep well for drinking water.

3. Funds sufficient to build a suitable building in which to house and care for the present inmates, as well as to admit of others, to be trained.

If any wish to donate toward this work, who are not called upon by the solicitors, you can send same to "The General Mission Board" who will see that it is used for the above purpose.

INDIA AND REBAPTISM.

—It is getting hotter and hotter, and will so continue till it rains in June.

—Bro. Ross and family are at Landour in the North, and Bro. Eby's are at Poona, east of Bombay. This change will do them good in several ways, and it is always a welcome thing to those who go.

—Four were baptized, not long ago, by Bro. Lellu Jalim at Chakdara, near Vyara, and fifteen at Ankleshwer. Pray for these new converts. On them is the hope of the future church.

—For our mission work among the people Heb. 8: 10, the Lord's covenant, is a beautiful thing:

> "I will put my laws into their mind,
> And on their heart also will I write them:
> And I will be to them a God,
> And they shall be to me a people.
> And from the least to the greatest of them,
> All shall know me."

—We who are enjoying the realization before our very eyes, and the fulfillment of these covenants as these with the people who will put their trust in him, have a joy that nothing else quite equals. And in the midst of that joyous experience, we can not but feel a deep degree of heartfelt sorrow for the barrenness of those Christian lives whose ideas of religion exclude from the covenant those who, unto the present time, have not been brought into contact with the Savior of men. I, for my own part, can not quite see where there is any sweetness in the life that excludes from its prayers, from its giving and from its limited thought, any section of the whole world. To me it is an axiom that God is interested in the whole world. It is an axiom that truth will stand, and error go down. It is an axiom that men can take part in the work, with God, of bringing truth throughout the world and in the hearts of men, and so become partners with God.

—It is most gratifying to some of us, to read the report of the committee on rebaptism, and we wish it to pass the coming Annual Conference by a large majority. There are many reasons for this prayer:

(1) It will unify the body. The question is a recurring one, and bound to be so; for those who are on the frontier line of battle are called on to answer an unanswerable opposition every time the question arises.

(2) It will make the body more Spiritual. When we are led to realize that it is not in being rebaptized by water, but baptized and rebaptized by the Spirit, it will be a means of blessing to us all, without fail.

(3) It will strengthen our position on the baptism question. We baptize by trine immersion and by that only. But, we do not accept trine immersion baptism except when we have been the administrator of it. To a thoughtful person on the outside of the Brethren church, this position only tends to weaken our position on the question of baptism, for to him it becomes not a matter of baptism by trine immersion but baptism by the Brethren.

(4) It will clear up a number of complexities. If we reject the baptism of any one who has been baptized by trine immersion, by another than ourselves, then what will we do with the baptism of the first eight?—for that first baptism, if we depend on LAW, was illegal. Again, if we insist that so much depends on the preacher, that is, on the administrator, how about those who have been baptized by men who were living in sin at the time, yet whose sin became known only afterwards? If we insist on rebaptism, these good brethren must have it done over again. Numerous such examples might be given without going far to find them.

(5) To pass the paper is the only reasonable thing to do. By so doing, we determine, once for all, not to make a man take again what he has taken in good faith, but we ask him to accept what hitherto he has not accepted. And it seems to me we might well put the position in sacred words and say, "Ye have heard it said that a man ought to be baptized over again when he comes into your assembly, but I say unto you, that if he has received the baptism of the Scriptures in good faith teach him what he has not yet learned, and receive him, nothing doubting."

—Our work in India is decidedly growing, and it will grow. From day to day the signs are before us of the future church, and the development thereof. It is a pleasure to know that we have now men among us, here, —heathen converts,—who are peaceable and quiet in their general deportment. Not long before having turned their faces and their hearts towards the Christ, were troublesome to the Government and to their neighbors, and to the whole community. I think of one such now,—not far from Ankleshwer,—who, on one occasion, went to a neighboring town and secured two buffaloes. How he got them, I am not quite sure. He brought them to his village, hewed them to pieces after the Bhil fashion, and treated the whole Bhil village to a general meat feast! Government got onto it, he was arrested, and brought to court in Ankleshwer, but nothing more happened. That man now is a leader among his people. Only a few days ago, when a number of applicants came to us, seeking the Way, I met the man who told them about this religion, and to my surprise, they mentioned this leader's name. Praise the Lord! The religion of the Lord Jesus makes men over again, and makes them new. This is not our theory, but is our blessed experience. W. B. Stover.

Ankleshwer, India, April 21.

PING TING CHOU, CHINA.

At this date, April 6, the winter snow has only just disappeared and the spring rains have arrived to awaken the sleeping buds and seed. The winter wheat has a long green rows across the fields. The farmers are busy everywhere, clearing and cultivating their fields for the spring sowing. Most of the work is done by hand and none of the fields are much larger than our gardens at home. But they know how to do intensive farming, and manage to make a living on these small fields.

Our province is still blessed with peace,—no famine, no plague, no uprising. The plague, which threatened this province a short time ago, seems now to be stayed out in these parts. The mission doctors and officials are working together bravely for its extermination from all parts of China, and the Lord is blessing their efforts. The Lord has heard the prayers of the Christians for this part of his mission field, and will give these people one more chance to hear the Gospel, repent and be saved. They all say it is because of their sins that the plague has come. O may they really know the Lord in it! May they repent and serve the Living God,—not the ones of brass, wood and clay.

Our work here is moving along as fast as we can expect in a new place where most of the people were afraid of us a few months ago. But it is far too slow to satisfy our American ambition to push things. We see so many things that these people need. The children lack all proper training,—the old women waste their time in card playing and gambling, and attending theatricals. The young women are confined to the courts where they never see anything beyond their walls. Cleanliness and purity, in any line, are scarcely known. Yes, we see all this and hundreds of other things. We long to satisfy our great need is a knowledge of our God of love and purity. But most of them are satisfied. What was good enough for their fathers is good enough for them. Most of them have never heard of anything better. If they have heard, many think such blessings are only for the foreigner. As the women said, the other day, when I was telling them of the beauties of heaven, "Yes, you foreigners can go to that beautiful place, but we must go to the city temple when we die."

How we long to have them saved at once, to escape the awful misery and sorrow and sin we see on every hand! How we pray for a doctor and a hospital where we can heal the suffering and save those whom we see dying about us every day! How we pray for a boys' school and a girls' school, where these neglected ones may be enlightened and taught the ways of truth! Although there is a compulsory school law here, it is not fully enforced. Some of the boys attend the Government schools, but most of them do not. Though given their food and money, many do not go. The Lord has permitted us to open a school for boys this spring and many parents said their children would come, but so far only two have been trusted to our care.

How we pray for more workers to come! Then we might occupy the large cities of our district, so the leaven may begin to work in these places. It takes long, at best, to get the language, get their confidence and get their hearts.

Yes, the time of waiting is always the hardest time. Work to the Christian is only a pleasure and his greatest inspiration. Waiting is what tries one's patience, and that is the position we are in now. We long to put forth every effort to help these people, but we must go slowly. You can not push religion on anybody. The seed must sprout and grow before it can bring forth fruit. We must wait and pray, and work as the Lord opens the way.

We are busy every day with the little things that the Lord gives us to do. Binding up a sore here, giving a tract there, visiting in a home here and there, giving a smile to this one and a helping hand to that. By and by they will be taught the ways of love by example, and will understand why we have come here. It is God's work, and in His own time they will know how we long to help and how God yearns after their souls. So we must be patient and know this:

"Nothing is premature with God;
His are the harvest-time and sowing.
The seedlings nestled 'neath the sod,
The flower in beauty blooming,
The languid ebb, the eager flow,
The pulse of spring the brooding snow."

Ping Ting Chou, Shansi, China. Emma Horning.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

ARKANSAS.

Lakeside—Bro. Les Woodel, of Palestine, Ark., preached two sermons last Saturday night and Sunday, at Blackfish Bayou, near Rollison, and on Sunday night near Lakeside. Great interest was manifested in the services, and the people promised Church for us again on the first Saturday night and Sunday of July, both day and evening. After that he will preach for us once a month. We are hoping to have him hold a week's series of meetings, here at Lakeside, when he comes again in July.—L. W. Hoak, Lakeside, Ark., May 16.

CALIFORNIA.

Fruitvale.—Our church is still working along encouragingly. We are glad for the help of Bro. Leavell's family, from Washington, who, we think, will like this field. We experience quietness, both inside and outside of the house. A number of visiting saints have been present with us at each appointation. I noticed in the Gospel Messenger of May 6 that forty-five ten names were held on the same date.—Mary White, Glendora, Cal., May 15.

Springville.—The Presbyterians here have dismissed their preacher and have gone to occupy the church. They are under other arrangements, by which I understand that they are willing to have us preach in their house until they can do better. A less humble man might not be willing to accept such an invitation, but in the hope that it may open a door for the accomplishment of some good, I am, for the time being, preaching each Sunday, both morning and evening, in the three-fold capacity of an invalid seeking rest and recuperation, a rancher toiling hard six days in the week, and the village preacher looking after the little flock of the community. Of course the combination is somewhat too paradoxical and the work somewhat too much for me to undo. I am hoping that some of our Brethren, who have shown an interest in this section, will come and help us. Others are coming in, and the country is developing. The building of the railroad into our town is proceeding rapidly, and through it we expect to have communication with the rest of the world in a few weeks.—James M. Neff, Springville, Cal., May 16.

IDAHO.

Twin Falls.—Sunday, May 7, our Sunday-school took up a collection of $20 for the Chinese sufferers. The following Sunday, April 14, A. D. 1911, Bro. Nowlin preached a missionary sermon, after which a free-will offering of $26.10 was taken, to be sent to the Annual Meeting for World-wide Missions. In the evening the members gathered around the Lord's table to commemorate the death and sufferings of our blessed Lord and Savior. Sunday, the 23d, was a day of rejoicing. In the forenoon we praise God's holy name.—Ella Fahrney, 761 Second Avenue, N., Twin Falls, Idaho, May 16.

ILLINOIS.

Macoupin Creek—March 6 we met in council. Bro. I. J. Harshbarger was elected delegate to Annual Meeting; Bro. Martin Brubaker, alternate. Bro. John Wyeth, of Nokomis, Ill., will hold our series of meetings, beginning some time in August.—Mrs. Russell Bro. J. M. Mohler, Girard, Ill., May 8, gave an interesting lecture on "Our Missions in India." On the preceding Sunday he lectured on "Our Missions in China," giving a description of the women and children,—how they live and how they need the heathen country. A collection amounting to $22.12 was taken for the India Mission.—Aurelia M. Fike, Farmersville, Ill., May 15.

Moline.—We have started mission work here and are beginning to hold meetings. We would ask all ministers who can give us a sermon to correspond with Bro. W. W. Hoak, 208 Thirty-ninth Street, Moline, Ill. We will pay the expenses of travel. Our homes are open to them and will be pleased to have the engagements at least as far as several months in advance. Subjects that have been suggested to us will be sent to any one who will come to preach for us, so there will be no excuse. We trust some ministers will act as promptly as possible. We have a band of seven members to start the work.—O. A. Hoak, 208 Thirty-ninth St., Moline, Ill., May 17.

Mt. Morris.—May 13 we held our love feast, which was well attended. Bro. Hylton and Sister Hylton, of Polo, were with us. On Sunday Bro. Blough gave us three excellent missionary sermons. Monday morning Bro. Blough met with the students and others, and Sister Blough talked to the sisters in the afternoon. Sunday evening our Annual Meeting offering was taken up. May 7 Bro. Eckerle, of Lanark, was with us. He gave us two helpful and spiritual sermons. —Ella Brunskill, Mt. Morris, Ill., May 20.

Pleasant Hill church met in council May 16, with Eld. W. H. Shull presiding. Much good work was pleasantly disposed of. A temperance committee of three was appointed to cooperate with the Pleasant Hill District Committee. The man was chosen president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Brethren M. Story and E. M. Brubaker were elected to at the Conference. One letter of membership was received and two granted.—Vlona C. Harshbarger, Girard, Ill., May 13.

Cedar Lake.—Our council was held on Saturday afternoon. Our love feast will be held June 17, at 1 P. M. We decided not to send a delegate to Annual Meeting this year. Our treasury contains no ass ha ny ym starts. We will have to make it a success.—Sarah Holman, R. D. 3, Avilla, Ind., May 16.

Goshen (West Side).—On the evenings of May 3 and 4 Bro. Hilton, our missionary from China, delivered two most interesting and helpful addresses. An offering of $27.11 was given for the furtherance of the work in China. Our love feast was held May 13. Eld. Noah Shutt, of Howe, Ind., officiated. We had a crowded house. Nearly three hundred partook of the emblems of the Lord's table.—Ella Brumbaugh, Goshen, Ind., May 15.

Mississinewa.—Our love feast last Saturday night. The visiting ministers present were Brethren I. S. Branson, H. L. Brallier, Jacob Funk, and David Brallier, of Peru. The latter officiated. A goodly number of visiting members were present from the Pipe Creek congregation. Brethren Carl Rarick and Henry Fladely, assisted by Bro. Isaac Branson, gave us two interesting talks on the work in China. Our morning service. Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely, under the supervision of Sister Amanda Miller.—John F. Shoemaker, Silvieter, Ind., May 16.

Nettie Creek.—Our love feast was held May 5. Two hundred and fifty members surrounded the Lord's table. Seven ministers from a distance were present. Bro. Otho Winger, of North Manchester, Ind., preached. Bro. Winger delivered a much-appreciated sermon on the subject of "Love," on Sunday morning, May 7. L. Hamilton, of Nettie, Ind., preached an excellent sermon for us on Sunday evening before our love feast. Our young Sunday-school scholars was baptized.—Chas. W. Miller, New Lisbon, Ind., May 16.

Pine Creek.—Our church met in council May 6 at the West house. Brethren Jesse Bane, Jacob Swigart, and Wm. Detweiler of Mermaid were elected delegates to Annual Meeting, at the Sugar Grove house. A good program will be rendered. Bro. Swigart, of Mermaid, will preach in this church to-be with us for a day to worship. Eld. Dorsey Hodges, of Huntington, Ind., preached the Word for this church. Our congregation the first Sunday of each month. For the remainder of the month Brethren Hodges and Swigart will preach and Bro. W. A. Popejoy the evening services.—Mrs. Marguerite Bixler Garrett, Bluffton, Ind., May 15.

Walnut Creek.—Our love feast was May 13. The visiting ministers were Bro. Emmanuel Shively and Bro. Samuel Lechrone, of Peru, Ind. He also preached for us on Sunday morning to a full house. We expect to hold a joint Children's Day entertainment on Sunday at this place May 21 and 21. Bro. Steele, of Walkerton, Ind., will be with us. We will have some good singing. Bro. Wm. Hoke, of Wyona, of North Manchester, Ind., will do the preaching.—Susan Futterbaugh, Argos, Ind., May 15.

IOWA.

Salem.—Bro. W. D. Grove, of South English, Iowa, was with us May 7. He preached a splendid sermon for us in the morning, and he also spoke in the evening on promoting temperance lecture to a large and attentive audience.—Edna Wray, Prescott, Iowa, May 15.

KANSAS.

Burr Oak church held her feast May 13. We were cheered by the presence of quite a number from adjoining churches. Bro. Stevens, of Kirwin, Kans., was with us May 11, and gave us two interesting talks on "The Work and Needs of India." A collection of $5.00 was taken for this field. We greatly endeared himself to many while he was here, and his visit will long be remembered by us all. Bro. Stevens, assisted by Medlin, Burr Oak, Kans., May 18.

Conway Springs.—At our love feast about 150 communed. About twenty-five visitors were present. The visiting ministers were Bro. Joseph Troxel from Oklahoma, and Bro. Forney, of Glendale, Kans. Bro. Troxel preached in the forenoon. Eld. John Forney (deceased). We feel that the meeting was highly spiritual. One lecture was given on temperance. On Sunday at 2:30 P. M., after the usual love feast exercises, a missionary program was rendered. The program, we were said, pertaining to the nobility and helpfulness of a Christian mother in the home and all in behalf of mother. Many felt that mother had been more or less slighted and neglected. Sunday night Bro. Troxel preached to the congregation intend to attend the Annual Meeting at St. Joseph. J. J. Bowser, Conway Springs, Kans., May 15.

Friendship.—The church has been revived by the preaching of Bro. Reuben Shroyer, of New Berlin, Ohio, who came to us April 1, and remained with us about five weeks. Bro. Shroyer did not fail to proclaim the Word of God in all its fullness. The membership was built up and he created an intense interest. People from other churches acknowledged it was sound doctrine. Our meetings closed with a love feast on the 14th, at an intermission of one of the meetings two were brought into the fold, and one was reclaimed. Our church is now in good working order, is reinforced harmonized, and the truths he proclaimed will not soon be forgotten.—C. E. Eeild, R. D. 1, Box 117, Macomb, Mo.

Independence.—We held our love feast May 13. Eld. W. H. Miller officiated. Our lecture was delivered by Bro. Hoak, of other ministering brethren came. Fifty-seven surrounded the Lord's table. On Sunday, April 30 A. M., we met for Sunday-school, after which Bro. J. S. Clark, of Kansas City, gave us an interesting talk on mission work. Dinner was served at the church. At 2 P. M. we had another fine missionary program. We had a good, spiritual meeting. Bro. Miller was with us over Sunday and preached twice. He would be glad to have ministering brethren locate with us, and others can be sure of a hearty welcome. We were much annoyed by writing to W. H. Miller, 220 S. Eighteenth Street, Independence, Kans.—Pella Carson, R. D. 2, Independence, Kans., May 15.

Larned.—We held our love feast May 13 at the Larned church. Quite a number came from Pawnee Rock, Burr Oak, Jewell Jones, of the Larned Mission, officiated. We expect to have a series of meetings here at this place. Although he is young in years, he preached the Word with great power and simplicity. We feel that he has no superior in the state in recommending him as a revivalist. Ten young souls were baptized, and one more is awaiting baptism. The church was strengthened spiritually, and we feel that much good will result. We enjoyed our love feast May 13. Bro. Frantz officiated. Nearly 100 members communed. Our Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meetings are doing good work, with good attendance.—Emma T. Stutzman, Conway, Kans., May 15.

Newton.—Eld. N. E. Baker preached five sermons for us at our country mission. He was followed by Bro. J. Funk, of Wichita, Kans., who gave us six discourses. Three were baptized—a husband, wife and daughter. A number of others desired to come but were hindered. The outlook here is encouraging. We have a fine Sunday-school which we are during the summer season. We expect to hold a number of openair meetings in a grove, near by, on Sunday afternoons. The Newton congregation now has two churchhouses and a tabernacle; also four Sunday-schools. We are located in the best part of the city, and can be seen by the thousands of passing people. We invite members to come to see us on their way to Annual Meeting. The district Meeting will convene here in October. Our love feast will be held in the home June 10.—U. R. Newton, R. D. 4, Newton, Kans., May 16.

Scott Valley.—We were made to rejoice today when one dear sister was received into the fold of God's people. We are making preparations for our annual children's program.—Lucinda Smith, Scott Valley, Kans., May 15.

Vermillion.—Bro. McCune, our District Sunday-school Secretary, expects to be with us May 14 to May 26, and Bro. S. F. Berkebile, May 26 to 28, with us from May 22 to 29, to give us some talks about India. We expect to hold our love feast May 27, which we hope will be with us. Bro. Ira Frantz was chosen as our delegate to Annual Meeting.—Lizzie Isenhour, Valley View, Kans., May 15.

Washington.—Bro. F. E. McCune came to us May 5. We greatly enjoyed his visit. Eld. Kinsinger, of Oklahoma, was with us. Five dear little Sunday-school scholars accepted Christ as their Savior. Seven were baptized May 14.—Nora Gauby, Washington, Kans., May 17.

Wichita (West Side Mission.)—We have great and abundant reasons for rejoicing. Bro. David George, of Franklin Grove, Ill., donated sufficient means to build a very neat and commodious church building, equipped with Sunday-school rooms, etc. Bro. W. H. Leaman, of Monmouth, Kans., preached the dedicatory sermon April 30, to a large and attentive audience. Bro. Leaman remained with us two weeks in a revival meeting. Eight souls surrendered, and we feel that much good seed has been sown, and we be earnestly praying for the harvest time. We have a fine Sunday-school started, with good prospects. Especially for the children and children. We have regular morning and evening services each Sunday. Bro. Jacob Funk is in charge of the work. This makes three churchhouses in Wichita for the Brethren. We have a very encouraging outlook for the future. Many members, desiring to change location, would do well to consider the West Side, and visit us with a view to locating because of Christ among these people. It is a very pleasant section of the city, and a splendid place for our members to work and live. For further information, members should write to Bro. Jacob Funk, 1125 Wabash Ave., pastor of the work in Wichita, or to the writer.—Grace E. Schuh, 837 North Lawrence, Wichita, Kans., May 15.

MARYLAND.

Frederick.—Eld. R. N. Moore is now with us, working in his pastoral capacity. He was baptized yesterday. So the Lord is still working with us.—J. A. Fahrney, Frederick, Md., May 17.

Meadow Branch.—We held our semiannual love feast May 13 with the largest attendance we ever had at a spring meeting. The visiting members were present. The house was not commodated in the large audience room. Bro. G. S. Raigh officiated. Other ministers were Brethren Wm. Bell, Wellington, W. P. Englar, J. S. Weybright and D. E. Englar. One was added to the church by baptism. An offering of about one dollar will be sent to the church board for the missionary collection at the St. Joseph Conference. Bro. Raigh was chosen to be the delegate to the Annual Meeting at Westminster, on the evening of May 14. He gave many helpful suggestions. We have a travels league and also a local temperance committee organized with Bro. John T. Royer as president, and Sister Ida Garner, secretary.—W. E. Roop, Westminster, Md., May 18.

Woodbury.—Our series of meetings, conducted by Bro. Barnes T. Fike, have been in progress since the third of this month. During this time he gave us a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Our love feast was attended. Yesterday our Sunday-school observed Decision Day. Three of our Sunday-school scholars were baptized. Our Sunday-school is growing in attendance and interest.—J. D. Hamilton, 226 Delewood Ave., Woodbury, Baltimore, Md., May 15.

MINNESOTA.

Deer Park.—Since our last report we have had a very interesting series of meetings. Our elder, Bro. W. H. Eikenberry, is doing faithful work here, and the church is progress. One young man united with the church and was baptized. Our love feast was well attended. Twenty-three communed.—Mrs. J. T. Barnum, Barnum, Minn., May 16.

MISSOURI.

Carthage.—Bro. William Harvey preached for us on Sunday, May 7. We were glad to have the privilege to partake of the cross break the Bread of Life to us. Bro. Harvey does not preach sermons, but strikes gospel messages regularly and enjoys Christian associations very much. This church will be represented by Eld. Geo. Barnhart as our delegate. We have a live Sunday-school which was started the Annual Conference at St. Joseph, Mo.—N. Oren, Carthage, Mo., May 15.

Deep Water.—We met in council May 13. Our elder, Bro. C. J. Hylton, was with us. On Saturday before the members came before the meeting. Bro. Simmons gave us two very interesting talks on the work in India and China respectively. The writer was chosen delegate to Annual Meeting; Bro. W. T. Bray, alternate.—Etta M. Fahnestock, R. D. 34, Montrose, Mo., May 17.

Fairview.—Our church met in council May 13. Our elder, J. B. Hylton, was present. Many of members were not present. Bro. J. B. Hylton was elected delegate to Annual Meeting. A collection was taken for the work in South America. Sunday-school and preaching. Our elder gave us an interesting sermon.—Angelia Hylton, R. D. 1, Box 17, Macomb, Mo., May 15.

Kansas City.—Eld. Leander Smith and wife, of Nevada, Mo., were with us several days and gave us two much-appreciated sermons. Our preparatory council will be held May 27, in Rock Island St. Mission Church. Our Brethren—T. C. Nininger, 5931 St. John Ave., Kansas City, Mo., May 15.

Nevada.—In our last report we stated that Bro. Wyatt officiated at the love feast. It should be Bro. Nininger. Two more have been received by baptism.—R. M. Hylton, Nevada, Mo., May 16.

Nevada.—Our church met in regular council at 2 P. M., May 9. Eld. Leander Smith presided. He was also chosen delegate to Annual Meeting, with Sister Emma Wine as alternate. As our minister was away the first Sunday in May, Bro. S. N. Wine filled the pulpit. He gave us two splendid sermons that were much appreciated. The second Sunday Bro. Smith filled the pulpit. Our church at Deepwater, Shiloh Springs, preached morning and evening. Our church work is progressing nicely. We have fair attendance at all services.—Mary Smith, 230 N. Oak St., Nevada, Mo., May 23.

MONTANA.

Medicine Lake.—On the evening of May 15 a great blessing came to us—the first good rain we had this spring. God be praised for his great blessings.—Katie E. Keller, Enterprise, Mont., May 16.

NEBRASKA.

Beatrice church has enjoyed a number of good things lately. May 4 and 5 Sister Sadie Miller was with us and talked to us about our mission work in India. Her talks were helpful and inspiring. A collection of $11.40 was taken for the work. May 7 the Christian Workers gave a missionary program on "The Needs among the American Indian." Many interesting facts concerning the needs of these people, and in regard to the neglected opportunities for serving them, were given us. On the day soon come when the Brethren will have workers among these people! May 8, 10 and 11 Bro. T. A. Eisenbise, of Morrill, Kans., lectured to us on the following subjects: "Jerusalem," "The Women of Palestine," and "The Arabs." These lectures were very interesting and helpful indeed. He brought these people very vividly before us by using the costumes he had with him from the Holy Land. A social time was held on Friday evening. Bro. Eisenbise officiated.—Allie Stoughton, Beatrice, Nebr., May 12.

South Bentrice.—May 6 Sister Sadie J. Miller, of India, began her talks at this place about the people in India. He spoke to us Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights. A collection of almost $15 was taken for the support of our missionaries in the foreign field. We all enjoyed these services very much. We held our love feast May 13. Bro. Aaron Sollenberger, from the Hickory Grove church, officiated. We had a very good, quiet meeting. On Sunday Bro. Sollenberger preached the funeral service of the little son of Frank and Mary Heaston. Between four and five hundred people were present. Our Sunday-school is now in a prosperous state. Bro. Wm. Fry as superintendent.—Lydia Deli, Beatrice, Nebr., May 16.

OHIO.

Beech Grove.—We met in council May 12, prior to our love feast. Bro. Samuel Blocher presided. Our elder's term having expired, he was reelected. Elders Joseph Longanecker, Andrew Miller and Wm. Stump were chosen delegates to go to the annual visit was given. Temperance and apportionment committees were appointed. Brethren were chosen for our Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting. Bro. Andrew Miller was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school; Bro. David Keeney, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Bro. A. Neher was with us over Sunday and preached for us.—B. B. Hoover, R. D. 1, Hollansburg, Ohio, May 15.

Covington.—Last Sunday was "Mothers' Day." Our teachers exhibited much the spirit of the occasion, and tried to make it a day of pleasure and spiritual uplift for the mothers. The oldest mother in our school present was Sister Annie Landes, aged ninety-three years; next was Sister Annie Landes, aged ninety years. We had five who were between eighty and ninety years of age. Eighteen men and women were present over seventy years of age, and yet all those love the Sunday-school, and never absent unless prevented by sickness or storm. There were fifty-one who were over sixty years of age, but they are among the most regular attendants of ours. It is a wonder that with such a corps of aged brethren and sisters we have been able to increase our school in membership. Their parents are zealous and regular in attendance, their children are trying to follow. Our average attendance is almost 442. We have 36 on the cradle-roll and 88 in our home department. This makes our total enrollment considerably over 600. All remain to listen to the sermon. We have little difficulty in keeping our children for church services. Elders Jacob Longenecker and Geo. Shank officiated at our love services. We were glad to have them with us.—Elizabeth D. Rosenberger, Covington, Ohio, May 15.

Dunkle Creek.—We held our love feast in the New Carlisle house May 13. There were about 150 members present. The visiting ministers present were: Brethren I. B. Trout, Jacob Coppock, Aaron Coy and Elmer Brumbaugh. Bro. Trout officiated. On Sunday morning Bro. Trout preached an missionary sermon, after which a collection of $29.51 was raised to be sent to Annual Meeting for India Mission Board. On Sunday evening Bro. Rowland Leatherman preached, while Bro. Trout officiated at the communion. Bro. Leatherman's sister has been received by baptism since our last report.—Elsie Winger, R. D. 1, New Carlisle 173, Springfield, Ohio.

Eversole.—Our church met in council April 27. Eld. J. C. Bright officiated, on account of the illness of our elder. Eld. Jacob Wise, Aaron Brubaker, John Beeghly, W. H. Miller, Noah Erbaugh and Joseph Robins were with us. Six letters of membership were received and dismissed. Our annual visit was reported. The members were found to be in love and union. Brethren John Beeghly and Noah Erbaugh were called to the office of deacon. They, with their wives, were duly installed. Eld. John Smith, Sister Bristol, Brethren Ira Garber, Harvey Friser and John Root were chosen as a committee for Christian Workers' Meeting. May 6 we held our love feast, which was well attended. About 250 sat-rounded the Lord's tables. Visiting ministers present were: S. P. Honeyman, J. O. Garst, Harvey Fisher, Wm. Hoover and Joseph P. Robins. Eld. Honeyman officiated. On Sunday morning Eld. J. O. Garst addressed the children. A collection of $9.50 was taken, divided between the Brookville and Riverside Sunday-schools.—Sarah Bowser, R. D. 1, Box 44, Lebanon, Ohio, May 16.

Salem church met in council May 18, with Eld. Wm. Minnich presiding. Nine members were received by letter and one was granted. The church decided to invite the West Milton brethren to assist us in an all-day meeting July 4. At the close of the meeting one was buried with Christ by baptism.—Sarah E. Brethen, Tipton, Ohio, May 19.

Silver Creek.—Our church met in council May 13. Our elder, Bro. Jacob Kelser, presided. Bro. Samuel St. Clair was chosen as our delegate to Annual Meeting. Bro. D. G. Berkebile is expected to hold a series of meetings in the Walnut Grove house, beginning some time in November. We decided to send for Bro. William Eberly, of Lima, Ohio, to hold a series of meetings at the Hickory Grove house, sometime during the coming winter. Six were received by letter and two by baptism since our last report. We expect to hold our love feast Sept. 16.—Mrs. Ottie Fisher, Pioneer, Ohio, May 19.

OKLAHOMA.

Monitor.—We held our love feast May 13. A goodly number surrounded the Lord's table. Eld. Jacob Wise officiated at the communion services. Bro. J. C. Ninnger, our District Sunday-school Secretary, was with us. We held our Sunday-school meeting on Sunday, May 14. The topics were discussed in an interesting manner. We had a good time and much enthusiasm prevailed. We feel strengthened and built up in the Sunday-school work. Bro. Ninninger also preached a splendid sermon for us on Sunday, the text was, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." At the close of the services one young man came forward.—Cora Cupp, Nashville, Okla., May 18.

OREGON.

Portland (First Church of the Brethren).—Our revival services closed last evening, which have been in progress for nearly three weeks. Eld. E. M. Studebaker conducted the meetings and labored earnestly, both in the pulpit and personally. We trust and pray that much good has been done. Our meetings closed with six being added to the church by baptism. Another one, who wishes to unite with the church is hindered by his parents. We had our love feast Saturday evening. Eld. Kelm, of Newberg, Oregon, and Eld. Studebaker, assisted our home ministers at the love feast. There were about fifty communicants. An offering of $52.50 was taken at the close of the meetings. The Sunday-school also made an offering May 7 of $11.78 for the Chinese sufferers.—Dora Mitchel, 1198 Mississippi Avenue, Portland, Oregon, May 15.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Albright.—Our church met in special council May 13, with Bro. James A. Sell presiding. Our elder's resignation was disposed of. Bro. James Brumbaugh was elected elder and pastor for the coming year. We decided to hold our love feast June 11, with one week's series of meetings prior to that date.—Mrs. Ida Hershey, Myerstown, R. D. 4, corresponding secretary.—Scott Johnson, Roaring Spring, Pa., May 17.

Big Swatara.—Our love feast was held May 13, was largely attended. At the noon hour an election was held for Grocery Brethren Geo. Hoffman and Ira L. Wingert were elected. The installation service was held on Sunday morning before the preaching service. Eld. William Anthony officiated in the installation service, as we have no elder residing. On Saturday evening Brethren John Flohr, Welty Smith and Eld. S. Hertzler were with us.—Mrs. Lizzie A. Shiffler, Union Deposit, Pa., May 16.

Conestoga Valley.—We met in council May 6, preparatory to our love feast. On the same evening our elder, Bro. D. H. Wolgemuth, was with us and preached for us. The house, which were well attended and very interesting. The love feast was held on Saturday, and Sunday evening, May 14. Two were added to the church by baptism. Bro. Isaac Hess is stored to fellowship during these meetings. By request of the church, Bro. Wolgemuth will hold a series of meetings for him at his home May 11. He has been ill and unable to attend our regular services for a number months.—Christian Workers' Meeting and teacher-training class are progressing nicely, and we feel very much encouraged over the standard of the Lord's work.—J. C. Reiman, Bertin, Pa., May 15.

Harrisburg.—Our church met in council May 12. Bro. N. Falkenstein presided. Brethren J. H. Longenecker and S. Z. Witmer were in attendance. We decided to retain our present ministerial force for the year. Our elder was reelected. An Open door was granted for adjacent members, living outside of our present location, to hold a Sunday-school, principally to members west of the Susquehanna, as the nearer churches have Sunday-school. The present Sunday-school were approved, with Bro. A. H. Maugans, superintendent. Bro. Wm. Hoffman was elected to fill the office. He was retained as church treasurer, and Sister Sallie Mohler was chosen secretary.—Elton Peterman, 402 Crescent St., Harrisburg, Pa., May 17.

Harrisburg (West End Mission, Seventh and Maclay Streets).—Our love feast was held May 13 at 7 P. M. Appropriate exercises. A special effort was made to have the members present, and have it a success. We had the same services in an automobile. The young men's Bible class presented each member with a neat souvenir. Also the assistendent gave each mother a copy of the "Mothers' Magazine." Two were received by baptism. The hand of fellowship was extended to them by the scholars. Bro. D. H. Widder addressed the mothers. In all it was one of the most inspiring services we have had.—Mrs. Minnie Lee Hershey, 1905 Seventh St., Harrisburg, Pa., May 16.

Indian Creek.—Our council meeting held May 7. There were quite a number of brethren and sisters present from adjoining congregations. Ministers present were: Brethren D. F. Cassel, J. M. Boos and John Ackerman. Bro. Ziegler officiated. Bro. J. M. Boos presided. Brethren Ackerman, Ziegler, Pa., May 15.

Johnstown.—We held our love feast at the Walnut Grove house May 14. It was a beautiful day. We had about 225 communicants. Bro. J. E. Blough officiated. We held one series of meetings, and have one to hold. Our elder, who is our pastor, Bro. Wm. M. Howe. As a result of these meetings six were received by baptism, and one by reclaimed letter of our pastor, ten years old. We are glad for those who give their hearts to the Lord in their youth. At our council meeting a constitution for our trustees was adopted, which, we believe, will be for the good of the congregation.—Ada M. Beeghly, 724 Thomas Ave., Johnstown, Pa., May 18.

Lost Creek.—We met in council May 13, preparatory to our love feast to be held May 20 and 21. Owing to the excitement, the meeting was presided over by Eld. C. G. Wingert.—Mrs. Emma Hoover, R. D. 1, Mapleton Depot, Pa., reporting the members to be in love and union.—J. B. Frey, R. D. 2, Huntingdon, Pa., May 15.

Manor.—We held our love feast at the Purchase Line house May 13 and 14. Bro. Jacob Wise officiated throughout the services. About eighty-five communicants surrounded the Lord's tables. Visiting ministers present were: Eld. Peter Knavel, of Scalp Level, Pa., Eld. Abram Fyock and wife, of Johnstown, Pa., and D. R. Berkey and wife, of Mount Joy. Bro. Montgomery Myers, of Scalp Level, Pa., Eld. Peter Knavel officiated. We enjoyed their presence and help very much.—Mrs. Ella Hess, Millersville, Pa., May 16.

Marsh Creek.—Our love feast was held May 6 and 7. Eld. John Flory officiated. There were about 150 present. All were also with us. We had one of the most spiritual love feasts we have had for a long time. Two letters of membership were called. Eld. C. L. Pfouts having handed in his resignation, Bro. Albert Hollinger was chosen housekeeper for one year. Three letters were granted.—Mrs. Annie Hoover, Gettysburg, Pa., began a series of meetings at the Marsh Creek house on Saturday, May 20, with Bro. Montgomery Myers, of Scalp Level, Pa. The attendance was good. We have not had a meeting at the Marsh Creek house for a long time, hence the large attendance. The meeting closed with a full house and two applicants for membership. Others are now attending.—Mrs. Ella Hoffman, Gettysburg, Pa., May 19.

Upper Conewago.—Our church had a very enjoyable love feast at the Mummert house May 13. We had fine weather and a large concourse of people. Quite a number of ministers from adjoining churches were present. The ministers present were the following: Eld. J. H. Longanecker, of Palmyra, Pa., Eld. I. W. Taylor, of Steffordville, Pa., Eld. Samuel Bowser, of Hancock, Minn., Eld. E. B. Miller, of Linoboro, Md., Eld. Jacob Wise, of Manor, Pa., Eld. Wm. Hoffman, of Union Bridge, Md., Brethren Adam Hollinger and Ira M. Hart, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., Bro. E. P. Lindaman, of Gettysburg, Pa.—Brethren Jacob Miller and J. E. Trimmer, of Carlisle, Pa., Brethren Jacob Hoffer and Jacob Hoffer, of Shady Rock, Pa., and Bro. Alexander Brodbeck, of Dover, Pa. Eld. J. H. Longanecker officiated. Since my last report two were received by baptism.—Mrs. Annie Hoover, Bast Berlin, Pa., May 16.

White Oak.—Our love feast was largely attended, and very enjoyable. Almost 300 members communed. A number of ministers from adjoining churches were present. The attention and interest were very good. One of our elders, Bro. Israel Hershey, and wife have moved to Lewistown, Pa., to have gone to their long home. A collection was taken to be sent to Annual Meeting.—Anna E. Shank, Manheim, Pa., May 13.

Woodbury.—We held our council, preparatory to our love feast, May 6. Two were received by letter and five letters were granted. We expect to hold a series of meetings, beginning about Dec. 1. Eld. J. R. Stayer was elected delegate to Annual Meeting. Our love feast was held May 13 and 14. Many were also blessed. Visiting ministers were Elders J. B. Reed, R. Rook, A. L. Simmons and Jacob Claar. Bro. Sell officiated.—J. C. Stayer, Woodbury, Pa., May 18.

TENNESSEE.

Pleasant View.—On the 15th inst. the Brethren of the Pleasant View congregation met in council; also on Sunday. Bro. F. D. Reed, of Limestone, Tenn., preached an excellent sermon for us in the forenoon to a large audience, which was listened to very attentively by the entire congregation. Sunday we will preach again by Jonesboro on the first Sunday of next month at 11 A. M.—N. T. Larimore, Jonesboro, Tenn., May 18.

VIRGINIA.

Bethel.—Our church met in council May 13, with our elder in place May 13, and a letter granted to one. Bro. S. A. Sanger, presided over the council meeting. Bro. Click preached an interesting night and Sunday morning. He also gave the Sunday-school an interesting talk, which was enjoyed and listened by all. Bro. Click has been with us an interesting talk in Palestine, as he saw it on his visit to the Holy Lands. We expect to hold our series of meetings in August, commencing about the 26th. We are not sure of the day we will do the preaching. The meetings are to be followed with a love feast. We need some good worker here at this place. Who will come to help us? We would be glad to have any of our brethren, or sisters, that may be in the way, to stop with us. The church is near Arrington, on the Southern R. R. We give our churchhouse a coat of paint.—Maggie R. Cunningham, Box 13, Shipman, Nelson, Va., May 18.

Germantown.—We met in council at the brick church May 12. Eld. H. Ikenberry presided. Bro. L. Peters was in attendance, excellent admonition. The ministers were read and approved. The business part of the meeting was carried up and disposed of in a business-like manner. One certificate of membership was granted. The committee was appointed to look after an isolated churchhouse. Eld. H. J. Woodie was elected delegate to attend the Annual Meeting. Eld. G. E. Flora, alternate.—Mae Barnhart, Wirtz, Va., May 19.

CORRESPONDENCE

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches"

THE CONFERENCE AT ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

Soon our anticipations will be realized and our dream will become real. Then will our voices and hearts mingle with those of like precious faith. There are thousands who are looking and waiting for this conference as a great spiritual feast. Indeed, some people wonder how we eat our strength, and become buoyed up. The answer is, we get such unlimited inspiration at these yearly national gatherings that, seemingly, for a time, we could receive such a spiritual uplift, that one can hardly fall from the faith. Many have remarked, "Your people certainly are true to the church, standing by her principles and teachings through fair weather and storm, there are so many worldly allurements." I think this will be more clearly will be answered, when the people of St. Joseph shall see so many of our brethren and sisters, from all parts of the land, fed with "Heavenly Manna" at this great gathering. I trust that we all will improve well the opportunity to become so filled with inspiration and love for the Master's cause that a great work may follow, and redound to the Master's glory the coming year.

The Allegheny District, one of the first gathering about fifty ministers, besides many others, have requested that one of our able brethren address that body on Monday, June 5, explaining to them the doctrine of the Church of the Brethren and the conference.

Bro. Klinc is kept very busy getting things ready. We are working every moment to be in readiness for the coming meetings, making everybody as comfortable as possible, and to have the work so systematized that there will be perfect order in conducting things.

The homes are responding liberally. The merchants are looking forward with great anticipations. The people in general are continually talking about what a great conference it will be, and we are praying to God in that way that this may be one of the most successful meetings, and that a great work and mission may be accomplished for our Lord and Savior Christ. There are thousands in our city that know not the Gospel of Jesus Christ and it is our duty to give them that portion which is entrusted to our talents, though they may be variously apportioned. This will not only be a place to meet friends and relatives, nor will it be a mere outing, but it will be the carrying out of our great mission,—to preach Jesus Christ to the lost,—a saving salvation to those who know him not.

Ample accommodations are arranged for every one who may come. Take the Krug Park cars and get off at Third and Paraon Streets, coming one block east to Auditorium.

SOME EXPERIENCES IN EUROPE.

Now, 30, last year, I left New York on an unexpected business trip to Ireland and Scotland. I left New York at 9 A. M., on the largest and fastest ship in the world, the "Mauretania," for Liverpool, England. Our queen of the ocean made the trip across the Atlantic in four days and twenty hours, and the journey was a most delightful one. I spent one day in Liverpool, then another ship took me across the Irish Sea to Belfast. As I was so close to the dear old fatherland, to which I bade farewell a year before, I decided to spend Christmas with the dear ones at my old home.

I crossed the Irish and North Seas and arrived at Esam

burg Dec. 22. There I took the train at 7 P. M. for my old home. Upon arrival I was received with a royal welcome by all. Everything seemed quite natural, though father's chair was vacant. Six years have passed since he went to his eternal rest. I visited father's grave and, having a wreath upon it, was lost in thought. The hand laying a wreath upon it, was lost in thought. The hand which so often led me in infancy, is seen no more. The voice which often gave me good advice, is silent beneath the sod.

On Christmas Day I went to church,—the same one in which I was baptized, and in which I was confirmed on Palm Sunday of 1886. A few days later I had to leave again for Ireland. Though I had only a few days at my disposal, I had the pleasure of seeing my dear home people once more, and felt that I was well paid for the trip.

My next stop was at Belfast, Ireland, the commercial capital of Ireland, with 370,000 inhabitants. It is picturesquely situated on the River Lagan, where it enters Belfast Lough, with Divis and beautifully-wooded slopes of Cave Hill on the north, and the more softly-swelling heights of the Hollywood and Castlereagh Hills on the south.

The many handsome public buildings and palatial business places, the squares, the public parks and harbor property are worthy of special mention. The City Hall is the finest in the United Kingdom. High Street, Victoria Street and Square, Castle Place, Dougall Square, the Belfast Cathedral, etc., are points of interest to aid in beautifying the city. Here are the largest shipbuilding yards, linen factories, etc. It is a busy city indeed.

While I was there, for several weeks, I went to different places of worship. On New Years evening I went to the Methodist Watch Meeting, and again, on New Year's morning, to the service and Sunday-school.

In the afternoon I went, as usual on Sunday, to the Custom House, which stands in a beautiful square. On every side of the structure is usually a preacher, telling, to a large number of hungry people, the story of "Christ and him crucified."

I was very much impressed with the zeal that those missionaries seem to possess, in comparison with many ministers in America. Every evening and Sunday afternoon one can hear those noble men preaching, standing on the steps of the Custom House. Here would be a good opening for ministers of our faith, if not among our workers will say: "Here am I, Lord, send me"? It appears to me that there is something wrong somewhere with many preachers. It seems to me that the right Spirit is not in them.

I wish space would allow me more fully to write of my experience in Europe. It did my heart good to hear the testimonies of some of the converts. Almost everyone was a drunkard before he accepted Christ. Indulgence in Irish whiskey is their besetting sin.

Our General Mission Board is seeking to find men for missionary service, and can hardly find anyone, and yet we Brethren sing, "I'll go where you want me to go." Brethren, let us leave our homes, friends and relatives and preach Christ and him crucified to those who are hungry for it. Germany and Ireland are ready to accept our faith. Richard Arno Dassdorf.

OUR VISIT IN THE EAST.

The writer spent the first twenty-one years of his life in Carroll County, Md., and York County, Pa. My wife spent the first twelve years of her life in Dauphin County, Pa. Eighteen years ago we paid our last visit to those sections of country.

Having rented our farm, we left our home at Hancock, Minn., March 31, for the East. Our first stop was at Astoria, Ill., where we visited my wife's parents, Brother and Sister Henry Brehm. We worshiped twice with the brethren and sisters in the Astoria house on Sunday, April 2.

April 8 we reached the Brethren Publishing House, but as it was Saturday afternoon, the force was not at work, nor were any of the machines running. We did not even get to see the Office Editor, with whom we feel quite well acquainted. That evening we reached Chicago, to spend a few days with our daughter at the Bethany Bible School.

April 12 we started east, via Niagara Falls, and reached Hummels, near Harrisburg, Pa., where we stopped with my wife's relatives. We also attended services at Paxtang on Sunday. During the week we visited Bro. Samuel Balsbaugh, a brother to C. H. Balsbaugh, (deceased). Eighteen years ago the latter was yet alive, but this time, instead of meeting him, we could but look at his tombstone in the cemetery near the Hanoverdale meetinghouse. Here we also met in service with the brethren and sisters.

April 20 we came to York, where my brother (in the flesh), Israel M. Bowser, lives; also a sister about seven miles from York. We had seen neither of them since our last visit home, eighteen years ago.

May 3 we attended the District Meeting of Southern Pennsylvania. Bro. J. A. Long was moderator. The Black Run congregation, where the meeting was held, also held their love feast on the following evening. From there we went to the Pleasant Hill feast on the evening of May 6.

We have planned to attend the following feasts on specified dates: Loganville, May 9 and 10; Hanoverdale, May 11 and 12; Upper Canowago, May 13, and Hanover, May 14. Samuel Bowser.

Hancock, Minn., May 8.

SANTEE MISSION, CALIFORNIA.

We are glad to announce, to all interested in the Lord's cause, that we have a good-sized audience of a very interested class of people every Sunday at our meetings. Bro. S. A. Honberger has been giving us a fine course of sermons on "Religion," every Sunday, for some time, taking for his text James 1: 27.

There are six members here now and good prospects for more to come in a short time. We have our services in a good-sized modern schoolhouse, just a few minutes' walk from the Santee station. We also have a good union Sunday-school, immediately after the preaching services, with a good attendance. We engage about fifty pupils and four teachers at this writing. We have a very interesting Bible class, with a good attendance, taught by Bro. S. A. Honberger. This is a place where the parents take an interest in coming to Sunday-school to learn of God's Word. We use the Brethren literature altogether.

Husband and I came to Santee April 6, and thus far we have been highly pleased with the country and climate. We live at the western end of the El Cajon Valley (pronounced El Cahone), or "The Box," and about nineteen miles northeast of San Diego. We are about five hundred feet above sea level.

The soil in this valley is highly productive. They raise some fine grain and fruit, which can be grown all the year. This is also a good place for strawberries. There are many large vineyards in the valley, too,—supposed to be some of the finest raisin grapes in California. This valley is also noted for its fine oranges and lemons. These are raised on the higher ground along the foothills. Peaches, pears, plums and figs are also raised, but we do not have many bearing orchards of the different varieties of fruit here yet, as the country around Santee was all in big grain ranches until five years ago. Since then the large tracts have been cut up into five and ten-acre tracts. It is fast settling up. The roads have all been laid out, and trees set out along the roads, which will give a beautiful appearance to this valley in a few years.

Santee, San Diego Co., Cal., May 10. Anna R. Wyatt.

MEDICINE LAKE, MONTANA.

Our Christian Workers' Meeting was organized with Sister William Swank as president; Bro. Larine Cookson, a, secretary-treasurer. One has become willing to unite with our band of believers. Others are almost persuaded. There are prospects for an ingathering of souls at this place, if we make an earnest effort. Husband has two more new appointments for preaching. Sunday morning, May 7, we drove fifteen miles and had services at a friend's home. People came miles to hear. They all enjoyed preached. It was an interesting congregation. Before the services began, the request was made that my husband preach at this home again in June. At the close of the service three others expressed themselves similarly. Souls are so anxious to hear the Word preached. We could only promise them one appointment a month. We are anxiously looking for another minister to move among us. After services one lady said, "It is so long since we were to church, that it makes me feel homesick." We worried to do all we could to encourage her as best we could, in our humble way, and are earnestly praying God's blessings on those dear people. Katie Keller.

DEATH OF NANCY JANE STRICKLER.

Sister Nancy Jane Strickler was born in Adams County, Ill., Feb. 26, 1835, died April 1, 1911.

Her parents, Baptist and Tamar Hardy, moved with an ox-team from Tennessee in 1821, and settled near Mendon (then called Fairfield), Adams County. They made the first Government purchase of land in the township in which she was born, and always made her home.

She was the fourth of a family of nine children. All of them lived to an honorable old age, and became leading citizens and teachers of their respective neighborhoods.

On June 3, 1856, she was married to Henry Wood Strickler, of Fayette County, Pa. They immediately moved on a farm, where they raised a family of five children. One was buried in infancy.

In 1877, though she was raised an Old School Baptist, she united with the Church of the Brethren,—the church of her choice. She had the pleasure of seeing all her children unite with the Brethren church, except the youngest, who united with the Methodists. She also saw her eldest son, B. H. Strickler, installed into the ministry.

In 1880 Sister Strickler was installed as helper to her husband in the full ministry, and was faithful in the cause of her Master. On different occasions she helped her husband in anointing the sick by pouring the sacred oil and offering the concluding prayer. She considered it a privilege to visit the sick in time of need, and to administer to their wants.

She was an earnest worker in the Sunday-school, and her seat was seldom vacant in the home congregation. Her home was for many years the home of the Brethren. She has been known to lodge as many as thirty-one people in a single night.

In her declining years she moved from the farm near the village of Loraine, where she spent her last years under many afflictions. All these she bore patiently, almost without a murmur, until the Lord said, "Come up higher!"

She had fond hopes of a glorious future. For her the sun had risen in the golden city above. While "the silver cord is loosed, and the golden bowl is broken," we rejoice that she is at home in the mansions above. What was once a fanciful dream of her Christian life is now a reality with her, for her last words were: "I am going to the city to live forever."

Her remains now rest beneath the green coverlet of her quiet bed in the Curless cemetery, awaiting the call that some day will arouse the silent sleepers.

Loraine, Ill. H. W. Strickler.

FLAT ROCK, VIRGINIA.

Our church met in council May 13, with Eld. D. P. Wine, presiding. We had a very pleasant meeting. The morning topical session was presided over by Bro. J. Frank Good. The topics were: "Love in its discussion of topics were Sisters Lelia Neff and Rachel Ulery; also Brethren J. D. Wine, B. W. Neff, D. P. Wine, J. D. Shaver and J. Frank Good. Bro. John H. Garber was elected moderator of the afternoon session for one year. The topic of the next quarterly council, which will be held at Stony Creek Aug. 12, is as follows: "What Would Be the Best Means to Arouse the Laity to Greater Activity in Church Duties?" At noon a lunch was enjoyed. Much benefit was derived from the social intercourse, so strengthening to our Fraternity. Several letters were granted, among them that of Eld. J. Carson Miller and family, who moved to Timberville. Bro. J. D. Shaver was elected chairman of the Home Mission Board, and Sister Lelia Neff, secretary of the topical committee. We will have our love feast Aug. 26, at 2:30 P. M. It was also decided to designate this day as our annual love feast day. Bro. J. Carson Miller will begin a series of meetings at the Old Flat Rock church on the evening of Aug. 12. J. W. Myers.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord"

Bashor, Eld. Andrew, born near Middletown, Juniata Co., Pa., Feb. 14, 1833, died at Martinsville, Pa., April 24, 1911, aged 78 years, 2 months and 11 days. His death was very sudden. He was at work putting down a pavement in front of his house, when word came to him that one of his neighbors had fallen over dead. He said he was not feeling well, dropped his work and walked over to see the doctor. The doctor gave him some medicine and told him to go home and go to bed, which he did, but in fifteen minutes his spirit had taken its flight. Bro. Andrew was elected to the ministry some fifty years ago, and for many years was ordained to the eldership. For twenty-five years he had charge of the Lost Creek congregation. He took an active part in church services and Sunday-school work. His wife survives and one daughter survives him. Services by Eld. C. G. Winey. Interment in the cemetery.—H. Frey, Martinsville, Juniata Co., Pa.

Bosler, Bro. Jacob, born July 20, 1842, died May 4, 1911, aged 68 years, 10 months and 14 days. He was a member of the Church of the Brethren and remained faithful until death. He was sick only a few days. He was anointed a short time before he died. He is survived by his wife and two sisters. Services at the church in charge of Elders D. M. Brilhart and J. M. Myers. Text, 2 Cor. 5: 1. Interment near the church.—J. L. Myers, Loganville, Pa.

Bentz, Sister Amanda, nee Witmer, born June 2, 1866, died April 14, 1911, in the bounds of the Spring Creek congregation, Pa., aged 44 years, 10 months and 12 days. She was married to Albert Hostetter years ago. To this union were born two children, both of whom died in infancy. Later she was married to Daniel Bentz, who survives her. She was a member of the Church of the Brethren for a number of years. Services at Spring Creek by Eld. I. H. Longenecker and Mr. E. O. Burtner, of the U. B. church. Interment at Spring Creek.—Edgar M. Hoffer, Elizabethtown, Pa.

Cushen, Sister Susan, wife of Robert Cushen (deceased), died at her home in the vicinity of the Manor congregation, Punkstown, Md., April 26, 1911, aged about 71 years. Early in life she united with the Church of the Brethren and remained a consistent member until death. She is survived by two daughters, four sons and a brother. Services at the house by Eld. D. Victor Long. Interment in Rose Hill cemetery.—M. Fortin Rowland, Fairplay, Md.

Fitz, Bro. David Rinehart, died in Marion, Pa., April 28, 1911, aged 74 years, 4 months and 23 days. A few weeks before he died he called for the elders and desired to be received into the church by baptism, but on account of weakness it could not be done, and in that condition he passed away. He leaves a companion (a devoted sister) and seven children. Three of them live in Iowa and four in Pennsylvania. Bro. Fitz which respected by all. The funeral was largely attended. Interment in Price's cemetery, near Waynesboro.—Services by Lee Ritter, assisted by Eld. Wm. C. Koontz. —William A. Anthony, Box 85, Shady Grove, Pa.

Fox, Sarah, wife of Cyrus Fox, died of pneumonia near Adel, Iowa, May 11, 1911, aged 70 years, 1 month and 9 days. While she and her blind husband were returning from Colorado to their home at Waterloo, Iowa, they stopped to visit friends in the Panther Creek church, where she took sick and, after six days of intense suffering passed away. Her former members were sent to Waterloo for interment.—N. S. Eby, Adel, Iowa.

Hostetler, Orvis Lavene, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hostetler, of Holmesville, Nebr., died May 12, 1911, aged 1 year and 4 months. He was the only child and because of his sweet disposition he won the affections of many besides his parents. The funeral was largely attended. Services by the writer, assisted by others.—A. D. Sollenberger, 1507 High St., Beatrice, Nebr.

McCuaig, Sidney Smith, born in Peoria County, Ill., July 15, 1841, died in Tillman County, Okla., April 18, 1911, aged 69 years, 9 months and 7 days. He was a kind husband, fathers and one son. For several years he was afflicted with cancer, which caused his death. Bro. McCuaig united with the Church of the Brethren July 18, 1910. Services at the Red River school by Eld. A. G. Filmore. Text, Rev. 14: 13.—Gay Nill, Hollister, Okla.

Miller, Bro. Henry, born Oct. 7, 1843, died May 3, 1911, aged 68 years, 6 months and 23 days. He was baptized and united with the Church of the Brethren and enjoyed very much the fellowship of the saints. A few days before his death he called for the elders and was anointed. His wife preceded him to the better land less than one year. Funeral services. Services at Long Meadow by Bro. W. A. Anthony, assisted by Bro. D. R. Petre. Text, Psa. 90: 12. Interment in the adjoining cemetery.—A. Mac Rae Miller, Rockton, Pa.

Miller, Hazel Irene, daughter of William E. and Sister Nora D. Miller, died May 9, 1911, after an illness of nine days. She was a member of the cradle roll department of the Maple Grove church about one week. Services at the Maple Grove church by Bro. Calvin Cripe and the writer.—Hezekiah L. Mishler, New Paris, Ind.

Nasemann, Bro. Noah, died May 1, 1911, at the home of his granddaughter, Cornelia Barb, near Shenandoah, Alum Spring, Va., aged 65 years, 9 months and 19 days. He united with the church a number of years ago, being one of the first members at Panther Creek, which spelled his home. He donated this land free to the church, at which place he was buried. He was twice married and was the father of ten children. His wife and one child preceded him. Services by Eld. D. P. Wine, assisted by Bro. John H. Garber. Bro. Nasseldrott was an exemplary Christian, and many of his descendants are members of the church.—J. W. Myers, Forestville, Va.

Quinby, Sister Alice, daughter of Bro. Adelbert Quinby (deceased), born at Naperville, Ill., Nov. 13, 1887, died April 17, 1911, aged 13 years, 4 months and 3 days. She lived most of her life at Batavia, Ill. Services by Bro. S. S. Blough. She united with the Church of the Brethren in June, 1910.—Ruth Hawbecker, 239 N. Park St., Batavia, Ill.

Rogers, Sister Martha A., born July 18, 1846, died in the bounds of the Bethel Center congregation, Ind., May 2, 1911. She united with the Church of the Brethren when seventeen years ago. Services at the home by Bro. Joseph Spitzer. Text, John 11: 25, 26. Interment in the Olive Branch cemetery.—Annie Rogers, R. D. 24, Matthews, Ind.

Schock, Leshivina, daughter of Nathan and Mary Saufford, born July 6, 1819, in Randolph County, N. C., died April 24, 1911, in New Lisbon, Ind. March 20, 1842, she was married to Jacob Schock, who died Aug. 11, 1871. To this union were born six children. All of them survive. She was a member of the Lutheran church, in which she held membership all her life. Services at the Locust Grove house, of the Nettie Creek congregation, Ind., by Bro. D. P. Sayler, assisted by Eld. A. Bowman. Text, Philpp. 1: 21. Interment in the cemetery near by.—Chas. W. Miller, New Lisbon, Ind.

Silvius, Sister Mahala, died on Easter morning, in the bounds of the Flat Rock congregation, Va., aged about 74 years. While Sister Silvius was isolated from the church, by distance and infirmity, yet she ever remained faithful, and always had a desire to meet with the church in prayer at her home. She was poor in this world, but rich spiritually. Services by Eld. J. Carson Miller, of Timberville, Va., assisted by Eld. D. P. Wine. Interment in the Flat Rock cemetery.—J. W. Myers, Forestville, Va.

Snyder, Sister Lizzie, nee Buckley, born in Madison County, Ill., Jan. 15, 1856, died May 1, 1911, aged 55 years, 3 months and 16 days. She was married to Bro. Jacob Snyder July 18, 1872. To this union four sons were born. She gave her heart to God and united with the Church of the Brethren about twenty-four years ago, living a consistent Christian life till the Father called her home. She was a sufferer for many years, but bore it all with patience. April 29 she called for the elders and was anointed in the name of the Lord. Services by Eld. M. F. Woods. Text, Mark 14: 8.—Arcena Myers, Centralia, Wash.

Stover, Sister Elizabeth, born July 4, 1846, died May 10, 1911, in the Mount Vernon congregation, Va., aged 65 years, 10 months and 6 days. She had been a sufferer from a complication of diseases for some time. She was a member of the Church of the Brethren for a number of years. A few days prior to her death she called for the elders and was anointed. She was the last of her family to pass away. One of her brothers preceded her a few months ago. Although she was destitute of near relatives, she was tenderly cared for by the lady with whom she made her home, and other friends. Services by Brethren Geo. Wine and J. R. Kindig. Interment in the Mount Vernon cemetery.—Iota Cox, Elmhurst, Va.

Towns, John Niles, born in Stark County, Ohio, May 19, 1833, died in his home in Sunfield, Mich., April 11, aged 77 years, 10 months and 13 days. He moved with his parents to Steuben County, Ind., in 1850. He was united in marriage to Mary Smith in 1856. To this union were born two sons and one daughter. He moved with his family to Eaton County, Mich., in 1867, where he resided until the time of his death. About thirty years ago he and his wife united with the Church of the Brethren. Soon after he was called upon to the office of deacon, in which office he served till he died. He leaves to mourn his widow one daughter and her home, and other friends. Services by Brethren Geo. Wine and J. R. Kindig. Interment in the Mount Vernon cemetery.—Iota Cox, Elmhurst, Va.

Wertz, Bro. Henry, born Oct. 23, 1829, in Roanoke County, Va., died May 7, 1911, in the bounds of the Pleasant View congregation, Kans., aged 71 years, 6 months and 9 days. He united with the Church of the Brethren in his youth, living a devoted life until called to his reward. Nov. 15, 1866, he was married to Maria S. Kinzie, who survives him. To this union three sons and two daughters were born. One daughter preceded her father about twenty-two years ago. Three sons and one daughter survive, two of them being present at the funeral. Services by Eld. A. P. Miller. Interment in the Pleasant View cemetery.—Wilmer Keedy, Darlow, Kans.

FIGHTING THE TRAFFIC IN YOUNG GIRLS

BY ERNEST A. BELL

DOUBTLESS the reading of this book will be a revelation to many. The fact that young girls have been and are being sold and made slaves for immoral purposes is not as yet generally known. This vile traffic has been but recently fully exposed. In this book the facts and horrors of it have been compiled. It tells also of the fight that is being waged against this iniquitous business. Many a young girl who has in times past disappeared never to return became the victim of such as make it their business to buy and sell innocent girls.

ARE YOU INTERESTED?

If you have boys and girls you want to know about the pitfalls that are set for them and be able to prevent their being entrapped. Everyone who is interested in the welfare of the rising generations should read this book. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. This book will do it. It also contains much helpful advice to fathers, mothers, sons and daughters.

The book contains over 500 pages, also 32 half-tone engravings, and can be had in either cloth binding, $1.50, or half morocco, $2.00.

WE WANT AGENTS EVERYWHERE

to sell this book. It is a ready seller, and we have a special proposition to make to you. Write us for terms. There is money in it for you and great good to be accomplished in behalf of the girls and boys in city and country.

ONESIMUS
The Runaway Slave
By ELD. H. S. BRUMBAUGH

A book of sacred history, and biography, which, in a fascinating style, portrays an interesting phase of Eastern life and the condition of Roman Society at the time when Paul wrote his epistle to Philemon. This little volume was not written in a day. Much patient research and careful study are clearly evinced throughout. Better not begin the reading of it at a time when you have an important appointment on hand. When once you begin it you will not want to stop short of the end. It is a charming story of an elevating character. Bound in cloth with gold side title.

Minutes of Annual Meeting

This volume contains every known minute of the proceedings of the general conference held by the Church of the Brethren to the Year of our Lord 1909. Many questions have arisen from time to time problems of church government and decisions upon methods of solving them, answers also published, are here recorded. These Minutes also reveal to the reader the firm stand the Brethren maintained through the years in reference to their opposition to war, intemperance, secretism, worldliness, etc. They also show the change and growth of sentiment in relation to the educational, missionary, and Sunday-school movement in the Brotherhood, and how these departments of work have grown. Taking it all in all, it is one of the books which have a right to a place in the library of every Brethren home. This is a $2.50 book, but in order to bring it within the reach of all we have placed the price which is just the cost of manufacturing and postage.

Botetourt.—The members of our congregation met in council at the Bethel house May 13. This was a very important meeting and was largely attended. Bro. C. C. Crumpacker gave an address on "The Condition of Our Church." One letter was received and four were granted. Brethren C. D. Reed, J. M. Henry, J. C. Flora, S. Crumpacker and E. E. Oberholtzer, five of our ministers who have proved themselves efficient, were advanced to the second degree of the ministry. A business meeting of the Botetourt Memorial Missionary Circle was held at the close of the council. Bro. J. W. Woodie, of Franklin County, Va., has just closed a series of meetings at Cave Rock, a mission point in the Botetourt congregation, under the pastorate of Bro. J. W. Ikenberry. He preached twelve able sermons. Five stood up for Jesus. One was reclaimed. The meetings closed with a love feast.—Jennie Crumpacker, R. D. 1, Roanoke, Va., May 18.

Mount Sasaki.—We met at this place April 30 to organize a Sunday-school. We began the work with twenty-four present, but the number has increased to sixty. Bro. U. S. Campbell is the superintendent; Mr. H. A. Lowe, secretary-treasurer. Our difficulties are many at this place, as we have much opposition. The members of a certain church are working against our efforts, but we are not discouraged. There are only eight members here, but we press onward with renewed zeal and energy.—On Easter Sunday Bro. U. S. Campbell gave us a very able sermon, assisted by the choir, in a splendid meetinghouse, and have preaching twice a month. We hope to have Bro. J. H. Eshelman with us soon in this congregation, with us next Sunday.—Bella Campbell, Box 31, Bryant, Va., May 17.

Red Oak Grove church met in council May 13. Bro. Asa Bowman was moderator. Considerable business was done at the meeting. One church letter was granted. A dear brother expressed a desire to unite with the church and was received. He will be baptized at our next meeting. Bro. Harvey Dobbins was elected clerk; Sister Mary Bowman, Messenger agent; Sisters Ella Bowman, Cynthia Ann and Spangler, solicitors; the writer, church correspondent. Our Sunday-school was reorganized with Bro. Willie Hall as superintendent. We decided to hold a series of meetings sometime this year, when we can secure a minister. Bro. Bowman for Annual Meeting amounted to $15.75. On Sunday, at 9:30 A. M., we had a fine song service and Sunday-school. At 11 A. M. Bro. Asa Bowman and Eld. S. G. Spangler preached to a large audience.—Ella Bowman, R. D. 5, Box 44, Floyd, Va., May 18.

Dry Run.—Brethren L. S. Miller and James Lineweaver, of Harrisburg, Va., came to this place April 27, to work for the Master. Bro. Miller did the preaching and Bro. Lineweaver conducted the song services. They labored here until May 14. Bro. Miller preached nineteen sermons. Nine were born into the kingdom of God. One was baptized a few weeks previous to these meetings, which makes ten accessions to the church at this place, recently. The church here has been much strengthened by these meetings, and greatly doubled, as well as a general spiritual awakening. One brother was installed, called for three elders and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. Bro. Miller also preached two non-sitting sermons at the Smith Creek house, to an appreciative audience. Brethren Miller and Lineweaver returned to their homes on Monday. God's blessings attend them in their noble work.—J. D. Wampler, Zigler, W. Va., May 17.

Mahoning.—Our quarterly council was held the first Saturday in May. Peace and love seemed to prevail. It was decided to hold our communion and feet-washing at 10 A. M., at the Zion Hill house. Six were added to the church by baptism since our last report.—Simeon Longanecker, Columbiana, Ohio, May 20.

A FINAL WORD.

Final preliminary arrangements for the St. Joseph Conference are about completed. How well we have done our work, will soon be tested. Our aim has been, to provide a spiritual feast. The ever-recurring needs of the body have not been neglected. But we have made no effort to show how well we can entertain. We have endeavored to locate all as conveniently as possible, but it could not secure lodging at or near the Auditorium. We are sure, however, that the little effort it will cost to get out farther, will more than repay you, because of greater quietude and absence of noise, removed from the traffic of the city. Even though you may be somewhat crowded on the street cars, you will not be crowded in the homes.

Again let us suggest, "Let your light so shine before men that they, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father, which is in heaven." Let us be careful of our conduct, for we will be closely and critically watched. Let us leave the same impressions, in the homes and in the public places, as in former meetings. A few acts of selfishness or thoughtlessness, on the part of a few, may and will outweigh the good impressions of many.

A rest room for small children has been provided, but no nurse has been found. Could we have some good, sacrificing sister or sisters to volunteer their services? The room is convenient, being in the northwest corner of the Auditorium.

On arriving at the Union Depot, if no guides are present, and you have not yet secured your home, take a Krug Park car north to Fourth and Francis Streets and walk two blocks north to the Auditorium. It is the purpose to have uniformed Boy Scouts present, to assist under the City Convention Committee, but they may be engaged.

The Convention Committee has been at considerable expense. This has been made possible by subscriptions by the business men of the city. Now, then, to show, in part, our appreciation of their practical assistance, we suggest that, if any purchases are made in the city, we patronize those who have been contributors to the Convention Fund. Each contributor has been furnished with a certificate duly signed by the officers of the City Committee. We will have a list of same at the room, for the Committee of Arrangements. Any one, who has public spirit enough to contribute, will have enough interest in the City's reputation to give all a fair deal who may come within her borders.

We wish the whole Brotherhood could enjoy the meeting with us. This is impossible, but let our prayers go from united hearts, that in all things, God's name may be glorified. Let us come "hungering and thirsting after righteousness" and the blessings are ours! J. S. Kline.

THE FULL REPORT
OF THE
Annual Conference of 1911
MAY BE ORDERED NOW

We have been fortunate in again securing the services of Mr. Abbott to take the report of this Conference, and as soon as possible after the close of the meeting the Report will be prepared for mailing. This year's Report will be of special interest and value to the members of the church. These reports from year to year form an important collection of reading matter which should be preserved in every family. Some queries of vital interest will come before the Conference this year. Every speech made, with the name of the speaker, will appear in full. Besides, all the speeches made at the Educational, Sunday-school and Christian Workers' and Missionary Meetings will be reported fully.

Every member of the Church of the Brethren should be interested enough in the church to buy a Report and keep informed regarding its progress. This Report is not published for the purpose of making money, but that every one may have access to the good of these meetings. It is the only source from which you can get a complete report of the meeting. Do you want to be informed regarding the rulings of the church? If so, order the Report.

The matter in the Report will be carefully indexed, making it convenient for reference.

Orders for the Report can be handed in at the Conference Headquarters on the grounds or sent direct to the Publishing House. Price per copy, 25c.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

"SET FOR THE DEFENSE OF THE GOSPEL."—Phil. 1: 17.

Vol. 50. (Old Series Vol. 60.) Elgin, Ill., June 3, 1911. No. 22.

AROUND THE WORLD

The Lake Mohonk Arbitration Conference.

This notable gathering, at its session of May 24, considered the scope and plan of the $10,000,000 Carnegie Endowment for International Peace,—the plan being outlined by President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University. There is now every assurance that an international court of arbitral justice will be established before the time of the third Hague Peace Conference. It has been decided by the trustees of the Carnegie Endowment to organize the undertaking into three divisions, covering the various phases of the question. "It will be the special aim of the trustees to diffuse information and educate public opinion regarding the causes, nature, and effects of war, and the means for its avoidance." This, certainly, is a most praiseworthy endeavor, well deserving the coöperation of every lover of peace.

Real Sacrifice.

We wonder, sometimes, if Christian America really knows the meaning of "sacrifice." Converts from heathenism think no sacrifice too great to show their love for the Gracious Friend who has brought them from the darkness of sin to the everlasting light of the Gospel. A worker for the British and Foreign Bible Society in India received contributions from orphan boys and girls who had really denied themselves of the barest necessities in order to help the work. Lepers were found who gladly gave to the Lord a large share of the pittance doled out to them by the passers-by. If there should be as great a consecration in the homeland, in the matter of giving, as is shown by heathen converts, the missionary treasuries would be full and overflowing. We often pray for willing workers; why not pray for willing givers?

Helping the Widows.

The Missouri widow is fortunate,—not in being a widow, but in having secured the assistance of the State legislators in her support. The "Widows' Pension Law," enacted at the last session of the Legislature, will "enable poor widows to keep their children under fourteen years of age in school." A widow is entitled to receive a sum not to exceed $10 a month for one child attending school, and as much as $5 a month for each additional one. The actual adoption of an effective plan to help widows in the education of their children, is a credit to the State of Missouri, and is, moreover, an important example to others. Then, too, it is a scriptural way of distributing the burden of the poor widow among those amply able to bear it. "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves."

The World's Largest City.

Greater London, according to the recent census, now boasts 7,252,963 inhabitants, showing a fair increase from 6,581,402 in 1901. The gain is altogether in the surrounding or outlying portion of the city, showing that there is the same tendency in London as in our American cities,—to leave the crowded parts of these business centers for the more congenial suburbs. In spite of this tendency, however, the congestion of the tenement districts of London is a problem to the sociologist and city missionary. They have grappled with the problem and made but little headway. Strange as it may appear, there are mission fields in the heart of London and other large cities that challenge the attention of the entire Christian world, because of their extent and difficulty of approach. And yet the "Go ye" applies to these, the "submerged tenth," the wrecks and derelicts of humanity.

How She Attained to a Long Life.

Any one who has gone far beyond the allotted "three score and ten," is always an object of interest. Naturally we wonder what habits and manner of life there were, that so long a life should have resulted. At Brockton, Mass., lives a Mrs. M. Scriggens, now ninety-seven years old, who, with a rugged constitution and perfect health, expects to round out a century, if it be the Lord's will. She gives the following as the essential factors of longevity: "(1) Plenty of hard work,—fifteen hours a day is not too much. (2) Abstain from idle gossip. (3) Do not read novels or sensational literature; women get wrinkles, worrying 'over the troubles of imaginary heroes. (4) If you have vanity of dress, destroy it. The young women who are following the foolish fashions of the day are shortening their lives. (5) Keep away from moving picture shows and other questionable amusements." We should like to add just one more to the excellent suggestions given above: Be a genuine disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, trusting him for all this you need, and depending upon him in every perplexity that may arise. "Godliness with contentment is great gain," "having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

The Approaching Coronation.

The most notable event in the society world, these days, is the forthcoming coronation of England's ruler, King George V. Already London is spending millions of dollars to present the best possible appearance for the occasion. Many of the most prominent and wealthy Americans have also arranged to be present. Thousands of dollars will be spent in costly array for the occasion, and in some cases fabulous prices have been paid for places from which to view the gorgeous procession in all its splendor. With these most lavish and unprecedented expenditures, on the part of citizens of our great republic, —many of them professors of Christianity,—one is made to wonder why there should be so great a willingness to spend multiplied thousands for the vain display of a few fleeting hours, while the cause of the Great King,—the crowned Sovereign of all the earth,—must languish for lack of means.

Bibles in Prison but Not in Public Schools.

Some things are strange indeed! In the great State of Illinois we allow no Bible reading in the public schools,—though perhaps some of the boys and girls might be constrained to walk in the straight and narrow way by means of its teachings,—but in the prison the chaplain reads the Word freely and sees to it, moreover, that each prisoner has a copy of the Blessed Book. This Bible reading in prison is well enough, but why wait until people become criminals before offering the sovereign and only cure for sin? We do not act so foolishly in other affairs of life. We gladly spend thousands of dollars in improving all the various breeds of live stock on our farms, but in the case of our children,—precious to us beyond compare,—we deliberately allow them to go through the entire period of public school instruction without ever coming in contact with the Book of books during the school hour. Even the penitentiary convict, in that respect, has greater privileges.

Oppressed and Greatly-Wronged China.

Late reports from China announce the proposed removal of the national capital from Peking to Hsian, and state that the contemplated step is provoked by Japanese and Russian aggression. The Peking Daily News frankly says, "Our people are in a diplomatic reign of terror." At the point of the bayonet China was only recently forced to make humiliating and unjust concessions to Russia. In the opium controversy, Great Britain still continues its rule of oppression. Look through the pages of history and you fail to find a more pathetic subject of international oppression than China. While the civilized nations of the world glibly talk of peace and good-will, the most ancient and populous country of the globe is daily subjected to highway robbery and insult. The missionary alone has given China a square deal, and it is only fair to say that he is valued accordingly. As his self-sacrifice and disinterested labors in behalf of China's millions are becoming more fully known, he is loved and revered.

Unselfish Giving.

It has been said that people do not care to give except for the hope of material reward. This pessimistic idea is disproved by the fact that the Government has found it necessary to establish a department of patents, solely dedicated to the general good of the people. These improvements, after being duly patented, are given to the people without remuneration. Among the recent valuable devices, thus devoted to public use, are the following: An electric device, by Harold H. Park, for detecting gas in mines, tending to the possible saving of many precious lives. A recipe for replenishing worn-out soils, by George W. Moore. A fumigating unit, for warding off orchard pests, by Austin W. Morrill. A cultivator to eradicate the boll weevil in cotton, by Warren E. Hines. There is no higher aim for any one, who has the best interests of the race at heart, than the desire to serve his fellow-men in the most acceptable way. And such a man is not content with material things only; he seeks to place, within the reach of every one around him the highest of all blessings,—the pearl of great price!

Change of Rulers in Mexico.

In harmony with his promise during the peace negotiations, Porfirio Diaz, the imperious and autocratic President of the Mexican republic, actually resigned his control of affairs May 25, and, together with his cabinet, turned the matters of state to Francisco Leon de la Barra, the Provisional President, who will serve until a new President shall be duly elected by the people. Contrary to expectations, the change was made without disturbance, and it is hoped that the country may now enter upon a season of peace and prosperity. The unrest in Lower California, not connected in any way with the recently-adjusted uprising in Mexico proper, is causing some anxiety, but will likely be settled ere long. Now, since Mexico is likely to enter into conditions more promising than ever before, a strong effort is to be made to improve the condition of the people in every way. Education of the masses, especially, is to be looked after most carefully. This is a point of vital importance and means much for the future of Mexico.

A Crusade Against Novel Reading.

In these days of agitations against well-known evils, it is not at all strange that the reading of trashy novels,—harmful as it has shown itself to be,—should meet with a well-deserved denunciation. A strong movement, backed by the most influential men, has just been started in England, to have, by all possible ways, the circulation and perusal of novels that pervert the emotions and lower the thought of the rising generation. Parents, as a general thing, do not realize the harm that indiscriminate reading of novels may do to their children. The constant reading of fiction,—however good it may claim to be,—weakens the mind. It has about the same effect on the mind that lounging in a hammock or lazily floating down a stream has on the muscles. The mind, to appreciate truth, has to deal with it in an active and all-conquering manner, encountering and overcoming all obstacles in the way. Lacking this exercise, it grows weak and flabby, lacking all initiative and will-power. With the best of books always available, it is worse than folly to read trashy literature,—that "which satisfieth not."

Intemperance in Heathen Lands.

To the shame of so-called Christian nations be it said that drunkenness is largely a vice peculiarly characteristic of "civilization." Mohammedans and Hindus are kept from it by their religion; the Chinese are not addicted to it, and many of the uncivilized people knew nothing of stimulants until "Christian nations" brought them. Some heathen nations can teach most useful lessons in sobriety and abstinence to their wiser (?) brethren of the Western nations. In Burmah a man convicted of drunkenness is, for the first offense, paraded through the streets with his hands tied behind his back, and this exposure to the public gaze is of most salutary effect. For the second offense he is beaten severely, and the third time still more so. It may be stated as a fact that drunkenness is a very rare thing in Burmah, and that its people are among the soberest on earth. They believe in plenty of water. All over the country may be found little sheds having a drinking fountain within and a seat on which the weary traveler may rest. Surely, many a lesson may be learned from the simple and untutored people of so-called heathen lands.

Do We Act Wisely?

While millionaires are giving princely sums for the establishing of hospitals, libraries, tuberculosis and other institutes, and educational funds,—all good in themselves, —very few of these philanthropists give equal amounts to those blind, deaf and diseased souls, or to help the spiritually dead to a life of perfect bliss, and happiness in the great beyond. It may be possible, and even wise, to build both material and spiritual structures, but it is not well to be so absorbed with the temporal that the eternal is forgotten or its importance minimized. Somehow we forget the "one thing needful" amid the mass of daily events engaging our attention. Too often politics are permitted to crowd out the highest interests of religion. A scene of carnage is given a glowing, full-page description, while the bravery of a spiritual battle remains unnoticed. A man who, at the risk of his life, saves another from imminent bodily danger, receives a hero's medal, but the missionary who gives up all, and, with persistent sacrifice, gives his entire life to save souls in Africa or Persia, is often called a foolish visionary. Only in the day of final reckoning, when real values will be made known, shall the worth of entire consecration be fully apparent.

ESSAYS

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth.

The Things that Count.

SELECTED BY SALOME WATKINS.

Not what we have, but what we use;
Not what we see, but what we choose—
These are things that mar or bless,
The sum of human happiness.

The things near by, not things afar;
Not what we seem, but what we are—
These are the things that make or break,
That give the heart its joy or ache.

Not what seems fair, but what is true;
Not what we dream, but what we do—
These are the things that shine like gems,
Like stars in fortune's diadems.

Not as we take, but as we give;
Not as we pray, but as we live—
These are the things that make for peace,
Both now and after time shall cease.

—The Outlook.

The Blood.

BY NATHAN MARTIN.

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.

—William Cowper.

"In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness."—Zech. 13: 1.

A CERTAIN minister was in the habit of carrying with him a little book. It contained three leaves, but not a word of writing. The first leaf was of a jet-black color, the second a scarlet red, the third a spotless white. Daily he was observed leafing through this singular book. When asked the meaning he explained, "The black leaf," said he, "is my sin and the wrath of God which my sin deserves. I look and look, and think it is not half black enough to represent my guilt, though it is as black as black can be. The red leaf reminds me of the atoning sacrifice and the precious blood; and I delight to look at it, and weep, and look again. The white leaf represents my soul, as it is washed in Jesus' blood and made white as snow," This is the story of the redemption of a human soul, briefly told.

To even the casual reader of God's Word there comes the thought of what a diversity of uses was made of blood in the dealings of the Almighty with his people. "The life of the flesh is in the blood" (Lev. 17: 11), is the language of Inspiration. With it agree all physicians, all physiologists, all scientists. It is this vital feature of the symbol that makes it such a striking one.

I. The Blood of the Passover Lamb.—"And the blood shall be to you a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt" (Ex. 12: 13). How ridiculous it must have seemed to the proud Egyptian to see the faithful Israelite apply the blood to the doorposts and lintels! Yet it proved to be a protection. It kept death out of their houses. But where the blood was not applied there was death. A great wail of sorrow arose among the Egyptians, for all the firstborn were slain, "from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on the throne unto the firstborn of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the firstborn of cattle" (Ex. 12: 29).

II. The Blood of Consecration.—"And he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram. And he slew it; and Moses took the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot" (Lev. 8: 22, 23). Consecration is always for service. Notice how thorough is God's idea of consecration,—the ear to hear his voice, the hands to do his bidding, the feet to walk in his ways.

III. The Blood of Christ.—Man had lost life through sin. This life is offered us again through the atoning blood of Christ. Take the doctrine of the atonement out of the Bible, and instead of a Book of Life you have a book of morals. "The life . . . is in the blood," and by the same token sacrifice is the keynote of the Christian life. How willingly we ought to return at least the effort to sacrifice for him who gave his life for us!

To the precious blood of Christ the sacred writers attribute all the blessings of salvation:

1. By it the church was purchased (Acts 20: 28). "Ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, . . . but with the precious blood of Christ" (1 Pet. 1: 18, 19). In him "we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins" (Col. 1: 14), "according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. 1: 7), "out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation" (Rev. 5: 9).

2. By it we are justified. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him" (Rom. 5: 8, 9).

3. It makes saints holy, pure and clean. It was the Lord Jesus himself who "loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood" (Rev. 1: 5). He shed the "blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (Matt. 26: 28). It was his blood in which "they which came out of great tribulation . . . washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. 7: 14).

4. Sanctification. Jesus "suffered without the gate," "that he might sanctify the people with his own blood" (Heb. 13: 12).

5. Continual cleansing. "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1: 7).

"Thy Gentleness."

BY OMA KARN.

"Deal as gently with the faults of others as with your own," is a Chinese proverb, the teaching of which we may well heed when tempted to indulge in the harsh, criticising spirit with which we so often judge others. As a rule, we have some excuse for our own faults, some extenuating circumstances, such as environment, heredity and so forth, with which to diminish their glaring meanness. We handle them tenderly,—these faults of ours,—we are gentle with them, very gentle. We wear minifying glasses when we look them over, and the less we think about them, and the less we hear about them, the better we feel.

But how about the faults of our brother, our sister, or our neighbor? Do we consider their failing with the same leniency, probing down to the natural weakness, that was the cause of the fault, with the same activity, studying the fault through the same glasses, or do we put on magnifying glasses, judging what we see hastily and harshly, not considering that we cannot look into another's inner life and know the motive that prompts action? I am convinced that if we could, there would be less judgment and more love in the world. There would be less seen to condemn and more to commend. There would be less talking about another's fall, and more "doing" in the way of removing the pitfalls from his way.

Why will we permit ourselves to follow the leading of this evil spirit of unkindness, when plain common sense alone teaches that we can not help others to a higher plane of living by being severe with them? Any parent who has had the unpleasant experience of trying to reform a wayward child will tell us that severity only hardened. Superior physical strength may beat a child into temporary submission,—a kind of submission that leaves the fault as great, if not greater than before,—but the means most effective, in bringing about a reformation, is gentle, considerate treatment.

One is made to wonder what condition of existence would be ours if our Savior looked upon our weakness with the same harsh, critical eyes with which we are prone to look upon those of our fellow-men. Hard, indeed, would be our lot were this so. Christ's way with us is just the opposite of ours with others. He sees the fault, but he sees also the weakness of the nature,—the longing to do better, and the battle to overcome. He is silent about the fault, turning his attention to these better qualities, carefully nourishing and cultivating them to the point where they are sufficiently strong to overcome the evil tendencies. Yes, our gentle, loving Savior is tender, infinitely tender, with these faults of ours.

In the eighteenth psalm, David, then nearing the end of his eventful life, is heard saying, that all he had attained and achieved he owed to God's gentleness: "Thy gentleness hath made me great." If God had been harsh with David,—stern, critical, severely exacting,—David never would have reached the noble life he finally attained. God's gentleness made him great. We can become great only by practicing this same spirit of gentleness toward others. We can help others to become great only by being patient with them. Men, women, and children, everywhere, need nothing so much as gentleness.

Dare We Disfellowship?

BY I. N. H. BEAHM.

A RECENT request comes from a brother in Ohio, asking an explanation of the "Parable of the Tares." He desires the explanation especially on the idea of disfellowshiping a brother from the church in the light of this parable. I propose to answer the question—to make an explanation—to meet the issue, in the form of an essay.

To gather in the sheaves, to disciple the nations, to evangelize the world is the great burden of the Christian ministry, of the Christian church. Much more provision is made for getting people into the church than for getting them out. When a sinner is converted, the church feels to shout for joy: "Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance" (Luke 15: 7). But to expel a member, rather, to cut off a member as a plucked out eye, or, in another phrase, to disfellowship a brother,—is a serious, sorrowful matter. Hence, the duty that now lies before me is no easy duty. It is a rugged job, an irksome task, a heavy burden.

I. JESUS CHRIST.—Our Lord Jesus was the personal representative of the Father. As a faithful Son he came to do his Father's will. "The Son doeth nothing, save what he seeth the Father do." The Son said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28: 18). Jesus Christ had power on earth to forgive sins. He had power on earth to loose or bind, with the assurance that that loosening and that binding would be ratified in heaven. He was in direct touch with God.

II. THE CHURCH THE SUCCESSOR TO CHRIST.—When Jesus Christ left, he commissioned his people. He turned over to them the work which he had begun. It was the portion of the church to carry on the work of the Master (Matt. 28: 19, 20).

III. SEVEN PARABLES.—The seven parables, recorded in Matthew 13, give us a sevenfold view of the kingdom, as Matthew presents it.

"The Parable of the Tares" teaches, primarily, the doctrines of preaching the Word, sowing the seed, evangelizing the world; and, secondarily, four special kinds of ground and their respective results.

"The Parable of the Mustard Seed" teaches the outward growth of the kingdom from a marvelously small something to a place of shelter and habitation, representing the church of kingdom as a home, furnishing shelter and protection.

"The Parable of the Leaven" teaches the inward, quiet, transforming power of the kingdom, and suggests that the regenerative power will continue until the whole human lump will be leavened, which will certainly come to pass during the millennium.

"The Parable of the Treasure Hid in the Field" teaches the possibility of finding the inner treasure of the kingdom, and being willing to sacrifice everything, in order to take the church as it stands, in order to get the Christ within.

"The Parable of the Merchantman" teaches the intensity of consecration and the fullness of sacrifice in order to get eternal life.

"The Parable of the Dragnet" teaches the consecration of all the peoples of the world and the separation of them. "Which, when it was full, they drew to the shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 13: 48, 49, 50).

IV. The Parable of the Tares.—This parable is very simple in its interpretation. The Savior gives the parable, which, upon its face, however, is difficult. The disciples, not being able to interpret it, Jesus interprets it for them. We should have no trouble, when the Master gives the parable, and then, in response to special request, gives the interpretation thereof. There are a few things in the interpretation that are very distinct,—very definite. "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man,"—Jesus Christ. "The field is the world,"—the human family. "The good seed are the children of the kingdom,"—the Christians. "The tares are the children of the wicked one," —sinners. "The enemy that sowed them is the devil." "The harvest is the end of the world." Putting it, then, more briefly, we have the Son of Man, the field, the good seed or Christians, the tares or sinners, the enemy, the devil, and the harvest, the judgment. "The reapers are the angels."

Now these seven points should make the matter clear, but to amplify more, we see that the field is the world. World is here used in the sense of the human family as in John 3: 16, "For God so loved the world." Now, then, we have the field, an inclosure. All people are in this field. This cannot be the church. This is not the church. In this field we have the Son of Man and the devil. We have all saints and all sinners. Therefore this has no reference to the church as a distinct organization of believers. Therefore it has no bearing for or against disfellowshiping members from the church. There are plenty of scriptures that teach the idea of disfellowshiping, in case of necessity, but this parable does not teach disfellowshipping members of the church, neither does this parable forbid disfellowshiping. Disfellowshiping or holding in fellowship is no issue of the parable.

"Lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them." "Let both grow together until the harvest." What is it to root up a tare? To root up a tare is to kill it. The tare in the figure is the sinner; therefore, do not kill the sinners to get rid of them; for in the attempt to exterminate those of heresy and sin, Christians will also get killed. Never kill a man because he differs from you. Take no man's life because he is a sinner or a heretic.

This interpretation of the parable, which is evidently correct, would have saved lives almost without number in the past. No man could have been murdered. No people professing Christianity could have gone to war with another people because of difference of belief. This parable teaches universal tolerance for those who differ, that is, charity to the extent that we will not harm them personally. A beautiful doctrine of our Christianity, is this.

V. Three Governmental Chapters.—Matthew was a legalist. Matthew was a logician. Matthew spoke to technical thinkers,—the Jews. Matthew presented the kingdom. Therefore, he had the idea of government largely in mind.

In the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, in the "Parable of the Tares," the Christians are taught how to treat sinners,—not to kill them, but, as instructed elsewhere, to teach them and to win them.

In Matt. 16, concerning the Savior's message to Peter, we have the instruction as to who may enter the kingdom. Peter received the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Peter opened the door of the church,—the one side, on the Day of Pentecost, to the Jewish world, and the other side to the Gentile world at the house of Cornelius. Therefore everybody becomes eligible to citizenship in the kingdom of heaven. This is the transitional, governmental phase.

In the eighteenth chapter the Savior teaches the relationship of member to member; of brother to brother. All in the body, all in the family. Here we have church government; and the church is empowered to excommunicate or to disfellowship. Disobedience was the occasion for justice to drive the forefathers from the garden. Disobedience to the church is ample occasion to disfellowship now. The church has power on earth to bind and to loose, with the assurance that both will be ratified in heaven.

The church is the successor of Jesus Christ, who had power on earth to forgive sins, and so has the church today. This is especially true in baptism for the remission of sins. "Whose soever sins ye remit they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain they are retained" (John 20: 23).

"If he shall neglect to hear thee tell it unto the church, but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." Disfellowshiped. "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (Matt. 18: 17, 18). Heaven is back of the church.

What shall we do with the sinners? Let them grow with the Christians. They may be the church members of tomorrow. What shall we do with the man who desires salvation? Let him in. What shall we do with the man that is in the church? Keep him in until, by due process of gospel application, we discover that he is a heathen. Then we let him be as a heathen man and a publican,—out of fellowship.

In these three great chapters, Matthew gives us the great methods of how to treat outsiders, how to treat those who want to get in, and how to treat them when they get in. These three men,—the sinner, the applicant for membership, and the brother in the church, —are all-comprehensive, when it comes to government. Treat these three men right, and we have a perfect administration all around. All of these three points are vital in the administration of Christian affairs. Treat the outsiders properly. Let them associate with Christians. Receive all applicants for baptism and church membership with due instruction and joy of heart. Take care of every member of the family! Look after the brothers and sisters! Feed the lambs! Feed the sheep! The Savior says, "Feed my lambs," "Feed my sheep." "Feed my sheep" (John 21: 15, 16, 17).

The Power of Love.

BY H. A. STAHL.

Paul says, "The love of Christ constraineth us." Others may use various expressions, but all ultimately mean the very same thing: "The love of Christ constraineth" them. Paul does not mean his love for Christ, but Christ's love for him. This was the grace and power that moved him and sustained him. It was strange, we may say, that the love of one whom we have never seen, except in a vision, should have this power. We may wonder, but the fact still remains. Christ's love was the power in the case, and the power remains still. It is the greatest power on earth. There is no such a motive power among men.

Men are so constituted that they can not sit down and indifferently accept the pure love of another. They become restless under it. It melts hearts of stone. This is true of us, thank God. The common love of men and women always cheers and blesses. The love of parents for their children wakens the love of children for parents, and often will control and soften the most refractory will, which no compulsion could bend or break.

The mother's unending love for even a wayward, profligate son, or reckless or fallen daughter, will prevail at last, penetrating through every barrier of sin and selfishness. The devoted love of brothers and sisters of mercy, who, in any form, give their lives for others, will at last win the hearts of the hardest and most abandoned.

Love is as irresistible as summer warmth on snow, yet all this human love is but the image and shadow of Divine love. If the power of human love is so exquisitely great, if a man who has the rare and God-like gift of pouring out of his little human heart any tiny streamlet of genuine human love, can so attract and sway and impel human hearts and wills around him, what wonder if the Divine stream of love that poured in full torrent on this dark and gloomy world, in the life and death of Christ, has moved and blessed the world ever since. When you once fully open your ears and your hearts to the story of Christ's love, when you listen to it, not with languid, half-awakened intelligence, but listen to it as you would listen to the one fact that most of all concerns you to know and understand, then, at last, its power is felt in your soul, in your life and in your actions as well as in your dealings with your fellowmen.

There is nothing so potent in determining the actions of men as the love principle in its different phases. The more love in a home, the more power and influence in that home. The more love in a church, the more Christian graces there, the more active there, and the more accessions there, and the more power and influence the church will have in this sinful world.

Love gives power in a community and is a great refining agency. It melts the sinner's heart and prompts him to accept Christ as his Savior.

Inspiration, Revelation and Illumination.

BY S. Z. SHARP.

"Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3: 16).

The object of this article is an attempt to show the distinction between inspiration, revelation, and illumination, and to prove that the Bible is inspired.

A man is inspired when the Holy Spirit takes hold of the man's spirit and makes him say or write what the Holy Spirit dictates. "Men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit." A revelation, in the Bible sense, is something said or shown by God, or one of his heavenly agents. A person is illuminated when the Sun of Righteousness shines into his soul by means of the Word of God, accompanied by the Holy Spirit. Every converted person is illuminated. "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

Christ is "the Light of the world." "There was the true light, that which lighteth every man coming into the world" (John 1: 9). As in the natural world, so in the spiritual world. Not all receive the same amount of light. The light is the same, but the illumination is regulated by the manner in which a person presents himself to the light. This accounts for the degrees of illumination. Some seem to have very little. We should "walk in the light," to be properly illuminated.

A person receives a revelation from God when he tells or shows him something. Abraham received a revelation when the three angels appeared to him and made known to him the birth of Isaac and the destruction of Sodom. The sight of the burning bush and the command to save Israel was a revelation to Moses. The first chapter of the Book of Ezekiel and the last book of the New Testament are grand examples of revelation. They are not illuminations.

Inspiration differs from both revelation and illumination. It is a different manifestation of God to man. Inspiration means to "breathe in." It is the act of the Spirit of God taking possession of the spirit of man, and directing the latter what to say or write. Not every one illuminated is inspired, but every one inspired may be considered illuminated. Inspiration does not come by degrees. It is always complete. It is not continuous. It only occurs when the occasions demand it. Notice what the prophets say: "The word of the Lord came to Jonah,"—Joel, Amos or some other,—just when it was needed,—and at no other time. Inspiration came to men who were sometimes wicked, like Balaam, Saul, or those who sometimes sinned, like David. Even though the men did wrong, the message was always right when it came from God. When a prophet was inspired, he could not say anything but what God put into his mouth, otherwise the Word of God might have been adulterated. Notice what Balaam says in Num. 22:

38, "Have I now any power at all to speak anything except the word that God putteth in my mouth."

Objectors to the inspiration of the Bible claim that falsehoods are found in it. That is merely quibbling. The Bible tells what is false and what is true, but tells both exactly correctly. It tells the false statement made by Satan to Eve and to Christ when the latter was tempted; also the falsehood of Ananias and Sapphira, but it tells them truthfully and correctly, and leaves no room for criticism. In fact, it is one of the peculiar characteristics of the Inspired Word that it tells what is bad as well as what is good with equal precision about all its heroes. Thus the drunkenness of Noah, the mistake of Moses, the adultery of David, and the weakness of Peter in denying his Master, are all told with the same frankness and precision as their good qualities. In this the Bible differs from other books, which emphasize the virtues of their heroes and gloss over their weaknesses.

The Extent of Inspiration.

Not only the prophetical, but also the historical books came by inspiration of God. The latter are necessary to an understanding of the former. Without the history of man's fall we could not understand the plan of his redemption. Without the story of Abraham and the sacrifice he was called on to make of his son Isaac, we could not appreciate fully the sacrifice God made of his Son.

Even the form of the inspired writings was dictated, and is one of the criteria by which we may judge whether a certain production is inspired or not.

Proofs of Inspiration.

1. A peculiar feature of all inspired writings is their individuality. The Bible differs from all other writings. The sacred writers have a form and style peculiar to themselves. Though written during a period of sixteen hundred years, and by thirty-six or more writers, there is a thread running through all the books which proves their unity, and confirms the authorship.

2. No human genius ever conceived and produced such a work as the Bible. It is superhuman in conception and execution.

3. Its character is heavenly, majestic, pure and complete.

4. The fulfillment of prophecy attests its Divine authorship.

5. Men of one age wrote for men of another age and dictated to them.

6. Many statements of the Inspired Writings are attested by profane writings.

7. Its own testimony can not be rejected. About two thousand times it declares, "Thus saith the Lord," when it states a fact.

8. Christ and his apostles frequently refer to the Old Testament as authority.

What We Shall Be?

BY W. R. DEETER.

"Now we see through a glass darkly" (1 Cor. 13: 12).

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be" (1 John 3: 2).

THE Lord wanted his people to know much about their future, perhaps as much as they could comprehend, but there are many things that are beyond our comprehension.

Paul says, "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope" (1 Thess. 4: 13). In the condition of the rich man and Lazarus we get a glimpse into the future. The rich man was a man of the world, who wore fine clothes and ate rich food, who had rare opportunities for doing good, but did not embrace and improve them. The result was he went to hell when he died. Lazarus was extremely poor, so far as this world is concerned, but he did the little good that he could do. He was not only poor, but sadly afflicted. He also died and his soul was carried to heaven by an angel, and he rested with Abraham. The rich man sees and recognizes him; he also recognizes Abraham. He calls him "Father Abraham," and entreats him to send Lazarus to his relief with water. Abraham calls him "son," showing he was a Jew. He tells him, "Remember, back in the world you had your good things and Lazarus his evil things. Now he is comforted and you are tormented. Besides, there is a great gulf fixed between us that is impassable."

From the above we learn: (a) The dead have power of recognition. (b) They have power of speech. (c) They have their memories. (d) They are conscious of suffering, if sinners. (e) They are comforted if saints. John says of those who die in the Lord, "They rest from their labors and their works do follow them" (Rev. 14: 13).

Here again we learn that the departed saints rest. That does not necessarily show that they are inactive, for they are active. Listen; here is a picture of the activity of the saints in the future world. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Rev. 7: 16, 17).

So of the martyred dead that John saw under the altar. "White robes were given them and they were told to rest yet for a little season" (Rev. 6: 11). Now, while we know that God's people rest and are comforted in the next world, yet there are some things we can not so clearly understand. Paul says, "This mortal shall put on immortality." Just what it will be to have immortal bodies, we do not so readily understand, for we have never seen any such body. Jesus had an immortal body after his resurrection. Walls were no barrier to him (John 20: 19 and 26). In these instances the doors were shut; but Jesus rose up in their midst. John says, "We shall be like him" (1 John 3: 2).

To know we shall be like Christ is enough for the Christian. To talk to us about an immortal body is like talking to the man who was born blind, and never saw the light of this world, about the tints of the rainbow, or the beautiful flowers. No matter how rich the colors, he could not comprehend what he was told about,—either the rainbow or the flowers. So of the disembodied spirits and the spiritual body promised God's people. In studying this subject we can only "see through a glass darkly."

The Christian's Prayer Life.

BY NETTIE C. WEYBRIGHT.

MEDITATION on the subject of prayer is one of the most sublime thoughts of the Christian. Communion with God,—how much it means! Through Christ sinful man,—poor, weak, sinful man,—may come into the immediate presence of God,—the holy, almighty, all-loving God. It is in prayer that the soul meets with God. It is our means of growth and development in the inner man. Through the Bible we have access to the Word of God. In prayer we speak to God and wait for his answer—his will. "In prayer we speak with God, pour out our hearts before him, thank and praise him, and the inmost truth of our personality opens and unfolds itself before his face. Prayer, therefore, is love itself in its living expression." By prayer our spiritual life is made deeper, richer and stronger. The most precious promises in the Bible are ours, if we but lay hold on them.

Prayer is, however, not a means of our personal, selfish indulgence, not a door opened to the storehouse of heaven that we might feast on heaven's rich, spiritual bounties for our individual aggrandizement, but, on the contrary, every true prayer involves the idea of real sacrifice,—sacrifice of our personal desires and wills,—that we can truly pray as did Christ, our Perfect Example in all things, "Not my will, but thine be done." We need ever remember that our mortal vision is so narrow that, indeed, we know not our needs. We often do not understand our own hearts and lives. For that reason we often do not know how to pray as we ought. If we are unwilling to be led in paths other than those we now tread, we can not consistently pray for God's guidance in our lives.

If we are unwilling to give up some of our dearest earthly joys, that our hearts may be made purer and more fit for the Spirit's indwelling, we can not sincerely pray to be cleansed of all unrighteousness, for it is often true that our fondest hopes are centered in those things that count strongest against our spiritual welfare. If we are sure that our hearts are rid of self, then the Holy Spirit will assume full control there, and will teach us how to pray, if we depend on him for guidance.

Possibly every Christian has, at times, felt himself handicapped in prayer. His hands were tied, so to speak. God seemed so far away. He lacked power with God. The world and its attractions seemed to draw his mind from heaven and heavenly things. This condition is really an awful one. If we would have true power with God in prayer, it is necessary for us to resist mightily these various distractions,—hindrances to the perfect, full prayer-life we should live. Indeed we must often strive in prayer. Satan, sin and the natural life tend to draw our minds and hearts away from God, even, perhaps, in the very hour of prayer. The enemy of our souls would prefer our thoughts to be centered on self and the world. Doubt in the power and efficacy of prayer is one of his methods to get us to quit praying, if he can. He is ever watching to draw us away from God, so that it behooves us truly to "watch and pray," for "the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak."

If we would pray aright, we must first live right. "And whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments and do the things that are pleasing in his sight" (1 John 3: 22). We can not live for Satan and the world; then expect God, through Christ, our Intercessor, to grant us full satisfaction in prayer. "We must let God's word sink deep into our souls and form us, mould our thoughts, our feelings, our purposes, our plans, our actions."

Concerning the Bible injunction, to pray "in Jesus' name," one devout Bible student has said, "Prayer in Christ's name is prayer proceeding from our fellowship with Christ and Christ's fellowship with us, so that we enter into his mind and spirit." It is this constant, sweet fellowship with Christ, our Redeemer, that means perfect union, and thus only may we, in our prayer-life, grow on toward perfection. Our desires and longings are purified by our fellowship with Christ. Oh! the power and joy that God is willing to give to his humble, believing children!

It is the Christian's privilege to make his prayers definite and particular, to apply the Divine promises to his special needs. Without this privilege, the life of the Christian would be poor and colorless, deprived of much blessing and comfort that thus are his.

Nothing should prevent us from bringing our inmost needs, desires, joys or burdens before God. He alone can help us in every condition. "A Christian should breathe an atmosphere of prayer." We are to pray, not only for ourselves, but "for all men." We need to be thankful not only for the good that comes to us, but also for that which comes to others. We need to live in the joy of thanksgiving to God. May the Psalmist's prayer be ours: "With my whole heart have I sought thee: O let me not wander from thy commandments." "Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart" (Psa. 37: 4).

Curiosity—A Suggestion for Self-Examination Services.

BY J. EDWIN JONES.

THERE is a characteristic given in books on teacher-training, as belonging to the beginners' age, which doubtless has its incipiency there, but which finds in more mature minds but a larger field and greater facilities for exercise. While it is more highly developed in some minds than in others, few, if any, escape its presence in some degree. I refer to that universal characteristic, "curiosity."

In childhood this trait is unqualified. That is, it manifests itself toward every new experience in life; every new phenomenon. It is most exercised in brightest minds. Properly directed it becomes an attractive asset in the development of character. By "proper direction" I mean that our curiosity be focused on our own hearts, and concern itself with our own lives.

If we recognize, as a fact, that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" and that "out of it are the issues of life," we should be curious to know the real state of our own heart. But your heart is not so! "I know nothing against myself" (I Cor. 4: 4, A. R. V.). But to become really curious would likely involve an effectual investigation.

We have wondered, perhaps, how God managed to be so long-suffering with this brother or that sister! Let us, for a short while, be curious concerning what God must think of us,—of me. Let our curiosity take a real investigative turn, and for one brief hour let us try to discover ourselves.

What has been my attitude toward the supreme mission of the church? In fact, what has been my attitude toward the church itself? Does it seem superfluous to ask such questions so soon following the annual visit? Perhaps a little curious questioning may not be amiss, as to why we so readily answer such questions, which would seem so closely and thoroughly to unite us, while we so frequently discover that such uniformity exists in name only. Were we not all baptized into the same faith? Do we not all recognize the same elements as necessary to the development of holiness? Is our peace the peace of mere toleration, and not the real outgrowth of love?

We should be curious to know if we have grown since the last communion service. Has our spiritual horizon enlarged and has our vision become more clear? Have we a firmer grip on things divine? Does our increased knowledge and appreciation of the Christ manifest itself in actual demonstration of Christlikeness in our lives?

We should be curious to know if our consciousness of "whose we are and whom we serve" has made our actual state conform more nearly to our standing as children of God. He has declared us to be sons of God. Are we acting like sons? He has declared us to be saved from sin. Are we living in it? Our citizenship is declared to be in heaven. Are we living as though we were conscious that "here we have no continuing city"?

We should be curious to know if the fact of our sonship has effected a transformation in our lives, so that the things of the world really look the vain and foolish attempt at satisfying the soul that they really are. The soul that is actually and rapidly finding in Christ completeness, can have no real pleasure in the frivolous amusements and useless attractions of the world.

In fact, if these suggestions are pondered seriously, they will expand or adjust themselves to the needs of each individual, and should awaken the investigative mind to a keen sense of its possibilities and shortcomings.

Etiquette in Church.

BY DAVID M. ADAMS.

MODERN literature abounds with dissertations on how to conduct one's self in the arena of domestic, social and political life. For this we should be very grateful. But concerning the proper behavior in church, there is a comparative dearth of literature.

There are people who scrupulously avoid all improper conduct at any and every social function, who are apparently little concerned while attending a sacred service. Therefore it will not be deemed out of place to consider, in a brief manner, some of the principal things we should observe while in the house of God.

1. If possible, be on time. If you come in late you may annoy all who have promptly taken their places. A Christian woman who, when asked how she could always be so early at church, replied: "It is part of my religion not to disturb the religion of others."

2. Conform to the forms of worship. If at a place where you are not familiar with the forms observed, comply, so far as reasonable, with the practices you see others do.

3. If the minister has already begun to deliver his discourse, it may be well to take a seat near the door, even though you be "at home." Passing up the aisle while the minister is preaching, will distract the minds of many in the audience.

4. Always enter a church slowly and reverentially. To walk in the house of God in a careless, noisy manner is disrespectful, to say the least.

5. Be very thoughtful for the comfort and welfare of others. It is discourteous to sit next to the aisle, if you are the first to enter a pew. Take the inside of a pew and let the vacant place next to the aisle for those who arrive later, and thus avoid compelling them to crowd past you.

6. Be devout in every attitude. Never pay any attention to those around you, even if they are noisy or rude. All whispering should be studiously avoided. Be sure to take part in the singing. Thomas Hastings, a great teacher of vocal music, once said: "If you have a whole voice, use it. If you have a half voice or a quarter voice or a mere thread of a voice, still use it to the praise of God."

7. Whatever you do, avoid scanning over a paper or reading a book during service. That is disrespectful and unmannerly in the extreme.

8. Bring the babies, but do not fondle them during the service, when not necessary to do so.

9. Avoid sleeping. A certain writer once said: "The closed eyes and nodding heads of those who sleep in church are in striking contrast with their activity on business days. Awake in business, asleep in church!" The writer will admit that more Pentecostal power in the sermon would, in many instances, go far toward curing somnolence in church. But an effort should be made by the individual to overcome the inclination to sleep, whatever be the cause, during religious service.

10. Be sure to leave your cat and dog at home. To many this advice may seem uncalled-for. But frequently have I seen an audience annoyed (and sometimes amused) by the presence of a dog or cat. A few years ago I held a revival meeting at a certain place to which a dog was permitted to accompany his master. He made himself conspicuous by exploring every nook and corner in the building. It is useless to say that his presence operated against the success of the meeting. On another occasion, while delivering a special discourse, I narrowly escaped tramping on a cat which had unceremoniously invaded the pulpit. The sacredness and spirituality of a religious service held in the house of God will not permit the presence of domestic animals.

11. Make it a point to speak an encouraging word to as many as possible, after the service. If there are any strangers, extend to them a welcome hand, and once learning their names, introduce them to the pastor, who should make a special effort to speak to them. By all means never let a stranger go out of the church unnoticed.

12. Never commence preparations for departure before the close of the service. To put on your overcoat, overshoes or wraps during the closing hymn is a breach of church etiquette, as it detracts from the spirituality of the service.

13. Never congregate in the aisles or vestibule of a church and there engage in loud talking and jesting. We should remember that the house of God is a sacred place—a house of prayer.

Enthusiasm.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

THE success of any cause depends more upon the hot blood of the leaders than upon any other one thing. They must be baptized with fire, to warm up the zeal, and burn out all selfishness and every sinister desire. If they diligently pursue the cause they have espoused, they are bound to succeed.

When enthusiasm is the outgrowth of vital conviction, the heart is moved with a sincerity that will touch and draw other hearts, and will make converts of them even in spite of opposition.

The working power of a church does not depend so much upon its large body of members as upon those who have a "mind to work." In fact, in nearly all churches the real live workers are few, and activity largely depends upon them. Many have their names upon the church records, but their affections are elsewhere. If the life of the church depended upon them, it would shrivel up of dry rot.

The workers have many difficulties and discouragements to meet. They expose themselves to contempt and ignominy. Instead of receiving sympathy and help, they are met with cold criticism. If they did not lose themselves in their cause, they would yield to despair. There is no selfishness in the motives of such people. If there were, their work would be spoiled.

Some one, in viewing our Savior's work, was reminded of the saying, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." This is the nature of zeal. It will eat up opposition, break down barriers, surmount all difficulties, turn the indifferent into workers and make friends to a cause out of enemies.

Talk about the training of the minister! Give him education and Bible culture, the more the better, but above all give him enthusiasm,—real old-fashioned zeal,—a complete Pentecostal fire baptism. Whatever else he may lack, if he has this, he will succeed. This is what makes the "devout men out of every nation under heaven" say, "Men and brethren, what must we do?"

The wonderful things that are happening, and will continue to happen, and things that endure, are brought to pass by the enthusiastic. Let us thank God that there is still hot blood in the world, and let us do nothing to cool it. When it stops flowing, the pulse grows feeble, and decay sets in. It may need a little directing at times. "Do not stop the warbling brook, but teach it how to flow."

The Holy Spirit in 1 Cor. 12-14.

BY PAUL MOHLER.

ONE of the most striking distinctions between the Christian and the unbeliever is in the matter of spiritual control. Both are subject to such control, but the unbeliever is led by Satan into idolatry, while the Christian is led by the Spirit of God unto discipleship of Christ.

But the work of the Spirit does not stop there,—it goes on, and qualifies each individual Christian for some line of Christian service in the body of Christ, according to the will of God. Notwithstanding the great diversity of gifts, there is great unity of effort, the Holy Spirit coördinating, combining and harmonizing the various members of the body of Christ, and causing each to help the other, and all to further the aims of the whole, just as do the members of our physical bodies.

Among the various gifts of the Spirit, some are certain to be of more importance than others, and these we are urged to desire. As men are constituted, it is natural for jealousies to arise between the members of the body of Christ, so that if this unity of the body is to prevail, there must be some great force at work both to unite the members into one whole and absolutely to prevent all friction, strife and jealousy among the various members. This force is love. Without it, the greatest spiritual gifts are not only made ineffective to the advancement of the cause of Christ, but they are an element of positive danger to the very existence of the church. This makes love of more importance to the Christian than any or all other gifts of the Spirit. He who does not exercise his gifts in love is like a powerful but intractable horse, which is not only useless to his master but is certain to receive from him nothing but severest discipline, entirely without praise; for God has praise for only those who love as he himself doth love.

In a time when striking demonstrations of spiritual power were of much use by the Lord, it was natural that such gifts as the speaking with tongues, working of miracles, etc., should be regarded by many in the church as being the greater gifts. When, therefore, Paul urges the members of the church to desire earnestly the greater gifts, it is necessary for him to say what are the really greater gifts. This he does in the fourteenth chapter. In doing this, he does not take up all the gifts but deals with two representative gifts to illustrate the principle which must govern the esti-

THE ROUND TABLE

Recognizing God.

BY MARTHA MARTIN.

"And ye shall know that I am Jehovah" (Ezek. 6: 7).

THE above expression, or a very similar one, such as, "Thou shalt," or "they shall," etc., is found forty-two times in the Prophecy of Ezekiel. While reading this Book of Ezekiel, the import of the above expression impressed itself upon the writer's mind.

In God's dealings with and his messages to these ancient captive Israelites, his great heart was yearning to have his own recognize him as their own,—the Lord of hosts. God used various methods to bring about this desired condition. While they were impenitent, and persistent in sin, he threatened them with still greater desolations and disasters than had as yet befallen them. Many of these are strikingly presented in chapters 6 to 15. Can we, as a nation, or as individuals, expect God to refrain from visiting upon us dire calamities if we persist in sin, refusing to recognize his power? "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth" (Heb. 12: 6).

But God has other methods for bringing his own into the attitude of responsiveness to his manifestations of Divine Fatherhood. He offers forgiveness and the reëstablishment of a covenant (ch. 16: 60-63); yea, more—even to do better unto them than at their beginnings (ch. 36: 11).

How much more blessed it is to be in an attitude wherein God can bring us back to him by offering us the privilege of renewing our covenants with him, than if he must smite us to the earth before we will look upward! How eagerly we recognize God in our every act when we have renewed our vows with him! We then know that he is Jehovah, and are ready to magnify his name.

Another method used by God in order that Israel might more fully recognize him was the execution of judgment upon their enemies (ch. 28: 26). They could not live securely until their enemies were subdued. Many of these were to be smitten with dreadful calamities and then they, too, should recognize God as supreme.

How like God's present method of dealing with mankind is this procedure! The individual Christians in a church are often brought to recognize God more fully when they see his power in overcoming those who have opposed his cause. In our revival meetings our faith in God is often much strengthened when we see the powers of eternal darkness dispelled from the hearts of sinners. These former enemies of God are then transformed into loving children who know that God is Jehovah.

All mankind must sometime recognize God (Rom. 14: 11). Why should not all who have been called by him recognize him as God now, witnessing by their faithful lives that they know whom they have believed? Then they may coöperate with God in his purpose to have all men recognize him.

The Prayer Meeting.

BY EZRA FLORY.

In 1 Cor. 14: 1 Paul encourages the Corinthians to exercise in love and in the desire of spiritual gifts, but above all he would have them to prophesy or bear witness (verse 3). Verse 26 of this same chapter is the prayer meeting verse. "When ye come together each one hath a psalm, hath a teaching, hath a revelation, hath a tongue, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying."

Each one who attends contributes something to the edification of all. Surely, the early church had no trouble in having such meetings as we would term good prayer meetings. At least we do not find the subject discussed at all. There was breadth of variety so that all might exercise their gifts in the meeting. What a vast number in our meetings who do not exercise their gifts, though in other ways they are able to speak with power! There is a pseudo-modesty that really is cowardice. It is the duty of every one, not only to be edified, but to edify, according to the grace given to him.

Again; notice the freedom of utterance in the verse cited. Just as though we are all one family, trying to help each other. "Hath a revelation,"—personal experiences, practical, everyday applications! This is what is fire to the meeting. O, for more!

Then there is the point of Bible teaching in the prayer meeting. Always take the Bible along to the meeting. It is a good plan to assign several well-directed chapters as a basis for the following meeting. A book of the Bible might be taken up in this way. "Each one hath a psalm." That means that they had good, spiritual singing. That's what we need! Do not harp on the same songs every time. Sing without the book in hand and sing suitable songs for the occasion. Then all sing.

But a good prayer meeting means more than music or the hashing over a topic or the making of a speech. The meeting must be the outflowing of life "hid with Christ in God" and one that will lead the members into a deeper life of prayer and consecration, enriched by daily Christian living.

Perseverance.

BY A. H. MILLER.

WHILE burning brush near the wooded mountainside, the fire crossed our path and spread out into the timber where it moved onward by leaps and bounds. A neighbor, seeing the situation, came to our help, but upon arrival said: "It's no use to try to get ahead of it; you can't stop it." We, however, kept at work, and finally succeeded in getting a road raked through leaves and about rocks, sometimes using our hands as rakes, to remove leaves from crevices between the rocks, thereby gaining control of the flames. How? By keeping at it,—perseverance.

Just so in our Christian life. The destroying power of sin is crossing our borders, and some say, "We can't stop it," while a few keep fighting against it, using all their powers to overcome sin. We have the promise that our labor in the Lord is not in vain (1 Cor. 15: 58), while the want of perseverance excludes us from the benefits of the Gospel (Heb. 6: 4-6).

May we, then, as those who profess to be working for God and the salvation of the world, not be discouraged by the "we cannots" of the church, but let us keep on to the end, and we shall surely be rewarded for all the good we do. Persevere!

How Save These People?

BY MARY E. PROWANT.

"OH, what shall I do?" cried a young, inexperienced minister. "The minister in charge of this revival meeting has been called away unexpectedly and I have tried so hard to get out of taking his place, but he would not let me off. So many people are to be saved, and how can I save them?"

He arose before a large congregation, having, seemingly, nothing to say, and he was so nervous that he shook. His thought was, "How can I save these people?" But he gave them a short talk and closed the meeting. After the service he spoke to some of the brethren and told them that it was so unexpected and he was not prepared. With a broken heart he went to bed that night, but did not sleep.

The next morning he arose, still worrying about how to save the people. He took a walk down the railroad. He thought, "If I could only go home, so I would not have to face that crowd again tonight, what a relief it would be! If I could only get some one to look after these meetings. What shall I do?" While thus worrying he stopped suddenly and said: "What a selfish man I am! I can not save any one. God alone can do that. Why didn't I think of that sooner?" Then he went into a house near by and told the sister of his experience. They knelt and prayed for the saving of souls, and also prayed for themselves that they might be forgiven and freed from selfishness.

That night there was such an ingathering of souls that the whole congregation was made to rejoice. It also proved to the minister that all he could do was to preach the truth and invite the people in, and God would do the rest.

I am afraid that is the trouble with a good many of us. We put too much confidence and praise in ourselves, and not enough in God. I know if we would all unite in prayer more, and pray more earnestly, we could accomplish far more than we do. Surely, we have faith in the Bible; and if we have faith in the Bible, we should have faith in prayer. If we have faith in prayer, why don't we pray more?

He Made His Point All the Same.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

A CERTAIN aged brother was in the habit of referring to infant baptism in every sermon he preached whether in season or out of season. Once, upon a funeral occasion, he was requested, out of respect to people of that faith, who would be present, not to bring it into his sermon that day. His introductory remarks were: "I was requested not to say anything on infant baptism, and inasmuch as we do not find anything about it in the Gospel, we will let it go at that."

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

Duty Under Difficulties.

2 Tim. 2: 1-13.

For Sunday Evening, June 11, 1911.

I. Duty's Burdens.—Jer. 20: 9; Amos 3: 18; Luke 12: 50; John 9: 4; Acts 4: 20; 18: 5; 20: 22; 1 Cor. 9: 16.

II. Some Duties.—Luke 18: 1; Dan. 6: 10; John 13: 14; Acts 5: 29; 20: 35; Rom. 15: 1; Heb. 2: 1; 1 John 3: 16; 4: 11.

III. Qualities Needed.—Matt. 10: 22; Rom. 12: 12; 2 Peter 1: 5-7; Eph. 6: 10; Psa. 27: 14.

IV. Encouragement. (1) Duty rewarded (Joshua 14: 6-11, 14). (2) A trying situation (Acts 26: 19-29). (3) No surrender (Acts 4: 13-23). (4) The graces we need (Rom. 5: 1-5).

Note.—(1) Christ taught that one's duty under provocation is to "turn the other cheek." (2) One of Paul's severest indictments against certain young people in his day he expresses in the words "disobedient to parents." More than once he urges, "Obey your parents in the Lord." (3) One can be found doing nothing better than his duty. In the path of duty one may be always ready to die.

PRAYER MEETING

Lessons I Have Learned from Life's Failures.

John 21: 3-6; 2 Cor. 12: 7-10.

For Week Beginning June 11, 1911.

1. My Failures Make Me Mindful of My Frailties.—They cause me to take careful account of my strength and also my weakness. Inherent sin causes most failures. The true hero in life's battle is he who, recognizing his shortcomings, tries to overcome them. Though, like Paul, a "thorn in the flesh" be our lot, we must battle on bravely (Philpp. 3: 13, 14).

2. My Failures Should Lead Me to Profit by the Experience of Others.—The Bible faithfully records the failures of the men whom it describes, and does it for our profit. Esau sold his birthright; let me be warned to keep mine. Peter denied his Lord; let me guard well what I say. Thomas would not believe unless he saw; let me believe though the way is dark (Psa. 34: 22).

3. I Must Master My Failures or They Will Master Me.—Every sea-coast is strewn with wrecks, most of which have been caused by human failure. Seemingly, imperfection clings to us, while in the flesh. But, pressing forward to new achievements, we must not linger among past failures. Our face must be fixed upon that of the Master. Looking upon him, we gain strength for the palsied arm and the weak knees (Isa. 40: 28-31).

4. My Failures Make Me Sympathetic With Others.—Jesus taught us how to treat those who have failed. He did not condemn Peter nor the doubting Thomas; but won both of them to greater manhood. The strong should succor the weak; the happy should comfort the distressed (1 Thess. 5: 14, 15; Rom. 15: 1).

5. My Failures Should Send Me to God for Help.—Paul could well say, "I glory in my infirmities, for when I am weak then am I strong." He could do all things through Christ who strengthened him. God teaches me that my failures are less when I face them, than when I flee from them, for by his grace I am sure to conquer (2 Cor. 12: 10).

HOME AND FAMILY

The Little Family.

SELECTED BY VENA S. BUSSARD.

There was a little family,
Who lived in Bethany;
Two sisters and a brother,
Composed this family.
With prayer and with singing,
Like angels in the sky;
At morning and at evening,
They raised their voices high.

They lived in peace and pleasure,
For many lowly years;
They laid awāy their treasure,
Beyond this vale of tears.
Though poor and without money,
Their kindness made amends;
Their house was ever open,
For Jesus and his friends.

But while they lived so happy,
So poor, so good, and kind;
Their brother was afflicted,
Which grieved them sore in mind.
Poor Martha and her sister,
Now wept aloud and cried;
But still he grew no better,
But lingered on and died.

Jews came to their assistance,
Put Lazarus in the tomb;
They came to them to comfort,
And drive away their gloom.
When Jesus heard the tidings,
Far in a distant land;
How swiftly he did travel,
To join their lonely band.

When Martha saw him coming,
She met him on the way;
And told him how her brother,
Had died and passed away.
He blessed her and he cheered her,
And he told her not to weep;
For in him was the power
To wake the dead from sleep.

When Mary saw him coming,
She ran and met him too;
And at his feet aweeping,
Rehearsed the tale anew.
When Jesus saw her weeping,
He fell aweeping too;
And wept until they showed him,
Where Lazarus was entombed.

They rolled away the cover,
And looked upon the grave;
He prayed unto his Father,
His loving friend to save.
Now Lazarus in that power,
Came from that gloomy mound;
And in full strength and vigor,
He walked upon the ground.

If we but love dear Jesus,
And do his holy will;
Like Martha and like Mary,
And always use him well.
At death he will redeem us,
And take us to the skies;
And bid us live forever,
Where pleasure never dies.

How to Explain Sexual Matters to Girls and Boys.

By Jennie M. Byers, in Gospel Trumpet.

When a very young child, an older girl took it upon herself to give me general information which I never should have had, especially in the way it was given. It so poisoned my mind about the principle of life and the sacred relationship of husband and wife that I was poisoned until I grew to womanhood and was saved and married. When I looked at the beautiful plan of God and thought his thought after him, and how all he did was well done, and saw how sacred and harmonious everything regarding sex was, and what a benefit it was, and the beautiful homes and relationship which came because of sex, I saw God's plan with a pure eye, and the poison was extracted from my mind. I thought if God ever saw fit to give me the pleasure of a family, I would be the first one to tell my children what they should know about themselves, as well as the principle of life.

Finally the children came, and with them came the questions always asked by children. Instead of evading them or telling them lies, I told them that, as they grew old enough, I would tell them all they wanted to know, and answer every question myself. The time came when the eldest one asked as to the principle of life. I took her into my room and told her I had a secret to tell. I said it was to be her and mother's secret. She must not even tell her younger sister or any one else, but always come to me and I would tell her all she wished to know. I began by showing her the formation of plants, flowers, and trees, and how they bore fruit of their nature and benefit. Then I told of the fishes and their nature, then the principle of life in us: God's design in making male and female, and how by so doing it made the sacred and lovely homes and relationship of fathers, mothers, grandparents, uncles, aunts, cousins, etc. I told her how much superior this was to the brute creation, how anxious the husband and wife were for a little baby to love, how God granted them their desire, how it was a part of their very selves, how happy they were in expecting a little treasure to love, how anxiously they waited and planned for it and when the time was fulfilled for its appearance here, how gladly the parents welcomed it. This I told, in a simple, clean, pure way, in language the child could understand and comprehend. She listened with intense earnestness and pleasure, and when the understanding came, said in such simplicity and sweetness, "Oh! is that the way? I often wondered." Then her mind was at rest. There remained no suspicion or inquisitiveness, she knew all she desired, and when she needed or wanted more information all she had to do was to go to mother. Then, too, it was hers and mother's secret. She would not betray mother, and it was too sacred to talk about with any one else.

Then, as she matured, there was other information for the child, according to her age, comprehension, and need. When I saw the affections begin to mature, I told her what that meant. I told her, too, that there were many evil-minded men and women who would take advantage of a young, innocent girl; that there were men and women who went around hunting young girls for evil purposes and they would feign themselves as friends to capture the girls, often giving candy and treats as inducements to go for a ride, etc., that they might gain their evil purpose. I told her that all those things must be avoided.

Later, when my girls came to the marriage altar, I, as mother, told them what they might expect and how to act as women worthy of true wifehood and motherhood. I could see how pure their minds were kept all the way along. All the plans and designs of God were pure, and it kept their minds, hearts, and bodies pure.

Dear parents, get more intimate with your boys and girls. It is only false modesty that hinders you from doing your duty as you should. The duty you neglect some evil-minded person will perform, and these things, so pure and sacred, will be defiled and poisoned by the evil minds and hearts of those who bring it to your children. If you satisfy your child's curiosity he will have no need to go to some one else. Who can impart these things better than a child's father or mother? I feel as much companionship with my children as any one in the world, and would feel hurt if my child went to some one else for information that was mine to give. Do not neglect this; take the time; get the information yourself, then impart it to them. Get the "Self and Sex Series" for them to read, according to their ages, and these books will be a real benefit to them. Get the set of eight books and keep it in your library. These books will be as good for the next generation as for this. Read them, pass them on, and profit by them.

Take that dear young boy as well as the girl and be a mother and companion to him. Invite him to your room; go to him and tell him all he should know. When the change comes into his life and he feels and acts awkward, put him at ease and rest. Do not laugh at him because his voice is changing and he feels and talks awkwardly, neither allow the rest of the family to do so. No one can put a boy at ease like his own father or mother. Tell him all he needs to know and tell him to come often and ask any question he desires. He will not be with you long. Love him so he will think home is the dearest place on earth, and father and mother are next to God, and brothers and sister as treasures sent from God.

Mothers in Israel.

BY EMMA J. MOHLER.

It is with pleasure that we look back over a period of nearly forty years, and recall to mind the dear old mothers in Israel, with whom we often met, in the early years of our Christian experience. Our home was in the Deep River, Iowa, church, and on love feast occasions such sainted mothers as Sisters Bettie Flory and Annie Brower, of South English, and Sister Maria Snyder, of Brooklyn, would accompany their husbands to the feast. Holy women they were, whose feet were firmly planted upon the Rock. They have all gone to their reward, "but their works do follow them." They were a great help to the lambs of the flock, for they watched "for their souls as they that must give an account." When they saw anything about us, contrary to the Gospel, they reasoned with us from the Word, and their advice was seldom ignored.

Their advice was, "Study to show thyself approved unto God," etc., showing us that to neglect to study and obey God's Word would eventually bring shame both to ourselves and the church. To teach the young, so they may be "rooted and grounded" in the principles of the Gospel, is a work in which the official wives may take a noble part. Of course we ought all to be "workers together," but we always looked on the officials' wives as leaders in all lines of church work in which the sisters are called to help.

"But," says one, "we were not elected to office, as our husbands were." No, but God says you are "his helpmeet." Do we need any higher authority than his? We infer that he meant a helpmeet in spiritual as well as in temporal things, and if the wife is to be "faithful in all things," how could she show her faithfulness to Christ better than to gather the young together whenever opportunity presented it, self, and, Priscilla-like, teach them the way of God more perfectly? But she must use "sound speech that can not be condemned," for in this age of loose church government, in which many of the young know little about gospel restraint, there is need of wholesome counsel.

So, sister leaders, awake! Stand by your husbands in the saving of souls! Take up the work that our mothers laid down! You may meet with discouragements, but so did Jesus. Christ says, Feed my lambs! Keep on feeding; for God says, "You shall reap if you faint not." On "that happy, golden shore" the jewels you have won for Christ may shine as stars in your crown.

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

CEDAR LAKE, IND.—We have organized a joint Mission or Aid Society with Sister Sarah Holman as president; Sister Sadie Ober, vice-president. Our regular meetings are held the first Thursday afternoon of each month, and as often between times as we can. We have a busy sewing year. May God bless the work.—Sarah Holman, R. D. 3, Avilla, Ind., May 16.

WOOSTER, OHIO.—Our Aid Society met Jan. 11 and reorganized for one year, with Sister Mary Brubaker, president; Sister Anna Garber, vice-president; Sister Ella Hoover, treasurer. During the past year we met ten times, with an average attendance of twelve. Collections for the year amounted to $49.56; donated $20 to the Akron Mission, besides a box of clothing. Our work for the year was mostly quilting and comfort making. Several days were spent in making clothing. Expenses for the year amounted to $44.88; balance in the treasury, $4.68.—Mrs. Lenchet Gerber, Secretary, Wolfersville, Ohio, May 15.

ELKTON, VA.—Our Aid Society met May 4 and organized for one year, with Sister Ada Huffman, president; Sister Sarah Zigler, vice-president; Sister Ada Harvey, secretary; Sister Ollie Harvey, treasurer. During the past year we had an enrollment of twenty-three members. We met twelve times, with an average attendance of eight. Amount of money carried over from last year was $27.74; collections for the year, $13.94; donations received in cash and goods, $2.90; received for quilts, comforts, prayer coverings and other things sold, $72.28; total amount received, $116.86. Amount paid out for the year for goods, Larkin goods, helping the needy, helping to build and repair churches, etc., $87.85 (some of this being in goods we have left on hand). Cash on hand, $28.17.—Annie Huffman, R. D. 1, Churchville, Va., May 13.

PRAY for the Conference.

NEXT Lord's Day is our fast day.

LET all the members fast and pray.

PRAY without ceasing for harmony at the Conference, and for the union of all believers.

BRO. J. H. B. WILLIAMS, assistant secretary of the General Mission Board, is spending a week at Belleville, Kans., before the Annual Meeting.

WE received a number of orders for the Conference Booklet, and our people are pleased with it. Those who do not attend the meeting can see just what is to be done.

SISTER ANNA HUTCHISON, who is preparing to enter the mission field, spent several days with friends in Elgin, last week, and while here called at the MESSENGER sanctum.

BRO. W. K. CONNER delivered twenty-three addresses at Moscow, Va., beginning April 30 and closing May 21. Five persons came out on the Lord's side and were baptized.

THE little band of believers at North Yakima, Wash., is looking for a pastor to take charge of the work in that city. For particulars address J. Hollinger, North Yakima, Wash.

THE members at Elgin enjoyed a very pleasant love feast last Saturday evening, with Bro. B. F. Heckman, of Chicago, officiating. Only a few visiting members were present. In fact, it came near being strictly a home feast.

BRO. A. J. WINE, writing from Dayton, Va., says that he is planning to attend the Annual Meeting, after which his address will be Lawrence, Kans., General Delivery. He is arranging to give some attention to evangelistic work.

BRO. R. H. NICODEMUS, of Chicago, closed his revival at Batavia last Lord's Day. The spirit of the meetings, throughout, was good, and some splendid impressions were made. Three were added to the church. There was a feast on Saturday evening, attended by special spiritual blessings.

BRO. A. L. B. MARTIN, formerly of Harrisburg, Pa., should be addressed at 1353 Appleton St., Long Beach, Cal. He says that while there are no saloons in that city, still many of the people are drunk with the pleasures of this world, and it will take much sound preaching and hard labor to convert them from the error of their way.

A CHURCH in one of the Southern States, having a membership of over nine hundred, voted to add $500 to the salary of its pastor. The minister, feeling that the church was carrying all she could afford, having in one year contributed for all purposes $13,000, had the good sense to decline the offer. It is rare that a preacher, or any one else, for that matter, refuses a good thing when it comes to him in an honorable way.

BRO J. W. LEAR has decided to take charge of the work in Decatur, Ill.

Do not fail to send for the Full Report. It will contain some splendid reading this year. Price, twenty-five cents.

BRO. J. S. SNIVELY will soon leave Lanark, Ill., for Stuarts Draft, Va., and from there he will probably go to Southern California.

THE first revival held at the new house in the Raven Run church, Pa., closed May 18 with nine baptized and three reclaimed. The preaching was done by Bro. Daniel Clapper, of Meyersdale.

AT the morning services, last Sunday, an offering was lifted at the Elgin church, for the Annual Conference collection. With some donations yet to be added, the amount secured will reach something over forty dollars.

A CORRESPONDENT who writes for information regarding the form of John's baptism can not receive a reply to his communication, for the reason that he fails to give either his name or his address. People who write to a publishing house should invariably give their address.

THE suffering, resulting from the famine in China, continues. The heavy rains, that put an end to the drouth, proved to be a second calamity, in the form of great floods inundating vast areas of farming lands, and destroying the growing crops on thousands of acres. Help is still needed, and the relief efforts are to be continued for some months.

THE House has brought out for Bro. Joseph H. Wenger, of South English, Iowa, a history of the descendants of Nicholas Beery, who was born in Switzerland in 1707, giving points regarding his descendants from that date to the present. The work mentions 1,471 families and about 10,000 persons, all related, and is a complete genealogical register, with biographies of many of his descendants. It should interest hundreds of our MESSENGER readers, especially those related to the Beery family. The Book contains 496 neatly-printed pages, is substantially bound in the best black cloth, and will be sent postpaid to any address for $1.75, by addressing the author.

WE close this issue on Monday at 11 A. M., and start to the Annual Meeting the day following. Our purpose is to take in as much of the Conference as practicable, and pick up all the news we can for our many readers. We hope to meet thousands of them at St. Joseph, but the greater number will remain at home and look after the things needing the attention of some one. And, by the way, it is just as important that some should remain at home, as it is that others should go. It is unfortunate, however, that things can not be divided up a little better. There are thousands who would like to enjoy the different services but can not. While remaining at home, their hearts will be at the great meeting. Some of them will fast and pray and, in the end, receive just as many blessings as those who go.

IF all goes well, the next issue of the MESSENGER will contain considerable Annual Meeting news. We hope to tell much about the different services, something about the organization of the Conference, and much of the business transacted by the Standing Committee, up to late Monday evening. The news transmitted by wire on Monday night will reach the office early on Tuesday morning, to be placed in type inside of a few hours, and will appear in the paper which our mailing clerks are to commence mailing that evening. We have a well-organized plan for collecting and rushing the Conference news into print and getting it to our readers at the earliest possible date. This plan was perfected years ago, and the results following our efforts are everywhere appreciated. For the purpose of getting news to our office we use the mails as late as possible, then take the night wire. This necessitates our working late on Monday night, but we do our part cheerfully, with a view of accommodating the readers who remain at home.

THE work of the Lord goes forward in China. Bro. Crumpacker recently baptized two more Chinese.

A LARGE delegation from California will attend the Conference. A whole car load starts from Los Angeles.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the United Presbyterian church met at Washington, Pa., last week. Washington County is said to have long been a stronghold for the Presbyterians, and the leaders are pleased with the idea of holding their conferences in a community noted for strong Presbyterian sentiment. Years ago it was the rule among the Brethren to hold the Annual Meeting in large and influential congregations, but we have gotten away from this custom. We now seek places affording necessary conveniences, regardless of church influences. Which is the better way, is another question.

MOST of our readers have seen the picture of two farmers tugging at a cow, one at the head and the other at the tail, while the lawyer milked her. This is a very apt way of telling farmers that it never pays to carry their differences into court. They may lose all they have before the case is settled, but the lawyer loses nothing. He gets the milk and his friends congratulate him on his good luck. We would like to see a picture showing how the cause of Christ loses and the devil gains when the members of a congregation become divided and spend their time contending with each other. One might possibly admire their zeal and persistency, but the angels pity their judgment.

BRO. S. S. ULREY, one of our widely-known elders, residing at North Manchester, Ind., died May 24, after a long and painful illness. We know little of the history of Bro. Ulrey, aside from meeting him at the Annual Meeting for years, where he was frequently a prominent figure. He was one of the strong men in Indiana, took an active part in the work of the church, a man of honest and decided convictions, and thoroughly rooted and grounded in the principles held by the Brethren church. He served his District on the Standing Committee several times, and filled various other positions of responsibility. We have met him scores of times, and always found him pleasant and hopeful. He lived the religion he preached.

WE are told of a series of meetings where over a score of automobiles were employed to bring people to the meetings. It was a matter of only a few minutes for a machine to run out two or three miles, load up with people and deliver them at the church door. Twenty loads means one hundred men, women and children, and two trips for each auto enabled two hundred people to reach the place of meeting with ease and comfort. In communities where the Brethren have plenty of automobiles, this will be found a splendid way of getting the people to attend the services. It will not be compelling them to come, but it will be making church going so pleasant that very few will care to absent themselves from the house of God.

A SISTER in the West writes us that a distressing drouth is prevailing in her locality, and she wants all our readers to pray the Lord to send the people of her State a good rain. Now, the MESSENGER believes in praying for rain, but there are some things that the people in a drouth-stricken State may need more than rain. They need more faith, more trust, and more of the grace of God in their hearts. Then they need the spirit of obedience—a disposition to do the will of God. They want the good Lord to send them plenty of rain so they can raise big crops, have plenty to sell, get a good price for their products, and grow rich. All of this they want the Lord to help them do, without any promise upon their part to divide up with him. Our sister writes like a converted woman, and as the Lord blesses her from year to year, she doubtless gives a part of her earnings for his work. But how about the thousands of ungrateful ones? Would it not be well for all the saints to pray the Lord that, while sending rain upon the parched earth, also to send the Spirit of warning into the hearts of those who have not yet confessed the name of Jesus? It seems to us that this would be a good way to pray.

DURING the late revival services at Red Bank, Pa., seventeen were received into the church by faith and obedience in baptism. Two others were restored to fellowship. The meetings were in charge of Bro. H. S. Replogle.

THE writer who can tell how to retain the Sunday-school children,—especially the larger ones,—for the preaching services, will solve a problem that is puzzling half of the preachers and pastors in this country. The custom of having most of the scholars return to their home after the close of the school is a serious mistake. It is still more serious for members,—and especially teachers,—to leave before church services. They ought to set a better example. But how can these evils be remedied?

Adjoining Elders.

IN response to an inquiry for information regarding adjoining elders entering a congregation to set things in order, we state, that such elders should formulate their charges, and have them delivered to the elder of the church in question, at least ten days before the time set for the investigation decided upon. The idea is to give the elder and his church ample time to prepare for such investigation. It would be unwise in adjoining elders to take advantage of either the church or her officials. Every opportunity should be given for them to prove that they do not deserve censure. Then such elders should show by their deportment and manner of conducting the investigation, that they are not partial, but mean to do the fair thing for all parties. In fact, they can not afford to do otherwise, and maintain their standing as careful and fairminded elders. Even in the investigation the common and highly-prized tokens of Christian courtesy should not be forgotten. The elder in question, along with the officials and other members, should not treat the adjoining elders as enemies, but regard them as men set apart by the Holy Ghost to look after the spiritual interest of the churches entrusted to their care. The purpose of elders, on entering a neighboring congregation, is not to flaunt their authority in the faces of the accused, but to save them and to help them correct any mistakes that they may have made. They should also feel deeply concerned about an elder that is resting under charge. The man is not to be destroyed, but he should be helped, and that, too, in the most loving way possible. In fact, the whole process of setting a church in order should be characterized by love and fatherly care, and where this is done the work of adjoining elders becomes a pleasure rather than a burden.

"The Old Way."

THERE is the cry everywhere and in everything to get out of the old ways. New methods and conditions are zealously sought after in all circles. Old business methods are too cumbersome and slow to yield returns; the ways of society of the olden time do not meet the requirements of the present, perverted, giddy mind. Years of honest effort, in preparation as a foundation for life, are supplanted by something quick and cheap to produce shallow results. The rule of home life of the past,—when fathers and mothers stood shoulder to shoulder to make home worth while, when children were taught obedience and industry and the fear of God,—has been exchanged for the party and evenings, even nights, away from home. Even married men and women leave the care of their small children to servants or others,—if they have been so unfortunate as to have children, as they regard it,—to feed on the wind and revel in late hours. Everywhere the cry is for something new, something different from the old and tried.

In religion the same cry is heard. The plea is made here, there and everywhere, that the people must get out of the old ruts. If success is to be attained, modern and up-to-date methods and conditions must be established, they tell us. And you see the result. Those easily tossed about, to meet this demand, as they see it, have attempted to introduce into the church service all sorts of things under the pretense of religion. What do you think of adding the card table, the tea party, the theater, etc., to attract the unconverted, worldly-minded? And if these things should have the effect to attract this class of people, what do you suppose would be the effect upon them? What would be the effect upon the pious and God-fearing? What would be the effect upon the service and place? And what, do you think, Jesus would have to say if he were to come into one of the modern churches so equipped? Do you remember how, on two occasions, he cleansed the temple of the worldly, the money-changers? Would he not be provoked more than ever to put the stinging question, "Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations a house of prayer?" But, instead, it has been turned into a play-house.

Even among our people the cry is heard, now and then, that we must get out of the old ways. It is based on a false conception. The facts are, we have already gotten too much out of the old ways,—the ways of Jesus and the apostles. Instead of the cry to get out of the old ways, therefore, there should be a tremendous appeal to get back to them. By this I mean the New Testament way. For this there can be no substitute. The reason of all this foolish aping after the world, in the churches, is because the New Testament way has been lost sight of, and the churches have been filled up with unconverted men and women; and there is no telling what unconverted men and women, under the pretense of the Christian church, will resort to for purposes of pleasure and entertainment. They have not the love of God and the joy of his service, so they must find their pleasure elsewhere; and, of course, like the eagle turns to the carcass, so they turn to sensual pleasure for the love of God.

Above all things else, the church needs to get back to the old way of making regeneration the condition of membership. Jesus' sermon to Nicodemus needs to be preached and repreached from every housetop in the land. Verily, men and women everywhere should be made to know that they can neither see the kingdom of God nor enter into it, except they be born again. They should know the requirements of regeneration at their hands, their duties to it, and what an enormous sin it is to become a nominal member of the church without regeneration. Nothing should be done to keep people out of the church, not required by the Word of God; but certainly, everything should be done required by the Word, as conditions of membership, and these things should be faithfully taught, and all should be urged to them.

Right here is the trouble. In the wild rush for numbers, the work of regeneration, as embracing the conditions of church membership, is supplanted by excitement, fear, coaxing and all sorts of religious twaddle. In some instances, persons are paid a stipulated sum of money to join the church. The result is, the church is, in part, a body of unregenerated people. And think of running a church made up largely, or in part, of worldlings. Is it any wonder that there is the cry to get away from the ways of spirituality to the ways of the flesh? Is it a wonder that among religious professors there are all sorts of estrangements from God and grace?

It is true, of course, that regeneration is not all of Christianity. As the natural birth is the first stage and foundation of the natural life, so regeneration is the first stage and foundation of the spiritual life; and as the natural life is to be developed after birth, so the spiritual life is to be developed after regeneration. It is not enough, therefore, to be born into the kingdom; growth should follow. And as the conditions of growth in the natural world have been the same in all the ages, so in the spiritual kingdom. The same conditions produce the same results. In order, then, that the spiritually-born may grow, it is necessary to get back into the old ways of service, of prayer, of consecration, of sacrifice, or the giving of self and means, as taught by Jesus and exemplified by the early church.

A Pleasant Outing.

SPRINGTIME is here in all of its beauty, sweetness and loveliness; and wherever we go, at home and abroad, our ears and eyes are greeted with our Heavenly Father's goodness and the wonderful provisions which he has made for our admiration, pleasure and well-being. It is the season of the year when hearts, filled with heavenly appreciation, can not but respond in gratitude to the overflowing of a parental care that is everywhere so manifest.

It seems almost like heaven in our home environments, and no less so as we go out into the beautiful world by which we are surrounded, because our Lord is not partial in the distribution of his good gifts to his children.

May 14 we were invited by Eld. J. W. Wilt to come to Juniata, Pa., to be with them at their love feast, to be held in the evening of the Lord's Day of the date named. The short trip to the place could not be otherwise than pleasant, because of the profuseness of the beautiful, as seen in the out-bursting of the springtide,—on the hillsides, in the valley, in the gurgling streams, and by the pushing out of the bloom of the dogwood, the juneberry trees and the wild crabapple.

The Juniata church is a missionary point that has grown into manhood strength under the persistent effort of Bro. Wilt, who planted the work there when the place was yet largely on paper and in prospect. His early development of the work was the right thing to do. Had it not been done at that time, the probability is that there would not be a congregation of the Church of the Brethren there today. As it is, now they have a good churchhouse, with a membership of one hundred and fifty or more. Many of their members are well-to-do, having homes of their own, so that the prospects for the future are encouraging. They have a large Sunday-school, well officered, and a good force of teachers, which means promising material for future upbuilding. Had such steps been taken when all of our towns and cities were started, our membership would have been doubled, and there would not be so many places, towns and cities where our people, today, are not known.

On Sunday morning we attended preparatory services, and in the evening we had the communion service, with a full house of members and friends. We enjoyed a very pleasant meeting. Eld. John E. Garver, who is now living at Altoona, was also present and assisted in the services. Eld. J. W. Wilt has charge of the work here, assisted by Eld. J. B. Brumbaugh, who also resides at that place.

The church there has some good, active, intelligent workers, and, under careful direction, good results may be expected. While there, we made our home with Eld. Wilt and family, who is pleasantly located, gives his time and labor without remuneration, and is among the heaviest financial supporters.

On Monday morning he brushed up his automobile and took us some five miles out into the country, to the home of Bro. Nelson and his kind family, where our eyes were greeted with some of the pleasant features of country life. These days we hear much about successful men who become so by making two blades of grass grow where there was only one. Bro. Nelson did more than this.

He lives back toward the mountain, among the hills, on the old homestead where, by close economy, his father was able to clothe and feed his family. When his son, our brother, took hold of it, to win bread for himself and family, people wondered how the living was to be made, and it was a subject for wonder. But Bro. Nelson was converted to some of the modern ideas of farm life, and the old farm was regenerated, as we readily saw on our approach to the place. Before us was a paradise of trees and bloom. Over five thousand apple trees, thousands of peach trees, pear trees, plums and cherries galore,—all in full bloom. Surely, this was a sight worth seeing. Besides all these, there were acres of strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, rhubarb and other fruits and vegetables,—enough to supply a city. All this on a poor farm on which there was scarcely enough grown to give a living and pay the taxes, but now producing crops of fruits yearly, worth thousands of dollars.

This same thing might be done by scores and hundreds of men all over this great State of ours, to the advantage and well-being of thousands of men and women. And, why not? Well, it is because we do not have enough who think and dare to do. Half of our people today are hopelessly in a rut. Another large proportion of them are indolent and shiftless, while a large percentage expect a living by robbing others. There are plenty of openings for everybody to make a good and honorable living, if we had the men and women successfully to fill them. Bro. Nelson has the qualifications and the grit to dare and do, and with these he has the best of all essentials of success,—he serves the Lord with all his house. Our stay at this Christian home was very pleasant indeed, and more of such homes would be a blessing to any community and church.

After spending the day so pleasantly at Bro. Nelson's, Eld. Wilt brought us back to his home, and from there took us to Altoona, where we spent the night and then came down to the home of our good sister, Nellie Cox,—now Ritchey,—where, through the hospitality of her kind husband, we are spending a few days, trying to tempt some brook trout to strike our hook that we have been most patiently offering to them. While fishing, and driving through the pretty Spruce Creek Valley and viewing its promising grain fields, we are enjoying a very pleasant week's outing. This valley, though near home, has been out of the range of our travel, and this was our first visit through part of it. The people are largely of the Presbyterian faith and are slow to accept any other, because they have been so taught, and are satisfied. H. B. B.

The Gospel of Idleness.

THIS is not a new or strange gospel; neither is it one that is contained in our Bible. But it is one of the most preached gospels in the world. As parents we look over our early years, which for some of us were years of poverty, trials, and hard labors, with most of the things which we desired denied us. We are glad those years are behind us; yet we feel that the deprivations and sufferings experienced were good for us, developed us in a way which would have been impossible if our lot had been easier. And there is no question that work, that self-denial, that suffering and want are some of God's best means to train men and women for the work he would have them do. We did not always bear our trials patiently; for we were young and could not see why some should have everything and we nothing.

But isn't it just a little strange that we should wish to remove as far as possible from our children the very thing which we feel did most for us as we were growing from childhood to manhood? We seek to develop the minds so that our sons and daughters may not be compelled to dirty their hands or their clothing in menial work. As an inducement for them to do their best in their studies, we point them to the educated and well-dressed man on the one hand, and to the common laborer on the other; and then we ask them which one they want to be like when they grow up. And then, to make assurance against labor doubly sure, we lay up as much as we can for them; yet at the same time we know that unearned wealth is more often a curse than a blessing. Do we not show a lack of wisdom when we so do? Do we think that labor is a disgrace? Why do we seek to give our children a good time and an easy time? Have we the idea that they will be better men and women because of their easy lives?

Once in a while we hear it said that some child works too hard. But of how many parents may it be said that they have worked too hard in order that their children might live without work? I verily believe that when we seek lives of ease for our children we are bringing upon them as great a curse as there is in the world. Our bread should represent our effort. Paul said that if a man did not work he should not eat. The Father and the Son have always worked. It is much better to do too much than too little. The son or daughter who does more than is required is a blessing, while the one who does too little is a curse.

I do not for a moment advocate having our children overwork; but I do most earnestly believe that by having them labor with their hands we are starting them in the right way. Don't pity the boy who works, who has to work. Don't try to make him believe he is misused by fate, but rather encourage him. The idler is the one to be pitied; for though he may get through this world comfortably he will have a hard time when he reaches the place where everyone is rewarded according to his deeds. There is work of all kinds to be done in the world, and the only right attitude to have toward it is to be ready to do what comes to us, or what we can find to do. Some kinds are more agreeable than others; but the main thing is to find the kind for which we are best suited, be it of whatever kind it may.

And education, training, is good—if rightly used. But to make escape from physical effort the main consideration in securing an education; or the reason for endeavoring to secure it, is to get very far astray. We have become too high-minded, for ourselves and for our children. We have no right to strive to secure only the best: it is our business to lift as well as to climb. It is our business to teach and live the gospel of work. We go wrong when we seek to place ourselves in the position of the master, unwilling to be of service. It is only service, no matter how humble, that actually counts. God never did and never will reward the idler; nor will he have great reward for those who, while workers themselves, preach idleness and ease to those who should be getting ready to do their part of the world's work. The gospel of idleness should not be preached or lived by any child of God.

The Elders of the Flock.

A WRITER in one of our exchanges laments over the decline of the eldership in one of the influential denominations in this country. There was a time, he says, when the churches were in charge of elders, who were assisted by ministers employed to feed the flock each Lord's Day. But conditions have changed. The preachers, or pastors, are everything, while the elders have little to say.

This prompts us to say that in the apostolic time there was a plurality of elders in each congregation, and regarding the care of the respective churches they conferred with each other. As shepherds, looking after the interests of the flock, they were associated together, and no one thought of leading out and taking upon himself the whole responsibility of looking after the flock. The apostolic church did not pick out one of the elders, and set him over the church as bishop or elder in charge. No reference is made in the New Testament to proceedings of that sort. There was doubtless a foreman among the elders for each congregation, but this foreman did not ignore his associates in the eldership. He consulted with them. Or, rather, they conferred together regarding the care and feeding of the flock of God.

With us it will be a sad day should the elders of our congregations be set aside and the one-man policy be introduced. It is wise and proper for a congregation to have one of her elders act as foreman or pastor, but it is not wise to set the other elders aside, and not confer with them regarding the interests of the congregation. When Paul called the Ephesian elders together, to instruct them regarding their duties, he did not address himself to the bishop, or the elder in charge. He addressed all of them, duly respecting each one in his office.

It has long been the custom to have a plurality of elders in the Brethren churches, and to have them all feel, as far as possible, an equal interest in the care and feeding of the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers. And from this well-founded gospel custom we can not afford to depart. We do not mean to oppose the supported minister, or the setting apart of one of the elders as a congregation as a leader, or a foreman, but we do wish to impress the importance of a plurality of elders in each church, and the wisdom of these elders often conferring together regarding the work entrusted to them as elders.

Putting Us out of Business.

WE feel quite sure that the editor of the Christian Standard underestimates the staying qualities of the Brethren, or Dunkers, as he is pleased to call us. In his issue of May 6 he says that recently he has had calls "for tracts or literature suitable to meet the claims of the Dunkers," and a few others he names; then he proceeds to read the preachers of his own denomination, "The Disciples," a lesson in these words:

"The helplessness of many of our ministers, when these things come to town, is disheartening. Any man with a fair set of brains, whether preacher or not, can take the Bible alone, and, in two weeks' time, be able to put these fads to a disadvantage, if not entirely out of business. We welcome the concise tract, for it is often the best instrument of warfare, but if tracts are to become bludgeons substituted for the Sword of the Spirit, in the hands of a ministry that has time for a hundred kinds of esoteric nonsense, then we are in a sorry state. Brethren, let us get down the Book and look into it."

Now, if he means to say that a preacher having a fair set of brains can take the Bible and in two weeks' time be able to put one of our churches entirely out of business, we beg to inform him that he is mistaken, as can be testified to by a few of his gifted preachers who have tried it to their sorrow. Our members can stand just as much Bible as any set of people in this country, and thrive on it, too, at that. It is well known that we go by the Book, and a preacher having ever so fine a set of brains will have to spend more weeks than he can count, studying, if he would succeed in drawing us away from our gospel principles, founded upon the declaration, "Thus saith the Lord," because the Book says so, and are always ready to name the chapter and the verse. This is probably known to the preachers who write the editor for some literature to help them out. They can get no help from the Bible, for they have learned that in our faith and practice we have more Bible than they do. We have gotten down to the Book. We study it. We like it, and that is where we live. We are not to be put out of business by any of the two-week preachers.

Opposed to Discussion.

A BROTHER residing in the West, who has carefully read all the articles that appeared in the MESSENGER on Rebaptism and other open questions, says that he gravely doubts the propriety of publishing articles in the church paper setting forth conflicting views. He can not understand how this can be done consistently in a journal that is "set for the defense of the Gospel." He would advise against discussing any of our differences in print, believing that the tendency is not for the best. There are a number of our people who agree with him, while there are some who think that the paper should be opened up for a full and fair discussion of all our differences. So far we have deemed it proper to permit writers to discuss open questions only, that is, questions on their way to the Conference. The one exception to this rule is the supported ministry, which question has been discussed off and on for several years. Generally speaking, the writers show a good spirit, however much they may differ, but of late there seems to be a disposition to criticise a little too severely, and now and then some insinuations are indulged in. But of this we are not complaining. We are simply calling attention to what some think about the publishing of conflicting views in the MESSENGER. It is a subject worth thinking about.

A Plain Statement.

A NUMBER of our congregations are publishing small local church papers, in which will be found such announcements and news as should interest the people of the immediate community. The paper for the Huntingdon congregation, Pa., is known as The Church at Work. The issue for April has a very complimentary article about the value of the MESSENGER, and the work it is doing. On the matter of Christian attire it contains a paragraph that is plain enough, and emphatic enough to please any one who is opposed to the gaudy fashions of the day. The editor thinks that the big, highly-decorated hats, worn by women, are not dictated by the Christ-life. The low dress waists, short sleeves and the wearing of jewelry come in for their share of condemnation, while in his opinion some of the most fashionable styles tend to produce impure thoughts in the minds of a certain class of vile men. The writer deplores the fact that some of our sisters are stooping so low as to fall in with these low-down and immodest fashions.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS HOME.

On the corner of Clark and Twenty-second Streets stands a large, three-story building with the words, "Parting of the Ways Home," displayed in bold letters across its front. There is not so much about the building itself that is especially significant, but the purpose of this institution, of itself, is unique. It is not really an institution, but a home with its motto, "We help men to help themselves."

The Problem of Released Prisoners.

From the walls of the city prison,—the Bridewell, Chicago's house of correction,—go hundreds of men every year. Each one has spent a term of service there, for some crime or other, and when he is released is supposed to be corrected,—a good citizen once more. But the very fact that so many of these men have served short terms in this institution, goes to prove that the very purpose of the Bridewell is a failure. When the men leave they are given the clothes with which they entered, nicely pressed, even though they are ragged, and a little money, equipped they go forth again to take up life as free citizens. Most of them are without friends. They have no one to whom they may look for help. The very fact that they have been in prison prejudices the mind of any one who might wish to employ them. Under such circumstances it is not admit the fact that, no matter how much the men may have been corrected, or what good resolutions they may have made, while in prison, and with which they go out into the world again, the men have a hard road to face. Because of this many of them go back into the old life of sin and are again sentenced to prison for another term.

How the Problem Is Being Solved.

With these conditions in mind, Rollo H. McBride, a man who had been rescued from a life of sin, several years before, and who is in a position to know the needs of the men discharged from this institution, started the Parting of the Ways Home in order to meet this need. Mr. McBride has had such an experience as preeminently fits him to be the manager of such a Home. At one time the vice-president of a railroad, he went into the depths of sin, fallen through drink. One winter night he, with a comrade, staggered into the Life Boat Mission, thinking it to be a new and untried saloon. There he was convicted. Since that time he has been constantly engaged in helping those who are in the same condition he used to be. For several years he went each Sunday morning to the Harrison Street Police Station, to tell the men and women behind the bars of the Savior he had found. It was a rather peculiar place to hold services, for he had to talk to the prisoners through the bars, but this did not discourage Mr. McBride. There would be singing, and preaching, and praying. True, it was not a regular sermon that he gave, but the talks were to the point and intensely practical. This man also worked in the "Life Boat Mission," in the Bridewell as well as in the John Worthy School, the boys' department of the Bridewell.

Giving the Men Another Chance.

One thing had always appealed to Mr. McBride as being necessary in Christian work, namely, giving a man a chance to get started again when he wants to turn from the old life to the new. With such a motive as that he conceived the idea of this Home. When the men are released from the Bridewell, they may spend the nickel given them for car fare, and go direct to the Home, where they are met by Mr. McBride in such a way that they immediately feel that they have some one in whom they may confide their very lives. He is very kind, yet stern, so that any deceiver is rebuffed in the start. His own experience comes in good play here, for he knows the ways of this class of men and they are quick to recognize the fact. If the smell of liquor is detected on the breath of any man, he is not admitted to the Home. Every man is closely questioned and when it is his determination to "make good" he is given good clothes, board, and lodging, until he can find work. This is all gratis. However, the men are given the opportunity of giving anything to the Home they wish, when they get started again.

How Employment Is Found for the Men.

The Home finds work for the men and it has been remarkably successful in doing so. All this is done in the name of Jesus, though all classes and nationalities and religious beliefs are admitted to the Home. In a recent personal interview Mr. McBride said he wanted to do with every man just what Jesus would do under the circumstances. He wants to reach the inner life by helping men to help themselves. The religious life of these men is not neglected. It is, however, a case of personal work, for there are only a few men in the Home at any one time, and they are of different creeds.

The Success of the Home.

How does this sort of thing work? Very well indeed, for it seems to meet the demands of the occasion. I have known of several cases personally where men have secured professional employment, such as telegraphy, dentistry, and the like, at splendid wages, for the reason that the men had some one to help them. It is the practical solution of the problem of reaching the men from the Christian standpoint. It would be well for the Church of God to become thoroughly practical in her work with men everywhere, so that Christianity may be practical as the Master would have it be.

How the Work Is Supported.

The Parting of the Ways Home is supported by several prominent Chicago philanthropists who are interested in saving the derelicts. If any one would like to know more of this Home, information may be had by addressing the manager, Rollo H. McBride, or calling upon him personally at the address, corner Clark and Twenty-second Streets.

GOOD FRIDAY IN INDIA.

In my boyhood days the only importance attached to this day was its auspiciousness for planting early potatoes. Why it was called "Good Friday," I did not know. I knew of its name in the almanac and that it was a special day with Catholics, but that anything should be made of it by others, or that it had any real meaning to all Christians, was a conception slow of development in my experience. Of late I have felt that much good might, and, therefore, should be derived from a proper observance of the day. My heart has felt a need for just such a blessing.

This desire was most graciously and richly gratified this morning. At six o'clock, while engaged in morning devotions, an invitation came to attend a prayer and praise service at seven o'clock. After song and prayer and the reading of a consecutive account of our Lord's trial and sufferings, the leader said, "God be praised that we are not under a crucifix,—that ours is not a dead but a living, a risen Lord. However, today we are to think of his death, we are to look again at the cross."

Following this there were given many testimonies of the power of Christ in the heart, and what his death on the cross has revealed of our own sinfulness and of his love. Here were the two great messages of the saints. Our hearts were melted as we gazed, and saw him, in his purity and love, die for our sins.

It was also shown that though we are not bound by a crucifix, yet we are bound to a crucifixion of self and the world, if the power of the risen Lord is to be realized in our lives, in victory over sin, the world and self. "I am crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that live, but Christ who liveth in me," is the experience which we all should claim by the grace of God. "The cross by which the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

A doubt was expressed by one if, perchance, our faith in the efficacy of Christ's blood might be merely of the intellect and not a practical experience. We all believe that Christ died to save us from our sins, but is sin still reigning in our lives? If so, we are denying his power to give the victory.

For the benefit of the young people present, the leader presented the message of the cross thus:

C—a crucified life.
R—a resurrected life.
O—an obedient life.
S—a life of sacrifice.
S—a life of service.

He told how the high priest went from the altar of sacrifice into the holy place to intercede and then came out to bless the waiting people. Again; Christ's hands were pierced and bleeding in self-sacrifice; clasped in intercession, then extended in blessing to men. So we can not bless others without having been in the place of intercession; and we can not intercede without having been to the altar of self-sacrifice.

All left the room from that service with a new vision of our Lord, and resolved to let him reign in our lives.

VYARA, INDIA.

Everybody is busy now, getting ready for the approaching monsoon. While there are no particular signs of rain, yet every one goes about his work, believing that after six weeks the rains will come and that it behooves them to be ready. Houses are being built, roofs rethatched, fields put in shape, everything indicating that the people are in expectancy.

Some will be wondering how it is that I am writing from home since we were expecting to be on the hills at this time. The facts are that Sister Ross and the children are there now, and that I myself was there for several weeks.

As it often happens, our plans were broken. A telegram came stating that Bro. Vishwas was seriously ill. We had left considerable building and other important work in his hands, so, knowing that with him sick, much of it would have to stop, it was thought best that I return. To come to this decision was not easy, nor was it easy to carry out. I needed the change and the benefits of a colder climate, and to leave my family among strangers, nine hundred miles from home, was hard even to contemplate. The three days' journey by bullock-cart was among the most lonesome ones I ever experienced.

While it is hard to be thus situated, yet I am glad to be here and help with the work. I found Bro. Vishwas to be a very sick man, while a number of others were quite ill. There seems to be an extraordinary amount of sickness, just now, for some cause.

The work is promising, but it is a question as to how we can direct it. It is evident that the hope of a large work, in any of these back districts, will be successfully realized only by our raising up, within the districts, men acclimated to the difficult climatic conditions.

With the people coming in goodly numbers into the church at several stations, the question of more efficient means for training and developing workers, leaders and pastors, is confronting us. With our limited number of missionaries, and every one of them with more work than they can do well, it is a serious matter, as to how we can provide for such. Then, too, houses for those who are to attend the Bible School are needed. Without building it will be a hard task to find a sufficient number of rooms for a dozen families. But we must not neglect this important work, if we would build for the future. The Bible and Training School is a most pressing need just now. Some one with some $2,400 to spare could do no better than to give it for this most important work.

Since the beginning of the year twelve have been baptized, and quite a number of others are applicants. From distant villages comes the news of those who have heard about some of their friends becoming Christians, and they, in turn, are doing the same. One feels himself wishing that he might multiply himself many times over, to meet the many calls which are coming from various sources. May the Lord help us to so direct the work that many, who are now in sin and darkness, may be led into the light of Jesus Christ.

A. W. Ross.

STOP! LOOK! LISTEN!

These three exclamatory words we frequently find as a warning at railroad crossings. Their purpose is to apprise the persons who are compelled to travel that thoroughfare of the danger to which they are exposed. Recently, as I was crossing a railroad interurban track, I noticed this warning, and was impressed with the thought of how much good this same warning might be in a spiritual sense.

People are passing down the highway of life. They are engaged in their own individual pursuits, too busily concerned in their business and the cares of this life to realize the danger there is about them in such a state of commercial concentration, as the world now presents. They rush madly on. Oh, the many homes in which the right family relationships do not exist because of the father's time and energy being centered in the ceaseless battle of commercialism, to the neglect of his home and of his loved ones! In a two-story summit of life we are engaged, it is a good plan to stop, at times, to see where we are. Business firms stop at regular intervals, and take an inventory, that they may determine where they are. I wonder if some railroad accidents have not been averted, and, possibly, many lives saved by the engineer stopping and examining his locomotive. Brother, sister, STOP just for a moment and answer to yourself and to your God: Where are you?

As you stop, "LOOK to Jesus who alone can save." What condition or trial in life is there, that cannot be met and settled by a sight of Jesus, either on the cruel cross, or as the risen Lord, or as the Great Physician? Sin-sick soul, "look to Jesus now and live." Discouraged soul, look at the Master as he wrestled in the garden! He was discouraged and tried, but he prayed, "Not my will but thine be done." The joyful soul, even, may look to Jesus as he who knew him as a personal and loving Savior, look to him and "praise the Lord! For he is most high for evermore."

As you look, LISTEN. Listen to the still small voice, the Holy Spirit! Listen to the words of cheer and comfort for the weary. Sinner, listen to the pleadings of the Spirit at your sad heart. All ye young men and women who love your blessed Redeemer, listen to his message, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation." C. Albert Hoffman.

Manchester College, North Manchester, Ind.

No matter what business the Christian may be engaged in, he has no business to be in it unless Christ is at the head of it. The man who sells shoes needs communion with God as much as the one who preaches, and the mother of a family needs it as much as the missionary, or the president of a college.

CERRO GORDO, ILLINOIS.

It has been quite a while since we reported our church news. I have been afflicted and was not permitted to attend all the business meetings, so I can not give dates.

Early in April Bro. Harry Leedy was called to the ministry and duly installed. The church met again, later, and lifted the indebtedness under which we have been laboring, and now the church is clear of debt. Our pastor, Bro. Lear, has decided to take charge of the work in Decatur. Some efforts are being made to secure another one for the coming year.

Our Sunday-school is doing nicely. Bro. Preston Arnold is our superintendent. The school has decided to support Brother and Sister Frank Heckman on the mission field in India.

Our cottage prayer meetings are growing in interest and attendance. There are more calls than can be filled. Places for the meetings are offered to the school when we are not professors of religion. We will soon have two meetings instead of one if the interest keeps on growing.

Our Bible readings are quite interesting and well attended. We are studying the Gospel of John. We are beginning the work under the management of Bro. Lear.

A County Sunday-school Convention is to be held in our Bethel church May 31 and June 1, which, we hope, will be profitable to the Brethren, as well as to others. There will be a strong good talent present from different parts of the State.

We are looking forward with fond anticipation to our Annual Conference, which will be just what we make it. Let us all try to make it a success! Isaac W. Arnold.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country to a weary traveler.—Prov. 25:25.

CALIFORNIA.

South Los Angeles.—We met in special council meeting last Friday evening, preparatory to our love feast. On Sunday morning, May 14, Bro. Snowbarger, of Covina, Cal., formerly of Des Moines, Iowa, delivered a very instructive examination sermon, and in the evening officiated at our love feast. About 115 members communed. May 7 we closed a two weeks' series of meetings at the Mission, conducted by Bro. W. H. Wertenbaker, assisted by Bro. N. J. Brubaker. Although there were no visible results, yet we feel that much good has been done. Mrs. B. Custer, 1216 East 49th St., Los Angeles, Cal., May 19.

IDAHO.

Nampa.—We held our love feast May 20, which was enjoyed by all. Several visiting brethren were present, viz: Brower, of Boise Valley, Idaho, officiated. Bro. A. L. Gorham, of Fayette, Idaho, remained over Sunday and gave us two instructive sermons, preaching some very plain and good-sized congregations. A collection of $18.50 was taken to be sent to the Annual Meeting. Sister Sweet, Society though small in number, is busy trying to do something for the Master. Since they had no elder, they ordained, which is quite an improvement.—Rose E. Bradley, Nampa, Idaho, May 22.

Weiser.—We held our love feast May 13. Sixty-four members surrounded the Lord's tables and enjoyed the feast. Bro. S. P. Sharp, of Boise Valley, Idaho, officiated. On Sunday morning we had Sunday-school at 10 o'clock. Sister Jennie Brower gave a short talk to the little Sunday-school scholars. Brother and Sister Holl were installed into the deacon's office, and at 11 A. M. Bro. Neher, of Nampa, Idaho, preached. In the evening, Bro. Gorham, of Fayette, Idaho, preached. We all enjoyed the spiritual feast and gave us.—Sarah A. Burger, Box 417, Weiser, Idaho, May 15.

ILLINOIS.

Kaskaskia.—We met in council May 19. Our elder, Bro. D. T. Wagoner, presided. Sister Florence Childress was elected clerk.—Mary Simpkins, Avena, Ill., May 26.

INDIANA.

Arcadia church met in council May 6. As the time of our elder, Bro. Elias Sneltzer, had expired, he handed in his resignation. This left the church without a leader. An election was held by Eld. Wm. Burcham, of Noblesville, Ind., and Eld. Nathaniel Cline, of Hillsboro, Ind., was elected by lot to serve the church. The choice fell on Bro. Nathaniel Cripe, to serve for the ensuing time. Our love feast has been received by baptism since our last report. Two letters have been granted. Our next Cripe will be with us May 28, to give a missionary talk. At that time a collection will be taken for missionary purposes, which will be sent to Annual Meeting.—Mary Hoke, R. D. 17, Atlanta, Ind., May 21.

Buck Creek.—We held our love feast May 12. On account of the early hour there in the morning, we had no election, but a good spirit was in the meeting. Bro. Saylor Greyer officiated. Sister Mary Hoover, of Hoover, Ind., and Bro. Bowman, Joseph Holder and Abram Bowman were with us. Bro. L. W. Teeter conducted the services Sunday morning. Sunday morning, which was enjoyed by all, after which short talks were given by the Brethren. Bro. Abram Bowman was an excellent sermon on Sunday evening. Our Sunday-school is growing in attendance, with Sister Burgess as superintendent. Our Christian Workers' Meeting is also growing in interest, with Sister Kate Rooger as president.—Phebe E. Teeter, R. D. 3, Frankfort, Ind., May 22.

Copper Creek (Santa Fe congregation).—Bro. Mahon was with us over Sunday, May 21, and delivered two sermons. May 14 two Sunday-school pupils put on Christian baptism.—P. F. Jones, Peru, Ind., May 22.

Eel River church met in council May 13. In the absence of our elder, Bro. G. Ulery presided. Two letters of membership were received. We held our love feast May 20 at the Brick house. The home members were well represented. Bro. Oliver officiated. The following Sunday morning, a missionary offering of $30.25 was taken, to be sent to the Annual Conference.—May B. Hoover, R. D. 1, Roann, Ind., May 23.

New Salem.—We met in council May 20, with our elder Bro. John Stout, presiding. Arrangements were made for our coming love feast, to be held June 17. Several other items of business were disposed of. We decided to hold an election for one or two deacons in the near future. Our congregation is in splendid working order. We recently organized a Christian Workers' Society. We are having very good success and a good attendance.—Lydia A. D. Syracuse, Ind., May 26.

Flat Creek.—We write had the pleasure of meeting with the members at the East house in this congregation May 14. Bro. Jacob Heistand, of near Walkerton, Ind., preached on the subject, "The Two Covenants," to a full house. His text was Jer. 31: 31.—Mrs. Geo. Carbiener, Bremen, Ind., May 17.

Pleasant Hill.—Our church met in council May 13, with our elder, Bro. Jesse Gump, presiding. Everything passed off in order. Two letters were granted. We made preparation for our love feast, which we held June 10 and 11. We also decided on Sunday-school. The officers will take their places July 1, to serve for six months. April 17 we organized a teachers' meeting, to meet each Thursday evening. May 14 Bro. Geo. Hilton, our missionary from China, was with us. We gave him very interesting missionary talk, which a collection of $14 was taken. We were built up spiritually and made more zealous in the mission cause.—Ezra Kintner, Peru, Ind., May 22.

South Bend (First Church of the Brethren).—Our church met in special council May 22. The main point of business was in reference to our parsonage problems. It was unanimously decided to again secure the services of Bro. M. Clyde Kurtz, who has been with us during the winter months, that he feels he can take up the work again by Aug. 1. Bro. C. M. Wenger was elected delegate to the Annual Meeting, which was granted.—Louis Garber, R. D. 3, Syracuse, Ind., May 22.

Winchester.—May 18 we had a members' meeting. Elders E. P. Sharp, Samuel Blocher, J. J. Helman, W. K. Simmons and Jesse Ellenberger were with us. Brethren Sharp, Helman and Jacob Hill were elected deacons. They, with their wives, were installed. The congregation is now in a way of enjoying a house of worship. We have Sunday-school every Sunday morning at 9:30. We have good attendance and interest every two weeks, morning and evening. The Brethren from the Poplar Grove church, Union City, Ind., and Hagerstown, Ind., meet with us. Bro. Wertenbaker, the writer was with us by request.—Ira Harmeson, R. D. 11, Winchester, Ind., May 21.

IOWA.

Beaver.—Since our last report three young Sunday-school scholars have joined the church in Bro. Harvey's home. I administered the rite of baptism, after preaching services on Sunday. One scholar was Bro. Leander Smith, son of Deacon Mo., gave us two splendid discourses on the 14th. He is looking up a location for the improvement of his health, and we join with us again soon.—Belle Ruth, Beaver, Iowa, May 22.

Cedar church enjoyed the favor of a visit from Bro. Daniel Rothenberger, April 19 to May 1. He gave us two excellent sermons. He was soliciting in the interest of a home for the aged people, in Denver, Colo. Here he held his first revival service, with encouraging results; and this was his first experience in the evangelistic work. Since his return home his first report was May 14. It was quite well attended, considering the inclemency of the weather.—Mrs. Leander Smith, R. D. 1, Iowa, May 22.

Cedar church enjoyed the services of perance work, and to follow the same in their respective charges.—D. Yoder, Secretary. Bro. Powers, Bolivaire, Ohio, May 24.

Springfield.—We held our council May 20, with Eld. James Murray presiding. Vacancies in several committees were filled. Our clerk was reelected and other matters of minor importance were attended to. One letter was received. Children's Day exercises will be held here June 11. The Kent school will also observe Children's Day. The Sunday-school and Christian Workers here and at the Kent house will be represented at the coming District Sunday-school Meeting. The delegates have not yet been chosen. Bro. M. S. Young was elected delegate to the Annual Meeting, with Bro. Blickle, alternate. Arrangements were made at a former council to have Bro. M. S. McFadden assist us in a few days' meeting during the latter part of July. Yesterday, before the council meeting, our dear sister was received into the church by baptism.—Alice C. Mumaw, Mogadore, Ohio, May 21.

West Nimishillen.—Our church met in council May 18. Our elder, Bro. D. S. Filburn, presided. One letter was received. Our pastor, Bro. Filburn, was chosen solicitor to secure funds to remodel our church-house.—Cora Sweeney, 2024 West Third St., Dayton, Ohio, May 22.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Back Creek.—We held our love feast May 13 at Brandt's church. The meeting was well attended. Visiting ministers present were Bro. J. E. Brindle, of Kaufman, Pa.; Bro. James Slyder, of Chambersburg, Pa., and Bro. C. P. Hosfelt, of Newburg, Va. The latter officiated. Our church is thankful for us Sunday morning to a large crowd. A collection of over $14 was taken on Sunday morning for the Annual Meeting.—Pearl Hockman, R. D. 1, Williamson, Pa., May 22.

Chambersburg.—Our love feast was held May 21. We had a very spiritual meeting. Ten members were present among them being Bro. D. B. Mentzer, of Waynesboro, Pa., who officiated the Sunday evening and Monday morning services. Bro. Mentzer also preached Sunday morning. Bro. Edmund Book, of Perry County, Pa., John Spickler, of Shippensburg, Pa., Bro. J. Burkhart, of Shippensburg, Pa., and Bro. W. P. Engle, of Lineboro, Md., were present to give a very interesting talk the Sunday-school on Sunday morning. Our love feast was well attended by many of our members and friends. The Lord's table for the first time. It makes us feel encouraged to go on with the good work. A collection was taken to be sent to Annual Meeting for the benefit of the Aged.—Minnie Mae Bear, Center St., Chambersburg, Pa., May 22.

Little Swatara.—Our love feast was held May 11 and 12 at the Ziegler house. It was largely attended. A number of visiting brethren and sisters were present among them Jacob Nissly, William Oberholtzer, Spencer Beaver, John Zug and Jacob Myers, Jr. Bro. John Zug officiated at the communion services. We will have a special council on Ascension Day, at the Frystown house.—H. M. Frantz, Cross Kill Mills, Pa., May 22.

Lost Creek.—We held our love feast May 20. The day was a delightful one, and we had a large congregation. Over one hundred members surrounded the Lord's tables. We had a good crowd of spectators, giving us a good hearing. Bro. Brethren H. K. Ober, of Elizabethtown, Pa., and I. Beaver, of Mifflintown, Pa., were with us. Bro. Ober officiated and Jacob Nissly, William Oberholtzer, Spencer Beaver, John Zug and Jacob Myers, Jr., Bro. John Zug assisted in the communion services. We will have a special council on Ascension Day, at the Frystown house.—H. M. Frantz, Cross Kill Mills, Pa., May 22.

Lost Creek.—We held our love feast May 20. The day was a delightful one, and we had a large congregation. Over one hundred members surrounded the Lord's tables. We had a good crowd of spectators, giving us a good hearing. Bro. Brethren H. K. Ober, of Elizabethtown, Pa., and I. Beaver, of Mifflintown, Pa., were with us. Bro. Ober officiated and we feel that the Holy Spirit led him in all things. We were greatly pleased with the sermon He gave us on Sunday morning. We thank God for the many blessings He bestows upon us. We took up a collection to be sent to Annual Meeting for mission purposes.—J. B. Peck, Mifflintown, Pa., May 23.

Motice.—Bro. Steerman is booked for a series of meetings to begin Oct. 7, at the Upton house, Back Creek congregation.—C. D. Wilson, R. D. 5, Greencastle, Pa., May 22.

Raven Run.—May 13 we closed a very interesting series of meetings which took place, conducted by Bro. Jacob Chapper, of Meyersdale, Pa. It was the first revival held in our new churchhouse. Bro. Chapper preached twenty effective sermons. Three were added to the church. Seven backsliders were reclaimed. A number of others are almost persuaded. May 27 we hold our love feast, which is expected, attended. About seventy-five surrounded the Lord's tables. Our Sunday-school is getting along nicely. Ten new members and three were reclaimed. A number of others are almost persuaded. May 21 we held our love feast, well attended. Visiting brethren were present among them Bro. Jacob Nissly, William Oberholtzer, Spencer Beaver, John Zug and Jacob Myers, Jr. Bro. John Zug officiated at not only are they wanted at our place of worship, but welcome. Show an interest in their eternal welfare. Have song books for the newcomers. Have ushers to show the stranger a seat, and see that he has a song book. Let the services be of such a nature that the newcomer can see that we have "joy in God's service."

Those who worship God in sincerity will rejoice in calls and opportunities to serve him. We are engaged in a great work. Great interests are involved. Let us call on others to help! We can not all work the same way, and this is good, for God needs various kinds of workers. Some who can not preach or successfully superintend a Sunday-school, teach a class, or lead a prayer meeting, are strong physically,—able to perform manual labor. Thank the Lord for your physical strength, and use your earnings for the support of the Lord's work.

Let us rejoice that we can go and enjoy together God's service! May the Lord's eyes ever be open toward his house, and may his name be held sacred there, and may he ever hearken unto the prayers which ascend from his house, and may the "house of the Lord" be kept sacred, that our children and children's children may find worship a pleasure, and may they ever seek to worship God in spirit and in truth, and thus have joy in God's service!

A Plea for the Native Races.

BY A. T. HOFFERT.

BEHOLD the natives on a far-off island, isolated from the world, famine staring them in the face. In the midst of their direst need, a ship laden with food comes to their rescue. The "open door" is extended, the ship enters the port, and is anchored near the shore. There is plenty on board to feed the starving people. "Come, comrades, come,"—pleads the captain,—"help to save this dying people!"

Sad, sad, indeed! Only a few respond, most of the natives are left without food! Again he calls for helpers, but few volunteer.

But look! there is tumult among the people! Thousands are reeling, hundreds are dying, and many even refuse the proffered food. What does all this mean? "Alas! Alas!" cries the captain, "is it possible that liquor, the deadliest foe of man, has been concealed in the ship, and that murderers are dealing it out to the people! This must not be! They are killing ten to every one that we save! Who will bring this work to naught? Who will stand against these workers of iniquity?"

Do all his comrades arise "to a man" against these traitors? No, no! Only a few hear, so intent are they about their own trivial affairs! This evil, though greatly overcome by the few that responded, increases throughout the island.

Friends, this picture only shows, in a general way, the present condition of the mission fields. While the missionary goes with the Bread of Life, the trader follows with the cup of death; ten are saved by the former to a hundred destroyed by the latter; the church supports the one and tolerates the other.

True, after rum has slain millions, the natives of Africa, and those of the Pacific islands, are now protected, to a large extent, by national and international prohibition. In Egypt, Turkey, Western Asia, India, and China, the masses have not become addicted to drink, owing to the abstinent principles of their religions. However, these religions are now crumbling. They are losing their influence over the higher classes, who, throwing abstinence to the four winds, are becoming enslaved to drink, learning the white man's vices more readily than his virtues. China, torn and bleeding, staggering to her feet, and freeing herself from the ravages of opium traffic, is in danger of a greater enemy, who is entering her ports and preparing to give her a death blow.

This enemy is the American beer and the European liquors. China can not prohibit their importation owing to treaty relations. Japan is being flooded by foreign liquors, saloons are being established, and American breweries are being multiplied. The woeful conditions in Mexico and parts of South America are intensified by the use of intoxicants.

Unless the Christian nations protect these races from their liquor, intemperance will reap a harvest of untold millions! "Is it a fair thing to hit the heathen world when it is down,—in the midst of its woe and its weariness and its sin?" Must it be said of these races that "hell hath enlarged herself and opened her mouth without measure," in order that they, the victims of the liquor traffic, "shall descend into it"? In the judgment, will they rise up and condemn the liquor men? Certainly. The governments that granted them license? Yes. The Christians, who had the opportunity to destroy the traffic, but did nothing against it? Why not?

But has the Christian world been blind to the ravages of drink among the aboriginal races? No, she has not. As stated before, the natives of Africa and the Pacific islands are widely protected by national laws and international treaties. These reform measures were brought to the attention of national governments and international conferences, through the united efforts of the missionaries, the combined religious and reform organizations in England, and the International Reform Bureau of Washington in America. The latter has initiated 582 accomplished reforms, 254 of which are acts of government, a number being of international scope. This institution is a great auxiliary to missions, because it strikes at the root of great evils, which change the social environments of our cities and mission fields into such a condition, that many souls are reared for perdition to every one that is saved. Through its influence our government was prompted to invite all civilized nations to join in a treaty prohibiting the sale of opium and intoxicants to all aboriginal races. But not until international public opinion is aroused, and brought to bear upon the governments, will this resolution be coined into an international prohibitory treaty.

The home, the Sunday-school, the day school, the press, the church, and a score of temperance organizations,—acting independently,—are directing their energies in local and State campaigns. They go out to meet the well-organized and concentrated forces of the enemy. What are the results? State-wide prohibition was lost in three States at the last election, and, in spite of the expansion of prohibition territory, the per capita consumption of all liquors has increased over fourfold since 1844. Prohibition itself is not sufficient, the people must be taught the late disclosures of science regarding the effects of beer on the human system, in order to offset the misleading statements of the brewer, and to reform the drinker. Our forces must be united and well organized, if we are to win even local and State campaigns, but not until the now dormant powers of Christendom are aroused and properly directed, will our foe be vanquished in the impending national and world-wide combat. The voice of the press, by means of the distribution of literature, through the college and the young people's societies, from the pulpit and the convention platform, and by every avenue of education, we should arouse the masses of all nations to join this international "crusade" against the liquor traffic.

Our strongest force for righteousness must be pitted against our mightiest foe, who will not be overpowered without a struggle. The liquor traffic,—the most fruitful weapon of Satan,—the worst enslaver of man, the leader of a host of evils, extending its influence to the ends of the earth, must be met and vanquished by that company, whose duty it is to carry on the work of Jesus Christ, who has been "revealed that he might destroy the works of the devil." By that body which is the most potent factor for righteousness in the world; by that power that makes a man right with God and with his fellows; by that organization that exerts a powerful influence throughout the world, must deliverance come. That company, that body, that power, that organization, is the Christian church. She is the one that can meet the enemy on his "far-flung" battle line. She is the one that has for her leadership the Christian ministry. She is the mighty factor to mould public sentiment. She it is who must study this question, and then, like the prophets of old, measure up to her opportunity, and send forth a "bugle call" from half a million pulpits, summoning the people of all lands to join this "crusade" against the mightiest despoiler of nations. Through a world federation of churches, guided by competent leadership, their united influence can be brought to bear upon the governments, prohibitory laws will be enacted, the churches will become more unified, and a closer "brotherhood" among the nations achieved. Yea more; as the agitation against the extension of slavery was the "beginning of its end," so we may hope and trust that this fight against the extension of the liquor traffic, will not merely drive it back to its former stronghold, but sink it to the depth of oblivion!

Friends, shall this traffic continue to cripple the missionaries' influence? Shall the pleading of the natives for redress go unheeded? Should not the Reform Bureau receive the support of the Christian church, that more literature can be distributed and more workers sent to the front? Shall our united influence appeal to the governments that this world-embracing reform may become a reality? Will the leaders of mankind, and especially the ministry, take a stand upon the bedrock of Divine truth, educate, arouse, and lead the church militant into a world-embracing conflict, that shall vanquish the foe and hand him as an outlaw forever? Shall not the nations deal with this enemy as they did with piracy and slavery? Will not our Christian civilization do as much for humanity, as the ancient despots and heathen religions did for India, Japan and China? Or will we, like Egypt, Israel, Greece and Rome, be overcome by the degrading influence of alcohol? Is it not time that we were praying mightily for a closed door against the liquor traffic? The destiny of nations and the fate of millions are at stake! Behold the Master calleth, "Who will stand up for me against the evil doers?" Arise, ye people, come to the rescue! "Jehovah of hosts is mighty, his testimonies are very sure." Let us complete the unfinished work of our Master. Cut off the evil doers! Down with the tyranny of alcohol! It can, it will, it shall be done!

Bittinger, Bro. Walter Clay, born in Garrett County, Md., May 8, 1887, died in the bounds of the Maple Grove congregation, Md., May 19, 1911, aged 24 years and 7 days. He leaves a father, mother, one brother and four sisters. One sister preceded him. He united with the Church of the Brethren about two years ago. The young brother met his death on Monday evening by being trampled by horses, and fatally injured. The boy had been working in the field and was about to quit for the evening when the team became frightened and began running. The lad sprang before them to hold the horses, when he was thrown down and both team and wagon passed over his body. Several ribs and other bones were broken, and prints from the horses were found on different parts of his body. One rib was pierced into his lungs and death resulted in about two hours. Services by Bro. S. A. Miller. Text, Psalm 14: 1-6. Interment near by.—Harvey W. Yost, Grantsville, Md.

Blocher, Sister Anna, born Jan. 8, 1847, died May 18, 1911, in the bounds of the Back Creek congregation, Pa., aged 64 years, 4 months and 10 days. She was a faithful member. Sister Blocher was a consistent member of the Church of the Brethren for many years. Services at the Upton house by Eld. John Lehner, assisted by the writer. Interment in the adjoining cemetery.—J. D. Wilson, R. D. 2, Greencastle, Pa.

Cline, Eld. John F., born Oct. 27, 1825, in Rockingham Co., Va., died at McPherson, Kans., May 8, 1911. He was married to Susannah Flory Oct. 26, 1873. She died Jan. 23, 1876. Feb. 3, 1876, he was united in marriage to Sarah Garber, who survives him. He had one daughter by his first wife, and by his second wife he had three sons and seven daughters, all of whom survive him. He united with the church at the age of twenty-one, was called to the ministry in September, 1883, and was ordained in 1888. He spent much time on the frontier in Kansas. Of recent years he had been living at McPherson, Kans. With a number of other men he was hauling sand out of a pit when the bank caved in, burying three men, one of whom was Bro. Cline. All three died almost instantly. Thus an often-expressed wish by him was realized in that he passed away quickly. Funeral was held at the College Chapel by the writer, assisted by Eld. J. J. Yoder.—S. J. Miller, McPherson, Kans.

Frantz, Bro. Daniel, born in Fayette County, Ind., Jan. 16, 1837, died May 18, 1911, aged 74 years, 4 months and 2 days. He was united in marriage to Sarah Hidge in 1858. To this union were born five daughters and one son. His wife and four of his children preceded him in death. He was a devoted member of the Church of the Brethren for many years. A short time before his death he called for the elders of the church and was anointed. He leaves two daughters. Services by Bro. Cary Teague, assisted by Bro. E. W. Frye.—J. E. Plant, Connersville, Ind.

Forney, Bro. David A., born in Parke County, Ind., July 15, 1839, died in Rossville, Clinton Co., Ind., April 25, 1911, aged 71 years, 9 months and 10 days. He was married four times and was the father of eleven children. He united with the church of the Brethren some thirty years ago, and when the end came he passed peacefully away. He leaves seven children, three brothers and three sisters. Services at Rossville by the writer. Text, Job 5: 26.—H. Wright, Rossville, Ind.

Glays, Bro. Henry, born in Ohio, July 3, 1838, died May 15, 1911, at Des Moines, Iowa, aged 8? years, 10 months and 12 days. On Dec. 24, 1893, he was united in marriage to Mary Ann Haney, who died some twenty-two years ago. To this union were born two sons and six daughters. The two sons and three daughters survive. Bro. Glays moved to Iowa when quite young, and for many years has lived in Des Moines, where he and his wife were almost, if not quite, the first members of the Church of the Brethren. Services at the Brethren church by the writer, assisted by Bro. E. M. Goughnour. Text, 1 Thess. 4: 14.—Virgil C. Flinnell, 1642 Lyon St., Des Moines, Iowa.

Harrison, Bro. Earl T., son of Brother and Sister Noah Harrison, died May 9, 1910, aged 19 years, 10 months and 7 months and 7 days. He united with the church May 8, 1910. He leaves a father, mother, one brother and four sisters. Services by the writer from Rev. Ix: 13.—Geo. W. Rogin, 107 South Moore Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Hanger, Bro. Rice S., born April 11, 1826, died in the bounds of the Middle Creek congregation, Pa., May 14, 1911, aged 84 years, 8 months and 3 days. He was united in life be united with the Church of the Brethren, and was called to the deacon office a few years later. He was also an ordained worker in the church until he had to retire on account of old age. He lived very close to his Master until God called him home. Services by the writer. Text, Rev. 14: 13.—H. A. Stahl, Glade, Pa.

Kline, Sister Matilda, died of kidney trouble, in the bounds of the Beaver Run congregation, W. Va., May 19, 1911, aged 79 years, 3 months and 4 days. Text, 1 Cor. 15: 55. Sister S. Arnold, Burlington, W. Va.

Landis, Sister Mattie, nee Brehm, born April 4, 1878, died April 28, 1911, at the home of her son, Union Deposit, Pa., aged 73 years and 24 days. Her husband died years ago. She is survived by two sons and two daughters. Services at Hanoverdale by Brethren John H. Witmer, Thomas Parrish and A. M. Kuhns.—J. M. Shirk, Hanoverdale, Pa.

McCoy, Sister Catherine, died at her home near Lanesboro, Carroll Co., May 19, 1911, of a complication of diseases, aged 73 years, 7 months and 14 days. She was a member of the church since December, 1883. She was married to John McCoy June 13, 1851. Had she lived one month longer they would have been married sixty years. Five sons and three daughters were born to them. All of them are living and were at her bedside when the end came. She also leaves her husband and one brother. She was a good mother and had a host of friends. Services at the home by Bro. M. Deardorff. Text, Rom. 14: 8. A large circle of friends were present at the funeral. NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED

Lordsburg.—Our church met in council last Monday evening at 7:30. Our elder, Bro. E. E. Forney, presided. The regular routine of business was disposed of speedily and satisfactorily. Brethren S. Henry and J. F. Dickey were elected delegates to Annual Meeting. Brethren S. Henry, J. F. Dickey and Andrew Blickenstaff and their wives were ordained to the eldership. Eld. J. A. Brubaker, of Pomona, Eld. J. S. Brubaker, of Glendora, and Eld. Urias Shick, of Long Beach, assisted in the work. On Sunday evening we held our love feast. About 240 surrounded the Lord's tables. Eld. W. F. England, assisted by Eld. C. H. Yoder, officiated. The best of order prevailed and we had a very spiritual meeting.—Grace Hileman Miller, Lordsburg, Cal., May 22.

Maple Valley.—Our church met in council at the home of Brother and Sister Stenekes May 20. Our elder, Bro. J. E. Rointon, was present. All business was disposed of in a satisfactory manner. Bro. M. Beeghly was chosen delegate to the Annual Conference.—Carrie A. Brubaker, Ft. Dodge, Iowa, May 26.

Long Lake.—Sister Long, our State Sunday-school Secretary, was with us the first Sunday of this month. She gave the Sunschool a very interesting talk. She spoke very encouragingly of the work at this place, which inspired us to try harder to come up to the standard. While we are trying to do this work to the best of our ability, yet we are glad when some one tells us how to do it better. Last Sunday we took up a collection of $5 as a Conference offering. We thank the Lord who has blessed us with this world's goods, so that we can help others who have not the chance we have. It will soon be time for us to reorganize our Sunday-school, as it has been in the same order for over a year. We will have our council meeting June 10.—William Bittel, Fresno), Mich., Apr. 21.

Santa Ana.—We met in council May 20. Our elder, Bro. S. G. Lehmer, presided. He was also chosen delegate to Annual Meeting. Bro. E. Nininger, minister, and John Wine who was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. We decided to have our love feast June 17. Bro. Lehmer will be here for examination services. The meeting will close in time to take the 8:30 car for Los Angeles, so we invite the brethren and sisters, who can, to be with us at that time. The Christian Worker offering will take their places July 1. We decided to have a Sunday-school Meeting each month. It is to be an all-day meeting. Bring lunch with you. Bro. Harvey Snell is to have charge of this meeting, and we know he will make it a success. Bro. Ritter and family have moved into our midst since our last report.—Lizzie R. Gish, 606 East First St., Santa Ana, Cal., May 24.

Batavia.—Since our last report we have had much to make us rejoice. Bro. J. M. Blough, of India, preached for us on the evening of May 16, and also gave us much information concerning the India Christians. May 14 Bro. J. H. Moore was with us; also Brother and Sister Raymond Cottrell, who had charge of our Christian Workers' Meeting. On the same day Bro. Nicodemus began a series of meetings, which closed May 21. The evening before we had our love feast, with Bro. S. S. Blough officiating. During our meetings three were baptized. Two of them were children nine and ten years of age, respectively. This ought to put us older ones to thinking, that children are willing to work for the Lord Jesus, what ought not we, of greater experience be willing to do?—Ruth Hawbecker, 229 N. Park Street, Batavia, Ill., May 24.

Parsons church met in council May 4. Our elder not being present, Bro. D. B. Clark presided. All the business of the meeting was disposed of. We held our love feast May 6, Bro. Leonard Detwiler, of Colorado Springs, Colo., Sunday morning Bro. W. H. Leaman preached an able sermon. Dinner was served at the church. An experience meeting was held in the afternoon. A collection of $15 was taken for the General Mission Board. In the evening Bro. Leonard Root gave us a very interesting talk on "Christian Brethren Church in Colorado City." An offering of about $7 was given him to aid in building a house of worship in that city.—W. Walk, 2522 Belmont Ave., Parsons, Kans., May 11.

Monett.—Bro. W. K. Conner, of Webster, Va., came to us April 30, and began a series of meetings, continuing until May 21, preaching in all twenty-two sermons. Five came out on the Lord's side and were baptized. On the evening of May 6 we held a love feast which was the first conducted here for about twenty years. All present were edified. It was indeed a feast to the soul.—Sarah C. Zigler, R. D. 3, Cheverly, Va., May 24.

Bloom.—The church at this place recently enjoyed a visit from our District Sunday-school Secretary, Eld. J. M. Brubaker, of Conway, Kans. He conducted a Sunday-school Meeting, which gave much inspiration to the workers here. Several brethren and others participated in the deliberations. Bro. Brubaker preached two excellent, practical sermons for us while here. We have two appointments at Bloom each Sunday, and Sunday-school at 10 A. M. We expect to organize a Christian Workers' Meeting in the near future. On Sunday Bro. E. J. Reece, of Missouri, was with us. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us, recently baptizing seven, and we have a prospect for a bountiful wheat crop in this section. Sister Martin, our church treasurer, has been afflicted for sometime, and has been in a hospital. This accounts for the silence concerning our church work.—C. D. Hylton, Bloom, Kans., May 26.

SPOKANE, WASH.

We have been feasting from a table, bountifully spread with the best of heavenly food, for the past few days. Our elder, Bro. H. C. Longanecker, and wife, came among us May 12. That evening we heard the report of the visiting brethren and found the members all to be in love and harmony. We also had our regular council at this time. Eld. Longanecker presided. We adopted the system of the sisters breaking bread and passing the cup.

At 2:30, on Saturday afternoon, we had preaching by our elder. At 7:30 that evening we held our love feast. About thirty members surrounded the Lord's tables, with the elder officiating, assisted by Bro. Wagner, of Chewelah, Wash., and the writer. It certainly was a spiritual feast. A small audience was present, and all seemed to enjoy the services.

Sunday, May 14, we had Sunday-school at 10 A. M., preaching at 11 A. M., Christian Workers' Meeting at 6:30 P. M., and preaching at 7:30 P. M. On Monday evening we had preaching also. Bro. Longanecker did all the preaching for us, except on Sunday evening, when Bro. Wagner, of Chewelah, Wash., labored for us. We much appreciated the presence of Brother and Sister Wagner. We always feel strengthened by our visiting members. Come on, brethren and sisters! Do not let us oppose you pass by to meet with us! Take a Fort Wright car at corner of Howard Street and Riverside Avenue; get off at Holley Avenue and walk two blocks east, toward the river, to the church.

Our services were all well attended. Our elder and wife remained with us, doing some visiting and church work. They returned to their home at Tekoa, Wash., on Tuesday afternoon. May God bless them in their effort to do good, for they are faithful in the work!

We will be represented at District Meeting by letter.

THE FULL REPORT
OF THE
Annual Conference of 1911
SHOULD BE ORDERED NOW

We have been fortunate in again securing the services of Mr. Abbott to take the report of this Conference, and as soon as possible after the close of the meeting the Report will be prepared for mailing. This year's Report will be of special interest and value to the members of the church. These reports from year to year form an important collection of reading matter which should be preserved in every family. Some queries of vital interest will come before the Conference this year. Every speech made, with the name of the speaker, will appear in full. Besides, all the speeches made at the Educational, Sunday-school and Christian Workers' and Missionary Meetings will be reported in full.

Every member of the Church of the Brethren should be interested enough in the church to buy a Report and keep informed regarding its progress. This Report is not published for the purpose of making money, but that every one may have access to the good of these meetings. It is the only source from which you can get a complete report of the meeting. Do you want to be informed regarding the rulings of the church? If so, order the Report.

The matter in the Report will be carefully indexed, making it convenient for reference.

Orders for the Report can be handed in at the Brethren Publishing House Headquarters on the grounds or sent direct to the Publishing House. Price per copy, 25c.

AROUND THE WORLD

Appalling Destitution in Labrador.

Notwithstanding the most strenuous efforts of Dr. Grenfell, in behalf of the people on the frigid shores of Labrador, great destitution and want seems to have come upon them,—so serious in character as to involve starvation, unless speedy relief is afforded. One of Dr. Grenfell's co-workers in that remote and destitute country reports that he has been along the northern shore on dog sledges, and returning he sends by wire the ominous message, "People are starving." The Newfoundland Government will furnish immediate relief, but will not be able to continue this out of its own resources. The Grenfell Association, New York, has already sent $500 to buy food, and expects to send further amounts as means are provided.

Sunday Desecration in Government Employ.

The pending agitation in favor of granting postoffice employés the privilege of Sunday rest, has directed attention to other branches of Government service. It has been discovered, to the surprise of many, that the Lord's Day, as a day of rest, is practically ignored in the navy. A schedule of work is laid out for the different ships, and if rain, fog, wind or storm interfere with its ready accomplishment, the first resort is the utilizing of Sunday, to make up for lost time. Such an example, on the part of those officially in charge of Government employés, is most deplorable. Petitions are now being forwarded to Washington to give the sailors and soldiers Sunday privileges, and it is to be hoped that these requests will meet with the anticipated success.

German Socialists Opposed to Christianity.

While Socialism, as advocated in England and the United States, has many features quite commendable, it is to be regretted that in Germany "Socialism is the most deadly and irreconcilable foe of revealed religion." Karl Marx, the intellectual father of German Socialism, spoke of religion as the "opium of the nations," and his successor, Engels, states that "Socialism has declared war on religion." Another leader, Liebknecht, says that "religion is but a ghost of the past," while August Bebel affirms that "Christianity is the enemy of freedom and civilization." Such utterances tell their own story, and any organization or nation, espousing principles of that kind, is doomed to failure. Not only the pages of Holy Writ, but those of history as well, have written the verdict, and it spells "defeat."

Surely, God's Blessings Are Upon Us!

A recent statement of the Agricultural Department at Washington places the value of farm products in the United States, during 1910, at the enormous figure of $8,926,000,000, an increase of $104,000,000 over the preceding year. It is a matter of surprise, perhaps, that Texas and not Illinois, stands at the head of all the States, in the value of its principal farm products, which aggregated $364,110,000,—largely due to the 10,000,000 acres of cotton. While, as a nation, we may well feel elated over our abounding prosperity, should there not be also that spirit of real gratitude, which ascribes all the glory to God, and makes use of the gifts, showered upon us, as an effective means of conquering moral evils and establishing the kingdom of God? Important responsibilities devolve upon us, as a Christian nation, as well as upon each individual, and we must discharge these obligations in the light of a coming judgment.

The Fight Is On.

As already announced some weeks ago, the State of Maine is entering upon a most bitter and determined fight in behalf of its long-cherished prohibition principles. Already its Legislature, yielding to the pressure of the organized liquor interests, has submitted to the people a proposition to strike prohibition out of the constitution. Sixty years ago Maine outlawed the liquor traffic, and after a thorough test during an entire generation, made prohibition a part of the State constitution in 1884. The present fight is a matter of general concern, and together with a similar attempt in Kansas, gives renewed evidence that the makers and sellers of liquor are by no means asleep, but propose to force their product upon the people at all hazards. Friends of temperance must needs be wide-awake. It appears that a struggle of no ordinary proportions is upon us. Not only our prayers and most earnest efforts, but even our free-will offerings, should be gladly given to the cause of temperance.

Arbitration Favored by Germany.

Under date of May 29 Germany's entire willingness to coöperate with the United States in a general arbitration treaty, is announced. While some fears had been entertained lest there be a failure in securing Germany's acceptance of the proposed arbitration plans, the way seems now to be clear to secure a most effective agreement. The entrance of Germany into the negotiations, now pending, brings the four principal powers into active coöperation for arbitration measures, and it is believed by officials at Washington that a great diplomatic accomplishment is not far distant. In the interest of universal peace, so clearly commended in Holy Writ, it is to be hoped that the present movement will be attended by the most signal success.

Bibles in New York Hotels.

When Bible distribution for New York hotels was first spoken of, it was feared that it would hardly meet with success, owing to the cosmopolitan make-up of those who patronize hotels of that city. A most agreeable surprise, however, awaited those in charge of the distribution. Some hotels, catering to the most exclusive patronage, requested as many as eight hundred Bibles, and were glad to pay for a substantial leather binding at their own expense. It is interesting to note that, while most of the suicides are said to occur in hotels, there are already some most conclusive evidences recorded, showing that the Word of God, found unexpectedly on the table of a hotel room, has spoken peace to many a despairing soul and given new vigor and life.

Money and Militarism.

Recent investigations of reports and rumors concerning impending hostilities, have clearly shown that at the bottom of all agitation is the desire of financial gain, by reason of the sale of supplies, ammunition, equipment, etc. However incongruous it may seem to be, most of the war talk is not an outgrowth of alleged patriotism, but largely the outcome of the lust for wealth. Those who give rise to the periodical war scares about Japan, for instance, are more concerned about the financial gain thereby to be achieved, than aught else. Whatever will promote large appropriations for navy and army is hailed with delight by these men who would willingly have men killed and destroyed to amass riches. Surely, "The love of money is the root of all evil."

Mohammedan Ideas on Christian Missions.

A recent Mohammedan publication, issued at Cairo, Egypt, pays a remarkable tribute to Christian missions,—not perhaps, because the author approves of all they do, but because he sees facts that can not be controverted. He says that in Egypt "Christians successfully educate and instruct the people (1) through schools and churches; (2) preaching in the houses and upon the streets; (3) through colporters who sell and distribute the Bible everywhere; (4) through hospitals; (5) through tracts, periodicals and books." To the Christian schools he pays this eloquent testimony: "The child which attends one of these schools leaves it either as a Christian or, at least, as a doubter in the truth of Islam." Of the Christian workers he says: "Nothing seems to discourage them, and in closing he makes this significant remark: "Every story you hear every sermon, every book leads the people to look to Christ, the great author of their faith." In the last remark he unconsciously touches the keynote of successful evangelism.

More Bible Reading in the Home.

While it is to be regretted that in many families the custom of reading the Bible, in connection with the family altar, has been largely discontinued, it is encouraging to note that in many places there is a revival of the practice, with most salutary results. We are reminded that in the early days of Benjamin Franklin, afterwards a most earnest Disciple preacher, he determined, together with his wife, to read the New Testament through, proposing to take one a week. This is said about baptism and other things. He tabulated his findings as follows: "I not only found baptism mentioned nearly one hundred times but I discovered a great many other things in the New Testament which I had no idea were there." For six consecutive weeks he read the book once through, and he was so struck with the beauty and the simplicity of the divine plan of salvation, that he immediately obeyed the Gospel as he understood it, and began telling the marvelous story to others. In a short time his neighbors and school-mates, in great numbers, were won to his teachings. If the Bible is not doing for us in the family what it ought to do, there is a reason that is well worth investigating. God's Word is "quick and powerful." It should have free course in our lives, and it will, if we give it an opportunity.

Injustice Never Pays.

While the separation of church and state was, in itself, a justifiable act on the part of the French Government, the wholesale confiscation of church property, amounting to about $200,000,000, has never been regarded as either just or fair by impartial and unprejudiced observers. Recent developments show that, because of expensive litigation, but very little of the vast sum now remains. Court costs and lawyer fees have almost exhausted the funds wrongfully wrested from those who considered themselves legally entitled to their possession. In the bitter fight that ensued, public sympathy has been largely on the side of the church, and there is no regret that the Government comes out on the losing side, financially, though apparently victorious. It is another illustration of the scriptural warning against oppression and injustice.

Moneyed Interests Controlling the Magazines.

So many of the magazines have changed ownership of late, that there are just grounds for the allegation that the moneyed interests of the country are seeking to gain control of these important moulders of thought, in order to stop further discussion of corporational wrong-doing. Mr. James A. Cannon, a banker of New York, recently stated authoritatively that it was planned "to have the subject of religion so 'played up' in the papers and magazines that the man who wants to promulgate religion, will not have a ready excuse for failing to get busy among his friends and neighbors." One is made to wonder what kind of "religion" will be "played up" by these financiers. Will it be the "pure and undefiled" variety of which James speaks,—the kind that insists upon "doing things honest in the sight of all men"? I should can have none too much of that. But we can not help but have grave doubts about a religion that is to be crowded into the limelight of public attention, merely to hide financial crookedness from well-merited execration.

How a Kind Act Was Rewarded.

While it is true, doubtless, that mankind is not always disposed to appreciate the kind and unselfish acts that are done day by day without ostentation and display, it is worthy of mention that now and then there is a notable instance of unbounded gratitude upon the part of the recipient. Miss Caroline Mustica, of Newburg, N. Y., while on a visit in New York, some months ago, succeeded in rescuing a lady from being run over by a street car, doing so at the risk of her own life. Like other noble souls, Miss Mustica thought no more about the matter until lately reminded of it by an attorney who informed her that, by the recent death of the aged lady whom she had so bravely rescued, she had been given $60,000 in recognition of her act. While deeds of love and kindness are not always rewarded in so substantial way as in this instance, it is gratifying to know that the most insignificant act in behalf of others will not fail of its reward by the loving Father above. He who has promised to bestow a reward for even the "giving of a cup of cold water," will surely take note of all we do for others, and reward accordingly.

What If She Were Your Daughter?

The recent rescue of a twelve-year-old girl from a house of ill-repute in Chicago, brought over five hundred letters from anxious parents to the police station in which the young girl was being temporarily sheltered. And while, to one home, at least, the wires flashed the joyful news of her happy deliverance, what about the multiplied hundreds of others, that mourn the loss of loved and cherished daughters who, by the wiles of unscrupulous promoters of vice, have been consigned to a fate even worse than death? Words are totally inadequate to describe the agony of despair that pierces the heart of loving parents who are brought in actual contact with the terrible traffic—one that robs the home of its choicest treasures in order to gratify the passions of debased men. And since no home, "however well defended," can, under present conditions, be absolutely secure against the encroachments of the wily agents of vice, it would seem to be high time that each State guard more effectually the homes of its citizens. Iowa, with its recent "Injunction and Abatement" law, is doing most admirable work in breaking up prostitution in that State. The statute is making things decidedly uncomfortable for the keepers of disorderly houses and their helpers, and the good already done should be an incentive to other States to pass similar enactments.

ESSAYS

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

The Great Guest Comes.

While the cobbler mused, there passed his pane
A beggar drenched by the driving rain;
He called him in from the stormy street
And gave him shoes for his bruised feet.

The beggar went, and there came a crone,
Her face with wrinkles of sorrow sown;
A bundle of fagots bowed her back,
And she was spent with the wrench and rack.

He gave her his loaf and steadied her load,
As she took her way on the weary road.
Then to his door came a little child,
Lost and afraid in the world so wild,

In the big, dark world. Catching it up,
He gave it the milk in the waiting cup,
And led it home to its mother's arms,
Out of the reach of the world's alarms.

The day went down in the crimson west,
And with it the hope of the blessed guest;
And Conrad sighed as the world turned gray;
"Why is it, Lord, that your feet delay?

"Did you forget that this was the day?"
Then, soft in the silence a voice was heard:
"Lift up your heart, for I kept my word.
Three times I came to your friendly door,

"Three times my shadow was on your floor;
I was the beggar with bruised feet:
I was the woman you gave to eat;
I was the child on the homeless street."

—Edwin Markham.

Christian Workers' Meetings.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

Our Christian Workers' Meetings occupy an important place in the activities of the church. They are at once a religious meeting, a literary society, a singing school and a social meeting. There was a time when we had nothing but the preaching service. Literary societies were devoted chiefly to debating secular subjects. While mostly conducted in a crude way, they answered, after all, a good purpose. They were a great mental stimulus and a splendid means of acquiring knowledge. It enabled people to express themselves in writing or in public addresses. But these societies were allowed to pass out of existence and the result is painfully evident when, in a promiscuous company, some one is called upon for a speech or a prayer.

There is no reason why any person of ordinary intelligence should not be able and ready, when called upon, to cheer and instruct his fellows. Easy and simple as it is, it must be learned, and the best way to learn to speak in public, is to speak in public.

The church, in the Christian Workers' Meeting, is reviving the literary society, but, fortunately, it is in a better form. It has dropped the rude and secular, and turned toward the line of the religious. It seeks to develop the heart along with the intellect. It stimulates the mental power in the contemplation of nobler subjects and higher ideals.

The old-fashioned singing-schools shared about the same fate of the literary societies. The introduction of instrumental music and choirs in the churches took the singing-school away, and almost took congregational singing with it.

The old-fashioned institutions have been supplanted by the fraternities and clubs, which have imbibed the faults of their predecessors and added no virtues. There was no improvement in the morals of our young people.

The profitable employment of our young people is a large field to be occupied, and the Christian Workers' Meeting fits the place. It is a meeting of worship, yet not so rigid and formal as the preaching service, and brings more variety to the front. It affords an opportunity for the improvement and use of all the latent talent. It encourages the taste for, and the culture of, literature. The writing and reading of essays and the presentation of choice selections should be encouraged. This answers the double purpose of training the mind and heart, and making abiding impressions upon the hearts of others.

The best method of conducting such meetings is to do the very best that can be done with the talent at hand. The same results can not be expected of all under all circumstances. A common error is to demand or expect too much, or to try to draw out something when there is no material to work on. Passing the leadership around, so as to draw all into the work and give all an opportunity to learn is in theory a good thing, but it is responsible for many a poor, tame meeting. It will be found, after all, that it is better to put the best leaders to the front. The best are none too good. Why should one who is capable sit quietly back, and have a meeting to lag along at a dying rate under an incompetent leader? Why select one to lead the singing who is deficient in musical talent, when another who is present could send a thrill of life into a meeting by the ringing and melodious treble of his voice?

The young and the old should mingle freely and all do whatever they can to contribute to the interest and good of the meeting. Great care should be taken not to prolong the remarks. Snapshots of the most original kind are what count the most. Wordy people are sometimes annoying. They are full of talk. Like a full barrel that is tapped,—they flow on till they are empty; but, unlike a barrel, they never get empty. Frequently their words contain but little meaning. They can talk a long time about nothing. They mean it well and probably we must endure it.

Topics and their arrangements and adaptation are important factors in our meetings. The lessons, at present, are good,—the best we ever had,—but they are not yet what they ought to be, not yet what they must be. They are too much in advance of our young people. They will do for preachers or students at a Bible school, but they are not suited to the untutored. Our young people do not understand the arrangement of the subjects, and do not become interested. Meetings often become monotonous on this account. We need more simplicity. However, it may be easier to see the fault than to provide the remedy.

Others, more competent than the writer may take up this phase of the question. We have tried biography with a fair degree of success. Tracing out the lives and drawing lessons from such men as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, makes interesting lessons, and the field is large.

A good large map of all Bible lands should be upon the wall of every Christian Workers' Meeting room and very frequent reference made to it. An occasional meeting should be devoted entirely to it. A Bible student should be familiar with the country in which its heroes lived, where its great doctrines were proclaimed, and where its great events came into existence.

Asking questions should be encouraged. This will give the older ones an opportunity to teach the younger, and many practical points can be made and driven home. A careful and prudent discussion of subjects is always interesting.

At times a praying mood comes to a meeting. If so, make way for it. Let us pray! Let us at least occasionally have an apostolic prayer meeting. Keep the meeting out of ruts. "Neglect not the gift that is in thee" and "covet earnestly the best gifts." Young people who are brought up under the influence of such meetings will look back to them as the happiest seasons of their life. Many will say that what they heard there turned the course of their life into the better way.

God has blessed us with a glorious opportunity for mental and religious culture. Let us improve it to his glory!

Hungering and Thirsting.

BY PAUL MOHLER.

Oliver Cromwell used to say, "Some men have appetite and no food, others have food and no appetite; thank God I have both." That is true physically, and true spiritually also.

We know that there are many people who would rejoice in opportunities for religious teaching, while there are perhaps a greater number who do not care for what teaching they do have. Thank God there are many who have "both food and appetite." That is the normal condition, it is what our Lord intended when he said, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be FILLED." That means both appetite and food, plenty of it and the greatest satisfaction to those who abound in both.

Why should the appetite be poor? Several answers may be given. First, the general health may be poor. Sin will most certainly destroy the spiritual health. Nine times out of ten the Christian that has lost his interest in God and his Bible is harboring some open or secret sin. I have talked to many men that used to be earnest Christians, but are not now. In giving their reasons, they go all around their own fault to tell of the weaknesses of others, while, all the time, their own sin was the cause of all the trouble and loss of interest.

Some do not have an appetite for real spiritual food because their appetites have become depraved. Perhaps some evangelist came through and stirred the whole country with sensational appeals. Many were carried away by his personality and methods of work. Then, when the excitement died down, there was no taste for real sound religious feeding on the good, plain food of the Gospel. We had better stick to solid food.

Some have never heard good, sound preaching, and have never learned to read the Bible for themselves. They have no appetite because they do not know what there is to eat. They remind me of the broncho to which I once offered a feed of corn. He had never seen the like before, so didn't know what to do with it. He did not offer to eat it, and might have starved to death with the corn before him if nothing else had been given him.

Then there are those that have no appetite because they take no exercise. They never try to teach anyone else the Way of Life, they never try to win a soul to God, and never try to climb toward God themselves. Doing nothing does not promote an appetite in anyone. But let a man get out to work and he needn't worry about his appetite; that will take care of itself. Those who work for righteousness will soon find themselves to be hungering and thirsting for the same, and in the way of being filled.

A Look Into the Next World.

BY S. Z. SHARP.

In Two Parts.—Part One.

Down through the ages past, each one of the millions of the human race, both great and small, high and low, old and young, one by one came to the brink of time, bid farewell to loved ones, and stepped into the world beyond, never to be seen or heard in this world any more; and so must you and I, and the countless millions that come after. We ask science: "What became of them?" but receive no answer. We turn to philosophy, and it says nothing. We inquire of human reason and it says: "The soul and the body are two separate and distinct entities. The body is matter, the soul is not. The former has no intelligence, the latter is endowed with a mind that can think, feel and will, by its own volitions; hence, when the body, which is only the house of the soul, crumbles back into earth again, it can not carry the soul with it, and death does not end all."

After we grant that death does not end all, and we ask, What is the condition of the soul in the next world?—then science, philosophy, and human reason, all refuse to answer. We now turn to the Book of Revelation, the Bible, which offers to tell us something about the condition of the departed spirits. Now some one asks: "Can we rely on what the Bible says?" Well, the Bible records hundreds of events which it said would come to pass, and thus far it never failed in its predictions. For example: Isaiah foretold hundreds of years before it came to pass, that Cyrus would rebuild Jerusalem and the temple, which took place just as foretold. Not only was the event prophesied, but the person was mentioned. The same may be said of other events foretold. The Bible, therefore, must be accepted as a reliable witness. No sound argument can be offered to the contrary, and we can accept its testimony in regard to the condition of the soul in the future world. Now, what does the Bible say? Let us notice, first, what it says about the wicked: "The wicked shall be turned back into Sheol" (hell—Psa. 9: 17). What is meant by "hell"?—is the next question. Well, that is the place where the wicked souls or spirits are kept in prison until the day of judgment, when they will get their final sentence, and be cast into the lake of fire. See Rev. 20: 13-15, "And death and hell gave up the dead that were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works." . . . "If any was not found written in the book of life, he was cast into the lake of fire." Now the next question is, "What becomes of the souls which are cast into the lake of fire?" There are three theories held by theologians in regard to them:

1. They Are Burned Up,—Annihilated.—This theory is maintained by Dr. Lyman Abbott, of the Plymouth church, Brooklyn, N. Y. He claims that "the fire that is not quenched" (Mark 9: 48), has reference to the valley of Gehenna, south of Jerusalem, where a fire was constantly kept up to consume the offal that was carried out of the city; that, while the fire was not quenched, but continuous, yet the offal was consumed, and those that make themselves like offal, religiously, will also be consumed. "The worm that dieth not was the worm devouring carcasses, and is equally not a symbol of torture but of destruction." He further says: "Let me add, what may be regarded a sentiment rather than a reason, that, while the thought of eternal suffering might be endured, the thought that there is a corner in God's universe where sin, rebellion, and selfishness shall continue eternally, is a thought which has outgrown me spiritually." We have not found any scripture quoted directly in favor of the annihilation doctrine, only inferences and reasonings, and therefore do not accept it.

2. The Doctrine of Universal Salvation.—This doctrine teaches that all human beings shall be finally saved, that future punishment will be inflicted only to bring souls to repentance, and, after sinners have atoned for their sins by suffering, they will be redeemed when they accept the Savior. This doctrine is most ably espoused by Dr. John Coleman Adams, of the St. Paul's Universalist Church, Chicago, Ill. He says: "Whatever punishment may be needed in the world to come, to bring souls to repentance, will be administered parentally, not vindictively. Salvation from sin and its deformities is the normal destiny of the soul. The spiritual progress, wrought by Christianity, must be toward universal emancipation from vice. God's judgments are in the nature of love and reclamation. The losses and penalties, entailed by sin in the moral nature, are repaired in the future life by unknown periods of duration."

The objection to this theory is that it takes away from man one of his constitutional elements, namely his free choice. God made man a free agent and allowed him to choose life or death. He chose death. Universalism would put souls into torment until they are forced to accept salvation. This is contrary to the entire doctrine of Christ and the plan of salvation. Christ, while on earth, never forced any one to accept salvation and there is nothing in his Word to indicate that he will do so in the world to come, hence universal salvation is not based on the Word of God, as revealed by Jesus Christ. It is a system of driving souls to Christ by the power of punishment, and not from choice. It was not Christ's method in this world, and there is nothing to show that it will be in the next.

3. The Theory of Everlasting Punishment and Destruction.—This theory is based on a clearly-expressed scripture, as, "These shall go away into eternal punishment" (Matt. 25: 46) and "They that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus, shall suffer punishment, even eternal destruction" (2 Thess. 1: 8, 9). This is the doctrine taught by the great majority of the early church fathers, and is still the doctrine of orthodox Christians generally. It is claimed that there is no evidence of any opportunity or period in the future world when souls can repent or be redeemed, but "he that is unrighteous, let him be unrighteous still, and he that is filthy let him be filthy still" (Rev. 22: 11). It is sound logic to claim that if "eternal life" for the righteous (Matt. 25: 46) is endless then "eternal punishment," found in the same verse, is also endless. Should we grant that the word "eternal" has been applied, in scripture, to things which came to an end, we all agree that the word "eternal" when applied to life, is not one of them, and when eternal life is contrasted with eternal punishment, they must both be of equal duration.

The future condition of the blessed will be our next topic.

A Glimpse Through the Gates.

BY OMA KARN.

THE other evening, while driving in from the country, we were treated to a scene such as no other words than the above can describe. There had been a shower and the air was filled with the fragrance of warm, wet, green things. Over the edge of the western horizon the Lord of Day was disappearing, his last lingering rays turning the great masses of billowy clouds, floating just above the horizon, into a phenomenon of color, before the intensity of which all the colors of a painter's palette would pale. The rainbow hues of all the summers that have shone upon earth since the first rainbow was set in the heavens, seemed to be reflected in those fleecy, shimmering cloud shapes.

In the distance heaven and earth seemed to meet, the eternal hills rearing aloft until their timber-clad heights were seemingly lost in the gorgeous panorama that hung over them. It was like looking into paradise,—hardly knowing where earth ended and paradise began. Moved by the inspiration of this beautiful portrayal of heaven meeting with earth, we found ourselves exclaiming with the Psalmist, "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills from whence cometh my strength." Never before did nature so impress us with the feeling of nearness to the Creator of all things and his infinite power.

Lower and lower sank the great, shining orb, leaving only a soft, luminous light where it had been. Gradually the great, shadowy clouds turned from amber into pearl, and from pearl into soft, feathery whiteness. This presently parted, leaving a narrow opening from which a single star, having the appearance of a jewel, set against a piece of azure-hued velvet, looked down upon the dripping, smiling earth.

We had chosen a by-road, somewhat remote from the public highway, and the confusion of sound heard along this thoroughfare was missing here, the only sound disturbing the stillness being the call of a lonely nightbird, far away in the upper air. This, with the soft, mysterious charm of the twilight, the dim coolness and fragrance, the feeling of nearness to the Infinite, all had a tendency to draw the thoughts upward. For a time earth seemed to be lost to view and a vision of the New Jerusalem and the white-robed throng dwelling therein stood before us.

It was only a common summer evening scene, but we were glad we looked upon it with the imaginative eyes we did. The effect was not lost. Heaven and our departed loved ones seemed nearer, while within us was born a keener desire for the inheritance that is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away,—the inheritance of the saints at home, in the city not made with hands.

The Lesson in Everyday Life.

BY W. M. HOWE.

HOSEA.—Only one lesson from Hosea. Let us read it,—read it all,—then ponder and read again. Herein is pictured man's degradation by sin, God's condemnation of sin, together with his gracious salvation from sin. It is helpful to remember that Hosea, Joshua and Jesus are all practically the same name, meaning Savior, or "Jehovah saves." Like Jesus, Hosea was a prophet, but not the son of a prophet. When God calls,—and he does call all,—man may well respond, for our success depends not on our ancestors but on "him that calleth."

Backslidden Israel.—In the first chapters of Hosea, Israel is likened unto an adulterous wife, and in the last unto a prodigal son. How shameful and disgraceful it is for one to prove untrue to a wedded companion or to a loving parent! Yet that was Israel's case. God chose Israel to be his very own, a royal nation, a peculiar people. He showered on them his greatest blessings, and loved them with an everlasting love. On her was bestowed more affection and care than is due to any wife and child combined. Yet she proved untrue. With her eyes off of God, she saw the best(?) in other nations and called it good. She saw what really was their weakness and she called them strong. Here are two of the most common errors in all the generations of men. Yet those that make these mistakes are, maybe, seeing the best that is to be seen, —with their eyes turned away from God. Their judgment, likely, could not be improved upon—by men who lack wisdom from above. It is really amazing how much good(?) may be seen in secret societies and some other worldly institutions by men whose heart and soul are not in tune with God. The first rule of every man's life should be—

> "Close to God by day and by night, > Never shall he be out of my sight."

"Looking unto Jesus" constantly has never been followed by failure. Israel saw Syria's glittering swords of steel and Egypt's fiery steeds (Hos. 1: 7; 14: 3). Why should they not deliver? Indeed, there is promise from no other source when the back is turned on God. The trouble is that all promises fail save God's. So Israel met with sorrow and failure, time after time, until nothing but ruin stared her in the face. Such must be the unhappy result today, when men put their trust in their nation's army and navy, rather than in their nation's God. The figures of the unfaithful wife and son both indicate that a place of blessing and security had been gained and lost by Israel. So her condition is one of "backsliding." Hence the call from above to retrace her steps.

"Return Unto the Lord, Thy God."—Israel not only turned her back on God, but she turned her heart also away from God, and (what is the natural result) to the idols of the nations. A man can not go wrong in worldly matters and remain right in spiritual matters. A man can not be crooked in business and remain straight with God. The religion of Jesus Christ permeates all our acts. When a man chooses to do wrong, he says good-bye to God and heaven at the same time. "Ye can not serve God and Mammon." Such a man will find every rail on which he tries to rest quite as rotten as he is,—to say the least. Who is it that has not been here for a minute, or a month, or more, in his life? Happy day when men hear the call to repentance and to God!

"Take With You Words."—"With the mouth confession is made." Proper confession, the sacrifice (or calves) of our lips, is demanded of all. Whoever says, "Much is required," let him also say, "How little!" Little is asked, but what more could poor, fallen, helpless sinners do? This, however, he can do and this he must do. Confession is man's only effective plea for pardon. It is the cry that first opens God's heart of blessing. After all, how else can one make God aware that he is weary of sin, and desires a better, cleaner life? Yet some hesitate. They'll take bitter drugs and pay fine prices for them, to save their lives, but they will not confess their sins. They'll cross the continent to find better bodily health conditions, but to improve their spiritual health they will not do one thing. They'll readily undergo dangerous operations, willing to part with a valued member of the body, but they will not part with their sins. On the contrary, see—

The Loving-kindness of God (2: 19).—He is more willing to help man than man is to help himself. Hosea represents him as a long-suffering but forgiving husband, and as a patient and affectionate father. He is all that and more. Would that all men would turn to him. Surely—

> "The love of God is broader
> Than the measure of man's mind,
> And the heart of the Eternal
> Is most wonderfully kind."

Notes From Correspondent

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

CALIFORNIA.

Live Oak.—This church is enjoying a steady increase of attendance at our services. Last Sunday was our sixth session. Thirty-two were present at our Sunday-school session, which is always followed by preaching. Further we confess members here, and we are contemplating an organization soon. Some of us have been here since February, and contentment reigns supreme. Others have bought and intend to come next fall or spring. There is plenty to do, here, in the Master's vineyard.—J. O. Hartman, Live Oak, Cal., June 2.

Oak Grove.—We enjoyed a love feast May 6. Eld. J. J. Brower presided, with Brethren A. Lindquist and Bikenberry present. About eighty members communed. Bro. Brower preached for us very earnestly for two weeks, closing the meetings May 7. There were no accessions, but we hope that in spiritually strengthened and good seed was sown.—Linnie Coffman, Laton, Cal., May 23.

CANADA.

Fairview.—May 21 Bro. Hollinger, of Greenville, Ohio, was with us. He preached both morning and evening. His talks on Palestine were enjoyed by all. The work is progressing at this place. A home department and cradle roll have recently been organized. Bro. Rensberger, of Greenville, Ohio, has come into our district and will move here in the Lord's work.—Jennie L. Heckman, Mutrie, Sask., Can., May 27.

COLORADO.

Denver.—May 28 was the day of our love feast, and we surely were blessed by the presence of the Spirit. Our Sunday-school hour all studied the wonderful "Peace" lesson, with Bro. C. C. Rust as superintendent. Bro. J. A. M. our dear brother, S. E. Kettner (formerly of this place, but now of Boise, Idaho), addressed us on "Ideal Living," taking his text from Matt. 5:48. It was a splendid talk for Sunday-school and a social time enjoyed. We also had services at 2 P. M. and 4 P. M. Bro. Rust gave the examination talk on the 4 members' meeting, when each one was asked to say a word for the Master. We felt that it was the Lord's presence. In the evening forty-three members surrounded the Lord's table. Bro. Kelmer officiated.—Blanche A. Long, Arvada, Colo., May 29.

First Grand Valley.—We met in special council preparatory to our love feast May 13. The yearly work was then made, and the visiting brethren reported love and peace prevailing. Four were received by letter at this council. Bro. Homer Wenger was chosen to represent our congregation at the Annual Meeting. We had our love feast May 20, Bro. C. C. Root officiated. About one hundred and thirty-five members communed. On account of brethren from other congregations were present and added very much to the interest of the meeting. On Sunday evening Bro. Root preached a most excellent sermon to a large and attentive audience.—D. M. Click, Grand Junction, Colo., May 31.

Lowell.—We held our love feast May 20. Our pastor, Bro. J. C. Groff, presided. Twenty-three were seated around the Lord's table.—Nellye Rice, Warren, Colo., May 25.

ILLINOIS.

Franklin Grove.—Our church met in council May 27, with Bro. C. H. Balsley presiding. Considerable business was before the meeting. One letter of membership was granted. Bro. S. S. Blough, of Batavia, Ill., will begin a series of meetings in the near future. On account of two of the officers of our Christian Workers' Band going away, it became necessary to elect a corps of officers, so Sister Ella Barkly, secretary. Sister Mitchell was elected as Missionary Reader. Plans have been made for a baptistry in the church. Brethren Geo. Blocher and Chas. Wolf will represent us at the District Meeting. A committee was appointed to arrange for a Bible Institute, to be held some time during the coming winter.—Anna S. Buck, Franklin Grove, Ill., May 31.

Hickory Grove.—We held our love feast May 20. Attendance was not quite as large, on account of the heavy rain, as few from adjoining churches were present, among them being Bro. J. S. Bell, who spent the night with our brethren. We were all glad to have him with us once more, as he had preached for us once a month for a year before he moved out to California.—Anna Flerbeiler, R. D. 6, Mount Carroll, Ill., May 31.

Hurricane Creek.—We met in council May 20. Our elder, Bro. J. W. Lear, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., presided. Our work was set for some time in July, at the end of our series of meetings.—Wm. H. Ketring, Hurricane Creek, Ill., May 30.

Martin Creek.—We held our love feast May 20, which along with good interest. The writer will represent the church at the District Conference. Our series of meetings is to commence Sept. 16, to continue till Oct. 1, closing with a love feast Sept. 23, at 2 P. M. Bro. J. M. Neher, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., is to conduct these meetings.—J. J. Screnson, Fairfield, Ill., May 31.

Mulberry Grove.—This church has just passed through a refreshing season. Bro. Wm. Lampin and wife, of Polo, Ill., came about the last May 6. We continued meeting until the 24th. We enjoyed the meetings very much, and we believe much good was done. There were no additions to our number,—one by baptism and two reclaimed.—Mrs. N. E. Lilligh, Mulberry Grove, Ill., May 31.

Okaw church met in council May 27, with Eld. John Arnold presiding. Bro. S. J. Nickey, of Oakley, Ill., and Adam Bollman, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., were with us. Much business was disposed of. Bro. Arnold resigned his position as second assistant deacon. Bro. John Arnold resigned his position as deacon in charge, on account of age and ill health. Bro. Geo. W. Miller was elected to fill his stead. Our last series of meetings was at Annual Conference. A temperance committee of three was appointed to work in connection with the temperance committee. Our Christian Workers' Society has decided to support a native worker in the foreign field, and our Sunday-school classes have been doing for some time.—Elizabeth Arnold, Covington, Ill., May 31.

Polo church met in council May 25, at 10 A. M., with Eld. John Heckenberling presiding. All business passed off very pleasantly. We elected our delegates to District Meeting. May 28 one dear sister was baptized at the close of the morning services. In the evening, at 8:30, we had a love feast which was very inspiring.—Martha Gilbert, Polo, Ill., May 29.

INDIANA.

Bango church met in council May 20. Bro. Christian Metzler was chosen delegate to Annual Meeting. Our love feast was held May 13. Brethren Bash was with us and a spiritual feast was enjoyed by all.—Bertha Moyer, Wakarusa, Ind., May 27.

Bremen.—On the evening of May 23 Bro. Hilton, our missionary from China, delivered an interesting and helpful address. An offering of $13.85 was given for the furtherance of the work in China. At the close of Bro. Hilton's address, Sister Ella Crisp gave a very interesting report of the mission meeting was held May 27. Much business came before the meeting. We expect to hold our love feast June 13.—Monroe Martin, Bremen, Ind., May 31.

Howard.—Bro. W. B. Miller gave us a course of Bible Land lectures, beginning May 8 and continuing one week. They proved interesting and helpful.—Silas Bro. J. F. Boyer began a series of meetings. One of our little Sunday-school girls accepted Christ, and was baptized. Bro. Boyer's interest in the young people was very much appreciated. The meetings closed with good interest and a good Sunday-school.—Hiram Henry, R. D. 1, Kokomo, Ind., May 22.

Mexico.—Our church met in council today. Our elder, Bro. Frank Fisher, presided. Much business was disposed of. Five letters were received and one was granted. Brethren John Fisher and Marion Swank, and their wives, were installed into the deacon's office, having been elected at a previous meeting.—Lucinda A. Fisher, Mexico, Ind., May 27.

Monticello.—We had our love feast May 27. Bro. G. B. Crosford officiated. Bro. Wm. Hoff, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., was with us and we met for Sunday-school at 9:30, which was followed by a ministerial meeting. At 11 A. M. we had preaching by Bro. Roy Dilling preached for us on the subject "Learning to Labor and to Wait." We feel that the day was one long all of these meetings, which were much enjoyed by all present.—A. Critchfield, Monticello, Ind., May 29. Correspondent: Mrs. Grace Driver was reflected secretary. A committee was appointed to secure a minister to hold a series of meetings in the near future. Bro. Hoff's Saturday evening and on Sunday morning, at which time brethren and sisters were called to service. Communion at 2 P. M. Warren also gave some good thoughts on the Sunday-school lesson. Bro. Hoff preached at 7:30 P. M.—Mrs. Ella Hoff, Warren, Ind., May 29.

Rock Run congregation held her love feast May 20. Bro. M. R. Miller officiated. Bro. Miller and Bro. J. H. Miller began a series of illustrated lectures, concerning his travels in the Holy Land, on the evening of May 21, which emphasized the truths of the Bible. On the evening of the 23th he gave a detailed description of their experiences in traveling through the land of Moab. These lectures show that God does take care of his children in perilous times. Great interest is manifested and we hope that they may be favored to bring present.—Jennie Martin, Goshen, Ind., June 2.

Salamonie.—We had our love feast at Rock Creek house May 20. Our elder, Bro. Aaron Moss, who has not been able to be with us for several months, was present and presided at the meeting, assisted by Bro. Henry Wike. One letter was received by vote. Sister Ella Crisp was restored to church fellowship. We also elected a new church clerk, Bro. Alvin Wisebrenner, to take the place of Bro. Levi Ulrich, who resigned on account of poor health. The Rock Creek Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting are progressing nicely.—Mrs. Ida Wisebrenner, R. R. 2, Roann, Ind., May 28. Huntington, Ind., May 22.

Sugar Creek church met in council May 27. Ten letters were received. One was that of a minister in the second degree. Bro. Wm. Hoff was chosen delegate to attend Annual Conference. Officers for the Christian Workers' Meeting and Sunday-school were as follow: Grace Kaa, president; Sister Ettie Fields, secretary. A love feast will be held for June 10, 6:30 P. M., at the East house.—Mrs. Grace Driver, Bradford, Ohio, May 31.

Walnut.—Bro. Steele, of Walkerton, Ind., was with us May 19 and 21. He gave us two splendid Sunday-school talks on different phases of Sunday-school work. Both meetings were helpful.—Mrs. M. E. Mohler. The Young People's Conference meeting, after which a collection for the National Temperance Work was taken. The sum of $2.35 was received, which amounted to $12.11. May 26 our township voted dry.—Susan Puterbaugh, Argos, Ind., May 29.

Yellow Creek met in council May 27. In the absence of our elder, Bro. Manly Dexter, our pastor, Bro. W. E. Crownover, presided. Bro. Crownover has been with us for full July 1, at 6 P. M. As our membership at this place is small and an effort will be made to build up, we feel encouraged to trust that the presence of brethren and sisters from other congregations will be a blessing to us, encouraging us to the work at this place. While we are very much encouraged with the progress of our work here, we need the prayers of the membership, that the church may grow and be built as well as in number. Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely. Our number, last Sunday, was 75. Hope to be able to have our children's day program.—Viola Overholser, R. D. 1, Warsaw, Ind., May 31.

Yellow Creek church met in regular council May 27, with our elder, Bro. Manly Dexter, in charge. All members was present. Five letters were received and nine letters were granted. Bro. Wm. Hoff was elected as our delegate to Annual Conference, and Bro. Harvey Schwalm was elected as No. 1 B. Burns was reelected president of our Christian Workers' Meeting, and Bro. Harvey Schwalm and Sister Ida Hoff as assistants. Sept. 23 was selected as the date for our communion.—Orville Hoff, R. D. 1, Warsaw, Ind., May 31.

Yellow River.—Our church met in quarterly council (prior to the love feast) May 20, with Eld. Jacob Studebaker in charge. In perfect love and union. Business was very harmoniously disposed of. Bro. Jesse E. Sherfy, of Nappanee, Ind., was granted a thanksgiving meeting for July 30. Our love feast, which was held May 21, was much enjoyed. Ministering brethren present were Irvin Weaver, Samuel Dilling and Jesse Sherfy. Levi Puterbaugh, J. H. Miller and H. W. Kreighbaum. Eld. Jacob Studebaker officiated. Our Sunday-school, with Sunday-school, we were permitted to enjoy several talks by the brethren.—Rosa Shively, Bremen, Ind., May 28.

IOWA.

English River congregation met in council May 27. The meeting was conducted by Eld. Daniel Hays. Letters were made for our spring love feast. We also decided to have a full love feast. Bro. Daniel Hays was chosen to the ministry. Bro. Calvin Gibson was elected President of our Christian Workers, and Sister Ida Hays, secretary. Our collections for the Annual Meeting Missionary Offering, was $11.11. It was decided to have an all-day Sunday-school and Missionary Meeting on the first Sunday in July. We are expecting Bro. John Robinson, of Muscatine, to hold a series of meetings for us in September. We have five days a number from here will be going to the St. Joseph Conference.—Ida Hays, Parnell, R. D. 1, Iowa, May 29.

Greene church met in council May 27. Eld. W. H. Hoon presided. All business that came before the council was disposed of pleasantly. Bro. Hoon was reelected as our elder. The brethren reported love and union among the members. One was received by letter and four letters were granted.—J. F. Eikenberry, Greene, Iowa, May 29.

Panther.—Our council, prior to our love feast, convened May 20. We elected Sunday-school officers for the ensuing six months, with Bro. B. W. Bentall as superintendent; Bro. H. Roy Book, secretary-treasurer. On Sunday a missionary address was delivered by a collection of over $60, to be sent to Annual Meeting.—Anna Bentall, Panther, Iowa, May 30. Arranged for July 4, when, as God's children, we hope to enjoy a real "Fourth."—Mrs. Ida Hoff, Panther, Iowa, May 29. Pleasant Prairie.—Our elder, Bro. Joshua Schechter, of Worthington, Minn., came to us May 14, and preached for us each evening, also on Sunday, May 14, especially for the cause of Christ. May 22 our District evangelist, Bro. J. S. Zimmerman, of Waterloo, Iowa, came to us, and continued the meetings over the following Sunday. We feel that we have been richly fed with heavenly manna.—E. E. Rhea, R. D. 2, Box 21, Ireton, Iowa, May 31.

KANSAS.

Altamont.—May 27 Bro. W. N. Bell, of Fredonia, Kans., came to us, and preached earnestly on Saturday evening and Sunday morning and evening. The people at this place are hungry for the truth as it is taught in the Gospel. We need some one to come and preach a series of doctrinal sermons. Bro. Bell can come only once a month. We have no resident minister. Will you come and help us? We are praying for some one to take the work here.—Arnold Hutchinson, La Bette, Kans., June 2.

Bethel.—We have been enjoying a spiritual feast. May 19 we met for our Joint Sunday-school Convention, with a good representation from Oak and Bethel. On the 20th we met for the Christian Workers' Convention. At 4:30 our love feast began. The evening meeting was spent in the Lord's tables. Visiting ministers were Bro. Martin Gauby, of Lordsburg, Cal., Bro. Samuel Henry, of Lordsburg, Cal., Bro. E. D. Steward, of Quinter, Kans., and Bro. Ben Berkebile, from India, accompanied by his wife and son. Brother and Sister Berkebile gave us several talks about India, which were very much enjoyed. Bro. Samuel Henry officiated at the love feast on Sunday evening. On Sunday, at 10 A. M., we had a children's meeting, and at 11 A. M. Bro. Berkebile gave us another good sermon; also one in the evening. On Sunday, at 2:30 P. M., and on Monday evening, Bro. Steward preached for us. The meetings were all spiritual.—Susie Kinzie, Belleville, Kans., May 23.

Walnut Missionary.—We met in council May 28, with Bro. Hoff as moderator. Bro. Hoff was elected as delegate agent. Our love feast was held May 13, with Bro. Steward, of Quinter, Kans., presiding. Bro. Steward preached a good sermon and conducted by Bro. Steward and Bro. Hoff. One accepted Christ. Bro. Steward has been with us two weeks, preaching a little hand now consists of twenty-six members. Sometimes we have as many as forty present. Here is a good field to be accomplished, and by Christ's help we can win souls for Him.—Ira Wheeler, Independence, R. D. 1, Box 66, Oakley, Kans., May 31.

Valley.—We held our meeting May 27. Our elder, Bro. G. W. Weddle, was moderator. Bro. J. H. Hoff was elected minister in charge for the following year. Our collection for Missionary Meeting was received.—Mrs. Jessie Miller, R. D. 4, Box 46, St. John, Kans., May 29.

McPherson.—We had our council meeting May 27. Grover Dotzour, of Kingman, Kans., as having recently been elected to the ministry. Sister Ida Long and Sister Lizzie Hoff, and Sarah Wimmer Hershey, McPherson, Kans., May 27.

Mound Valley.—We met in council May 14, at 2 P. M., with our elder, Bro. A. D. Crist, in charge. At 7 P. M. we had our love feast, the sisters breaking the bread and passing the wine. The writer was chosen delegate. Conference officiated. He also preached for us on Sunday, in the morning and evening. Our collections were taken for the Annual Meeting.—Bro. A. D. Crist is our delegate to Annual Meeting; Bro. P. J. Miller, alternate. Bro. Crist will also attend the Conference.—Martha Kalebaugh, Wellsville, Kans., May 31.

White Rock.—We held our council meeting May 26. Bro. Earl Myers was elected to the ministry; Bro. O. S. Switzer, deacon. Both were installed into office. We decided to have a few weeks' series of meetings in the fall, at the Rock House church. Our love feast will be held next month.—Mrs. Elnora B. Switzer, Webber, Kans., May 26.

MARYLAND.

Long Green Valley.—We met in council May 21, with Eld. W. E. Roop presiding. Much business was disposed of. The various committees reported progress in their work. The treasurer made a report. Bro. Samuel Wm. Stouffer, J. M. Frigel and Jos. Southard were appointed to look after our property. Bro. Southard reported that he had the sisters break the bread and pass the cup at love feast. The plan was adopted and found to be a success. We had our love feast in the fall, as was done through the aid of the Home Mission Board fund. The Christian Workers' Society was organized by electing Bro. John C. Breidenbaugh as president.—Mrs. Ida Stouffer, Hydes, Maryland. Bro. Silas Utz preached for us May 7. A few of our members are sick at present.—Ida M. Neuhauser, Gittings, Md., May 27.

NEW JERSEY.

New Haven church met in council May 20. Eld. C. L. Wilkins presided. Bro. A. Feightner was elected as Sunday-school superintendent. Delegates to Annual Meeting are Brethren D. E. Chambers and wife; Sisternates, Bro. Joseph Sherrick and wife. May 14 to 16 we attended the North Shade Township Association in a very interesting Sunday-school convention. We enjoyed a very inspiring love feast May 27. About ninety communed. Bro. Wilkins officiated. Bro. Samuel Bollinger officiated. On Sunday morning Bro. Bollinger gave us a very inspiring sermon, his subject being "The Life That Is and That Which Is to Come," after which a collection was taken for the Annual Meeting missions. Our Sunday-school decided to add $7 to the collection. Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting we are going to Oklahoma to spend the summer. They will be greatly missed. Two were baptized and one was received by letter, since our last report.—Lillie A. Sisler, Woodland, N. J., May 30.

Woodland church met in council May 27. Our elder, Bro. J. M. Smith, presided. Three letters of membership were received. Sister Lizzie Engard was chosen Sunday-school for a year. Sister Arley Spindler is our superintendent. We also elected officers for the Christian Workers' Meeting for six months, with Sister Martha Smith as president. Eld. J. M. Smith and wife, Bro. Noah Noel were chosen delegates to District Meeting. Our love feast of May 13 passed off very pleasantly. Eld. J. M. Smith was foreman. It was the first time our sisters had the privilege of washing the feet of those who took the cup. One hundred and twenty were at the tables.—some came for the first time.—Mrs. Ida England, Woodland, Mich., May 30.

MINNESOTA.

Hancock.—Our Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meetings are moving along nicely. We greatly miss our pastor, Bro. S. Z. Sharp, who is visiting in the East this spring. We expect him to be with us again soon after the Annual Conference. Sister Mattie Morris has been visiting with us May 14. He gave us two excellent sermons, which were much enjoyed. Bro. Noel was with us in December, our Ankeny, Iowa, to begin a series of meetings June 4.—Mrs. Ida Ankeny, Iowa, to begin a series of meetings June 4.—Mrs. Ida Hancock, Minn., May 27.

Lewiston.—Bro. J. S. Zimmerman, of Waterloo, Iowa, began a series of meetings May 8, concluding each evening until May 21. Bro. Zimmerman preached some excellent sermons. The members feel much strengthened and encouraged. One came out on the Lord's side. While he was here, he gave us a splendid talk on Sunday-school work.—Laura L. Widmer, R. D. 1, Lewiston, Minn., May 28.

MISSOURI.

Kansas City (First German Baptist Brethren).—We met in council May 25, preparatory to our love feast June 11, at 7:30 P. M. Eld. Smith will preside. Much work was made, showing a much-improved condition from what it was one year ago. We encounter some difficult conditions, but endeavor to work in full harmony with the usages of the church. Bro. I. M. Cover met with us at Mound Union on the close of the evening. Two letters were received and two were granted.—C. E. Whitmer, 2931 St. John Ave., Kansas City, Mo., May 28.

Shoal Creek—Our church met in council June 4. The elder not being present. Bro. J. H. Argabright presided. The visit reported all members to be in peace and union. We held our love feast May 27. There were no visiting ministers with us. Bro. Argabright officiated. Our Sunday-school and Christian Workers' meeting are progressing nicely.—Virgie Argabright, Fairview, Mo., May 29.

Smith Creek—Our church met in council May 27. Bro. John Sturgis presided, in the absence of our elder, Bro. J. S. Kline. Reports of the treasurer and the various committees were read and accepted. The building committee was retained to complete their work. Brethren Perry Williams, E. C. Orr and Sister Sadie Hoover were selected as a committee to confer with three members from Pleasant Valley regarding officers and teachers for the Union Sunday-school, to be organized as soon as the church is completed. The same committee was authorized to secure the services of a minister at Pleasant Valley (Starfield), to take charge of that place as a mission. The Smith Creek congregation decided to pay taxed according to their property valuation for support of said ministry. Sisters Cora Hoover, Sadie Hoover and Susan Ellenberger were appointed as a committee to buy fifty song books for the Smith Creek church and one hundred song books for the Pleasant Valley church. A paper was sent to Interim Meeting, asking that provision be made to have a Sunday-school Teachers' Institute each year, in some church of the District, to be supported by the churches of the District.—Cora Williams, Platteau, Pa., May 29.

Warrensburg—A collection, in another part of this congregation, resulted in raising $1.50 to be sent to the Annual Meeting collection. Those giving $1 or more will receive the Visitor.—Jesse D. Mohler, Warrensburg, Mo., May 29.

MONTANA.

Medicine Lake—Our series of meetings commence June 18, to be conducted by Bro. D. F. Landis, of Willitson, N. Dak., and close with a love feast July 9. Come to us, for five miles northeast of Enterprise.—Katie E. Keller, Enterprise Mont., May 1.

Otter Creek—Our Sunday-school, preaching services and Christian Workers' Meetings continue with increasing crowds. A deacon lately moved among us. We are now using our seating capacity by making benches for our services. We also ordered one hundred new song books. We are trying to have more brethren move among us. Land is selling very fast, and if we want brethren to come we must act now and come soon or pay high prices for land, as it is advancing in price rapidly. We will be glad to hear of more churches built, although nothing has been done so far.—M. Alva Long, Big Timber, Mont., May 28.

NEBRASKA.

Bethel church met in council on Saturday, May 27, with Bro. E. S. Rothrock presiding. Four letters of membership were received. Bro. Edgar Rothrock was elected delegate to Annual Meeting. May 28 Bro. D. L. Forney was with us and presented a very inspiring sermon. A free will collection of $67.56 was taken, to be sent to Annual Meeting. Since our last report, two calls have been printed to Sister Sadie Miller with us. She told us much regarding her work in India. A collection of over $10 was taken for the work. Our State Sunday-school Secretary, Bro. Ira Wagoner, spent one evening with us and gave us a fine Sunday-school work. We expect Bro. W. R. Miller to deliver a few sermons for us, commencing on the evening of June 12.—Anna Lichty, Carleton, Nebr., May 29.

Falls City.—Sister Sadie Miller was with us about ten days. She began her talks May 14, and gave us very interesting talks concerning the customs of the people in India, and also of other work there. Our collection amounted to $22.56. She also gave us a very interesting missionary talk on Sunday afternoon to the Sunday-school. We gave $7.50—for the special benefit of the Aid Society.—Ella Peck, Falls City, Nebr., May 28.

Highland.—Bro. F. W. Norris and wife, of Landesville, Ind., were with us and held a two weeks' series of meetings, closing May 14. Bro. Norris delivered many excellent sermons in the entire community. He gave effective and sound teaching on many of the fundamental doctrines of the church. Sister Norris' assistance in the singing was greatly appreciated.—Katie E. Hoffert, Haverhill, Wash., May 29.

Lincoln church held her love feast on Sunday evening, May 28. We had a good meeting. About forty-two members communed. Bro. John A. Robinson, of Hastings, officiated; three good sermons before the feast. Bro. Calvert, from California, and Bro. J. T. Hickler, of Iowa, were with us at our feast. There were not many members from other churches, owing to rainy weather. Our collection for Conference collection of $59.70 for World-wide Missions. Our Christian Workers in love and union.—Mrs. Ella Hall, Lincoln, Nebr., May 29.

Onawa—Last Sunday night Bro. Perry Van Dyke preached for us. Last Thursday night Bro. John Robinson, of Muscatine, Iowa, preached us. It greatly encouraged the members to have these members visit us. We took up a collection for the Annual Conference Missionary collection. We hope to have a number visit us after Annual Meeting.—Alice Garber, May 29. Onawa, Monona Co., Iowa.

Silver Lake church met in council May 27, one week prior to our regular council, so that our delegate could have more time to arrange his work. Our elder, Bro. F. T. Grabill, presided. He was also chosen as our delegate to Annual Meeting, with Bro. S. J. Kindig as alternate. Our collection for Annual Meeting amounted to $5.11; for Home Missions, $8.96. —Anna Kindig, R. D. 1, Box 37, Bertrand, Nebr., June 3.

NEW MEXICO.

Clovis.—Our church met in council May 27, at 7 P. M. Our dear elder, Bro. C. H. Brown, presided. Bro. J. E. Miller was sent out at the Annual Conference. On Sunday we were made to rejoice to see one more added to the fold by baptism. Bro. A. J. Rodes was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. Twenty-three members enjoyed a most spiritual love feast. Sister Rodes, a good house of worship and Sunday-school, and we hope that impressions of the truth were printed indelibly upon many hearts.—Minnie Miller, Clovis, N. Mex., May 30.

Clovis.—Nov. 15, 1910, I, with my family, began work here for this faithful flock of God's children, under the direction of the Mission Board of Oklahoma. We now feel to thank the Lord for the privilege of so doing, and for the success and joy in our labors. Three were baptized and two reclaimed during our series of meetings, also one rejoicing a growing interest in each department of church work. One came out on the Lord's side at our love feast on May 27, and others think of uniting with us. Our churchhouse was crowded and some had to stand up at our love feast on the evening of the 28th. Brother and Sister Rodes are pillars in the church here. May the Lord bless his faithful workers everywhere!—C. H. Brown, Clovis, N. Mex., May 29.

OHIO.

Bellefontaine—May 27 we enjoyed an excellent missionary sermon by our pastor, Bro. E. F. Yoder, after which a offering of $13 was taken to be sent to Annual Meeting. May 28 we had a special service for the old people. Our elder, Bro. E. F. Snyder, had charge of the services. He gave an excellent address to the aged veterans of the cross, which was highly appreciated by remarks by Brethren Hugh Miller and E. F. Yoder. We greatly regret that sickness kept several from the service, who had planned to come. The work here seems to be growing in interest, especially at the regular services. Our pastor has arranged for a series of seven Sunday morning sermons, beginning next Sunday morning, which will no doubt also add to the interest of the work. The subjects used will be: "Man," "Man's Need," "Man's Condition," "The Holy Spirit," "Man, Satan," "Hell" and "Heaven."—Mrs. Ida Miller, R. D. 7, Bellefontaine, Ohio, Annual Conference. He is a member of the Standing Committee from Northeastern Ohio.—Mrs. Emery L. Cook, 263 Water St., Bellefontaine, Ohio, June 1.

Brookville—Our church met in council May 24, at 10 A. M. Our elder, Bro. D. M. Garver, presided. Reports from our various letters were received and one was granted. It was decided to buy two more lots, or one, in some location in time. A more commodious house of worship will be erected. Receipts for the Annual Meeting collection were collected, amounting to $11.23. This money is to be used for missionary work in our congregation. We also appointed a delegate to Annual Meeting, since our last report.—Mrs. Ezra Kimmel, Brookville, Ohio, May 29.

Donnels Creek—Bro. Herbert Richard, of Circleville, Ohio, was with us and preached at the New Carlisle church house in the morning, and at the evening hour in the Donnels Creek house. Our brother was baptized at New Carlisle yesterday.—Elsie Winger, R. D. 1, Box 37, Donnels Creek, Ohio, May 29.

Middle District.—May 26, at 2 P. M., our congregation, with a few visitors, met for the purpose of transacting business, conducted by Bro. A. L. Kleplinger, of Dayton, Ohio. At 3 P. M. we had our regular love feast. The ordinances were then administered to about one hundred communicants. Bro. Kleplinger officiated. Our meetings continued over the Thursday-Friday evenings, preceding the love feast.—C. V. Coppock, Tippecanoe City, Ohio, May 29.

My Visit to Toledo, Ohio.—While visiting in Toledo, a few weeks ago, I found that it is a large city, full of sin and in need of laborers for the Lord. The present truly is the day, but the laborers are few. I found a band of eighteen faithful members of the Toledo church, who are trying to live up to what they are without a minister. I visited one dear, faithful sister, who is sick, and has been for a number of years. Just think how faithful she has been! She has a large family of children, and only two of them are members who are too young to unite with the church. The few earnest members meet at the house and have Sunday-school and prayer meeting regularly. The dear sister in the Lord hoped that some minister would come to be their pastor. Will not some one answer the call of the Lord, and go and work in the vineyard?—Myrtle Branson, Nappanee, Ind., May 29.

Notice.—The Sunday-school Convention of the Northeastern District of Ohio will be held with the Sugar Creek church, June 13 and 14. The W. L. E. R. R. train, No. 33, leaves Canton Junction at 10 A. M.; No. 45 leaves Canton Junction at 5:29 P. M.; No. 34 leaves East South at 7:57 A. M. These trains connect at the above house and have Sunday-school and prayer meeting regularly. The dear sisters of the church hoped that some minister would come to be their pastor. Flora Creek.—We expect to hold our love feast June 17, at 6 P. M. Bro. Daniel Hays will assist us in these services. Bro. L. R. Holsinger will assist us in these services. Bro. Hays is one of our oldest members, died suddenly, at his home, May 5, aged 83. S. S. Convention, June 18.—Ida Hays, May 27.

Shirleysburg.—The church here is repairing the stone church in Germany Valley, and any contributions towards this cause from members in the Middle District will be gratefully received. The church was built in 1838. It was the first church built in Huntingdon County.—Mrs. Morrison Peightal, May 31.

Spruce Creek.—We met in council May 27, at the Canowago house. Our elder, Bro. J. H. Longenecker, had charge. Two letters of membership were received, and eight letters were granted. A number of items of business came up. Bro. Jacob Nowasky, gave us a sermon at the Canowago house May 14, and one at the Spruce Creek house May 15. Sister Anna C. Baker, who died Feb. 14, 1911, of diphtheria. She was the daughter of Brother and Sister Jacob Baker.—Mrs. John Baker. Services were conducted at the Canowago house by Bro. E. F. Sanger, assisted by Brethren Hilbert and Bell. After the services the friends and relatives gathered around the grave.—Mrs. Jacob Nowasky, No. 141 in the Brethren Hymnal.—Edgar M. Hoffer, Elizabethtown, Pa., May 30.

TENNESSEE.

Bristol.—Bro. Samuel Garst, of Blountville, Tenn., came to us May 28. He administered to us in the love feast foundation, so as to be able to stand the storms and temptations of life. We had a good meeting. The members were very warm. In the afternoon Bro. Garst and the writer were received into the fellowship of the church. There was a very feeble and did not feel able to be baptized that evening. We had appointed to meet at the water's edge, and Bro. Garst has more calls than he can fill.—J. S. Good, 806 State St., Bristol, Tenn., June 1.

VIRGINIA.

Bethlehem church met in Council May 27, with Bro. Preston Peters as moderator. We appreciated the presence and talk of Bro. Edgar Hoffer, of Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania. The question as to whether we should continue to have solicitors for the Gospel Messenger was taken up, or whether we would use pledges, was discussed. The matter was deferred until the next council. A collection of $7.85 was taken to send to Annual Meeting.—Mrs. Preston Peters, May 30.

Bethlehem church met in Council May 26, with Bro. E. Hylton presiding. One letter was granted. We had appointed meeting by Brethren Wm. Hylton, J. W. Riddle and A. N. Hylton.—Ethel Hylton, R. D. 2, Box 36, Floyd, Va., May 26.

Mountain View.—Eld. W. H. Handy and 2 visited the members who moved from the Mountain View church to Smyth County. We had appointed meeting at Bro. Long's. Handy preached fourteen soul-cheering sermons and so aroused the church that they decided to have a well-filled house back May 13 and met with Brethren Jesse C. Jones and Eli Reed to help them. Bro. Jones preached two soul-cheering sermons, and on Sunday we received two more by baptism. More are expected to be baptized at the next meeting on the 4th of July 15. On Saturday night Eld. W. H. Handy anointed Bro. R. L. Orr, but was not able to anoint a sister, as she was sick. The next morning he threw his cane away and said his hip was cured. So the promises of our blessed Lord are sure.—Mrs. Eli Reed, May 29.

Peter's Creek congregation engaged in an enjoyable love feast May 27. About 150 members communed. Eld. Samuel Crumpacker, of the Botetourt church, was with us. His sermons and labors were appreciated. He also officiated on Saturday night and on Sunday morning preached a very helpful sermon to a large audience. Seven, I think, have been baptized since our last report, and another is to be baptized soon.—Mildred Wine, R. D. 2, Roanoke, Va., May 25.

WASHINGTON.

Wenatchee.—Since our last report a Christian Workers' Meeting has been organized, and is progressing nicely, with Bro. Ora Stutsman as leader. A collection of $2.50 was taken for the benefit of the meeting. A few weeks ago, at the time of the Annual Meeting collection, a collection of $3.50 was taken for home missions. Bro. Stutsman was with us and preached on the evening of the 14th.—Pearl Smith, Wenatchee, Wash., May 25.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Packs Branch.—Bro. James A. Riner and wife, and Bro. Lewis Lantz and wife, came to us May 19. Bro. Riner filled an appointment on Saturday night and Sunday, May 28. Bro. Riner delivered three excellent sermons to a well-filled house. These brethren are doing a good work here.—Della Lafferty, Packs Branch, W. Va., May 30.

Wiles Hill.—Our church met in preparatory council May 13, with Eld. Jasper Barnthouse as moderator. Preparations were made for our love feast for June 10. They also called for one or more deacons to be elected at our regular council, June 10, at the Mount Union churchhouse. Our series of meetings is to begin June 11. Bro. R. T. Hull will conduct the meetings.—Mrs. Ella Hull, Star Route, Morgantown, W. Va., R. D. 4, May 29.

THE ROUND TABLE

Word, Thought and Deed.

BY LINDA FLORY.

PARENTS are too little concerned as to what kind of literature their children are reading. They think if a child is reading, he is out of danger from evil. This is a sad mistake. Many a child, who would not be influenced by any other source of evil, may be led astray by the reading of harmful books.

Nothing is so important for any one as good thoughts. Our views of life mould our lives. Our views of God mould our idea of God. Again; nothing is so harmful as evil thoughts. Our thoughts about evil things mould our lives into a tool for the devil. Young says: "Guard well thy thoughts! Our thoughts are heard in heaven."

Thoughts do not die, but often bring forth words. Dryden says: "Words are but pictures of our thoughts." Every word that is spoken goes forth and has its effect. It can no more be called back than a stone that is thrown from our hands.

Carlyle says: "Cast forth thy act, thy word, into the ever-living, ever-working universe; it is a seed-grain that can not die. Unnoticed today it will be found flourishing as a banyan grove; perhaps also as a hemlock forest after a thousand years."

The tongue, the organ of speech, James says, "is an unruly member." You may tame the wild beasts,—the conflagration of the forest will cease when all the timber and the dry wood is consumed,—but you can not arrest the progress of that cruel word that you uttered carelessly, yesterday or today. What you keep within, you can change and mend; but words once spoken can never be recalled. No matter what your aims, resolutions, or profession may be, it is by one's deeds that he is to be judged, both by God and man.

Though we may live but few years on earth, yet we may do much. A life spent worthily is measured by deeds, not years. The errors we made last year may be forgiven by God, but, unfortunately, they have had their influence on others as well as on ourselves.

We should look back, see our mistakes and profit by them. We can then go forward with new determination to do more for Christ and the church than ever in the past.

He That Overcometh.

BY M. D. HERSHEY.

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son" (Rev. 21: 7).

"If he overcomes." Overcomes what? Overcomes the corruption in the world, overcomes the lust of the eye, overcomes the pride of life, overcomes the desire for the world, and all the lusts of the flesh, overcomes the adversary, and keeps his body under. If he overcomes and conquers himself, he shall inherit all things, "I will be his God, and he shall be my son." Here is something to work for, and it is offered to you. He that overcomes the world, the flesh, and the old adversary, shall inherit all things,—be a joint heir with Jesus, the Son of God. "I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

But the others,—those that do not overcome themselves, their fleshly minds and earthly ways, do not keep their bodies under and in subjection,—what about them? Are they to be happy finally? Jesus said, "Those that overcome shall inherit the new earth, and be with God and Christ." But the others, "the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." That is after the judgment, when the saints are on the new earth with the Lord. Then these abominable characters shall have their part in of the lake of fire and brimstone. That is the second death, the second separation from God, from life, and all that is desirable. It is not a cessation from existence; they will not be unconscious, but driven away from God.

Death, in its scriptural sense, does not imply an unconscious state; for we are said to be dead to sin when separated from sin, though not unconscious. We are said to be dead to God while living in our sins, though not unconscious. All persons are alive and dead, are both alive and dead at the same time. Living to God, they are dead to sin. Alive to sin, they are dead to God. In either case, however, are they unconscious. So, when the body and spirit are separated, we are said to be dead, literally, but not unconscious. Even so the second death,—a separation from God eternally,—does not imply unconsciousness.

Any Reason Why He Should?

BY J. H. MORRIS.

You wonder why those men do not come to church? You wonder why those boys do not come to your Sunday-school class? You wonder why those people, in general, do not attend the church services? Brother, I agree with you and wonder too, but let us change our angle of vision. Instead of looking out at those people, let us look into our services, and then ask ourselves, "Is there any reason why they should come?" Do they find services suited to their needs? Does the boy find anything in the Sunday-school for his special need?

What do they hear from the pulpit? "A philosophical discussion of some long-ago dead theme?" "A political discussion of today's government?" "A discourse on some theological controversy, spoken in theological terms which half the preachers do not comprehend?"

If those are the things that are coming at him when he enters, I suppose he need not come to church, for he can read the politics in the daily paper and he can not understand the others. If the pure, whole, unadulterated Gospel of Jesus Christ is taught, he will come. He will go where he is welcome and gets something that will benefit him. "Set the pulpit on fire and all the world will come to see it burn."

Before you accuse any one for not coming out to services, stop to ask yourself the question: "If I were in his place, would I go there?" What are we giving him that is beneficial? The whole Gospel? Yes, and God bless it. As it is given him, is it thrown against deaf ears which have been closed by our cool reception of him when he entered the room? Will he come again, or has he not been invited?

A certain boy went to a service and was treated so coolly,—not even being invited by the pastor,—that he has not gone back since. Let us accompany our gospel message with love which goes out in a hearty handshake and "Come back next Sunday."

Kickers.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

THE first kicker we have any account of was Jeshurun. It was said that he "waxed fat and kicked." The Lord, at a certain time, sent a message of reproof to a certain order of priests, saying, "Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and at my offering?"

The kickers are not all dead yet. The family seems to be on the increase. There are people who do all their work by kicking. Or, perhaps, it would be better to say that they do not work at all, but kick at what others do.

Nearly all work is confronted with difficulties. Success is found in overcoming them. Problems that are perplexing are meeting us at every turn. They must be solved. This is often brain-bothering and spirit-trying work. Some interested, thoughtful, zealous person will suggest something that cost him days of study, as a plausible plan to bring order out of chaos. This brings the kicker to the front. A severe criticism or a downright denunciation, without a shadow of a suggestion, is all he has to give. Let something else be proposed and the same opposition follows. No help or sympathy is proffered and if the work is undertaken, it is kicked on every side. The thing becomes chronic and the highest aim seems to be opposition to what others do. The work may stop. That does not matter. It is the forward movement that starts the kicker,—not the backward. It requires no talent or piety to be a good kicker. In fact, the less one has of goodness and intelligence, the greater the tendency to kick. The Lord has but little use for such people.

A Little Folly.—Eccl. 10: 1.

BY D. J. BLOCHER.

MANY men of wisdom have lowered themselves in the estimation of others by little acts of thoughtless folly, in the way of levity, gaiety, foolish talking, jesting, etc. Others have the mistaken idea that, to meet the approbation of men and women, and have influence with them, such work must be engaged in. Men and women, holding responsible positions of trust in the church and out, and those of reputation, must refrain from such folly. If you were to buy ointment from the apothecary, and find dead flies in it, would the odor be very sweet? Could you blame customers for losing confidence in such a person? The wise man says that folly, in the eyes of the people, is like ointment with dead flies in it,—not very inviting. Think about the comparison when tempted to acts of folly.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

A Talk About City Missions.

Rom. 10: 12, 13.

For Sunday Evening, June 18, 1911.

I. Whosoever.—Luke 12: 8; John 4: 14; Acts 10: 43; 1 John 5: 1; Rev. 22: 17.

II. God Is the Lover of All.—John 3: 16; Matt. 4: 45; 20: 14; Acts 10: 34; 15: 9; Rom. 2: 11; Gal. 2: 6; Eph. 6: 9.

III. A World-wide Gospel.—Matt. 24: 14; 28: 19; Mark 13: 10; Acts 1: 8; Col. 1: 23; Rev. 14: 6. (1) The first missionaries (Acts 8: 1-4). (2) A promise to missionaries (Jer. 1: 7, 8). (3) A missionary message (Isa. 40: 3-5). (4) Brotherly kindness (1 Peter 1: 7).

Note.—(1) Give reasons why so many foreigners come to our country. (2) Why do so many of them settle in our large cities? (3) Name the countries from which the most of them come. (4) Why do we especially need missions in our great cities? (5) Besides sending money to our city missions we might buy Testaments in foreign languages to be placed in hospitals and jails for foreigners to read. (6) The city mission is a field where heroic men and women serve Christ, and where the power of the Gospel is seen every day. Let us remember those missions in our prayers.

PRAYER MEETING

How Must a Christian Be Different From Others?

2 Cor. 6: 14-18.

For Week Beginning June 18, 1911.

1. He Must Be Separate from the World's Allurements.—While the Christian must not assume the exclusive Pharisaic "I-am-holier-than-thou" attitude, he certainly should not associate with the ungodly in worldly entertainments and amusements. As a soldier of the Great King he has neither time nor inclination to dally with the trifling affairs of this world; he must please him who "hath called him." Simple honesty requires that the Christian, by his walk and conversation, should give a fair representation of the high calling which he has espoused (2 Peter 3: 11, 12).

2. He Must Confess Christ as the All-sufficient Savior.—No duty is made plainer in God's Word. "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven." "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Here faith and confession are the prominent factors. Moreover, not to confess is, practically, to deny. Even your best friends wait for your confession before they place you confidently among his followers. Your loyalty to Christ should prompt you to an ample confession. A soldier of the army wears the uniform and follows his leader. It is a confession of his allegiance. How does the Christian show his loyalty (2 Tim. 2: 3-5)?

3. He Must Show Love and Gratitude.—Has the Lord cleansed you from sin's leprosy? Then return to give him thanks. Has he opened your blind eyes? Then follow him in the way. Have you touched the hem of his garment? Then come and confess that healing virtue has been received (Col. 3: 15).

HOME AND FAMILY

The Sun Is Always Shining.

By William Eben Schultz.

When you go to gettin' troubled, an' the world seems upside down,
When misfortune stares upon you with an awful-lookin' frown,
There's a cheerfulness in knowin', when it's dark for me an' you,
That the sun is always shinin', and the sky is always blue.

When the clouds appear the thickest, an' the daylight seems withdrawn,
An' the hopeful joy o' livin' seems to be entirely gone,
Just remember, when the darkest, just a little distance through,
That the sun is always shinin', an', the sky is always blue.

So there ain't no use in frettin' at the hardships that we meet,
For the birds are still a-singin' an' the flowers are just as sweet;
An' behind the deepest shadow there's a heap o' promise, too,
For the sun is always shinin', and the sky is always blue.

An Old-Time Kitchen.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

GRANDMOTHER'S kitchen was the assembly-room for the entire family. It had a distinctive charm of its own. There were always folks there,—women talking and children playing in comfort. Only the girls have any regard for grandmother's parlor, with its old-fashioned cane-bottomed chairs and rag-carpet. The parlor was always clean, and the wooden shutters were always closed, and so the gay stripes in the rag carpet never faded, the musty smell was ever prevalent. The Bible on the table was never used unless, on very memorable occasions, the children were permitted to take it to the kitchen, and look at the pictures. One other book lay in state on top of the Bible,—"Pilgrim's Progress." We never saw quite as much of these two books as we really wanted to, and yet grandmother permitted us to look at them occasionally.

When there was company, on Sunday, the parlor was sometimes opened and the people sat there part of the time. But the kitchen was so much pleasanter that, almost automatically, the women gravitated towards its hospitable fireplace and the men went out to the barn and sat down on the sunny side, to talk over matters in which they were interested.

The open fireplace was called the "firecorner." In the summer a wood-stove was placed in it and the cooking was done on the wood-stove. Grandmother had skillets or frying-pans on legs, for use when there was a wood-fire in the chimney corner. Her oven was built of brick, and twice a week she filled it with bread, pies and cakes. She would build a fire in the oven and close the door, then, when the fire was burnt down, the coals were raked to the sides of the oven and the center was left clean and hot. That was the psychological moment to put in the bread. Half an hour later the pies and cake were put in. Everything was taken out when it was "done." Grandmother knew when to open the oven door for the bread, for the coffee cakes, for the pies. She knew instinctively, just as she knew how much soda and sour milk to use, without measuring.

The kitchen floor was of ash boards and usually scrubbed white and clean. The kitchen table was always white and clean. We had no oil-cloth covering in those days. The boiled dinners of corned beef and vegetables were a delight, her doughnuts were sweet and portly. She made them by the basketful,—delicious,—but indigestible for the dyspeptic. Grandmother never thought of dyspepsia. She made things to taste good. This end attained, her responsibility ended. Have you any of her "receipts"? Sometimes she left out the "p" in copying them. She always gave her neighbors credit for all she got of them. Here are "Aunt Manda's cookies," "Mrs. Adams' sunshine cake," and a long list of others.

When Abraham dwelt in a tent, three men came to see him. Then Abraham did just what the modern husband does,—he hastened into the tent unto Sarah, his wife, saying, "Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth." In imagination we can see the cakes as they were baked or prepared in primitive fashion, and the meat that was brought and set before the strangers. Today the advent of strangers or unexpected company creates more of a stir or consternation in the household than it did in our grandmother's day. She was calm and self-possessed, sure of her larder. There was enough and to spare for unexpected visitors, and no one went away from her door feeling that he had come at the wrong time, or that a warm welcome had been withheld. Perhaps the virtuous woman of old, who rose while it was night to set about her work and give "meat to her household and a portion to her maidens," had an easier time of it than the modern housekeeper. True, she and her servants must draw water from the well and carry it some distance; they had to grind by hand the meal for the cakes, and kill and dress the kid to be seethed in the pot, but on that very account the first sources of food were under her own control and she was mistress of the situation.

Grandmother had a copper kettle in which preserves and pickles were made. Sometimes she used alum and grape leaves to "green" her pickles. Her preserves were marvels of rich, juicy fruit,—candied, in some way, so that the taste of them lingers yet. Pound for pound was her rule in making preserves, and they kept. She had but little patience in teaching her daughters to cook. When one asked her how this or that was done she invariably replied, "I learned to cook by practice, and by watching my mother." She threw together yeast, flour and mashed potatoes with ease and speed that was the despair of the watcher, and then stirred it with a big wooden spoon. "How long do you beat it?" I asked. Grandmother looked scornfully at me as she said, "There is no set time; I can tell from the feeling of the batter when it is just right." And so it was about everything else,—one must know by experience how much flour to mix in the bread and how long it must rise. Grandmother had no rules to help the ignorant and inexperienced.

Times have changed since we ate cookies in our grandmother's kitchen. But the preparation of food is still the main business of housekeeping; its labor the one great labor of the place; its cost the main expense. In building, the conveniences for cooking require a large outlay of money in kitchen, dining-room, pantry and cellar. The wife and mother still has, for her main duty, the management of the food supply,—even if she is not the principal worker. Nine-tenths of our women do their own work, and so, in a different way, they solve the same problems that puzzled our grandmothers. In ages gone by a home was defined as "a place to feed the young." Wise temperance workers know how many men drink because they are not properly fed; and women, too, consume tea and coffee to make up in stimulants for the lack of nutrition about which they know nothing. It is a duty which every young wife owes to her family, to know how to cook and see to it that the food supply for her family is ample, nutritious and well-cooked.

Keeping the Soul Clean.

BY CARRIE E. RININGER.

As this is the time of the year when we are all busy cleaning house, the thought came to me that if we would all make as great an effort, and put as much energy into the cleaning of our souls and hearts as we do into the cleaning of our houses, how busy we would be praying to God "to wash us with the precious blood of Jesus, that cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1: 7).

First of all we begin to clean the inside of our house, which corresponds well with the teaching of our Blessed Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, if we apply it to our spiritual cleansing.

Jesus reproved the Pharisees for "making clean the outside of the cup and platter, while within it was full of extortion and excess." Christ said, "Cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also" (Matt. 23: 25, 26).

But let us not wait for the spiritual cleansing until housecleaning time. Each day we have cleaning to do in the house; so, also, do we have a thorough cleaning to do for our souls. Perhaps it would be well to search the very depth of our hearts, once in a while. Perchance we may find, in some nook or corner, a spot of uncleanness, which we, perhaps, had not found in our daily search.

Isa. 1: 16 says, "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes." Psa. 24: 4, 5 reads, "He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart. . . . He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

Perhaps we have lost some of our brightness, and the light within us does not shine as brightly as it used to do. If so, we want to use more oil of kindness, in order to polish the love within us, so that it will shine more brightly before the world. (See Matt. 5: 16.) Let us pray as David did, "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me" (Psa. 51: 10).

All are acquainted with what we call the "Saturday work." At that time we make a special cleansing and preparation for Sunday. Why? Well, maybe some one will come to visit us, and we want to have our house clean and tidy. Often we do not know if any one will come or not, but we want to be ready. You say, "There is no time to do such work after the visitors come."

Now, that sounds very much like the warning given in Matt. 24: 44, "Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

I wish that we might be ready, so that we could say as did Peter: "I am ready to go with thee" (Luke 22: 33), yet how many of us find it necessary to make a special preparation and cleansing of our souls, every Saturday, for fear the Son of man might come on Sunday! You don't know at what hour he may come. He may come to you on the Sabbath day, so, if you are not ready when he comes, it will be too late to prepare. Let us, then, prepare every day for the next, that we may be found ready when our Heavenly Guest comes to visit us.

A Japanese View.

THE following is too good to be passed by, and should be passed on:

An officer from Japan visiting America, one day, while looking about a big city, saw a man stop a milk wagon.

"Is he going to arrest the man?" he asked.

"No," was the answer; "he must see that the milk sold by this man is pure, with no water or chalk mixed with it."

"Would chalk or water poison the milk?"

"No; but people want pure milk if they pay for it."

Passing a whiskey saloon, a man staggered out, struck his head against a lamp-post, and fell to the sidewalk.

"What is the matter with that man?"

"He is full of bad whiskey."

"Is it poison?"

"Yes; a deadly poison," was the answer.

"Do you watch the selling of whiskey as you do the milk?" asked the Japanese.

"No."

At the market they found a man looking at the meat to see if it was healthy.

"I can't understand your country," said the Japanese. "You watch the meat and the milk, and let men sell whiskey as much as they please."

In this age of Christian civilization one would hardly expect to learn of so many flagrant cases of cruelty to the dumb creation, seeing that Holy Writ declares: "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast." Much commendable reform work has already been done by the "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals," and kindred societies have also been of great service. As long, however, as fashion decrees that the plumage of birds must be worn on the headgear of society ladies, the slaughter of our feathered friends will continue unchecked. To gratify the desire for a vain display, millions of birds are sacrificed each year. In many cases the young birds are left in the nest, to perish from hunger and neglect. Surely, this is not becoming a Christian nation!

ANNUAL MEETING NOTES.

The time has come for another Annual Meeting, and this gives occasion for the Conference Notes for the year 1911. It would be an easy matter to say that we had the pleasure of attending the General Conference of the Brethren church, held at St. Joseph, Mo., that there was much business before the meeting, and that everything passed off as pleasantly as could have been expected. But our people expect more than this, and we shall try to give them more.

In company with several from the office, including Bro. R. E. Arnold, Business Manager, we left Elgin at 4 P. M. on Tuesday, May 30. This was Memorial Day,—a holiday when all business houses and factories were closed, though most of the people seemed to be on the move.

Of course, our own office was closed for the day, and we regret that no one was at the House to receive those who, on the way to Conference, came out from Chicago to take a look at the House and see things in operation. In conformity with the general rule for business establishments, we close on national holidays.

A pleasant run, by trolley line, found our company at Aurora, twenty miles to the south, where we were joined by Bro. Galen B. Royer and Sister J. M. Blough, of India. Bro. P. R. Keltner and wife were also added to the company. Here we entered one of the best trains on the C. B. & Q. Railway, which makes fast time to St. Joseph. On this train we found Brethren D. L. Miller, H. C. Early, J. Edson Ulery, Frank Kreider, Jas. Murray and others.

The run to St. Joseph, during the night, was very pleasant, and this in spite of the heavy rain and electric storm through which we passed. Modern conveniences make traveling almost charming, and it is astonishing how many people keep on the move. While accidents will now and then occur, still statistics show that one is practically as safe on the moving train as about his business at home.

What we could see of Illinois, before it grew dark, showed nature at her best. We have never had a more promising spring. Most people never knew corn to grow so fast. The trees are in full foliage, the meadows are green, the grainfields are giving promise of a heavy crop, and everything seems promising for an abundant yield of all the products of the soil.

About midnight we crossed the Mississippi River, at Quincy, Ill. And, by the way, this was not the first time for us in this delightful city. A part of our early history, during war times, is connected with the place. Then, as we crossed the "Father of Waters," we recalled the fact that in various ways, and for different purposes, we have passed this wonderful river not less than fifty times.

We also recalled that, while gliding along on a swiftly-moving train, we passed over practically the same route we once traveled as a barefoot boy at the age of fifteen years. The country was then disturbed by the contending armies. We were fleeing from war scenes, and the conditions were anything but pleasant.

So, as one travels he will think and compare the past with the present. Wonderful changes have come over the country. Missouri is once more the land of peace, the country of prosperity and a State of marvelous possibilities.

Wednesday, May 31.

As the rising sun ushers in Wednesday, May 31, we notice the well-cultivated fields, splendid farm improvements, the numerous orchards, growing crops, the herds of cattle and the many thriving cities, towns and villages. All of these indicate an industrious people and a prosperous section of this great country of ours.

It was nearly 7:30 when we pulled into St. Joseph, the city selected for the Conference. We observed that the streets had been washed clean by the heavy rain that fell the evening before. It is said to have been the heaviest downpour known for years,—one and a half inches of water having been precipitated.

On reaching the Auditorium, we found that a number of members had already arrived, many of them being members of the Standing Committee. The people continued to come during the day and by evening there were nearly 300 members from a distance in the city—an unusually large number for this stage of the meeting. The day was spent securing lodging and getting settled down for the Conference week.

We were glad to see the members of the Standing Committee coming early enough to secure lodging, and get a good rest before the time set to begin work. This is a feature of our Conference work that does not always receive the consideration that it should. Men can do their best work only when at their best.

St. Joseph is a city of considerable importance, as a railroad center and manufacturing point. It is also noted for its packing houses and wholesale establishments. In a general way the city is well laid out, and stretches for several miles up and down the eastern bank of the Missouri River.

As a matter of history the place dates back to 1826, when a Frenchman from St. Louis came up the river, landed at this point, took up a claim, and a few years later opened up a trading post among the Indians. St. Joseph became the terminus of the first railroad built to the Missouri River and, finally the headquarters of what was known, in the fifties and sixties, as the "Pony Express," an express system about which a whole volume might be written.

Here was also the outfitting point for those who ventured across the plains in 1849, and later, in the search of gold. The place, at this time, claims a population of 100,000, has an abundance of wealth and a very enterprising class of people. It is becoming somewhat of a convention city, and for that reason suitable buildings have been erected, adapted to a variety of meetings and entertainments.

The membership of the Brethren church is not large in the city, numbering, all told, less than two hundred, and these are in two congregations, one known as the North St. Joseph and the other as the South St. Joseph congregations. Both of them may be considered as mission points.

The large Auditorium, in which the Conference is held, is at the edge of the wholesale section of the city, and a few miles from the North St. Joseph church,—the nearest point at which regular preaching services are held. But, so far as our members are concerned, they are scattered all over the city.

The Auditorium is well suited for the Conference, and will easily seat 6,000 people. The building, however, besides the large assembly room, contains a number of side-rooms, one of which is set apart for the Standing Committee. One large room, in the basement, is filled with neatly-arranged tables, and here meals are served on the cafeteria plan. Another room is fitted up with lunch counters. These departments are under the management of Brethren M. R. Murray and C. S. Garber, and they know how to supply the needs of the physical man.

In the same building, near the entrance, may be found the Brethren Publishing House office, where we meet hundreds of our patrons, and where no small amount of business is transacted. We are told by those in charge that we never had a better location at the Annual Meeting for our business.

Running along the whole of one side of the Auditorium is a hall, fully twenty feet wide. Here the people collect before entering the assembly room, and here hundreds of them linger and greet friends. Many hours are whiled away in this hall by those who wish to do some visiting during the Conference.

In the Auditorium the large stage has been fitted up for the Standing Committee and others, entitled to platform privileges. The delegates will be seated in front, and a little below. The room is oblong, and should seat, as already stated, thousands of people. From the central part of the room the seats recede,—one tier rising above the other,—giving the whole interior of the building the appearance of an amphitheater. The entire building is lighted by electricity and is said to be fireproof.

The well-paved street in front of the building has been condemned to traffic. A part of it has been covered with canvas, and here hundreds of those in attendance can find plenty of room, shielded from the rays of the sun.

We found Bro. J. S. Kline, Foreman of the Committee of Arrangements, busy with his assistants, assigning lodging. They were kept busy most of the day. Everybody, of course, desired lodging close to the Auditorium, and those coming earlier stand the best chance. Some engage their lodging in advance, while the majority wait until they reach the grounds. Among these there are always a number who start out and hunt lodging for themselves. This, at times, confuses the work of the Lodging Committee, but they are patient, and in the end all seems to work out well.

No services were held during the day. Those coming in advance were glad for the privilege of visiting with friends, and the hours thus whiled away, proved not only enjoyable but helpful spiritually. The initial service for the Conference week was held in the Auditorium at 7:45 P. M., when about 300, principally members from a distance, assembled to listen to an address by Bro. D. L. Miller on the "Duties, Responsibilities and Value of the Standing Committee."

He had an unusual audience, for the reason that most of the members of the Standing Committee were present, prepared to hear what might be said about them, their work and their responsibilities.

The speaker started out by giving a brief history of the Standing Committee, showing that it was a body that had come into existence as a matter of seeming necessity, and had grown from seven to the present number of fifty-two. The duties were discussed, and the responsibilities and value of the body fully emphasized. This was followed by some suggestions. He would have all committees to churches, appointed by the Standing Committee, report to the Committee of the following year. He would have at least part of the Committee hold over two or three years, so as to avoid having a new committee each year.

The talk was well received, and proved helpful, in a measure, to each member of the Standing Committee present. Bro. Miller is likely to weave the best parts of the talk into an article for the MESSENGER.

Thus ended our first day of the present Conference session at St. Joseph, and an ideal day it was. One could not wish for more pleasant weather.

Thursday, June 1.

Thursday morning, June 1, was the day set for the Standing Committee to meet and organize. Several of the members did not reach the city until near the appointed hour, and a few were a little late. With the retiring officers, Brethren H. C. Early, Galen B. Royer and J. W. Lear in charge, the Committee was called together at eight o'clock. The devotional services were conducted by Bro. D. L. Miller. His remarks and prayer for the occasion were quite impressive.

The first matter acted on was to extend to Bro. J. K. Miller the courtesy of the deliberations in the Standing Committee room, awaiting the action of the open Conference regarding the dividing of Eastern Pennsylvania. Bro. Miller represents the new District.

The examining of the members of the Committee was then taken up, it being the rule that the body in session has the power of passing on its own membership. Each member is required to subscribe to what is required of the regular delegates from local churches.

The roll call showed nearly all the State Districts represented, there being forty-nine out of fifty-two members present. Since the new ruling, in regard to Districts paying up their Annual Meeting apportionment, is now in force, it became necessary to look into the situation. The inquiry developed considerable interest. It was found that fully a half dozen Districts were delinquent, but as the representatives of such Districts volunteered to see that the accounts should be settled, all were permitted to serve.

The next business was to ballot for the officers for the Conference, it being the rule that all ballots must be read openly and that, in order to be elected, the one chosen must receive the majority of all the votes cast. The first ballot resulted in the choice of Bro. D. M. Garver, of Ohio, for Moderator. This is his second term, he having served in the same capacity at the Harrisonburg, Va., Conference.

On the second ballot Bro. P. R. Keltner, of Illinois, was elected Reading Clerk. This is not his first experience in this office. It required three ballots to elect the Writing Clerk, and Bro. J. M. Blough, of India, was chosen. This is his first term on the Standing Committee.

For Doorkeeper Bro. Edgar Rothrock, of Nebraska, was selected. Four were nominated for the position, and their qualifications freely discussed before the balloting began. He was chosen on the second ballot.

It required nearly three hours to complete the organization, and get the Committee ready for its important work.

Of the fifty-two elders composing the Committee twenty-four are serving their first term. Of the others, twelve have been on the Committee once before, and several twice. So it will be seen that nearly half of them are new members in the work.

During the day considerable business was disposed of, and the Committee is said to be getting along very nicely. The body is growing larger each year, and this, in a measure, hinders progress to some extent. Should the number continue to increase, by forming new Districts, it may, in time, become almost unwieldy. At least a larger room will be required for its sessions, and the most approved methods will have to be adopted. But all this will take care of itself.

A number of committees were appointed in the afternoon. The Committee on Credentials is composed of Brethren Michael Keller, A. B. Barnhart and I. W. Taylor. For the Committee on Resolutions Brethren J. W. Lear, I. S. Ikenberry and J. C. Miller were named. Brethren Geo. W. Hilton and Galen B. Royer will prepare the letters of greeting.

Bro. S. Z. Sharp takes the place of Bro. A. C. Wieand on the Tract Examining Committee, the time of the latter having expired. Bro. C. M. Wenger, Annual Meeting Treasurer, was reappointed. On the General Mission Board Brethren Galen B. Royer and J. J. Yoder were reappointed for a term of three years.

Bro. P. R. Keltner continues on the MESSENGER Advisory Committee. To take the place of Bro. A. L. Clair, deceased, on the Auditing Committee, Bro. P. F. Eckerle was appointed. Bro. C. W. Lahman is retained as a member of the Board of Trustees for the Brethren Hospital. The General Secretary of the Committee of Arrangements for Annual Meeting, Bro. J. L. Cunningham, is continued. On the Educational Board Bro. Otho Winger was appointed, while Bro. L. T. Holsinger will serve another term. Bro. J. W. Lear is retained as a member of the Temperance Committee. On the Railroad Committee Bro. W. M. Howe takes the place of Bro. E. W. Stoner.

While the Standing Committee was engaged in its work, in its own private quarters, a number of services were held in the Assembly Hall, as the Auditorium is sometimes called. There were two services in the forenoon and two in the afternoon.

Bro. C. B. Smith delivered a well-prepared address on "Sound Doctrine," and Bro. D. L. Mohler one on "Conformity to Christ and the Church." At 3 P. M. Bro. B. F. Heckman entertained an appreciative audience on "Soul Winning," a subject that he handled with skill and force.

At eight in the evening Bro. E. B. Hoff, instead of Bro. W. M. Howe, delivered the address on "The Office of the Holy Spirit," Bro. Howe being on duty in the Standing Committee room. The address was listened to with marked interest.

The day closed with only a small increase of the crowd. The attendance at the services consisted almost wholly of members,—such as had come in advance, to enjoy all there is to be had in the meetings. Among those present are brethren and sisters who have not missed a Conference for years. These are the most happy seasons of their lives. Here they meet those of like precious faith, have with them some old-time talks, and return to their homes greatly strengthened.

But the aged pilgrims who love to linger about the Conference altar, are dropping out one by one, and others are taking their places. A number of regular visitors who were present last year are not attending this meeting. Thus the complexion of the assembly changes as time goes by, and to study these changes for a period of forty years is a matter of interest and, at the same time, pathetic.

We notice that the first speakers in the meeting are laboring under some disadvantages, on account of the audiences not being large enough to fill the Assembly Hall. It would be far better if the first meetings of the Conference week could be held in a smaller room. It would be better for the speaker and far more interesting for those in attendance.

The addresses are always good, for they are made by selected men who make special preparation for what they may have to present. Some of the sermons would make splendid reading, and we have been urged to have them reported and published in book form. A careful canvass of the situation has convinced the Publishing House management that the profit would not pay expenses, and for that reason is not further considered.

Around a meeting of this sort one sees and hears things that are at least interesting, and sometimes quite unusual. Years ago some of our people came to the Annual Meeting in covered wagons, camped out on the way, and slept in their wagons during the Conference week. But this has changed.

Now they come over the steam roads, some on trolley lines, while Bro. Manly Deeter, member of the Standing Committee, from Northern Indiana, accompanied by his wife, actually made the trip in his automobile, eight hundred miles, camping out on the way. Will some future editor of the MESSENGER be permitted to chronicle the fact that certain members of the Standing Committee made the trip across several States to Conference on their flying machines? But we do not pretend to be a prophet,—of course not!

We further mention that after the close of Bro. B. F. Heckman's address, mentioned above, a Bible study was held by Bro. E. B. Hoff, in which some good lessons were given on "The Valley of Dry Bones." Bro. Hoff does not take a greater delight in anything than teaching the Scriptures. He was followed by a talk on "The Ideal Church" by Bro. G. M. Lauver.

He emphasized these four points regarding the ideal church:

First—The ideal church is one bought with the Lord's blood and yielded to him.

Second—The ideal church is constantly and eagerly learning from him.

Third—The ideal church is one that is bearing his image perfectly in every member—at least eventually this being their goal of growth.

Fourth—The ideal church is one that radiates heaven's own light in the world—condemning sin.

Bro. Andrew Hutchison preached in the South St. Joseph Mission on Thursday evening, and was listened to with interest. It is surprising how a man of his age and health stands up under the amount of pulpit work he does. He has been in feeble health nearly all his life, yet he keeps right along at revival work.

Bro. J. S. Mohler, of Quinter, Kans., takes pleasure in greeting many of his old friends. He is now past eighty years of age, and for some years it was feared that he might lose his eyesight, but an operation brought relief, and now, by the aid of a reading glass, he does considerable reading.

Friday, June 2.

Friday morning, June 2, gave promise of a pleasant day. The weather, however, became quite warm towards noon, and so remained the balance of the day.

The crowd had perceptibly increased during the night and continued to grow during the entire day. There were quite a number of arrivals early in the forenoon. Possibly, all told, there were a thousand members and their friends in the building by noon.

By twelve o'clock it became known that the Standing Committee had decided on the location of the Conference for 1912. It goes to Southern Pennsylvania. This probably means that the meeting will be held in York. It is also claimed that an effort will be made to have it held in Washington City, D. C. This, of course, would be outside of the range of the District, but either location has special merits.

Northern California made a strong pull for the meeting, offering all the inducements that could be desired, but the long distance intervening between the main body of the membership in the Eastern and Middle States, and the Pacific Coast, was against the western location.

So it will be seen that we must all go east of the Alleghenies, next year, in order to enjoy another Annual Meeting. This taking the Conference east gives us to understand that the meeting of 1912 will be largely attended, and the delegation will be unusually large. We always have large crowds in the East.

The King and His Kingdom.

In the person and life of Jesus irreconcilable contradictions seem to meet. The people were puzzled and wondered. How is it that the carpenter, the son of Mary, has such superhuman wisdom, and teaches with such divine authority? How can David's son be at the same time his Lord? How can Jesus perform such miracles and wonders, and at the same time be a blasphemer, claiming equality with God? How can the Son of God die, and how can the Son of Man rise from the dead? The people stumbled at these things, and Jesus became the rock of offense. And here lies the difficulty, to this day, with the rationalistic schools of philosophy. Reason, seeing Jesus as human only, the Son of Man, and failing to see that he is divine as well as human, the Son of God as well as the Son of Adam, utterly fails in its conception of him.

And the difficulties were only multiplied and became all the more puzzling, when Jesus taught that he was a king. When he knew it would cost him his life, he stated plainly that he was a king, saying, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world." How can such a claim be reconciled with his lowly state? How can this man, then on trial for regal claims, without throne, or court, or sceptre, or kingdom, or legions, be a king? If he is a king, where is his crown, and his court, and his kingdom? Where were his subjects to deliver him? But he was a king, none the less, even King of kings and Lord of lords; and he had a kingdom, with throne and court, though men saw it not, and it would have been easy to have called legions of angels to deliver him.

Jesus was a king by birth. Of the royal house of David, on the human side, and the first-born of the Eternal King on the divine side, he is constituted king by the law of birth. He is a king by inheritance. Being heir of all things, he holds his kingdom as the gift of his Eternal Father. He is crowned by the Sovereign Lord of the whole Creation, Jehovah declaring at the same time that he would give him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. He is King by birthright, King by inheritance, King by the oath and gift of the Lord Almighty, King by conquest, King by purchase. In all history, there never was such a King; and in all the wide, wide, world, there never was such a kingdom.

Napoleon adds beautiful testimony. In a conversation with General Bertrand, when a prisoner upon St. Helena, he demonstrated the Divinity and Sovereignty of Jesus, and showed the difference between the kingdom founded by Christ and all kingdoms founded by men. He said: "I have so inspired multitudes that they would die for me. But, after all, my presence was necessary,—the lightning of my eye, my voice, a word from me. Now that I am at St. Helena, now that I am alone, chained upon this rock, who fights and wins empires for me? Who thinks of me? Who makes efforts in Europe for me? Such is the fate of great men. So it was with Cæsar and Alexander.

"Can you conceive of a dead man making conquests, with an army faithful and entirely devoted to his memory? My armies have forgotten me even while living, as the Carthaginian army forgot Hannibal. Can you conceive of Cæsar from the depths of his mausoleum governing the Roman Empire? But such is the history of the conquest of the Christian church, such is the power of the God of the Christians. Whose is the arm which for eighteen hundred years has protected the church from so many storms which have threatened to engulf it?"

Yes, Jesus is King, with crown and sceptre, and has a kingdom with throne and court. When Pilate asked him, plain and straight, if he was a king, he confessed and denied not. Who, then, will dare deny his royal claims? Who will not bow to the Man, the King, and revere his name forever?

The kingdom of Jesus is founded in the hearts of men. It is not a visible kingdom, as Greece and Rome were, except in its mere outward organization. It comes not by observation; it is the invisible reign and rule of Jesus in the hearts of those that believe. This is the real kingdom of Jesus.

The kingdom, built upon Jesus as the chief corner stone, must stand, "The gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." It must overthrow and survive all other kingdoms. "The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people: but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." And so the kingdom of Jesus is an everlasting kingdom. Though all else fail, it can not fail. Then let us give place to hope, since the kingdom finds place to endure. H. C. E.

The Sweets of Life.

To many the life we live is what we often hear it called, "A vale of tears," in a very practical sense, because the sunshine of gladness so seldom enters into their experiences, and in many cases we feel that "there is a reason." By this we mean that their lives seem so full of disappointments and those things that vex and annoy, that we are made to feel that it could not well be otherwise. And yet it is not in such persons and families that the vale of tears is seen and experienced. The sad hearts and sour lives are often found when we would least expect them, and the sweets of life we have had and enjoyed right under what we would naturally look upon as the most unpromising. And the question comes to us: Why is it so?

Well, first, we know from observation and, perhaps, our own personal experience, that it is so. But we don't always know the "why," because we are not capable of discerning the thoughts of others; second, because there are so very many causes that touch our lives that may bring either bitterness or sweetness.

As these causes do not necessarily affect all alike, we can readily see how easily human experiences may differ, and how, touched by the same causes, some are suffering the pangs of bitterness, while others are basking in the sweet sunshine of real enjoyment.

Not long since, while walking the streets of a beautiful southern city, we came to a large and expensively-built mansion, located in a fine yard, filled with shrubs and trees in a flower-and-fruit-bearing condition. The appearance of the house and grounds showed both wealth and culture on the part of the builder and owner. It seemed to us an ideal paradise and we were made to say: "Surely, happiness must dwell there."

But imagine our surprise when we were told that the head of the house did not, at the time, reside there, but was serving a sentence in the State prison. For the time being the mansion is occupied by a family of caretakers, who are to attend to matters until the time of his imprisonment is ended, when, if he lives, he is expected to return, to enjoy the fruits of his ill-gotten riches. But, granting that his expectations be realized, could it be possible that his living under such conditions would be peaceful and sweet?

As the most beautiful and the sweetest odor-producing flowers do not always grow and bloom in surroundings most lovely, so the most amiable and sweetest lives are not always found in the finest and most attractive places.

In the South, during the moonlight nights, the mocking birds and the nightingales keep up their songs during all the hours of the night. One evening, while sitting on an upper porch, enjoying the soft and odor-laden breeze, our ears were delighted with the charming songs of the birds in the near-by orange groves. As we listened, we were made to say, "O how sweet!" To us their songs were indeed charming and delightful, but in our company was a lady who said: "The nasty things. I hate them because they keep me awake during the night with their continual noise."

During the night, for some cause, we were awakened from our slumbers, and our birds were still out in the trees, trilling their beautiful lays, and we were made to think of our conversation of the evening, and how the sweets of life come to us, and in what they really consist. Do they come from the outside, or do they have their origin from the within? And as the birds continued their songs we mused ourselves into dreamland, and we dreamed dreams that were rich and sweet. Though we slept, and though we dreamed, yet when we awakened the thought came to us: "Was it a dream or was it partly real, because the birds were still singing?"

If we are in Christ Jesus, and our hearts are filled with his love, the sweet song of peace never ceases. We hear and enjoy it when awake, and while sleeping it continues its song in our dreams. Even in our sorrows, our crosses and in our hours of suffering and pain, during the tide of night this nightingale of song continues its sweet messages of love to our souls. The world beautiful may be on the outside, but it is the love of Jesus in the heart that opens our eyes to see it, our ears to hear it, and our souls to feel and enjoy it.

Not all the mines of gold, of silver, or of precious stones; not all the landscapes, mountains, hills, vales and rippling springs; not all the forests with their bloom and their green foliage, changing to scarlet and gold; not all the varied flowers that beautify our lawns, our gardens, our homes and our churches; not all the birds, in their feathered beauty and enrapturing songs, that this world has to show and give, can present to us a sweetness of life that will be satisfying and complete unless we are born into the new life,—are made "new creatures in Christ Jesus." We must be born again before we can ever see the beautiful in the kingdom of God. And it is this seeing that gives to life its sweetness.

It was Satan that cursed and blighted this world of ours, including all of God's creation. All the bitterness, pain and death has followed as a result. All sweetness, joy, peace, happiness, salvation and eternal life came through the atonement of Jesus Christ. Accept his offered salvation, which is to the soul a continual fountain of sweetness. H. B. B.

The Innocent Suffering.

A SISTER sends us a long clipping about the suffering the woman of refinement must endure in cities and towns where the tobacco habit has secured a strong hold on the men and boys. The writer is not a member of the Brethren church. Her article was published in one of the secular papers. She claims to be an indignant mother, and while she tells the truth about what the innocent must suffer on account of the filthy habit of men and boys, her language, as originally given, is a little too unguarded for our columns. She tells how the smokers and chewers defile the sidewalks in the business parts of some towns, and how ladies of refinement and taste, when passing along, must endure the tobacco odor, and walk through the filth. She describes how tobacco users render the postoffice almost unendurable with their smoking, and how they so thoroughly pollute the grocery stores that a woman dreads to go there to make purchases.

Then, to think that one must eat grains, fruits and vegetables that have been defiled with tobacco smoke! Not only so, but she says that in some of the public halls, where creditable men must often go on business, their clothes become so thoroughly saturated with tobacco smoke that they are almost an offense to their own wives and children. Everybody, probably, knows that this, and much more, just as bad, is true. If those who use the weed to excess were the only ones to suffer, it might not be so bad. But this is not the case. The innocent must suffer. They must breathe the air laden with tobacco smoke, endure the tobacco fumes and eat the groceries that are for days exposed to the offensive odor of the tobacco, used by men who loaf around the stores. No wonder that some people become indignant. And, considering these facts, it is not strange that churches should refuse to call to their pulpits men who defile themselves with the weed. They want the influence of their preachers on the other side of the question.

THE idea of several churches, Sunday-schools and Christian Workers' Societies cooperating in the support of a missionary at home or abroad is a good one. But before entering upon such an arrangement, they should consider the matter thoroughly and plan to keep up the support for years. They ought not to support a missionary for a year or two and then go back on their arrangements. Not only so, but they should see that the money, necessary to carry out their part of the contract, is raised promptly and placed where it will be available when needed.

THE WORK IN CHINA.

April 17 our hearts were made glad when two men confessed Christ and were baptized. One of these had been a believer in the Lord Jesus even before the Boxer trouble. Soon after the missionary came in contact with a movement that at night the devil was in the streets. Great terror seized the natives, and the foreigner's life was in danger. This man did not believe the report and for several nights took a stick and went out to watch, thus proving to the people that the story was false. He escaped the Boxers but lost his wife and children. His is a real, living faith in God, the Father, and he tries to tell others the story of redeeming love. The other man is older. His candle will soon be burnt out but, praise God, he has found the Divine light which will guide him on through the valley into the peaceful, happy home, prepared for all who love the Lord. He finds much pleasure in his Bible. Often when his day's duties are done, we can hear him read. Will you pray with us that they may yet be much used of the Lord in leading their people into the kingdom?

There are yet many who do not know what sin is, nor what it is to be forgiven, nor that there is an abundant life of grace for them. One woman said, when told about heaven, "Oh yes, I know, that's for the foreigner, we must go to the temple when we die." Many believe that each country has its own religion and that the religion of China is good enough for the Chinese. Some are still afraid of us and, although they will come into our home, they refuse our tea, believing that the Christian has put something in to make them believe the Jesus doctrine. We need more than your prayers to break up the conservatism of China, we need you. Minerva Metzger.

HOSPITALS FROM A MISSIONARY STANDPOINT.

I have wondered, many times, why the Church of the Brethren does not own and control hospitals. Is it because we have the power, do not have the interest of the people at heart, or that we do not realize the importance of such institutions? I am prone to believe that it is the latter.

An Evident Need.

It has been my misfortune to have to take my own daughter and brother, and many other patients, to hospitals for operations. My brother was taken to a Catholic hospital, where all the influences of that body were around him. They are very careful with the young people left in their charge. Let us remember that this kindness is never forgotten. My daughter I had to take to a hospital where there were no Christian influences at all.

Missionary Opportunities.

The reason I headed this article as I did is, that I believe it is one of the best ways of doing missionary work in our land. There is no time when a person will eat with a greater relish than when he is real hungry. There is no time when a person feels the need of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ more than when he is utterly helpless. There is no time when we are hungering more for consolation than when we have loved ones on beds of affliction. At no time does one appreciate words of consolation and cheer, in regard to the soul's welfare, as when one is in a condition to realize his lost and undone condition.

A Pitiful Plea.

Go with me, if you please, to the hospitals or to the bedside of men and women who are suffering great pain,—especially the men and women that are degraded in sin,—and hear their pitiful plea—calling on God for mercy,—and yet there is no one to point them to the Lamb of God that "taketh away the sin of the world." Then, I believe, you will think as I do. If we could have good hospital nurses and doctors to talk to them, and help them at such times, it would be more far-reaching than discourses from the pulpit.

Influence on Others.

Not only are the patients benefited, but also many others that come to the hospitals to visit the patients. As a rule each patient has friends many to see him. Many times they have to wait for some time before they are allowed to go to the sick room; hence they have to sit in the reception room and wait their turn. There they sit in silence, with sad hearts, their minds fixed on the patients. Their minds are in good condition to receive spiritual food, as many times they will not see nor hear anything to cheer their lonely hearts. When patients are convalescing, they are anxious to see, hear and read. Let us remember that impressions made at such times are lasting.

Value of a Brethren Hospital.

If your wife, your husband, son or daughter were to go to a hospital, how much better you would feel if they could go to a hospital conducted by our own people! How much more free we would feel to go and see them!

I am surely in sympathy with all mission work, but why can we not see the need of mission work right at our own door? Nearly all other churches own and control hospitals. Why? It is not for financial gain, but for the upbuilding of their churches and the promulgation of the cause of Christ.

I have approached different members of the church on this subject, who say they would be glad to help in such an effort if opportunity afforded. I should like to hear from others on this subject. G. E. White, M. D.

DENVER, COLO.

The 28th of this month it will be two months since we are in our new home,—the Colored Industrial Mission Training School for the Negro. We have been kept regularly at work, and are trying to catch up late in the season. We feel pleased to say that the most of our children seem delighted with their life. In this we see the great advantage in being out from the city, for the children that were inclined to be disobedient, now are numbered among the best.

Some of us have felt heartbroken over having lost their grades this spring, but we have done our best to console them, looking forward to a brighter future. There is a wonderful work that can be done here among our people, when some things, that now seem misty, shall have been cleared away.

Nine of our present number are members of the Brethren church. Five of these very often express themselves as being desirous of becoming missionaries in the United States. Being young, they don't know what to think of Africa, but we endeavor to teach them that God wants those for missionaries that can willingly say: "Anywhere, with Jesus, I can safely go." We pray our Heavenly Father that our teachings may not be in vain.

God has certainly blessed us, and we feel humbly grateful to him for all he has done for us through his loyal servants, but we are still, in a measure, in a needy condition.

At this writing we have in our home twenty-nine inmates. We have only eight small rooms in which to accommodate all. In one room we cook, eat and do laundry work. There are from two to nine in the remaining rooms, sleeping. Most of them on the floor, with insufficient bedding. The children have been having the measles,—all at the same time,—since we moved, which has greatly handicapped my mission work, which I feel God wants me to do. We have some malaria if we have to remain in such close quarters, for we have already had strong evidences of summer heat, which makes it very unpleasant with so many in one room. And what is worse than all: we have no place in the home for worship, other than in one of our bedrooms, which does not accommodate one-half of our own number, to say nothing of the visitors.

We are not at all complaining, but we see such a great need for suitable buildings and wish if we can get properly situated. A better time for building up a good negro school in the West will never be found, for daily there is growing an ill-feeling against the mixed schools of Colorado, and a good negro school, conducted by negroes, upon Christian basis, will mean much to our race and for our church. We feel quite sad that there is not room enough for our regular services, and we are earnestly praying for just temporary quarters for the boys, and for a place to do our cooking. Then we could use two of our rooms for a chapel and be once more at home with God. Callie Campbell, Matron.

EXPERIENCES IN CHINA.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." What a Divine message to a sin-sick world! O that all the heavy-laden knew how to find this great rest, this great peace! How all peoples and all nations are seeking this peace, but know so little how to find it!

At a temple, not far from this city, many people have been gathering this week, offering sacrifices for sins and praying their gods to heal their sick. Each one offers a chicken, or, if unable to afford that, a small piece of meat. Hundreds of chickens have been offered. Brethren Crumpacker and Feng were there, preaching to them and selling Gospels. May the good seed sown spring up and grow! At church services, today, Bro. Feng told the people that before Christ came it was of little use to offer sacrifices for sin, but that now he is not pleased with such sacrifices, for Jesus is our Great Sacrifice. We must now believe, trust and follow Jesus.

Yes, the burdens of these people are heavy indeed! Some of the women who come to visit us pour out their troubles to us. A poor woman came the other day, bringing her boy of fourteen and her girl of five years. She said her husband did not like to work, and would not live with them. She said that the boy had to make the living by carrying water. He carried from forty to fifty pails of water a day, which scarcely paid for their food. Their clothes were so ragged that she scarcely knew how to keep them together. The little girl was not big enough to help, and bothered her, so she could not do much work. So her troubles continued. I showed her chart pictures of Christ, and told her much of his life, as we do to all the women who come to visit us. Then I told her how she should pray to the Lord to help her in all her troubles. I gave the little girl some pictures and showed the mother how to amuse her, so she would not bother us so much. These mothers have scarcely any idea how to train children, except by scolding them, and thumping them over the head. I hope she went home with a little peace in her heart.

Yesterday another little woman came and told her sad story. Her husband has died, her second son was a good boy but, while drawing water, had fallen into the well and drowned. Her oldest son, who should be her comfort and support, is a bad boy. He will not listen to anything she says, but curses her and wastes his money by gambling.

As she spoke, the tears rolled down her thin face, and it was enough to touch any one's heart. I tried to point her to the Source of all comfort and gave her some simple advice how to treat her son. I also gave her some exacts to take to her village. I told her that, above all things, she should pray to the Heavenly Father night and morning to make her son a good boy. She asked many questions concerning prayer. She seemed like a drowning person grasping at anything that would save.

All these people know of a Heavenly Father who gives them rain, food, etc., and it is a great point to work from, but they do not know how to worship Him. Their whole conception of him is very vague. China's terrible need, at the present time, is good mothers. Many do all they know, but what do they know? As they themselves say, "We are all stupid and ignorant. We don't know anything. We can not read or write. We cannot earn any money. We can scarcely do our own house work. Many of us are too crippled to walk. The men laugh at us if we go out of our courts."

We pray for the time when they shall have thrown off this bondage of sin, and when their children may be taught in Christian homes.

The Lord is daily hearing your prayers. April 17 Bro. Crumpacker baptized two brethren in a small stream outside the city. Praise his name!

The Lord is still adding his blessing to the boys' school. It was started with two; now six have entered and are doing good work.

Don't forget to pray for us every day, for our difficulties and discouragements are many. But it is all the Lord's work and by working unitedly and steadily, we may build up a mighty church of God in China.

WILLISTON, N. DAK.

Our church met in council May 25. Our elder, Bro. D. F. Landis, had charge. Much business came before the meeting, and was disposed of in a spiritual manner. Bro. O. A. Myer was chosen delegate to District Meeting, with Bro. I. M. Kaufman as alternate. Our love feast is to be held June 10, at 2 P. M., to be followed by a series of meetings, to be conducted by Eld. Isaac Frantz. We are looking forward to these meetings with interest, and pray that God's Word may be preached with power, that the Holy Spirit may work mightily in the hearts of the people of our community, and that souls may be brought into the fold. One dear mother has recently been born into the kingdom by baptism. Our first temperance program was rendered by our young people on the evening of May 21, and was enjoyed by a good audience. A collection of $5.25 was taken. A joint Sunday-school Meeting is to be held at this place July 4. The Ray and Medicine Lake schools are to be with us also to expect our Sunday-school Secretary, Bro. E. S. Petry, of Berthold, N. Dak., to be with us. Our cottage prayer meetings still continue each week. Etta Myer.

POMONA, CALIFORNIA.

Sunday, May 21, was a joyful day for the members and friends of this congregation. Our new house of worship was completed and ready to dedicate. Eld. J. W. Cline had charge of the exercises of the day. An invocation was offered by our elder, Bro. S. E. Yundt. We had a reading of Scripture by Eld. J. P. Dickey, of Lordsburg. After prayer by Eld. J. P. Dickey, of Lordsburg, Eld. Geo. F. Chemberlen, of Covina, delivered an inspiring sermon from Gen. 28: 17, "This is none other but the house of God." The closing prayer was offered by Eld. H. R. Taylor, of Pasadena. At 6:45 Bro. E. R. Yundt conducted an interesting Christian Workers' Meeting. Subject, "The Mission of New Churches." This was followed by an able discourse by Eld. J. P. Dickey, of Lordsburg, from Rom. 1: 16,—the saving power of the Gospel. We feel very grateful for the report our building committee was able to give,—that funds are available to pay all bills. QUINTER, KANSAS.

The little band of members of the West Big Creek Mission enjoyed a feast of good things May 20 and 21, when their love feast and children's meeting were held. The spiritual uplift was great to us all, and especially to the new members who had never communed before. Eld. J. W. Jarboe, of Quinter, Kans., led the communion services, assisted by Bro. D. A. Crist, Henry Ward and T. P. Oxley, also of Quinter.

About thirty members from the home church were present and helped to encourage the work here at this place. Fifty-two members were at the tables of the Lord, and it was quite an impressive scene to the large crowd who never saw this ordinance observed in the house of the Lord before. Professors and nonprofessors were alike interested, and our prayer is that what they looked upon will be the means of causing them to study the Scriptures more closely, in order to obtain a better knowledge, and to be led into the true light. We trust that in due time they will cast their lot with us.

At the children's meeting Brethren J. W. Jarboe, T. P. Oxley, A. K. Trimmer and Sister Mary Eller gave the children excellent talks and illustrations. Following this our presiding elder, Bro. D. A. Crist, gave us a strong sermon on the subject of "Light."

The outlook is very promising for the West Big Creek Mission. The writer is the present pastor and is alone. There is Sunday-school and preaching every Sunday, and Christian Workers' Meeting every other Sunday night. A good interest is taken in the study of the Book of Ephesians at our midweek Bible class. Pray for the work and the workers! The field is ready to harvest, but where are the reapers? Come over and help us! Geo. R. Eller.

Grainfield, Kans., May 29.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

This church convened in council May 26. Considerable business came before the meeting, but all was disposed of satisfactorily. Seventeen letters were granted and one was received. Christian Worker officers were elected. Bro. Roy Lehmer is our president. At the Santa Fé Mission Sister Anna Bashor is the president. Bro. H. J. Smith is to locate on Boyle Heights, thus more fully to take charge of the Mission at that place. He will select Christian Worker officers for that place. Bro. I. G. Cripe was elected as our chorister, as Sister Banbury is leaving for her former home in the East. Bro. D. W. Crist will represent us at Annual Meeting. Since our last report three have been added to the church by confession and baptism. Bro. Harvey Snell, District Sunday-school Secretary, visited our school last Sunday morning, and also preached a very inspiring missionary sermon for us. In the evening our union Christian Workers' Meeting was held at this place. A very interesting program was rendered by the Christian Workers, and the subjects were well discussed. On Friday evening, the 19th, the closing exercises of the Berean Bible School were given in the church. Thus closed another successful school year for those in attendance. The opening of next year's school will be Oct 2. Eva M. Frantz.

Annual Meeting Notes.

Services in the Assembly Hall began at 9 A. M. Bro. A. G. Crosswhite gave the first address, having for his subject, "The Simple Life." His address was full of practical truths, and was well received.

After an interval of thirty minutes, he was followed by Bro. Chas. M. Yearout on "The New Testament Conditions of Pardon." Without a Bible he readily quoted the Scriptures needed, and showed, by his manner of presenting his points, that he has a clear understanding of the conditions of pardon as set forth in the New Testament.

There was an intermission between 11:30 A. M. and 3 P. M. that enabled the visitors to secure a good meal and to seek the cooler places around the building and enjoy a good breathing spell. Everybody had something to say about the oppressive heat. St. Joseph seemed to be in the center of a great heat wave, and had it not been for a stiff breeze that continued the whole of the afternoon, there would have been much suffering.

Some enterprising merchants, seeing an excellent opportunity to do some advertising, had armfuls of fans, containing their advertisements, distributed throughout the building.

In the absence of Bro. T. S. Moherman, who was to have delivered an address at 3 P. M., Bro. Geo. W. Flory was pressed into service, and preached a strong sermon on "The Narrow Way." In spite of the heat he had the largest audience that had yet gathered in the Assembly Hall.

Following this discourse Bro. B. F. Heckman conducted a Bible study. It has been arranged to give considerable attention to this line of work at this meeting.

At 8 P. M. a large audience gathered to hear Bro. Galen B. Royer's address on "The Best of Life." His discourse was a good one, and, like the sermons so far delivered, was very favorably spoken of. He was listened to by fully one thousand people.

A service was held at the South St. Joseph Mission, conducted by Bro. J. H. Cassady, of Johnstown, Pa. There were probably other meetings that did not come to our notice.

Quite a number of visitors arrived on the evening trains. One of the trains, containing a number of members en route for St. Joseph, was detained a few hours on account of the wrecking of a freight train.

The "Boy Scouts" were kept busy conducting visitors to their lodging places, and carrying valises for the women. They are a lively set of boys, and take pride in their work. They earned a good many dimes, and it is to be hoped that none of the visitors failed to show the necessary appreciation for the help received.

The Standing Committee reported progress in its work and most commendable harmony. With so large a body it is found difficult to move fast, and it has been suggested that it might be well to have the Committee convene and organize on Tuesday before the beginning of the Conference instead of Thursday.

It has also been suggested that when it comes to preparing answers to queries it might be well to form a number of sub-committees, and divide up the work among them. This plan would doubtless facilitate business.

In the start the Committee decided on three sessions a day,—one in the forenoon, the second in the afternoon, and a third session in the evening, closing at nine o'clock. The number of hours for each session was settled at the start.

The day closed with a good deal of interest, and all felt that we have some very important matters for consideration, and that good judgment must be exercised in handling and disposing of some of the questions presented for consideration.

Saturday, June 3.

Many visitors came during the night, and early in the day they came by the train loads. They kept coming all day, and by evening the number present was variously estimated from five to twelve thousand. The latter figure, we are certain, is too high, while the former may possibly be too low.

At any rate, there were enough present to keep up a jam in the large crowds. There were people everywhere. The only places of retreat were under the large canvas stretched over the street in front of the Auditorium, or on the lawn of the courthouse near by.

At times nearly a thousand people would gather on this lawn, or be seated on the curbing. There was a great lack of seats, and standing for hours on the pavement proved very tiresome indeed. The providing of some seats, in case of extremely hot weather, had not been foreseen.

So far as we could see, the visitors were well cared for in the dining departments. In the basement, as already referred to, a very large room was fitted up and conducted on the cafeteria plan. Here each one could select what suited his taste, eat at his leisure, and pay for what he had made choice of.

This way of feeding people, at a large meeting like this, is very satisfactory, especially where there is such a large assortment of eating places to select from.

Then we noticed that the class of eatables provided was suited to the kind of weather we experienced. There was considerable fruit, and that is what people need when spending a day at a meeting of this kind.

The Lodging Committee had its hands full, placing the visitors as fast as they came. In fact, there were times when they could not dispose of them as fast as they arrived. The Boy Scouts were also kept on the go, but they enjoyed their part of the work.

A postoffice was established in the corridor. This proved quite a convenience, and was well patronized.

The Committee on Credentials also opened their department and gave the delegates an opportunity to register and be prepared for the work of the Conference on Tuesday. This was wise upon the part of the Committee.

The Standing Committee spent nearly the entire day on the queries from the churches. A number of them came to the meeting without answers, and for these the Committee is required to provide answers.

But the docket was fully cleared, and then the appointing of committees to churches was taken up. This always means a lot of hard and perplexing work. There is no part of the duties assigned to the Standing Committee that is more undesirable than this.

Services in the Auditorium began at 8 A. M., with a meeting of the Historical Society. There were addresses by Bro. J. J. Scrogum, of Southern Illinois, and G. N. Falkenstein, of Pennsylvania. The latter has given a great deal of attention to the early history of the Brethren, and his talk, full of interest, was along this line.

Bro. J. J. Yoder, member of the General Mission Board, then gave one of his characteristic addresses on "The Mission of the Brethren Church." He had a good hearing in spite of the heat in the Assembly Hall.

The District Mission Board had a meeting at 2 P. M., and one hour later Bro. D. Webster Kurtz, of Philadelphia, delivered a strong address on "Modern Skepticism." Bro. T. T. Myers was to have treated the subject, but as he could not be present, Bro. Kurtz was pressed into service. His speech was scholarly and forcible.

A Bible reading, conducted by Bro. J. G. Royer, and a strong sermon by Bro. I. B. Trout on "Conversion and Regeneration" completed the service of the day. Bro. Trout was at his best, had an audience of 3,000 people, and could be heard all over the building. It is not often that we have the doctrine of conversion and regeneration so clearly and so forcibly stated.

None of the other services during the day were so fully attended as they should have been. On account of the hot weather most of the people preferred to seek cooler quarters. This was very much against the spirit and usefulness of the meetings.

A Bible study and evangelistic work were taken up in the Lyceum Auditorium at 9 A. M. and continued during the day. These services were well attended, and a great interest was taken in the work done. By means of electric fans the room was kept cool, and those in attendance found it a most inviting place to study the Bible, and to listen to the splendid addresses given by the brethren appointed to conduct the different departments.

It would be difficult to construct a more convenient, and a more delightful room for public gatherings. All of our colleges would be glad to have such a room for special meetings.

This was probably the warmest Saturday ever seen at an Annual Meeting. With a shady park near, it would have been impossible to keep enough people in the Auditorium to make up a good congregation. The strong, steady breeze made it possible for the visitors to endure the heat, and get some solid comfort out of the situation.

Sunday, June 4.

Sunday is always the big day at the Conference, and it is well that it is that way. It should be a regular Pentecostal Day, blessed with Pentecostal showers. We have more of these showers of grace than most people think. It so happens, however, that some come to Conference unprepared to have the Lord open their hearts, and for that reason they fail to receive the blessing.

At an early hour a prayer meeting was held in one of the arcades of the Auditorium. Here a number met to pray and speak, and prepare for the spiritual work of the day.

The first regular service in the Assembly Hall was the Sunday-school Meeting, presided over by Bro. D. H. Zigler. Bro. I. B. Trout was the first speaker, and had for his subject, "The Lesson Material." On account of the great heat, he removed his coat and went into his subject in real earnest. There were probably 3,500 people in the audience, and about one-third of the men were in their shirt sleeves.

Bro. Trout was followed by Bro. Wm. M. Howe, who, in his pointed way, treated the lesson as it should apply in everyday life. Really, that is the only way a Bible lesson should apply.

After a short prayer and a song, and without any intermission whatever, Bro. J. W. Lear began his address on "A Consecrated and Holy Life." He held that it is not only possible to live a consecrated and holy life, but that it is the duty of every fully-developed Christian to so do.

Instead of denying the possibility of complete holiness, consecration and sanctification, he would insist on striving for such a high attainment, but to do so along New Testament lines. He would have every baptized believer make a full surrender, obey God in all things, get rid of all sinful ways, and then strive for perfection, for sanctification, and for the highest possible attainments in holiness.

The position taken may not be in keeping with the way of some of our own people, who now and then preach against perfection and complete sanctification, but it is in keeping with the higher New Testament ideals, and needs to be still further expounded, explained, simplified, emphasized and urged upon those capable of the higher developments.

There were a number of services at the Lyceum, beginning at 9 A. M., and continuing until late in the evening. These consisted of lessons on prayer, intermediate Sunday-school work and evangelistic addresses.

The morning sermon by Bro. I. N. H. Beahm is said to have been unusually interesting and helpful.

On the program for the day, in addition to Bro. Beahm, were Brethren James M. Moore, G. M. Lauver, Isaac Frantz, E. B. Hoff and Chas. D. Bonsack. The nicely-ventilated room was packed, and the day proved a most enjoyable one for those in attendance.

At the Tootle Auditorium a primary Sunday-school was announced, with Sister Lavina Shoemaker in charge. Here were found the same conveniences and attractions mentioned for the Lyceum.

We should like to say more in detail about the services at all these points, but we found it a physical impossibility to be at all these places at the same time, and especially when there are so many services, one following directly after the other.

There were services at both of the Brethren churches in the city, morning and evening. Besides these appointments our ministers were asked to fill nearly twenty of the city pulpits. It was arranged for a number of them to preach both morning and evening. For consideration at the proper time, some of these ministers have asked us to suggest that ministers be requested to deliver only one address on Sunday at our future Annual Meetings. This would divide up the work better, and give all of them an opportunity of hearing others. We believe the suggestion to be a good one, and take pleasure in passing it on.

We found the Committee of Arrangements fully alive to the needs of the occasion, and always willing to do their utmost to accommodate each and every visitor.

Sunday had been announced as fast day, but those in charge of the eating departments say that, so far as they could see, there was plenty of feasting, but very little fasting. Some, however, did fast,—a few the entire day, and others omitted the noon meal only. It is to be regretted, however, that delegates and others will vote in favor of setting apart a day for fasting and prayer and then fail to observe it.

It may be well to arouse more sentiment in favor of fasting. Had there been more abstaining from food, and more hours devoted to prayer, it might have been possible to endure the heat better.

A number of visitors arrived during the early part of the day, and were assigned lodging. All told, there were probably seven or eight thousand visitors in the city. But it was impossible to collect all of them at any one point. They divided up between the three auditoriums and the city churches, and for hours hundreds of them remained in the court-house yard, enjoying the shade trees and the green grass.

At 2 P. M. a large audience gathered in the Assembly Hall to listen to Bro. W. J. Swigart's instructive talk on "Peace." This able address was one of unusual length for a Conference Meeting, but it was full of telling points, and was listened to with marked interest.

Bro. H. C. Early was to have followed at once with his talk, "The Relation of the Home to the Church," but owing to the oppressive heat it was deemed best to take a brief recess.

At 3:30, Bro. Early favored the audience with his eloquent address. It is regarded by those who heard him as the best talk he ever gave at Conference, and has been widely commented on.

In the evening a wide-awake Christian Workers' Meeting was presided over by Bro. B. F. Heckman. A number of good talks were given by the different speakers.

An interesting address by Bro. John Heckman, on "Adorning the Doctrine," closed the preaching services for Sunday.

Monday, June 5.

Monday was a day of great activity, and much more than ordinary interest. Thousands of visitors were present at an early hour and the number was increased by every incoming train.

At 8 A. M. the newly-appointed missionaries came before the Standing Committee for approval. These consecrated workers were introduced by Bro. D. L. Miller. Two of them go to Sweden, two to France, and the others will go to China and India. The presentation of the missionaries was very impressive. No finer band of workers was ever sent out by the church. Still more, however, are needed, and four of the number are in prospect.

At 9 o'clock the Educational Meeting convened in the Assembly Hall with Bro. A. G. Crosswhite, a member of the General Educational Board, in the chair. About 3,000 people were present. Splendid addresses were given by the following speakers: Bro. W. J. Swigart, of Huntingdon, Pa., Bro. M. W. Emmert, of Mount Morris, Ill., Bro. Otho Winger, of North Manchester, Ind., and Bro. T. S. Moherman, of Daleville, Va.

They discussed the scope of our school work, the education of our ministers, the church problem where we have schools, and the church ownership of the schools.

This was followed by the annual Sunday-school Meeting, under the management of Bro. Levi Minnich. Addresses were given by Bro. W. K. Conner, of Virginia, and Bro. R. D. Murphy, of Pennsylvania. Both talks were good, but the former, being illustrated, was listened to with more than ordinary interest.

Bro. J. W. Cline, of California, had charge of the Round Table and made this part of the program interesting as well as instructive. Being pressed for time, a part of the program had to be omitted. The meeting, however, was full of inspiration, and will not fail to prove helpful to our Sunday-school workers.

At 2 P. M. over four thousand people assembled to enjoy the Missionary Meeting, which is always looked forward to as the very best meeting of the Conference week. Bro. D. L. Miller presided, and there were present, at the time, all the members of the General Mission Board, as well as the members of the Standing Committee.

The thirteen new missionaries occupied the front seats on the platform, and by their side sat six missionaries that are home on furlough, making nineteen in all.

After some inspiring singing, Bro. L. W. Teeter conducted the devotional exercises. Bro. D. L. Miller, in a very touching manner, presented the new missionaries, naming them as follows: Bro. B. F. Heckman (his wife not being present); Bro. Paul Mohler and wife; Bro. J. Homer Bright and wife; Bro. Grover L. Wine and wife; Bro. J. T. Graybill and wife; Bro. Quincy Holsopple; Sister Winnie Cripe; Sister Annie Hutchison; Sister Kathren Royer.

Another fervent prayer by Bro. G. L. Studebaker, directed all hearts to further consecration. The scene was so impressive that there were only a few dry eyes in the assembly.

Bro. J. M. Blough, of India, delivered the missionary address for the occasion. He spoke for nearly an hour, but was listened with intense interest. Under the direction of Bro. Galen B. Royer the collection was then taken, which resulted in raising about $14,000. In spite of the heat, the people continued in the two-hour meeting to the very close.

During the day there were a number of meetings not mentioned in these Notes. Several were held at the Lyceum, and a number of school reunions were held at different points. The Sisters' Aid Societies also held a meeting in the Auditorium.

The Committee on Credentials practically completed their enrollment of delegates before the close of the day. So far 426 delegates have been enrolled, or more than fifty less than last year. Everything is now ready for the Conference that begins at eight in the morning.

The Standing Committee has matters in good shape, and it is the wish of the delegates that business move right along. There are a number of papers here for consideration and some of them very important.

Regarding the proceedings of the Conference we shall have considerable to say next week. We close these notes in the midst of an enthusiastic temperance meeting, that begun at eight P. M. Some telling speeches are being made and those in attendance are fully alive to the urgent demands of the hour.

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches"

THE INDIANS OF MEXICO.

The Mexican Indians, a mixture of Spanish and Indian blood, are quite a social set of people. Descended from an Indian ancestry, they are, like the full-blooded Indian in their appreciation of a kind act. They will return it not only once, but many times, and then feel that it is unpaid. They always shake hands upon meeting you, and bid you good-bye when leaving. They are polite and better behaved than the ordinary class of whites. If you do them harm, they will not like you. Probably they will treat you in the same way, or else not have you in their company.

The Spanish Indians are mostly of the Catholic faith, though a few belong to the Methodists and other religious sects. Those of the Catholic faith are especially careful to do right during Lent. When one of their number dies, they think they must have a funeral preached, though they may have to go many miles for a preacher.

These people somewhat resemble the mound builders, and, although they do not live in mounds, the ruins of old adobe and stone buildings, here among the hills, go to show that the older folks, of many years ago, dwelt once among the rocks. The people now living here are more civilized. Still they have a great many things to learn yet, in order to catch up with the Americans.

Among the hills are rocks as large as houses and barns. This is as rocky a country as any I have ever seen. Their houses are perched far up at the side of the hills, where big rocks could roll upon them and not leave a trace of either the buildings or their occupants. These buildings are often massed together, with many rooms, doors and windows. Usually these houses are built of adobe, or stone and adobe. The roofs are flat, supported with posts. Brush is laid on top, with a dirt covering. The floors are of dirt, and the walls are plastered with dirt mortar. In the corner is a fireplace, made of mud and stone,—much like an Eskimo's fireplace.

You can not see these buildings, sometimes, until you almost step into the chimney. From one to a dozen families live in one house. Their graveyard is on a hill, in a rocky place. They bury longways, crosswise, or in any way it suits.

When it comes to making things out of adobe and stone, the Indians are masters in the art. Their skill is really remarkable.

Many of these people can "savvy" (understand) English, but they will not talk it to you, even if they are really anxious to know something. They want you to "savvy" Mexican. In their buildings they have but a few things, though the high-class people, like elsewhere, live more elaborately. My description refers more especially to the methods of the lower class, and their ways of living and their habits.

DEATH OF ELDER S. S. ULREY.

May 24, 1911, after a long and serious illness, Elder S. S. Ulrey, of the Ogans Creek congregation, near North Manchester, Ind., was called from the scenes of his earthly labors. He was one of the first children born in Kosciusko County, Ind. In his youth he secured what education could be gotten in the country schools at that time, and from a graded school at Warsaw, Ind. He then taught for fifteen years, being looked upon as a leader in his profession.

April 18, 1867, he was united in marriage to Mary J. Tridle, who has ever since been his faithful companion in all his work. To them were born seven children, of whom five sons and two daughters are yet living. All of these have followed the father in the teaching profession.

In 1875 he moved into the Ogans Creek congregation and soon became very much interested in the work of the church. He was elected to the ministry in March, 1879, was advanced to the second degree in February, 1881, and was ordained to the eldership May 23, 1891, by Elder R. H. Miller, of sacred memory.

In the Northern District of Indiana he was a leader,—not so much as a preacher but as a counselor in the local congregations and in District Meeting. In 1896 and 1909 he represented Middle Indiana on the Standing Committee. In more than thirty years he missed but two Annual Meetings. In this way he became acquainted with Dunkards all over the Brotherhood. He knew the history of the church as few men did, and was never more happy than when talking about the church and her work. Almost his last conversation pertained to the work of the coming Conference.

For several years he had been a sufferer from diabetes. Last October it developed into gangrene. He ate his last meal at the table with the family on Thanksgiving Day, Jan. 14 he was anointed by Elders T. T. Myers and A. L. Wright. Although his pain was constant and severe, he never complained, patiently enduring until the call came.

Funeral services were conducted by Eld. P. B. Fitzwater, assisted by Eld. J. H. Wright and the writer. Sis of Bro. Ulrey's colaborers in the ministry bore his body to the tomb, while the large audience, assembled on the occasion, gave evidence of the esteem in which our brother was held. His services for the church will not soon be forgotten.

CHOTO CHURCH, KNOX COUNTY, TENNESSEE, REORGANIZED.

This congregation was organized about the year 1885 or 1886, under the supervision of the Mission Board, and called Mount Olivia. A few years thereafter a church-house was built and the name changed to Choto (an Indian name of the falls in the Tennessee River at that place).

Bro. S. Z. Sharp was the first brother to preach there, and it was through his efforts that several united with the church. Later Elders Jesse Crosswhite, F. W. Dove, G. C. Bowman, C. H. Diehl, W. A. Sherfey, J. B. Bowman, Jacob Wine, J. B. Pence, and other ministers preached for them at different times. All of the above-named elders have passed to their reward, except Brethren Sharp, Wine and Diehl. But as the church was without a resident minister, some of the members moved away, and others died. Thus the little flock became disorganized and was scattered, and for a long and sorrowful time.

We still had, however, some faithful members, whose loyalty to the church was like Paul's, when he said: "None of these things move me." Three years ago the Mission Board took the matter in hand, and moved the church some distance, to a better location, near the railroad (Boyds). The Brethren of Beaver Creek, Knox County, have been serving them most of the time.

June 20 Eld. J. H. Peterson, Bro. G. F. Bailey, and myself, met the faithful and scattered and partly reorganized, by electing and installing Brethren John W. Robeson and John Delaney, deacons; Bro. Levi Roe, clerk; Sister Harriet Tipton, treasurer. The church was named Union Valley.

A TIMELY WARNING.

Paul, in Gal. 6: 7, says, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." This is a great and timely warning to all. It was written to the Galatians, and meant a great deal to them, but it means just as much to us. The warning, however, does us good only in so far as we apply it. We do not know how many it saved then, or how many it will save now, but Paul gave it, and it is just as much in place today as it was then.

In our busy people grow cold and indifferent concerning the soul's welfare. We should realize that, as there is only one sowing time, there will be only one reaping time. The reaping must be done, and the reward accepted. So then, "Be not deceived." The rich man, mentioned in Luke 16: 19, failed to do the proper thing when done. He saw his mistake when it was too late. How about ourselves, dear reader?

"Be not deceived" either in a spiritual or a temporal way. It is possible to be deceived in both. The writer had some experience along that line, when he purchased land from a certain company. The appearance of the land was very good. It was nearly as level as a floor, and seemed to be very fine indeed, but finally proved to be what is called "alkaline." It is no loam,—simply very heavy land, and it seems as if nothing but time and the elements will eventually pulverize it. Many poor people have been deceived by buying that land.

Let this be a warning, dear reader, be it timely warning to us all. "Be not deceived," but be waiting for the reaping time and get ready for it!

ROGUE RIVER CHURCH, OREGON.

Eld. S. E. Decker labored earnestly with us in a series of meetings for three weeks, and much good was accomplished in building up the work at this place. Bro. Decker preaches stirring sermons, in the simplicity of the Gospel and the power of the Spirit. He especially warns those who are drifting into false doctrine, and trust in the wisdom of men. Two, who had wandered away from the fold, were welcomed back and renewed their covenant with God. One was received by letter. On Saturday we held a special council, preparatory to our love feast. We considered, and some longer established plan for possibility of getting our churchhouse located nearer the center of the population of the village of Talent, as we are at present nearly a half mile out. This matter will be still further considered at our next council. It was a very spiritual one. Seventy-two surrounded the Lord's tables. The number included brethren from the Ashland and Williams Creek congregations. Bro. J. G. Miller officiated. On Sunday, following the Sunday-school hour, special children's exercises were held. Sister Lizzie Detweiler gave an illustrated talk, which was very simple and impressive. The afternoon session was devoted to Sunday-school and Christian Worker topics. The influence of the Holy Spirit was predominant in all our meetings.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord"

Acord, Jessie, youngest daughter of Bro. Geo. W. Acord, born in Wood County, Okla., Aug. 12, 1898, died April 14, 1911, aged 12 years, 8 months and 2 days. Jessie had always been in feeble health and her death was not altogether unexpected to the family. Notice has taken from this family a son March 8, the father April 15, and then little Jessie was called home.—Eld. J. Miller, Nashville, Okla.

Acord, Bro. Geo. W., born in Ohio, July 4, 1846, died near Wapaka, Okla., April 15, 1911, aged 64 years, 9 months and 11 days. He was married to Mary E. Miller in Reno County, Kans., April 10, 1870. To them were born seven sons and five daughters. The deceased had been in poor health for a number of years, and died from old age and a complication of diseases. He united with the Church of the Brethren about twenty-seven years ago and remained faithful. Services at the home by a Baptist minister.—H. M. Miller, Nashville, Okla.

Bare, Samuel H., born in Huntington County, Ind., May 21, 1849, died of dropsy, in the bounds of the Topeka church, Lagrange Co., Ind., May 14, 1911, aged 61 years and 3 days. SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES should be ordered now. Delay on your part may be the cause of inconvenience to you. If your order reaches us early you will receive your supplies in good time. You ought to have them two weeks before the beginning of the quarter. They are now ready. Let us have the order at once and we will send the goods.

The increased demand for our publications from year to year convinces us that they are appreciated. The quantity of Sunday-school Supplies that we are putting out this quarter is in excess of that for any previous quarter.

It is our constant aim to furnish the best helps possible and we are confident that, quality considered, our prices compare favorably with other publishers.

Note prices on the accompanying order blank. If you did not receive a blank on which to list your order use this one.

All the helps and papers named in the order blank are needed in a first class Sunday-school. A careful study of this blank may suggest to you some important lines of work which have not yet been inaugurated in your school.

ANY ONE KNOWS that plenty of good music in a Sunday-school is an essential to the best results. Have you read about KINGDOM SONGS, our new song book for Sunday-school, Christian Workers' Meetings, Prayer Meetings, etc.? It is the kind of a book you have been looking for. 290 selections of the best obtainable. Any Sunday-school being amply supplied with copies of the book and making good use of them will, as a result, take on new life.

Kingdom Songs is being used at the Annual Conference at St. Joseph, Mo., and thus representatives from all parts of the Brotherhood will have an opportunity to learn its merits.

As soon as possible it should be adopted by all our Sunday-schools.

The book contains a large number of the best and most widely used modern gospel songs, such as have stood the test and will not soon wear out. Along with these are a number of new pieces, fresh and inspiring, some of the "good old hymns" and a few anthems.

The large variety of subjects makes it readily available for any form of religious service. It is especially adapted to Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meetings.

The book is published in both round and shaped notes. In ordering be sure to state which kind of notes is wanted, and the number of copies of each. Both kinds may be included in the same order at the same price.

Price, per copy, 35c, postpaid; per doz., $3.50, prepaid; per hundred, $25.00, not prepaid.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED

Indian Creek.—We met in council May 27. Our elder, Bro. Zuck, presided. Sister Lizzie Higgs was chosen delegate to Annual meeting. We decided to have a series of meetings conducted by Bro. H. A. Stahl, of Pennsylvania, to continue at least two weeks and close with Love-feast, to be held, beginning at 6 P. M.—Rebecca M. Enfield, Maxwell, Iowa, June 2.

Garrison.—Our church enjoyed the favor of a visit from Bro. John Robinson May 5 to 14. He gave us two excellent sermons. He was soliciting in the interest of the "Home for the Colored People," at Denver, Colo. Our love feast occurred May 27 and 28. Quite a number of visiting members were present. Bro. A. F. Blough, of Waterloo, Iowa, was with us also, and officiated.—Mrs. Lydia Garrison, Iowa, June 2.

Morrell church is to begin a series of meetings, to be conducted by Bro. Zimmerman, commencing July 8. The meetings are to continue till the finish, closing with our love feast, on 8 P. M.—Ora Carter, Foley, Minn., June 3.

Butte Valley.—May 21 Bro. J. Harman Stover preached a stirring sermon, after which a collection of $18.87 was taken. This amount is to be placed with the Annual Meeting collection. Our council meeting will be held on the 24th inst., at Bro. Edwin Fike's barn, two miles southwest of Coleman. Our regular council will be held June 24, instead of July 8, so that our elder can be with us. Quite a number of invitation to members of adjoining congregations to be with us at our love feast.—Forest D. Hoy, R. D. 1, Ashley, Mich., June 4.

Antrim church met in council May 26. Eld. David Hoover presided. One letter was granted. The church re-elected Bro. Curtis Hilbert as our Sunday-school superintendent. Our love feast is set for Sept. 16, at 5:30 P. M.—Chas. E. Johnsonbaugh, Anderson, Ind., June 2.

Greenville church held her love feast May 27. On account of the rain the meeting was not so large as was expected.—May 14 Bro. J. M. Blocher preached. Bro. D. W. Wise officiated. On Sunday morning two sisters spoke to the children, and Bro. C. D. Bright gave excellent talks to the older ones on "Peace." A heavy rain interfered with the attendance on Sunday, but we had a rich, spiritual feast.—A. M. Hall, Walnut, Iowa, June 3.

Astoria.—Our church met in council at the South Fulton house May 20, with our elder, Bro. J. W. Brubaker, presiding. One letter was granted. We decided to have ten days' Bible meetings, beginning in July, with Bro. Moore as our instructor. Sister Anna Gruber is to be our leader for prayer meeting for six months.—Fay A. Rohrbaugh, R. D. 2, Box 13, Browning, Ill., June 2.

Vermilion church held her love feast May 27. Bro. S. P. Berkebile officiated. May 24 Bro. Berkebile gave us a talk on India and continued for three nights, with large audiences of attentive listeners. On Sunday morning Bro. and Sister Berkebile gave us a very interesting talk about some of the customs of India, and sister Berkebile sang a solo in English. After this Bro. Berkebile preached both morning and evening. They certainly endeared themselves to us, and while with us. Some were almost persuaded to forsake sin and follow Jesus. If Bro. Berkebile had remained a few days longer, we were sure that some would have made the good choice. A collection of $37.56 was taken for foreign missions.—Emma Yarbrough, Bicknell, Ind., June 3.

Big Creek.—Our church met in council May 27. Our elder, Bro. D. J. Hollenshead, presiding. Our deacon and wife, Brethren Dow Riddgely and N. S. Dale were appointed on our Temperance Committee. On Sunday we had some glorious stuff preached a missionary sermon, after which an offering of $10 was raised for the same.—Geo. Ebie, 713 East Main St., Olney, Ill., June 3.

Sangerville church met in council at the Branch house May 15, preparatory to the love feast which was held. Worship was granted. Eld. Jacob Zimmerman, of the Elk Run congregation, Va., and Eld. J. Hollenberg, of Indian Creek congregation, Va., were present. May 27 we held our love feast, at the same place, and had a good meeting. Brethren A. S. Thomas, M. B. Miller and M. J. Wolfe, of the Beaver Creek congregation, were with us. Their presence and help was much appreciated. Bro. Miller officiated. On Sunday morning, after Sunday-school, Bro. Thomas preached an inspiring sermon to a full house, after which a collection was taken for the Annual Meeting. The previous Sunday a collection was taken at the Emmanuel house, after a missionary sermon preached by our elder, Bro. J. W. Wise. The entire amount is $21.19. A joint Sunday-school Meeting will be held at the Branch house June 17, at 2 P. M.—Annie B. Miller, R. D. 1, Box 36, Bridgewater, Va., May 30.

Chestnut Grove.—Our love feast, May 20, was an enjoyable one. Eld. J. W. Rogers officiated. There were about fifty communicants.—Anna F. Sanger, Box 46, Bragg ville, W. Va., May 24.

McClure.—Bro. Chas. A. Miller, of Westphalia, Kans., came to us May 13 to hold a series of meetings. He preached twenty sermons, and as a result of his labors seven came out on the Lord's side. Two still await the rite of baptism. This makes fifteen added to the church by baptism during the last fourteen months. We held our love feast May 27. Fifteen members were united to the fellowship of the church. It was the most spiritual feast ever held in this church. Bro. Miller officiated. Bro. Albert Eilenberger, of the Prowers Church, preached the examination sermon. This church was organized Oct. 31, 1908, with a membership of thirty-three. Bro. W. D. Harris is our elder. We now have three ministers, three deacons and a membership of forty-six. Surely, the Lord has been good to us. Since our last report Bro. A. M. Peterson and wife, of Tennessee, have moved among us. He is a minister in the second degree. Bro. A. J. Hensel (a deacon) and wife, of Rocky Ford, Colo., have also located here. Any who wish to change location where they can enjoy a new church home in a prosperous organization, are invited to come to this place.—Ida Cochran, Colo., June 3.

Limestone.—Our church met in council May 27. Bro. C. A. Diehl, of Pleasant Valley, Tenn., was with us. Two letters of membership were received. Bro. Diehl preached for us on Sunday.—Anna Arnold, Limestone, Tenn., June 3.

TO THE CHURCHES OF OREGON, WASHINGTON, AND IDAHO.

All members, desiring to attend the District Meeting of the three States, to be held at Myrtle Point, Oregon, July 12 and 13, will be required to pay the round-trip third fare for the round trip, providing there are fifty or more persons in attendance, who can present certificates to the clerk of the meeting, showing that full-fare tickets were purchased to the place of meeting. This also refers to the returning roads: Oregon and Washington Railroad and Navigation Company, on all of its lines in Oregon, Washington and Idaho; Southern Pacific lines in Oregon; Northern Pacific Railway Company lines in Washington and Idaho, as far as Portland, Oregon. For this route get a certificate for ticket to Portland; then purchase a ticket over Southern Pacific to Roseburg. Be sure to get your certificate for ticket purchased. Then, when you return to Roseburg, you will be entitled to receive certificates, get a ticket for one-third fare direct home, without rebuying one in Portland. Two certificates only will be needed by those that reach Portland over the Northern Pacific. Date of sale for tickets to Portland, July 4 to 12, inclusive. Return limit, July 10 to 20, inclusive. As to arrangements for stage, or private conveyance from Roseburg to Myrtle Point, watch for notice from the Myrtle Point Brethren. Some have desired to go by steamer from Portland to Coos Bay, but I have been unable to get satisfactory rates, and the assurance of necessary accommodations.

May there be a large attendance at this, the last joint meeting of the three States. Geo. C. Carl.

1125 Albina Avenue, Portland, Oregon, May 27.

THE FULL REPORT

OF THE

Annual Conference of 1911

SHOULD BE ORDERED NOW

This year's Report will be of special interest and value to the members of the church. These reports from year to year form an important collection of reading matter which should be preserved in every family. Some queries of vital interest will come before the Conference this year. Every speech made, with the name of the speaker, will appear in full. Besides, all the speeches made at the Incleneok Sunday-school and Christian Workers' and Missionary Meetings will be reported fully.

Every member of the Church of the Brethren should be interested enough in the church to buy a Report and keep informed regarding its progress. This Report is not published for the purpose of making money, but that every one may have access to the good of these meetings. It is the only source from which you can get a complete report of the meeting. Do you want to be informed regarding the rulings of the church? If so, order the Report.

The matter in the Report will be carefully indexed, making it convenient for reference.

Orders for the Report can be handed in at the Brethren Publishing House Headquarters on the grounds or sent direct to the Publishing House. Price per copy, 25c.

AFTER JULY 1ST—$1.25

Are you a subscriber to the Inglenook? Do you have a copy of the Revised Cook Book? If so, we have something to offer you. If not, then read on.

Fully fifteen thousand persons weekly enjoy the good things that are found in the Inglenook. One year ago only half that number read it. The subscription list is increasing constantly. The verdict of everyone is that "The NOOK is getting better."

These facts can result from only one thing. That thing is—that the management of the Inglenook has succeeded in securing a magazine that has for its standard the BEST, along historical, instructive, entertaining and moral lines, and has accomplished this aim largely by attracting and satisfying the people.

So much has been said in this paper and in others about the Revised Cook Book as a valuable that it would be almost presumption to say more here. We will just say, though, for your special benefit, that if you still want to join the crowd and subscribe for the Nook and get the Cook Book, and will do so before the first of July, you can have them for $1.00, the price that has been charged all along. If you neglect to do it and wait till after that time, you will have to pay $1.25, according to a late decision of the General Mission Board.

To make it very easy for you to do this between now and July 1st, we are appending hereto an order blank. Just fill it out, write a bill out this blank and send it with a dollar to us, BEFORE JULY 1ST, and the Nook and the Book will be forthcoming at once.

AROUND THE WORLD

A Jewish Official for Egypt.

Not since the days of Joseph, four thousand years ago, has a Jewish official been in control of affairs in Egypt, and it is a matter of interest to note that, by the proposed appointment of Sir Matthew Nathan as British representative in Egypt, another Jew will sway the destiny of the Land of the Nile. Sir Matthew Nathan, well known in the administrative circles of Great Britain, is a native of London, and is undoubtedly well qualified for the position. Whether he will have the tact and capability of Egypt's first Jewish ruler, remains to be seen. Under the present complicated conditions, Sir Nathan will not find his position an easy one.

Japanese Laymen.

When the laity of a church gets in real earnest, there is always a chance for effectual work. In the recently-reported activity of the church at Hachinohe, Japan, a most commendable zeal is being shown. People of all classes seem to be touched by the real essence of Christianity, and are endeavoring to reach others,—not only of their own town but others in the vicinity. Sunday-schools are being started at many new points with excellent results. While their minister is unable to reach all the towns in his circuit, he finds that his faithful members do much in the way of preparatory work. The example of these Japanese Christians may well be a lesson of faithfulness to the churches of America. No congregation can hope for the greatest measure of success until the entire church, as one united body, goes forward in the rescue of precious souls.

Kentucky Liquor Dealers Alarmed.

A meeting has been called by the distillers and wholesale liquor men of Kentucky "to discuss a grave situation, and to take steps to organize a combat against forces that are threatening the destruction of the liquor traffic in that State." There is reason to rejoice that the temperance work has reached a place of vantage, important enough to cause "a grave situation," and to show liquor men that there is a possible "destruction of the accursed traffic." Defenders of liquor have of late been driven from pillar to post, hunting for enough plausible arguments to fool the people. We are told of the advantages of the "regulated saloon." Nobody has ever seen that kind of a place. The only "regulation" of the saloon is to destroy it root and branch,—the very thing concerning which the Kentucky liquor dealers are so greatly alarmed.

Further Treaties for Peace.

Two treaties, at this time pending in the Senate, are likely to be more promotive of domestic and world peace than any other measures recently consummated. They contemplate the establishment of what will be, to all intents and purposes, financial protectorates over the republics of Honduras and Nicaragua. If those treaties are ratified, it will mean that, for the first time in the history of those countries, they will enjoy tranquillity. In an area, as large as Illinois and Indiana combined, inhabited by about 1,000,000 persons, chronic revolutions and all the evils attendant thereon, will cease. The people will be able to harvest the crops they sow, develop the resources of their countries, and enjoy the benefits which only peace can assure. While, through the kind efforts of the United States, this most laudable result will be brought about, our nation will have the gratifying reward of orderly conditions in Central America,—a matter of great importance.

The Golden Rule in Africa.

Dr. Karl Kumm, an African explorer of considerable note, recently described how he traversed some of the most dangerous parts of the Dark Continent without any weapons whatever. He was asked how many times he was obliged to defend himself against savage tribes. His reply was, "I did not fight." He was then reminded of the bloody encounters of other explorers,—Stanley, Boyd Alexander, Hans Vischer, and others, who felt obliged at times, to kill many natives in order to save themselves and their company. Dr. Kumm replied: "I neither fought nor killed. There was no need of it. The Golden Rule holds good in Africa as well as at home, 'Do unto others as you would have them do to you.'" Dr. Kumm did not, indeed, escape all troubles, but, somehow, he pursued his journeys amid a great deal less peril and danger than the other explorers who depended upon an equipment of arms. The doctrine of nonresistance, so emphatically taught by Christ, and practically exemplified by the Brethren, finds a most vivid illustration in the experience cited. We can well afford to take the Lord at his word, and trust him fully by "walking in all his ways."

The Passing of Mrs. Carrie Nation.

The noted foe of the saloon and all pertaining thereto, —Mrs. Carrie Nation,—died at a sanitarium in Leavenworth, Kans., June 9. She was born in Kentucky in 1846. Early in life she was unfortunate enough to marry a man addicted to the use of intoxicants, and this created in her an intense aversion to the saloon. She determined, upon her husband's death, to give her entire life to the suppression of the liquor traffic. And while we may not endorse the lawless onslaughts of her hatchet in the wrecking of saloons, she did much, doubtless, to arouse the people of Kansas to the enormity of the liquor traffic. Many, indeed, claim that she deserves a large share of the credit justly due the brave workers who were instrumental in freeing Kansas from the bondage of the liquor traffic.

Sir Oliver Lodge's Testimony.

While some of the so-called "Higher Critics" endeavor to throw doubt and derision upon various phases of the Sacred Record, it is interesting to note what Sir Oliver Lodge has to say. After an experience of forty years as a scientist, he is free to confess that his long studies and observations have led him to conclude that miracles need be "no more impossible, no more lawless, than the interference of a human being would seem to a colony of ants." This conclusion gives something to think about to that class of Bible critics who reject miracles because they are beyond their range of reasoning. Will these men ever realize that Bible facts are to be believed,—not to be criticised or explained away? Only a whole-hearted faith obtains the gracious reward promised to God's adopted children.

The Liquor Traffic in Nigeria.

While political freedom has been given to the people of Nigeria, Africa, by the powerful protection of Great Britain, a worse bondage than ever before is now afflicting the people. Despite the protests of missionaries, the importation of spirits is continually increasing, having reached, during the last four years, the enormous total of 13,601,362 gallons. Gin is being used as one of their forms of currency, and,—sad to relate,—in their eagerness to secure liquor, children are often pawned to gin traders as security for drink debts incurred in marriage and funeral ceremonies. It is almost hopeless to think Christian nation should allow such a condition to exist in one of its dependencies without applying the needed restrictions. It is a duty that England owes to these people, for whose welfare they have made themselves morally responsible.

Mexico's Sad Experience.

Besides a war debt of more than $20,000,000, and many claims for losses sustained by foreigners, Mexico also faces the payment of an indemnity of $6,000,000, demanded by the Chinese Government for the 303 Chinese ruthlessly killed during the revolutionary troubles, and for property losses inflicted upon the Chinese residents. Still larger are the losses sustained by the Mexicans themselves,—industrially, commercially and agriculturally. During the progress of hostilities everything was practically at a standstill, and several decades will be required to restore the country to its former prosperity. If,—as was suggested at a recent Peace Congress,—no country be allowed to enter into a war until the people themselves agree to such a course; very little fighting would be engaged in. The rank and file of the citizens seek no occasion for war, and are not anxious to enter the battlefield.

Arbitrary Fashions in Mourning Costumes.

We notice that many of our most able contemporaries, among them the "Baptist Commonwealth," are remonstrating against the practice of following the prescribed edicts of fashion regarding mourning costumes. Attention is called to the fact that the wearing of such garments is a custom not befitting a Christian, accentuating all that the Word of God says should not be emphasized." It certainly controverts the spirit of every Easter sermon that was ever preached, and declares that there is nothing of comfort in the sublime assurances of Holy Writ, so far as we are concerned. A noted minister once remarked that "in the case of persons who were not Christians, no mourning could be deep enough to symbolize their sad state, but that in the case of a departed Christian, who is supposed to go to glory, the wearing of mourning is preposterous." Surely, there are better ways of revering the memory of those who have gone before!

Temperance Progress in England.

Our English friends, across the briny deep, are by no means idle in the great work of temperance promulgation, and many gratifying results are reported. For some years the town of Luton, a prosperous manufacturing center in Bedfordshire, has been enjoying the blessings of prohibition, the town authorities having decided that no more licenses be granted. Since then Luton has entered upon an era of prosperity undreamed of before. It has doubled in population, increased its financial prosperity, and made notable advancement religiously and educationally. Examples like this one furnish unanswerable arguments to temperance advocates.

Life on the Planets.

To most of us, perhaps, the "starry firmament" is a matter of great interest. We see the far-off heavenly bodies, as they traverse their vast orbits, and wonder as to their nature and general make-up. Prof. T. J. J. See, astronomer in charge of the Naval Observatory at Mare Island, Cal., recently expressed the opinion that the various planets, revolving about the different fixed stars, are habitable, and in structure and make-up very much like the planets which revolve about the sun. He considers that life is a general phenomenon of the universe, and that, in all probability, living beings are found on the planets. It is altogether likely that an omniscient God could people the many heavenly bodies as easily as he could fling worlds into space, and the day may come when, by the achievements of science, that fact may be fully demonstrated.

Seven Million Bibles in 1910.

The British and Foreign Bible Society reports a sale of more than seven million Bibles during last year,—a million more than during the previous year. China took 1,500,000 copies; the British Isles 1,250,000, Korea, 666,000; Russia, 550,000; Japan, 285,000; India and Ceylon, 342,000; Africa, 300,000. About ninety-six per cent of the total number of Bibles sold were of the Authorized Version. Six new languages were added to the translations, so that now the Society prints the Bible in 432 languages or dialects. Even the blind are not forgotten, for now the Sacred Word exists in 28 different blind languages. It is an undisputed fact that the Bible is the one book that never abates in its sales. Other books may, for a while, attain large circulations, only to sink into final oblivion. Not so the Bible. It stands on its own merits, as a Divinely-sent Message to a lost world, and it does not fail in its mission.

The Lineage of David.

Perhaps it is not generally known that several of Europe's monarchs,—notably the rulers of England and Germany,—claim a direct, lineal descent from King David. Genealogical charts at Potsdam and Windsor trace the ancestry of these distinguished rulers to the days of the "Sweet Singer of Israel." Queen Elizabeth was firmly convinced of the genuineness of such a claim, and her "family tree" at Hatfield House records historical data in support of that assertion. Students of sacred history find much that is highly interesting in this suggestive circumstance. In the promise of Old Testament days, regarding the permanency of David's lineage, to find its wider confirmation in the careers of the mighty rulers of England and Germany, and still other rulers related to them? It is an interesting matter to contemplate in the light of Bible prophecy.

Wrong Training.

During the recent trial of a highway robber the fact was brought out that he commenced carrying revolvers at the tender age of six. It has also been shown that many, if not all of the recent cases of highway robbery in our cities were committed by young men and boys who, by the possession of a revolver, were emboldened to enter a career of crime. Court officials are confronted by the deplorable fact that revolvers are sold to minors, contrary to all restrictions governing the sale of these weapons, and it now looks very much as if grave danger threatens the community at large by means of these fatal firearms in the hands of the very ones who should by no means have them. This leads us to drop a thought regarding the use of pistols, etc., on the approaching Fourth of July. Might it not be well if parents would think most seriously ere they permit their boys to purchase the various dangerous explosives and toy pistols, so freely offered for sale? The average boy will be largely as his father trains him, and from the toy pistol to the death-dealing revolver is but a short step, as many parents have realized to their sorrow.

ESSAYS

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

Temples of God.

Strewn is the earth with temples of the ages,
Which human longing, human faith enshrined,
Groping for that which grief and pain assuages,
Beyond the barriers of a world confined.

Ruined they lie, their outworn faiths embalming,
In Theban desert and by Grecian shore,
To where Rome—echoing an Empire's arming,
Essayed to rule the world forevermore.

Vain were the dreams those pagan faiths inspiring;
Rome's guardian god himself no succor gave,
Wildly they cried to him, his help desiring,
He did not answer, nor had power to save.

Janus has gone, his temple too has vanished,
Broken the gates, so often opened wide,
While men declare the heathen gods are banished,
And Christ is now their Teacher and their Guide.

Still the old faiths remain, the new enchaining,
And race opposing race, in passion blind,
Fling wide the gates of Janus—peace disdaining—
And clamor to the Father of mankind.

Vainly you cry aloud, to him appealing
As "Lord of Battles," and as "God of Arms;"
No voice replies, the future dark revealing,
No sanction for your strife, the Spirit claims.

Where are the temples in which God has spoken?
Not in these piles of stone you rear in vain,
Not in the colonnade, unroofed and broken;
Go seek them in the forms your hate hath slain.

There lie his temples, still and desecrated,
Where once that Voice Divine, the conscience stirred,
Ruined by man—although by God created
As dwelling places for his holy Word.

Hark to those prayers, their foes recriminating,
Beneath cathedral dome, and columned aisle,
Prayers in his name, his temples desecrating,
Who came mankind to God to reconcile.

Hark! to the boom of cannon o'er the ocean,
Hark! to the cries of passion and of pain,
Then bowing low, in penitent devotion,
Hark! to his voice, who speaketh once again.

"Leave there thy gift,"—and from the altar turning,
Reach out a hand unarmed, across the wave,
For surely not to heart with anger burning
Will he respond, whose glory is to save.

—J. H. Midgley, in Herald of Peace.

Sanctification by the Holy Spirit.

BY PAUL MOHLER.

DID you ever notice what a difference there is between the seventh and eighth chapters of Romans? If you haven't, take a look at them.

In the first part of chapter seven we do, indeed, find a brief statement of the same principle that appears so clearly in the eighth, but from verse 7 on, Paul gives his miserable experience while trying to live righteously under the law, before becoming a Christian. What a dark picture indeed! Sold under sin, agreeing to the law that it is good, really delighting in that law after the inward man, but unable to do that which he knew to be good on account of the weakness of the flesh. No wonder he exclaims, "Wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me out of the body of this death?"

But what a different picture chapter 8 presents! Here all is life, light, joy, and victory. This is the Christian life, the only righteous life. My brother, in which chapter do you live? In which chapter do you wish to live? Do you think that chapter 7 describes the Christian's experience? If so, what does chapter 8 describe? You may take your choice, but give me chapter 8.

Let us take a look at chapter 8: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." That sounds good, doesn't it? But does it mean that we are to go on sinning as in chapter 7, looking to the "imputed righteousness" of Christ for all our righteousness? Well, let us see. "God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the ordinance of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Does that look as if we were expected to sin? If we "walk after the Spirit," will we sin? If we sin, will "the ordinance of law be fulfilled in us"?

When in verse 2 Paul says that the Holy Spirit has made us free from the law, I am quite sure that he does not mean that we have been released from its penalty merely. He evidently means, as appears in verses 11-14, that the Spirit enables us to live the life that is beyond the reach of the law because of its glorious character.

Does Paul make excuse for the "weakness of the flesh"? Listen, "They that are after the flesh mind the things of the flesh. . . . The mind of the flesh is death. . . . The mind of the flesh is enmity against God. . . . They that are in the flesh cannot please God." Do you want to go on in "the weakness of the flesh," committing the same sins over and over again every day without hope of victory? Is the "imputed righteousness" of Christ the only righteousness you really want? If so, you had better look out, or you won't get even that, for "if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is NONE OF HIS."

But how shall man overcome the weakness of the flesh? How can he keep free from sin? What would it mean to you, my brother, to be master over your temper or your appetite? Does anybody believe that such a thing is possible,—that a man can overcome all his temptations and live in freedom a life of righteousness? Well, if Paul didn't believe that, I wonder what he meant by this: "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelleth in you, he that raised up Christ Jesus from the dead shall give life also to your mortal bodies through his Spirit that dwelleth in you. So then, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh, . . . but if, by the Spirit, ye put to death the deeds of the body, ye shall live." "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God."

If I had never had any experience of the enabling grace of God, of victory over sin by his power, I would be compelled to decide either that Paul did not know what he was talking about, or that God really would enable a man to overcome his sins. Just look at the verses quoted a moment.

Does it take less power for him to lift us out of sin than to lift Christ Jesus out of the grave? Is he not able to do one as well as the other? If death could not hold Christ down from God, can Satan hold us back? Is Satan stronger than God? Again, since we are sons of God, heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ, does not God really care to help us as he did Christ? Can we doubt that the father will indeed, as Jesus said, be even more ready to give the Holy Spirit to us than we are to give good things to our own children? "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not also with him freely give us all things?"

Now, how shall this be done, once and for all, never to fail and never to be renewed? I do not find it so. It was not so with our Lord and his apostles. We have every reason to believe that temptation followed him all through his life, and we know it did with the apostles. They had to be filled with the Spirit again and again, and so will we. Just look at 2 Cor. 3:18, "We all with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit." Let the Spirit of God burn the image of Christ, of his glorious character, on our hearts according to verse 3, and it will be hard for sin to enter in. Let the Spirit of God be in us, have free course to move us unto prayer to God, according to Rom. 8:26, 27, and power to conquer every sin will be at our command.

Notice that the Spirit is life. As a living power within us, it is able to shine out in real Christ-like glory, compared to which the sufferings we endure are nothing, even as the sufferings of Christ were nothing to his glory. The fullness of our glory we wait and long for, but its gradual and increasing growth must certainly accompany our daily trials, temptations, sufferings, and victories over all by the power of the Spirit. And it is just this glory that the world is waiting and watching for, and which the world has the right to demand as the proof of the power of Christ to save the world (verses 19-21).

In view of these wonderful promises, these marvelous facts, why do we continue in sin? Is it God's fault? It certainly is not. It is our own, and our inexcusable fault. And we cannot afford it. Let us arise and lay hold of this power of God. Let us yield to his quickening Spirit and live the life of glory to the praise of his Name by the power of his Holy Spirit.

The People Wanted a King.—1 Sam. 8: 5.

BY PETER BROWER.

IN my thoughts I see Samuel ministering before the Lord in his youth. We are told, The word of the Lord was precious in those days. As the child lay upon his pillow, the Lord stood in his presence and called him to service. The mighty message came to him, to go and stand in the presence of the king, and speak his doom to him and his house. How beautiful, as we see him, in his child-like simplicity, before the mighty monarch of earth, delivering the fateful message as God directed. In his childhood he was faithful, and the Lord blessed him, and was with him, and he grew in favor with God and man. This characteristic of faithfulness and uprightness followed him through all his life. Well might it be said, "He judged Israel all the days of his life."

We behold him as he plods along in his arduous labors, with nothing else in view but to do the will of the Lord. He goes to Bethel, thence to Gilgal, thence to Mizpeh, returning to his home at Ramah, and worshiping there. It would seem that such a good man would have no sons but what would be good, but, as we see in this day, the children do not always follow the parents in service. The Lord does not seem harshly to condemn the faithful seer. It is possible that the prophet was, like many ministers now, away from home, at the Lord's work, and could not train his sons as he should.

When Samuel became old, the people were not satisfied with his work. Other nations seemed to prosper under kingly rule, and they desired to be like them and asked for a king. Two things seemed to be prominent now,—lack of faith in God, and a desire to be like other nations. These two things today are causing more trouble in the church of the living God than perhaps anything else. It did not please Samuel, neither did it please the Lord but behold the goodness of the Lord as he says, "Hearken unto the voice of the people; they have not rejected thee, but have rejected me." He tells them the consequences, and their doom.

We see how the children of Israel in their lack of faith selected their first king. They looked on the outward appearance, and God had to teach them a lesson. In selecting the little shepherd boy, David, as their second king, the people were taught that strength does not lie in a great, brawny frame and a powerful arm. They learned that God manifests himself in the still small voice, and that this is mightier than the "wind, earthquake, and the fire." May we take to heart the lessons contained in this narrative!

A Look Into the Next World.

BY S. Z. SHARP.

In Two Parts.—Part Two.—The Condition of the Saints.

1. Eternal Life Begins in This World.—"He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life" (1 John 5:12). We may be strictly moral, discharge our duties faithfully toward our fellow-men and have our names in the church book, yet if we have not already "the life," and feed on Christ, and if our names are not written in the "book of life," we can have no part in the first resurrection, and the blessings that follow. There is no promise for any who have not Christ in their souls, in this life, that they shall enjoy eternal happiness. To have Christ in the soul is to have his Spirit. "They that have not the Spirit of Christ are none of his" (Rom. 8:11). For this reason Paul was so much concerned about his Galatian brethren and wrote to them, "My little children of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you." It is, therefore, evident that eternal life begins in this world and is obtained by getting Christ into the soul.'

2. Eternal Life Must be Sustained in This World.—Christ says in John 6 : 53, "Except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man, ye have no life in yourselves." Some understand that this refers to the loaf and the cup in the communion. It would be safer to say that it refers to what the loaf and cup represent,—to the eternal Word. That the Word of God sustains eternal life, is well expressed by what Christ said to Satan in Matt. 4 : 4, "Man liveth not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life and I will raise him up at the last day." This settles the question about supporting the eternal life in the soul, as long as we are in this world, by feeding on the Word of the Son of God.

3. "Precious in the Sight of the Lord Is the Death of His Saints."—Psa. 116:15. After the saint has received the Son of God or eternal life into the soul, and sustained it well by the Word, then he is ready for that mysterious change called "falling asleep in Jesus." This transition of the soul into the next world, in the language of the Psalmist, is "precious unto the Lord." What is called death has no terrors to him who has Christ in the soul. He is

> "Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

How little we know of this great change! The soul bids us farewell and takes its flight. We press the lips that so often pressed ours in the tenderest affection, and then lay the beloved form tenderly into the bosom of mother earth, but not without hope. "For we know that if the earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." "The dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." It is impossible for those to die in the Lord who do not live in the Lord.

Now death has separated soul and body. The latter is with us; where is the soul?. Turn to Col. 3 : 3 for the answer: "Ye have died and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear we shall also appear with him in glory."

4. Where is the Soul and What Is Its Condition When It Leaves the Body?—When Christ died, he commended his spirit into the hands of his Father while his body rested in the sepulchre of Joseph (Luke 24: 46). When Stephen died he commended his spirit into the hands of the Lord Jesus (Acts 7: 59). His life was now "hid with Christ in God." To the penitent thief upon the cross Christ said, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Here we should notice that the transition of the soul from the body to its place of rest is immediate,—on the very day. The word "paradise" is indicative of enjoyment.

In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus we notice that Lazarus was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The attendance of the angels suggests the care that God has for his saints, and Abraham's bosom indicates love and comfort, and accords with what Abraham says,—that Lazarus shall be comforted. We also notice that the rich man quickly recognized Lazarus; hence we may infer that souls may recognize each other in the next world, and Paul says: "Then shall I know even as also I have been known." From the case of the rich man and Lazarus we learn that, while the wicked are in hell and the righteous in paradise, until the final disposition of both, there is a "gulf" between them that they can not come together. Abraham and Lazarus were in a place of comfort.

Another look into the next world reveals the fact that those who were beheaded for the testimony of Christ were securely kept under the altar of God in heaven until they shall be joined by their brethren who shall yet be slain. They were clothed in white robes and made worthy to stand before God (Rev. 6 : 9-11). From all the foregoing we learn that the souls of the saints enter into a state of rest and enjoyment immediately after leaving the body, that they are able to recognize each other and hold a conversation. We also learn, that the righteous and the wicked are kept in separate places and can not approach each other.

5. When and How Are the Souls and Bodies Reunited?—"When Christ, who is our life shall be manifested, then shall ye also be manifested with him in glory" (Col. 3:4). How will Christ be manifested the second time? "This Jesus which was received up into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going up into heaven" (Acts 2 : 11). "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4 : 16, 17).

By what power shall the saints arise? "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ Jesus from the dead shall also give life even to your mortal bodies through his Spirit that dwelleth in you." (Rom. 8 : 11). "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: over these the second death hath no power" (Rev. 20 : 6). We notice that only those who had the Spirit of Christ in their souls, while in this world, and died in the Lord, could be resurrected at the coming of Christ. They are like the wise virgins who had oil in their vessels and their lamps burning, and could enter with the Lord to the marriage feast, and this shows the importance of having Christ in the soul now.

6. Employment of the Saints After the First Resurrection.—"They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years" (Rev. 20 : 6). During these thousand years Satan shall be bound (Rev. 20 : 2). There will be universal peace. "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox." To the twelve apostles Christ said, "When the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19 : 28).

"When the thousand years are finished, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison and shall come forth to deceive the nations, . . . and they compassed the camp of the saints about and the beloved city, and fire came down out of heaven and devoured them," "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth are passed away and the sea is no more." "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men and he shall dwell with them and they shall be his people."

7. The Final Condition of the Saints.—What the final condition of the saints shall be, may be gathered from such passages of Scripture as: "And God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes: and death shall be no more, neither mourning nor crying." "They shall dwell in the holy city, whose walls are of precious stones, its gates of pearls, and streets of pure gold. The Almighty and the Lamb are the Light of it. From the throne of God, through the midst of the streets, flows the river of life with its twelve manner of fruits growing along its banks. The joys that will be accorded the saints as they sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, no man can describe. We can only say with Paul: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the mind of man the things which God hath prepared for them who love him."

The Salt of the Earth.

BY EZRA FLORY.

"Ye are the salt of the earth," was a big statement. How was it possible for a few insignificant people to be so? But this is the very function of the church and of individual Christians. Human society is corrupt, and tending toward corruption. Without the preserving power of Christianity, society is a carcass (Matt. 24: 28). Dead things are salted to prevent rot, and to sweeten them. As we go into low-toned society, our lives must suppress evil—make it harder for men to do wrong, harder for Satan to accomplish his designs. Does my life make evil men ashamed of themselves? General Grant one time excused himself from the presence of some men who were vulgarly talking about the other sex.

But it is also our duty to stimulate the best that is in those with whom we meet (Heb. 10: 24). Salt must be applied to and rubbed into the mass to be preserved. An old Quaker used to remark that every Quaker should sweeten the community around himself for ten miles.

Again, salt works quietly and gradually. Light reaches far out, and many there are who would rather be lights than salt. But no one may ever be a "light of the world" till he is first humbly willing to be "the salt of the earth."

There is the warning of the danger of the obliteration between the salt and the mass to be helped. "If the salt have lost its savor." This means a loss of its penetrating pungency which stays corruption. Ah, this is all that distinguishes the Christian from those we are to save. Let the world follow its maxims, pleasures and desires, if she will do so, but unless I am giving the world more good than I receive evil influence (rot) in return, the world will rot me. Professors often do more harm to the world than they ever dream of doing good to it.

Actual fellowship with Christ is necessary to prevent this loss of savor. And such fellowship is not the vague exercise of the mind about Christ. It is development by meditation, Bible study, and private devotion—three things so greatly neglected among professors today.

The function of the Christian is not to be cooled to the temperature of the world around him. Else, how shall he savor his environment? The church is the purifying power of the world and "if then it have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted?" Where, in the world, shall be found a power to purify the purifier? It is not fit for fertilizer, nor for the rubbish heap. It is a failure, so far as this world goes. God has no use for it and hence man cannot use it. The one thought is, "Will it savor?" A knife may have a nice handle but you ask, "Will it cut?" A low spirituality will always yield a crop of apostates and heretics instead of a widening circle of usefulness for the glory of God. Low vitality catches disease.

You ask, "Is there no redemption?" There is NONE apart from Christ. Let us go back to him. Rev. 2: 5 says, "Repent and do thy first works." We must go back closer to the Lord or we will go farther from him. May we cease querying how far we may go and still retain our power, but let us earnestly seek to follow wherever he leadeth, endeavoring to get closer to him.

Attitudes Toward Temptation.

BY D. C. BEBER.

TEMPTATION is a theme of perennial interest to every one, but it should be of vital concern to the young. It is a word found in the vocabulary of the Christian and the sinner. However, it is generally considered to belong to Christians only. How does the Christian's attitude toward temptation differ from the sinner's attitude? Is the sinner tempted to do evil as well as the saint? For instance, when the sin of lying is confronted, the unconverted man may not hesitate to commit this sin because he does not regard it as sin. His face is constantly toward evil in some form. With the Christian the case is different. To be a Christian means to turn your back to sin with an effort to abandon it. But in spite of all honest efforts to get rid of sin, Satan in a disguised form will get in front of the Christian and seek his downfall.

Jesus said to his disciples, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." The Christian life is a continual warfare with sin. In this campaign against sin, Christ is the Captain, leading his followers to victory. The opposing forces are led by Satan,—a wily and powerful foe. Through the prayers of Christians, which are the watches of the sentries, the camp of the Lord is guarded, and all assaults of the enemy are repelled.

The battle is the Lord's. The soldier of the Lord must follow directions carefully. He must not enter the conflict unless equipped with the complete armor. This consists of the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the Gospel of peace as a protection to the feet, the helmet of salvation, the shield of faith and the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God. Thus equipped, what must be his attitude toward the enemy? "Praying always," says Paul. This praying must be that he may not be led into temptation. He is not hunting the enemy but the enemy is seeking for him. But if the enemy comes as come he will, the Christian is fully prepared to meet him, and if he will always face the foe, he may hope to overcome him in God's name and strength. As soon as he turns his back to the enemy, there is no armor provided to protect him and the vulnerable portion of his being is exposed.

If one approaches temptation defiantly, relying upon his own strength, he will fall. To walk deliberately into temptation is to be overcome at once. Much depends upon the attitude of the tempted one in the hour of temptation, as to what will be the outcome. This will be either to win or to lose, to ascend or to descend. To be tempted is no sin. But while one is being tempted, he is in a dangerous position. And to court temptation is one step down. And although the outcome may not be sin in every instance, it is generally going to result in defeat.

The second step downward is yielding to temptation. This is sin. Satan tells two lies to those that are tempted. Before the fall he says that sinning once does not matter. After the fall he says that it is hopeless to try to rise. Every one that has gone far in the Christian life, has taken this second step at sometime. And lest Satan succeed in having the fallen one take the third step, I will drop a few words as a message of hope to such as sincerely inquire what next to do.

There are several notable cases in the Bible that may be cited. David fell. But instead of concealing his sins, he confessed them, and asked God's forgiveness. And for so doing, he was said to be a man after God's heart. St. Augustine says, "We may rise to the heights of perfection by making our dead sins steppingstones." A well-known New Testament instance is Peter's fall. Christ's words to him were: "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Peter did rise. He then was able to sympathize with the erring and tell them how to rise, and give to others, by lifting them up, the strength he derived from having overcome. So Peter became a great instrument in God's hand to lift fallen and hopeless souls, and what God's grace could do for Peter, it will do for any soul fully trusting in him. "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. 10: 13).

The third and last step down into sin is to tempt others to fall. The soul that has fallen and has no desire to rise is a gross sinner. It is quite natural that the sinner should want company. But it is a diabolical act to set a snare deliberately for an innocent soul to be ensnared. Oftentimes it is mere thoughtlessness, but very often it is self-interest that is the actuating motive. It is a significant truth that no one goes to the place of woe alone. Each one should fear hell, but much more ought any one to fear being the means of taking one to hell.

Turning now to consider the ascending steps or positive attitudes toward temptation, the first step up is resisting temptation. A young man in an English university once promised to do a questionable thing; then, remembering his home and what his loved ones would think of him, for doing it, he declined decisively. Those who have the good fortune of having good Christian homes should think of home in the hour of temptation. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." Look to Jesus who likewise was tempted in all points and ask for his strength which will be sufficient to secure the victory in every case. To overcome the tempter and say "No," requires more courage than to face the cannon's mouth. More glorious than the victories trumpeted by the breath of fame are the secret battles of temptation fought in the human heart and recorded only in heaven.

"Each victory will help you some other to win." And so the child of God rises from strength to strength. Strength is ever born of struggle. As the soul advances in years and receives more grace from above, the second ascending step, outliving temptations, is taken. The temptations of youth are outlived as one reaches maturer age. The hottest fires of temptation will gradually subside. A sweetmeat that is an irresistible temptation to a child is not a temptation for the adult. The young Christian is tempted to deny his profession when scorned and scoffed by the world. But this temptation, frequently withstood, is by and by outlived by the full-grown soldier of the Cross. And while the hope that many of the present temptations may sooner or later be outlived, may be reasonably entertained, yet, while in the flesh, temptations will not altogether disappear. And so the most pious saint should constantly watch and pray, lest he enter into temptation.

The last step to take, to reach the highest plane of Christian living, is to help others to overcome their temptations. Use every opportunity to aid and encourage others to stand fast. This may be done by our example, and by our presence. In the presence of some brethren and sisters, no evil thoughts enter our mind. During the perilous years of adolescence, young Christians need the sympathy of those who have passed those years successfully and their experience and counsel will be very helpful, if heeded.

There are two periods when we are practically free from temptation. These times are when we sleep and when we work. The critical time of temptation is, therefore, between the hours of work and sleep. To help many of our fellow-men by way of keeping temptation away from them, we need to provide means of spending their leisure hours properly and profitably.

But the surest and best help we can give the tempted ones is to bring them to Christ. He alone can save. His strong arm is sufficient to uphold the sin-stained soul. "Ask the Savior to help you, comfort, strengthen and keep you. He is willing to save you. He will carry you through."

The Annual Church Visit.

BY S. N. M'CANN.

In Four Parts.—Part One.

THE annual church visit is a bit of polity peculiar to the Church of the Brethren. It is often misunderstood by both our own and other people. A misconception, in reference to its purpose and work, often causes it to work harm instead of good. This is especially true in places where our people are not well known. It is also true with members who have not been raised in the Brethren church, or who are cold and often worldly.

The wrong impression is often left by a lack of spirituality on the part of those making the visit. It is often made in such a hurried way that it loses its spiritual design, both on the one making it and on the one being visited. If it is worth doing it is worth doing right.

I well remember the impressions made on me as a boy when two of our brethren would come to our home to visit my mother. Curiosity gave place to a feeling of devotion when they would send to the fields and have the different members of the family present when they extended the visit, especially when they took time to read a portion of God's Word and pray. Those extending the visit can never know how much good they do in homes where there are children, if they take time for a little service of devotion with the family. The devotion, and conversation about the church and her work, along with the questions asked lead to conviction and conversion in many cases.

If those extending the visit are in such a rush as to barely have time to ask the questions in a hurried way, they leave unfavorable impressions, especially upon the non-members and the cold members. If they take time and talk about every thing but spiritual matters, they again miss a grand opportunity for Christ. The church visit is a great opportunity to build up our people spiritually. I fear we are not awake to the privilege granted in this part of our church work. It is a matter of too little concern and prayer by very many upon whom the duty falls. It has such great possibilities in it for good that one could well spend a season of fasting and prayer before he risks going on the visit.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive" is doubly true when one gives himself to a work of this kind in the Spirit of the Master. The spiritual uplift to one going on the visit filled with a desire to do the will of the Master only, is worth more than the extra time it costs if such results can be measured by such values. Then the blessing and help that one who is Spirit-filled brings into the hearts and homes visited, can never be valued in this world. In a church where there is but little or no pastoral work done the visit should be a veritable spiritual feast to the home. We can never know how much of its spiritual life and prosperity the church owes to our good and saintly old deacons. May the Lord bless them and make them to realize what a blessing they can be to the church!

The Yoke of Christ.

Matt. 11: 28-30.

BY JOHN ZUCK.

ABOUT four miles east and one mile south of Tipton, Iowa, there is an old wooden yoke, formerly used on oxen to break up these fertile prairies. It now hangs on the owner's windmill tower, with the year of its use marked in large figures, as a witness to the early pioneer days of the county. This homely and simple relic often starts a train of thought in the mind of the old settler as he passes by. So Jesus may have pointed out to his hearers some man with his team of oxen, as he was passing by. The oxen, knowing their heavy load, panting and chafing under the galling influences of their yoke, were goaded on, though wearied and tired they were. Then Christ would say unto the people, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

With much force and appropriateness this message comes to the sin-burdened and sin-wearied soul. This is a glorious invitation, and so universal that it extends to the ends of the earth.

In olden times the yoke was an emblem of slavery, which may find, in our own time, a counterpart, whose bands are like those of iron, heavy, grievous, and hard to break. Thus Israel found it in Egypt, and God only was able to liberate. They found it again after dwelling in the land of Canaan, as the curse of disobedience, and were carried down into Babylon.

Disobedience to God is a great sin. It yokes souls to Satan and makes them his servants. He is not at all particular whether he secures his purpose in labor or leisure, state or church, politics or religion, and is willing to make any compromise possible, to bind souls to the world, the flesh and his Satanic majesty.

In coming to the days of the apostles we find some Jewish Christians becoming "entangled again with the yoke of bondage," which may have had a wider application than to circumcision, and had reference to their own traditions as well, by which they made void the commandments of God by their own traditions. Peter, in discussing this matter in Acts 15: 10, warns in these words, "Why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?"

Now, the world recognizes the utility and power of the various yokes which it imposes, to accomplish its purposes. Their organizations are established and held together by means of oaths, orders, laws and such regulations as will make their efficiency possible. But the great inconsistency of the followers of Christ being yoked with these worldly orders, lodges and oath-bound societies is severely criticised by that eminent apostle to the Gentiles,—the Apostle Paul. Hear him: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. 6: 14-18).

The goddess of this world has her yoke, and a most galling and tyrannical one it is. It is known as "Madam Fashion." Through the avenues of the eye and a vain heart, the fashionplate halter is slipped on; then Satan leads his easy victim whithersoever he will.

Jesus, seeing and knowing all this, and our great need of something better; that we may be "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people," has extended unto us the blessed invitation, "Come unto me. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." Let us not overlook the fact that the yoke is an instrument that unites two together. To take the yoke of Christ is to be joined to him. Joined to his body, the church; his head,—the mind of Christ; having his Spirit,—the Spirit of God; hearing, believing and obeying his Word,—the Gospel of our salvation.

We notice here the preparation for the yoke of Christ. This is needful, as much so as in the days of John the Baptist. The invitation is to those who labor, are weary and heavy laden. Those who are burdened with sin, are entreated to come to him for rest. This they do by faith and repentance, as a preparatory work to be joined to Christ. The next step is to put on the yoke fully in the ordinance of holy baptism,—being baptized into Christ, thus putting on Christ.

Let us say, at this point, that full submission and obedience are the golden bows that constitute the covenant yoke of Jesus Christ. Submission and obedience to God on the part of man, out of a heart of love, from the creature to the Creator has ever been the true foundation in securing and maintaining fellowship with God. It may be stated, in a broad sense, that the yoke of Christ embraces his entire system of religion, rather than any particular part of it.

Another important point is that the yoke implies restraint. The unruly ox is obliged to walk with his partner, though not always with apparent willingness; yet, by taking on the yoke, we are brought into such close relationship with Jesus, that he can teach us not only by precept but by example as we journey with him. He says, "Learn of me."

Jesus is the Perfect Teacher. His lessons are so graded, that they are adapted to our needs in every stage of life. His yoke is easy, and his burden is light. Glorious truth! This should bring rejoicing to every heart; it surely comforts every meek and lowly heart. It is easy because it is padded with the love of God, and the balm of Gilead soothes and heals every punctured sore of sin. It is light because Jesus has borne so much for us, and still is such a present help in every time of need. His yoke is easy and his burden is light because we bear it in love. Love knows no burdens. It lightens labor and sweetens the most anxious cares. And let me say to the young convert, who has taken up the cross, Set a high estimate on the crown. Seek for fuller companionship with the Lord through his people; and you shall find the burden lighter and lighter the longer you bear it.

Then, too, you will find many places of rest along the way. Christ is a continual oasis in a weary land. Heavenly places in Christ Jesus bring refreshing showers of Divine grace from the presence of the Lord. Crave earnestly the Holy Spirit and its life-giving power. Always be found in duty's path, meek and lowly in heart, bearing every trial with patience, "and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

The Writings of Solomon.

BY D. HAYS.

THE writings of Solomon, as we have them in the Bible, are the "Song of Songs," "Book of Proverbs," and "Ecclesiastes," and according to Dr. Smith, these books represent three stages of his life:

1. "The Song of Songs" brings before us the brightness of his youth.

2. "The Book of Proverbs" represents the stage of practical, prudential thought.

3. "Ecclesiastes" is the confession of a man who has sinned in giving away to selfishness and sensuality who has paid the penalty of that sin in satiety and weariness of life, "when all was found to be vanity and vexation of spirit," but who has, through all this, been under the discipline of a Divine education, and has learned from it the lesson which God meant to teach him.

By reference to 1 Kings 4: 32, 33, we learn that Solomon "spake three thousand proverbs: and his songs were a thousand and five. And he spake of trees, from the cedar that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes."

Of the thousand and five songs, "Canticles" alone finds a place in the Bible. It was written when Solomon was a young man. It is an allegory, and of all poems it is the brightest. In it we see the beautiful and touching in home and country life; the heart-yearnings for a glimpse of the "beloved," the sheep and the Shepherd, the "Rose of Sharon," and the "Lily of the Valley," the "apple tree" among the trees of the wood, and the banquet of fruit under his shadow. Then there is awakened all the intensity of interest in movement and an appeal to the heart's most tender emotions: "The voice of my beloved," "Behold he cometh," "leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills," "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away," with the passing of winter,—the blooming of flowers, and the "voice of the turtle again in the land." How intensely human is the anti-climax, near the close of the poem, "Love is strong as death," "Jealousy is cruel as the grave"!

In the Book of Proverbs the poet has become the philosopher, and it may be considered a book of daily lessons in practical wisdom for all ages and states of men and women. Its utterances are antithetic. Wisdom is religion,—folly is irreligion. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom. Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor." "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger." The truth of the last proverb is practically self-evident. A business man once said, "My business is to make money, not enemies. The first thing I do, when I get angry, is to conquer myself. When I am cool and collected I tell the truth to the person who made me angry. Nobody gets mad at the truth if told without temper."

But at times the contrast is not in the construction. It is in the persons or things employed, as may be seen in Prov. 6: 6: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise; which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in summer, and gathereth her food in harvest."

Solomon here refers the sluggard to the ant, not only as an example of industry but of the provident use of time: She gathereth her food in harvest, and enjoys the fruit of her labors in winter.

Man, like the ant, has his summer for laying up a store for the winter of life, when all power of providing will be over, and if he neglect that season, wretched, indeed, will be his penury and his suffering in the decline of life.

In the closing part of Solomon's career he gives us the lesson of his life in Ecclesiastes. He first gives us his experience in seeking the chief good in life. He discovers that happiness is not in the getting nor in the possession of this world's goodly things. He enters the field of philosophy, of times and of seasons, and finds it a vain pursuit. He continues his search in business, and meets with envy and not help. Then, in the search of religion, he finds happiness to be God's gift. When he applies the test, he finds that the money seeker is never satisfied. It gives no rest, no peace. Wealth is not the chief good,—it is left at death. After a weary search through all the pursuits of life, he admits failure. Then he comes to the close of life, and finds the chief good in charity, duty, and fidelity: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."

The Beast of Revelation.

BY D. E. CRIPE.

THE beast of the thirteenth chapter of Revelation has been a great mystery to many, and different commentators have given different views as to its meaning. It bears characteristics that are similar to the four beasts described in the seventh chapter of Daniel. This beast rose out of the sea. It had the feet of a bear, the form of a leopard and the mouth of a lion. It had seven heads and ten horns. One of these heads had received a deadly wound, but it had healed. It had great power, which the dragon—Satan, the devil,—had given it.

It is not understood that this was a real, literal beast, but that it is a type or figure of something that pertained to that particular age and condition of the church and the world. Yet from the wide influence the beast exerts on the affairs of man, from the intimate connection it has with the false prophet and from the special doom meted out to them both, it seems that the beast, in one form or another, belongs to every time and every dispensation.

The beast, as described by John, stands for cruel, ferocious, destroying power. It is a type of the selfishness of man which resorts to physical, brute force to compel to obedience, or to destroy his fellowman. This is found in every age and in every race of man. The first account we have of this beast is when Cain killed his brother Abel. This beast is the dominating power in every war, in every oppression, in every persecution.

This beast exerted its power in every ancient religion. People were compelled to worship, not as they chose, but as some one who had power and authority over them, told them to. When Christ came into the world and instituted a religion founded on love and mercy, it was a terrible wound on the head of the beast. The beast could have nothing to do with this kind of a religion, and therefore it seemed to be a deadly wound. As long as the church was faithful to the teaching of Christ, and love and mercy and self-denial ruled, the beast's wound could not heal. Then the Roman Emperor joined the church, and again brute force was made use of by those who pretended to be at the head of the church; the army was employed by them. Then the deadly wound of the head of the beast was healed,—the beast could again exert the power the dragon had given him.

The Revelator saw another beast arise out of the land, having the appearance of a lamb, but the voice of a dragon. This exercised the power of the first beast, and fittingly represents the apostate church. This second beast caused those who dwell in the earth to worship the first beast,—to worship the selfish, domineering power of man. He caused all to receive a mark in their right hand or in their foreheads, and those who had not this mark could neither buy nor sell. In our day this is coming into fulfillment. The beast, as shown by the selfish power of some organizations, is trying to prevent all who have not this mark in their hand or in their foreheads, to obtain work—to sell their labor—and unless they can sell the only thing which they have that will bring money, they can not buy. Here is the patience of the saints.

The beast—the selfishness of man manifested in brute force on those who are weaker—has caused immeasurable hardship, misery and suffering in the world. It has doomed to poverty, to wretchedness or to hopeless bondage many of the fairest of the children of men. It has ruined homes, laid cities in ashes, and wrecked human lives. It has filled prisons and drenched fields in blood. As long as this beast roams the earth, general peace and happiness cannot dwell here.

But prophecy gives us hope that a better day is coming. When Christ shall come again, the beast shall be taken, and with him the false prophet that deceived the people, and they shall both be cast alive into the lake of fire. Then comes the millennium of Christ's reign on earth. The beast of selfishness must be cast into the fire before peace and joy and happiness can rule on the earth.

Stillwater, Okla.

THE eyes are the two light houses of the harbor of the immortal soul. God, to educate and to bless and to help, gave us two lamps to light our path—a golden lamp and a silver lamp—a golden lamp set on the sapphire mantel of the day, a silver lamp set on the jet mantel of the night.

THE ROUND TABLE

His Melodies.

BY OMA KARN.

"Sometimes God sees what harsh discordant things
Our hearts are grown."

How this must pain his tender heart! Our will is out of touch with his own, and the music that our life is giving forth is very inharmonious. Instead of the lofty, inspiring strains of peace and joy, we hear the low, discordant notes of variance. Instead of the active, willing service that springs from love, we see compulsive obedience, or, what is yet worse, no action at all,—a dead instrument, silent and unresponsive.

And so the great Master-Musician, moved by his great love for us, comes,

"And sets about to tune the jarring strings
With touch his own."

Quite often it is found necessary to tune these jarring strings to the minor chord of sorrow and trouble, in order that the perfect music may sound forth. This means pain for us. Every touch on the keyboard starts the hidden recesses of our heart to vibrating, and sounds the deep abysses of our wrongdoing.

"Full well we know, though quivering with the strain, Whose hand it is."

But sometimes, even with this knowledge, our will refuses to yield, and music, more harsh and discordant than ever, sounds forth from our life. But the wise fingers of the Great Tuner strike again and again,

"And presently there steals, through all our pain,
His melodies."

He knows where these melodies are, and what discipline will call them forth. He knows what key in the human soul to touch, in order to bring out its sweetest and most perfect music. Those who have heard the nightingale in his native southland, tell us that the silence and stillness of the night time,—the only time they sing—adds much to the sweetness of the music he pours forth.

So it is with the human soul. The sweetest songs are those which tremble upward in the night of sorrow. Not until the note that ascends to God's perfect ear, tells of having passed the falling tears of penitence, and pierced the clouds of human frailty, is the Great Tuner satisfied, and not until then are his melodies heard.

Lutheran Theology.

BY QUINCY LECKRONE.

On page 145 of Luther's "Smaller Catechism," published by the Lutheran Book Concern, Columbus, Ohio, in 1896, we have the following question and answer:

"What constitutes baptism?
"That a person be sprinkled with, or immersed, in water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

In a work entitled "Compend of Lutheran Theology," by Dr. Leonard Hutten, professor at Wittenberg, revised and approved by the theological faculties of Leipsic and Wittenberg, and published in 1609, we have this question and answer:

"In the act of baptism, what does the immersion into water, and the drawing out from, signify?
"It signifies that the old Adam is to be drowned in us by daily contrition and repentance, and that he is to die with all his sins and evil lusts, and again come out and arise a new man, who is to live forever in righteousness and holiness before God. In the sixth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans Paul says: 'We are buried with him by baptism into death,' etc."

I quote from a translation made at Gettysburg in 1868.

From this it appears that the Lutheran theology is pregnant with the doctrine of trine immersion, acknowledging it as the true mode of baptism.

In the discussion of the subject of baptism, in the above-named work, it is repeatedly referred to as "an immersion in water." Nowhere does it recognize any other mode, showing that at that time,—more than three hundred years ago,—at Wittenberg, Luther's old home and college, the followers of Luther accepted his teaching on the subject of immersion for baptism, as well as that of the Eucharist.

Our Church.

BY M. T. HERMAN.

"How is your church?" Our church is fine. The editors of the GOSPEL MESSENGER suggest that we expose our condition. As the value of some ideas becomes apparent only on their being tested, I hasten to try the experiment. Our church is in the city, holding her own in a competitive and active environment.

The helpful influences are: (1) A country unsurpassed in resources. (2) The constancy of God's favors.

The hindrances are: (1) We are constituted mostly of migratory and transient members. (2) The restlessness and incorrigibility, incident to being unsettled. (3) Waywardness, arising from external associates and associations. Where young members are scarce, and those already in the fold are untrained, they are disposed to fall into company where it is impossible to teach them as they should be. And, again, many parents are too indulgent with their children, permitting them to adhere so fully to fashionable affairs that they would rather withdraw from membership than be disciplined. (4) The disposition to go fishing in the neighbor's pond.

Hear this parable: A certain widow had five sons, whose age and experience made them abundantly able successfully to manage their homestead. She, however, insisted on hiring a distant neighbor's son to manage the seeding, harvesting and driving the fine team to market and church. The third year she was amazed to find that her sons had left home and the creditors came to claim the property for debts.

A Bad Liver.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

THERE are times when the best of men suffer from low spirits. There seems to be no apparent cause. Everything goes wrong. The whole kingdom of God seems to be out of order. People, when thus affected, become cranky and disagreeable. Everything is out of line, and everybody is wrong but themselves. No difference what people say; they look at it the other way. Their greatest pleasure seems to be in being miserable, and making others feel the same way. They see everything on the dark side. In fact, to them there is no bright side,—not even a silver lining to the cloud. In their estimation everything is going to the bad. They create an atmosphere that makes all who come in touch with them feel a blueness from which it takes some time to recover.

What is wrong? They are good people. Their heart is in the right place. The trouble is with the liver. There is some imperfect action in the intricate processes of the digestive and assimilative organs of the system. There is an accumulation of matter, somewhere, that interferes with the delicate machinery of that mysterious something we call life. The remedy for such a trouble is pills rather than discipline. Doctors can do a better work than deacons. The patient needs pity rather than blame. People are more frequently bad because of a bad liver than because of a bad heart.

The moral of this is that we should preach and practice more of the gospel of good health.

The Extremes.

BY NELSON SHIRK.

IN the Parable of the Talents we have, what might be called, the minimum, medium and maximum of opportunity. When we look at the first and the last by themselves, we find the greater to be five times larger than the smaller.

To the person who has but one talent, the temptation may come to think that the little he can do is so insignificant that it is hardly of any account. Let such a one remember that when we use an opportunity to the full, we, in a way, stand equal to those who have done the same with larger chances. Besides this, the Lord can use small accomplishments, as we look at them, in important places, so that the results may be really great and far-reaching.

The peculiar temptation to the individual who stands at the other extreme with his five talents, may be that of becoming satisfied too soon, so that not all of the power is used. To find oneself in advance of the average of others, in accomplishment, may produce a tendency to self-satisfaction and complacency, that will often occupy the heart when all of the thoughts and energies should be bent in the direction of accomplishing all that is possible. Paul's words, "As much as in me is," would be very good for us all to keep uppermost in our thoughts. In fact, it should be so!

Mt. Morris, Ill.

Think of It!

Yes, only think of it! A little boy scarcely ten years old was threatened for some time ahead with a severe whipping. The brutal,—or shall we say fool parent?—wholly unfit to have charge of a child, did not think the whipping, the hurting of the tender flesh of the poor helpless child, sufficient to gratify his brutality, and so tortured the mind of the over-sensitive little one by deferring the punishment several days. During this time the poor little fellow brooded over the coming torture, sleeping little at night and receiving no cheering word during the day, till the long-tortured mind could stand it no longer, and when they went to call the child, the morning the punishment was to be indulged in, they found the poor little body beyond their power to harm. With all of what might have been a beautiful, happy life before him, the small hands had taken that life rather than meet and endure what it was powerless to otherwise avert.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

How God Wants Us to Walk.

Deut. 13: 4.

For Sunday Evening, June 25, 1911.

I. Followers of God.—Eph. 5: 1, 2; Luke 14: 27; John 8: 12; 10: 27; 12: 26; 21: 22; 1 Peter 2: 21; Rev. 14: 4.

II. How to Walk.—Rom. 6: 4; 8: 1; 2 Cor. 5: 7; Gal. 5: 16; Eph. 4: 1; 5: 15; Col. 2: 6; 1 John 1: 7; 2: 6.

III. What Is Meant,—(a) By walking before God (Psa. 56: 13)? (b) By walking in the light (Isa. 2: 5; 1 John 1: 7)? (c) "As children of light" (Eph. 5: 8)? (d) "Follow his steps" (1 Peter 2: 21)?

"The Lord requireth of thee, to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6: 8).

PRAYER MEETING

Does Religion Pay?

1 Tim. 4: 8; 1 Cor. 3: 18-23.

For Week Beginning June 25, 1911.

1. Godliness Always Profitable.—It is best in this life, and the only passport to the joys beyond. In substantial returns it is better than the most profitable financial investment, which, at best, is subject to the vicissitudes of all things earthly, and liable to fail in the hour of direst need. Religion returns to us daily all we put in, and a bountiful interest besides. Beyond all it guarantees "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled" at the end of our days (1 Peter 1: 3, 4).

2. Our Religion a Present Blessing.—Too many put the fruition of a godly life in the far-off future. Let it be remembered that religion, as Christ taught it, is a condition of present joy and of ever-continuing blessedness. It is the sweetest, happiest thing in all this world. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace" (Prov. 3: 17).

3. Religion a Joy of the Heart.—Christ meant the Christian life to be one of deep and abounding joy. When he said, "The Kingdom of God is within you," he meant to imply that even now we may have a foretaste of heavenly joy,—an inner heaven in the heart. We need not wait until we die to taste the joys of everlasting bliss. Of a pious old brother it was said,—and truly, too,—"Heaven was in him before he was in heaven." Another aged saint, while on his deathbed, remorsefully confessed, "If I had known twenty-five years ago what I know now, I might have walked in the light of the New Jerusalem all these years." The Christian life may and should be a joyous experience to all. All the way to heaven IS HEAVEN (1 Peter 1: 8, 9).

HOME AND FAMILY

Lead Thy Mother.

SELECTED BY ANNA SHENK.

Lead thy mother tenderly
Down life's steep decline;
Once her arm was thy support,
Now she leans on thine.

See upon her loving face
Those deep lines of care,
Think it was her toiling for thee,
Left the record there.

Ne'er forget her tireless watch
Kept by day and night,
Taking from her steps the grace,
From her eye the light.

Cherish well her faithful heart,
Which, through weary years,
Echoed with its sympathy
All the smiles and tears.

Thank God for thy mother's love,
Guard the precious boon,
For the bitter parting hour
Cometh all too soon.

When the grateful tenderness
Loses power to save,
Earth will hold no dearer spot
Than thy mother's grave.

Sensitiveness.

BY NANCY D. UNDERHILL.

DEAR, sweet mother used to say to a certain child, "You are too sensitive, daughter. I wish you were not so sensitive." Evidently something is wrong where one is always feeling hurt. Can it be that the sense of feeling is too keen? I think not. One who is keenly sensitive, in reality, is just as much alive to the touch of kindness as to the opposite. So let us cultivate the appreciative sense, and be ever alert to catch the lovely sounds that gently whisper in our ears,—notes of kindness, sympathy, hope, cheer and courage! Let us have a faithful receiver for the wireless messages that speed through space to those only who are prepared for acceptance. Having this well-timed receiver, let us have also a reciprocative attitude toward the right kind of messages,—those of kindness, love, hope and cheerfulness. In this way may our happiness, all through life, be increased and multiplied; but that is the smallest blessing derived. The real benefit is in having our capability for usefulness toward others greatly multiplied.

But there are other kinds of messages,—words which sting and hurt. They are just little, thoughtless atoms of dust, flying through the air. We don't like dust, but how foolish it would be to let it make us miserable and grouchy, cranky and cross. While those atoms are bound to touch our open receiver, we need not have ready a costly apparatus for sending reciprocal messages of a similar kind. Just let us brush them off from memory's shining face, wash them away with a few tears, if necessary, but never convert them into balls of mud, to be hurled at some poor human soul.

A tiny scratch upon the surface of one's finger hurts far worse than a cut which pierces through till the blow flows. Leave the scratch alone! It will soon heal. But the deep cut,—bind it up in its own blood, and do not probe it. It, too, will heal without much pain, if covered and left alone. When sorrows and griefs come to us, they are best healed by carefully covering and ceasing to think about them. "The blood is the life." When we are deeply hurt, the best treatment for our wounds is to let a few drops of life-blood flow; then bandage closely. Let us give a few moments or days of our busy lives to the helpfulness and blessing of others, especially those who need it most,—those who hurt us.

When we have sacrificed a little for those who grieved us, have poured out for them a little of our best,—our very own life-blood, that which was of real value to us,—some of our precious time, some of our strongest effort, when we have really loved them and so prayed, worked and smiled for them, there will be formed for our deep wounds, a clean, pure bandage of spotless linen, white and comforting, which will afford protection until all is well. It may be a bandage of love, the protection of a good name, the comfort of reciprocal kindness, but whatever we may choose to call it, it is the right kind of dressing for wounds. Exposure is altogether harmful. Bind up the wounds in a clean cloth, and turn a smiling face to look for some little chance to bless somebody, to comfort some one,—make some one's heart glad. The deeper the wound, the greater need of a bandage. So never let us expose those trials which hurt and grieve us, but resolutely put them out of sight, cease to think of them, and vigorously apply the healing antidote of kindness to others. If the sore is severe, we will not care to waste time in idle waiting for chances to do a kindness. We will seek them. We will make opportunities. So the little experiences, which might have been harmful, may be turned to be the greatest blessings, helping us onward and upward toward the heights of purity and perfection. Let sensitiveness be used as a barometer toward others, so we may know how to approach them, and be ready with our knowledge to pour oil upon the troubled waters, healing their wounded hearts with the oil of love.

Beautiful Letters.

BY WEALTHY A. BURKHOLDER.

THE Apostle Paul was truly a great man. He was great in many ways. He was an humble man, a sincere man, one who was ever ready to help the weak and erring. That fact alone is a sure test of greatness and strength. The weak and vacillating have no desire to help any save themselves. I have just finished reading "Onesimus," by Bro. Brumbaugh, and while I thought I always admired Paul's letters to the different churches, I now read them with greater interest. They seem much plainer and more interesting. Paul seems to me now a still greater hero. In prison because he had the courage to preach the Gospel, he is still not bound. There are characters that can not be restrained, and he is one of them. He was allowed to have his own "hired house" where he could hold meetings and instruct on all lines, the many who resorted there.

How wisely Paul improved the passing hours by giving instruction to those in need,—instruction which has come down to the churches and individuals of today and, if closely followed, will make them strong and pure. Paul has a message for each one,—a word of encouragement for all. He writes to the young as well as to the aged. He aims to show the youth how to live a pure, useful life, and how to be an example, and he writes to the aged and instructs them how to care for the young.

Paul's love for Philemon and Onesimus is striking indeed. They were both converted under his teachings and his plan to get them together again, after Onesimus was converted, shows the true greatness that Paul possessed. The lesson is a beautiful one and should touch every heart with tenderness. The master and slave were brought together, but now as Christian brethren. The more you study the subject, the more beauty will appear.

If we, as individuals, in our homes and in the churches, were fully to carry out the teachings of Paul's beautiful letters, as we have them recorded, there would be no need to send out committees to settle troubles. There would be no need for a "Dress Committee" and, instead, the money and time that must be spent in this way could be used to help preach the Gospel to the lost.

There seems to be no phase of life that Paul does not touch, and then, when we remember that this same Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, was once a persecutor of the church he now loves, we are amazed. But Paul says he did his work of persecution ignorantly, thinking that he was doing God's service. No wonder he was so willing to be beaten and punished. He felt he deserved it all, and was still willing to labor willingly for his Master.

Parents, do not fail to place "Onesimus, the Runaway Slave," before your children and encourage them to read it, and make clearer to their minds this beautiful letter of Paul. Get them interested in Bible stories, little by little, and in this way great good can be accomplished. Young people must be taught what to read.

Home.

BY LIZZIE W. HOOVER.

WHAT a hallowed name! What fascination this name holds to our hearts and how sweet it sounds to our ears! "There is no place like home," is an expression often used when one enters its threshold after a long journey. While absent, one may form new associations and friendships which bring joy to the heart, but it does not satisfy the real joy of home. How our weary spirits yearn after repose, and we seek to find it in the refuge which home supplies! It is the sacred spot to which we, as weary travelers, can retreat, to find rest from the fatigue of a journey. It is the place of rest where we find needed retirement after the busy cares and trials of the day. It is a refuge that protects us from perishing in the cold winter's blast. Who would not have a home where he can find peace and joy, safety and rest?

All of this, and infinitely more, is true of that home in heaven. The Savior, while addressing his disciples, speaks of that eternal home. He said: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you" (John 14:2). They were almost disconsolate in consequence of the intimation that he, their Lord and Master, was soon to leave them, but he comforts them with the promise of a home he would prepare for them. It is a precious promise,—this home of eternal bliss and happiness! Here is a home where all his people can rest from the perplexities and vicissitudes of life's journey, and where they are secure from the storms of trials and tribulations.

"O happy place, O blest abode,
To be with God, accept his Word!"

Heaven is a home for the aged, who are weary and tired with the toils of earth, and who have directed their frail barks over the troubled waters of life, for many years, toward that celestial city. It is a home for those in the vigor of life, if they have surrendered all to God. It is a home for all who will forsake sin and walk in the way that Jesus has prepared. Beautiful home,—at last to be there with loved ones, and to be with God. Home for evermore! Through the rich grace of Jesus Christ, may we all reach it!

Bad-Tempered Christians.

IT is related that a young man went one day to the famous New England preacher, Jonathan Edwards, to ask for his daughter.

"You can't have her," said Mr. Edwards.

"But I love her."

"No matter, you can't have her."

"But she loves me, too."

"I say you can't have her."

"But I am well off and can support her."

"You can't have her, I tell you."

"Why not, Mr. Edwards? What have you against me?"

"Nothing."

"Well, then, why can't I have Emily?"

"Because I think you are a pretty decent sort of a man; too good for her."

"What? Mr. Edwards, what in the world do you mean?"

"She's got a wicked temper, and you wouldn't be happy with her."

"But I thought she was a Christian."

"So she is, young man; so she is. But before you have lived as long as I have, you'll find that there are some people in this world that the grace of God can live with, but you can't."

Those personal weaknesses which we have not the resolution and strength of character to correct, we soon have not the honesty to confess or condemn; the dishonesty thus permitted soon brings in a measure of judicial blindness, and next we not only excuse but commend the fault.

SIX were recently added to the fold in the Fairview church, Pa.

BRO. DANIEL CHAMBERS and wife, of Middleton, Mich., expect to spend the summer in Oklahoma.

THE address of Bro. John W. Miller, late of Chicago, will for the present be R. D. 39, Grottoes, Va.

BRO. CHAS. D. BONSACK is to be with the Elk Lick church, Pa., in a series of meetings beginning June 17.

JULY 8, Bro. J. S. Zimmerman, of Waterloo, Iowa, is to begin a series of meetings in the Morrill church, Minn.

BRO. JOHN E. METZGER, our field agent, will visit among the churches in Southern Indiana until after harvest.

BRO. R. H. NICODEMUS, of Chicago, Ill., is to be with the Harlan church, Mich., June 25, in a series of meetings.

BRO. J. M. MOHLER's recent series of meetings at the Claar church, Pa., closed with fourteen accessions by baptism.

OUR printers are at work on the Full Report. It will be found an interesting publication. Price, twenty-five cents.

THE members of the Indian Creek church, Iowa, are now engaged in a series of meetings conducted by Bro. H. A. Stahl, of Glade, Pa.

TWELVE were baptized and one reclaimed during a series of meetings at Camden, Ind., conducted by Bro. J. D. Mishler, of South Whitley, Ind.

DURING a series of meetings at Reading, Ohio, conducted by Bro. G. S. Strausbaugh, of Fredericktown, Ohio, seven were baptized and one reclaimed.

BRO. S. G. BUCHER, one of the ministers of the Astoria, Ill., congregation, called at the MESSENGER sanctum last week, while passing through our city on a business trip.

BRO. OWEN BARNHART, of Custer, Mich., has decided to move to Kentucky, to take up mission work in that State. His labors will be greatly appreciated in that needy field.

WE expect to have the Minutes of the late Annual Meeting ready to mail inside of a few days. Single copy, five cents. Price, when ordered in quantities, for churches, two cents per copy.

ON account of his failing health it has been thought best for Bro. Lemuel Hillery to spend the summer in Eastern Central Michigan. In addition to being troubled with asthma, he has not yet recovered from a bad fall down the cellar stairway last winter.

THE District Meeting of Oregon, Washington and Idaho will be held in the Coquille Valley Congregation at Myrtle Point, Oregon, July 13 and 14. For further particulars, please refer to the special notice among the "Notes from our Correspondents."

BRO. GEO. R. ELLER, of Kansas, changes his address from Grainfield to Grinnell, R. D. 2.

BRO. E. M. COBB and wife spent a few days in Elgin, packing their goods to ship to Raisin, Cal., their present place of residence. Bro. Cobb conducted services in our church last Sunday evening.

A MOST refreshing series of meetings was held recently in the McClave church, Colo. Bro. C. A. Miller, of Westphalia, Kans., proclaimed the Word, causing seven dear souls to make the good confession.

BRO. ISAIAH F. RAIRIGH, of Clarksville, Mich., was one of the recent callers at the Publishing House. It was his first visit to the House, and he was much pleased with the growth and prosperity of the business.

CHRONIC critics need to remember the pointed advice of a recent speaker: "Half an eye is sufficient for the badness in folks; be quick to see the goodness in people. Smile upon that, and it will grow and strengthen."

BRO. RUFUS WYATT, of Joplin, Mo., is to be with the Jonathan Creek church, Ohio, in a series of meetings, beginning June 18. Bro. Wyatt is to locate in that church if the necessary arrangements, now on foot, can be perfected.

SOME one classifies the church members into these two groups,—the one is overcoming the world, and the other is being overcome by the world. A pertinent question for each member to think about, and classify himself accordingly.

THOSE who paid twenty-five cents for the St. Joseph Daily Gazette, containing the Annual Meeting news, and failed to get the full set, ten issues, can secure the missing numbers by writing Bro. Virgil C. Finnell, 1643 Lyon St., Des Moines, Iowa.

THE offering at the late Annual Meeting foots up to $14,175.02, with a promise of $600 to come later. While the offering falls over $2,000 short of what was raised last year, still it is more than what was given at the Harrisonburg Meeting in 1909. Considering the attendance, the St. Joseph offering may be regarded as encouraging.

BRO. L. T. HOLSINGER, of Rossville, Ind., writes us that his son, Frank Holsinger, of Nampa, Idaho, has just died of pneumonia, and will be brought back and buried at Pyrmont, his State. Our earnest brother and his family are passing through some dark valleys, and they sometimes feel that the clouds are overlapping each other.

IT is not too early to plan for a suitable observance of the Fourth,—one that will do credit to our holy profession, and thus exert a good influence over the community around us. The happy results experienced in many places on former occasions, may well be an incentive to others. It is one way of letting our light shine most effectually.

LAST Sunday Bro. Galen B. Royer filled the pulpit at Rockford, in the absence of the pastor, Bro. P. R. Keltner, while Bro. J. H. B. Williams conducted the services at Batavia. Bro. S. S. Blough, the late pastor, has closed his work there and moved to North Manchester, Ind., where he is to fill the chair of the Bible Department of the college.

BRO. D. W. KURTZ, pastor of the First Church of the Brethren, Philadelphia, Pa., on his return from the Conference, called at the MESSENGER sanctum. He was with us last Sunday and conducted the morning services. He delivered a splendid address on "The Doctrine of the Church," and was listened to with much more than ordinary interest.

UNDER date of May 19 Sister Mary N. Quinter writes us of her safe arrival at Bombay, India. She says that her trip through Switzerland, on the way, will serve as an inspiration in her work. The voyage was also pleasant, but best of all, she adds, is to be in India again and engage in the work to which she has been called. Her address is Jalalpor, Surat District, India.

ANNUAL MEETING NOTES.

LAST week we closed these notes in the midst of an enthusiastic Temperance Meeting, held in the Assembly Hall on Monday evening. Considering the warm weather, the meeting was well attended, and the interest could hardly have been better.

Such speakers as Brethren J. J. Yoder, D. W. Kurtz, D. L. Miller and P. J. Blough were on the program, and it is thought that what was said made this one of the most helpful and inspiring meetings held during the Conference week.

We have reached a period in our history when our temperance work is being looked upon as one of the most important missions we have on hand. We may yet have to set apart a full half day to discuss methods to create sentiment, and to strengthen the cause in the minds of the people.

The Sisters' Aid Society conducted a meeting in the Assembly Hall late on the afternoon of Monday and, though not so largely attended, it means a good deal for the future. It may not be many years before the sisters will be calling for a half day to be placed at their disposal. They feel that there is work for them to do, and they are not only doing some of it now, but they are getting ready for more in the future.

Another afternoon meeting concerning the Child Rescue Work, with Bro. D. E. Cripe presiding, means, so far as the Conference is concerned, the beginning of another work among us that is destined to grow. There is, today, no greater open door for our people in this country, than the care and training of the orphans of the land. We have done much in the interest of the aged poor, but we have neglected the orphans.

In these notes we have not sufficiently emphasized the importance of the meeting of the District Mission Board. It occurs to us that this movement needs more attention and encouragement than it is receiving. If we are ever to evangelize the country as it should be, it must be done through the District Mission Board.

Some of these Boards are doing a splendid work, but this can not be said of all of them. Each Board should annually send a delegate to the Meeting of the Boards at the Conference, with such problems as may be taken up and considered. The mission problem ought to be discussed, and then the information and inspiration received should be carried back to the home Districts.

Then we have not gone into the details of the Educational Meetings, the Sunday-school Meetings and the Bible work. The Christian Workers are looking forward to the time when they will figure more prominently in the church activities, as they cluster around the Annual Meeting.

It will thus be seen that our activities are growing, and that it is only a matter of time when it will be necessary to entrust their interests, during the Conference week, to a general head for proper recognition and the assigning of dates, and for the providing of necessary conveniences.

While the attendance at the St. Joseph Meeting was not so large as at some former meetings, the spirit seems to have been up to any of them. The preaching was especially good, but, on account of the heat, the services could not be enjoyed to the full extent. Hundreds of members absented themselves from these services, only because of the extreme temperature.

Some of the best addresses delivered were listened to by less than two-thirds of the members at the Conference. The defective acoustic properties of the Auditorium had something to do with this, as it was difficult to hear the speakers in some parts of the building.

The absence of the city people from our services was very noticeable. We have no way of accounting for this. And yet they treated our people kindly, according them every necessary privilege, and showed them the utmost consideration.

Tuesday, June 6.

Tuesday, the Conference day, brought better weather. Some rain fell early in the morning, clearing the atmosphere and cooling the air so that we were blessed with what might be considered almost an ideal day.

At an early hour a number of the visiting members left for their homes, greatly reducing the crowd.

At 8 A. M. the Standing Committee came on the platform, at which time there were probably 3,000 people in the Auditorium. An hour later the number exceeded 3,500.

In front of the platform sat 443 delegates, composed principally of brethren and sisters who had reached middle age and past. There were a few old brethren and also a few young members, but the bulk of them were forty and past. They were a body of fine-looking and substantial people, and one could readily see that there were not many professional men among them. Yet there were some, including school-men, physicians and business men.

In a general way they measured up to the Standing Committee in appearance and ability to grapple with questions. It could be seen that they had minds of their own, and would vote as their judgment might dictate.

After a few good songs Bro. I. B. Trout conducted the devotional exercises. Bro. H. C. Early then announced the organization, as already published, viz., Bro. D. M. Garver, Moderator; Bro. P. R. Keltner, Reading Clerk; and Bro. J. M. Blough, Writing Clerk.

We then had the reading of Acts 15, followed by a short address upon the part of the Moderator. The reading of the "Rules" followed; and the meeting was declared open and ready for business.

A number of committees were announced and confirmed, along with the filling of vacancies, as given last week. The only change made was the appointing of Bro. D. N. Eller, instead of Bro. S. Z. Sharp, on the Tract Examining Committee.

Following these announcements the first business of the meeting was to approve the dividing of Eastern Pennsylvania into two Districts,—the new District to be known as Southeastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Eastern New York. This meant the acceptance of Bro. J. Kurtz Miller as a member of the Standing Committee.

The District of Oregon, Washington and Idaho was authorized to divide the District into three parts, as contemplated. By this we may understand that we are to have a larger Standing Committee in the future than we have had this year.

The first report taken up was the paper in regard to anointing. The question had been left to a committee, which recommended no change in our practice in this particular. There was very little said. The question did not produce much controversy.

The paper deferred from last year, asking for the omission of the kiss between the supper and the communion, was taken up and discussed with considerable interest. Strong speeches were made, both for and against the paper, but the Moderator yielded to a pressure for a vote, at a time when a number desired to speak, and it was decided not to grant the request asked for by the paper.

It was thought by a number that the subject was not sufficiently discussed, and for that reason it is likely to come up again, and if it does, our people would better debate it out and settle the question. It has been coming up for years, only to be discussed briefly before a vote was taken. It will be well to let it rest for the present at least.

The lengthy report from the Sunday-school Committee awakened a good deal of interest among the Sunday-school workers. Considerable time was taken up in explaining the purpose and workings of the different sections, and this done it was adopted by a unanimous vote.

The first article calls for a Board of five brethren to be known as the Sunday-school Board, to carry on the Sunday-school work, as authorized by the plan. This Committee was appointed by the Standing Committee, and consists of Bro. D. H. Zigler, of Virginia, for five years; Bro. H. K. Ober, of Pennsylvania, for four years; Bro. Levi Minnich, of Ohio, for three years; Bro. J. M. Mohler, of Missouri, for two years, and Bro. Lafayette Steele, of Indiana, for one year. By virtue of his office, as Sunday-school editor, Bro. I. B. Trout became Secretary of the Board.

At 11 A. M. the rebaptism question was given to the meeting for consideration, and after being discussed a while, the meeting adjourned until 2 P. M.

While the weather was quite an improvement over that of the last few days, it was still warm, and probably two-thirds of the brethren removed their coats, and some their vests.

Never before, in all our history, have we seen so many coatless men in a great convention. Some of them were physicians, some professors and presidents of colleges, some pastors of city churches, a few editors, some farmers, of course, others mechanics, some business men, some rich and others poor, but they sat together with their coats removed, making the situation as endurable as possible.

In front of the large rostrum on which the Standing Committee was seated, there had been constructed, and joined to the rostrum, a platform about six by eight feet, and possibly four feet high. This was occupied by the different speakers when delivering their addresses.

During the Conference, those desiring to speak on a subject were invited, after securing the floor, to come to this platform. Preachers of fine ability, sometimes with coat and even vest removed, would come from the delegates, ascend the flight of steps, and there make their speeches.

This enabled the speakers to be heard all over the hall, and in this respect was eminently satisfactory, but for all classes of men, large and small, short and tall, to appear coatless on a high platform and put their best efforts in speeches, including such pulpit mannerisms as are common to preachers, was a spectacle that is not likely to be witnessed more than once in a generation.

The weather, of course, and the unsatisfactory acoustic properties of the room in which the Conference was held, were an excuse for all of it, for people, both in public and in private, will have comfort if they can get it. One speaker, during the Conference week, slipped on his light coat before stepping onto the platform, and explained his action to the meeting by saying that, while some preachers could afford to appear in the pulpit coatless, he could not.

But enough of this. At 2 P. M. the discussion on the rebaptism question was resumed, and continued until nearly four o'clock. Strong speeches were made on both sides, and it became quite apparent that a satisfactory conclusion could not be reached at this meeting. Still the discussion was permitted to go on. Some of the speeches were a surprise to the audience on account of their clearness and force. It could be seen that most of the speakers had studied the subject and were prepared to present what they considered the most convincing arguments. Finally, it was proposed, and so decided, that the question be resubmitted to the old committee, with two other members added, and instruction to report at the next Annual Meeting. Brethren E. B. Hoff and J. H. Longanecker were added, making a committee of five instead of three.

The report of the Dress Committee was next taken up and discussed until the hour of adjournment. One could easily discover that most of the speakers were carefully feeling their way with a view of helping the meeting reach grounds on which all could unite and fully maintain our nonconformity principles. We admire the spirit of the deliberations and the carefulness of the speakers. In the midst of the interest the meeting adjourned until morning, giving all an opportunity to do some careful thinking and to be prepared to make a final disposition of the question.

A few meetings were held in the evening,—one dealing with Rescue Work and another with the Temperance movement. The District Temperance Committees met and planned for some aggressive work. The best methods of carrying on the work were also discussed.

Bro. Otho Winger gave an address in the Auditorium on "The End of Life."

Wednesday, June 7.

At 8 A. M., on Wednesday, the Standing Committee was on the platform ready for business, and after the usual devotional services the question of the previous evening was again taken up and discussed with increased earnestness.

It soon became evident that an effort would be made to amend the report in a few particulars and pass it. There was no disposition whatever to defer it another year. Section eleven, which provided for discussing the subject in the MESSENGER, was stricken out. Repeated efforts were then made to amend some of the other sections, but finally a motion to pass the report prevailed, and now the report of the committee is our rule regarding dress matters, it being understood that it supersedes all other decisions bearing on the subject.

The report, as we view it, is a good one, and ought to be well received by all the churches. It is not as radical as some desired, nor is it as liberal as some others would have been pleased to see it, but it certainly is in keeping with the judgment of the bulk of the membership of the church.

One thing is certain,—it contains fully as much as may be found in the New Testament on the dress question. So far as a Conference decision is concerned it contains a good deal more than the Church of the Brethren had for 150 years. If wisely applied, it probably contains all that may be needed to carry out the simplicity set forth in the Gospel.

If Christ and the apostles, as well as Alexander Mack and his associates, could maintain New Testament simplicity with the Gospel alone, we certainly ought to be able to keep in line with the aid and encouragement given in this action of Conference.

The report should be taken home and put into operation at once, without any attempt to alter it until it becomes clearly evident that some change is needed.

Before the vote was taken on the report of the committee, a season of prayer was held, so that the question was decided in the atmosphere of prayer. The vote was taken at 10 A. M., and the report, as amended, adopted by a very large majority. The Conference seemed to breathe much easier after the question was disposed of.

The docket being cleared of the deferred papers the new business was presented in the order named in the Conference Booklet.

There was a paper from the General Mission Board asking permission to use consecrated young brethren in the mission field. The request was granted without opposition.

Another paper from the Board, not in the Booklet, called for some more effectual work among the churches, in the interest of the missionary spirit. The rule requiring papers to be published before being considered was suspended for the occasion, and the request of the Board granted.

A paper from Northern California, calling for a

(Concluded on Page 380.)

Who Am I?

THIS is a personal question and is not only worthy of our consideration, but of our careful thought. It is a question that we should ask ourselves often; and that very seriously, too.

There is a great and vital personal interest that belongs to ourselves,—one that, if properly considered, goes out to the whole world. We are a selfish world, because we do not think of ourselves, and what we are, as we should.

To begin our thought, I am what I am, in the beginning, by no volition of my own. It was not I who willed myself a being in this great world of ours. I am here by the will of God. He is the Creator of us all. Our life came from him, must return to him, and in each one of us he has a purpose. And to carry out that purpose,—no matter how large or how small,—is our privilege.

It may be asked: How soon should we begin in this purpose? The preparation may begin very early in life. In the elementary, or preparatory, stages there are a number of things to be considered and done. And it is on the efficiency with which these are done that our final success depends. The foundational elements or principles are the ones that demand the most careful thought and preparation.

The first one for children is that of obedience. How soon can children be taught to obey? How soon, do you say? What has been your experience, fathers and mothers? Think a moment.

We have seen children quite young who were very badly spoiled. They had never learned what obedience meant, but the parents had learned it through sad experience. In their practice it was: "Parents, obey your children, for so it is your duty to do." This is not only a great sorrow to parents, but a great harm to the children. It lays a foundation for disobedience, more or less, all through life, or till forced to take a different course in their manhood and womanhood, through the force of circumstances that often come to them as a matter of necessity. It will be a good thing for you, parents, now to ask yourselves the question: "What am I?" Later on it may be too late for you to make of yourselves what you would like to be, should the question be asked.

Another essential element in starting the young is a wise course of preparation, in order that they may be able to enter the course or purpose in life intended for them by the Heavenly Father.

It is the thing to which obedience leads,—the result or outgrowth of obedience,—love, esteem and respect for parents. A lack of this is the frostbite of home life. To go into a home where children manifest no love and esteem for the parents that have made untold sacrifices for their children's good and happiness, is the saddest of all home scenes, and destroys all respect on the part of the children, while it can not fail to bring heart pangs to the parents. And yet it is the result of unwise training, on the part of the parents, through a false notion of parental love.

The most desirable homes,—the most loving, thoughtful and parent-appreciating children to be found anywhere,—are those where parents love and esteem their children too much to allow them to be disobedient, irreverent and disrespectful. Parents, again we urge you, in this respect, to ask yourselves, "What am I? What kind of parents have we been to our children? In what kind of preparation have we started them, to meet their true and desirable purposes in life?"

Another important preparation for a successful life purpose is that of implicit truthfulness. Did you ever know of children that had learned to tell falsehoods almost as soon as they could talk, or express their wishes? O yes, and such are not exceptional cases. The saddest feature about such cases is that mothers seem to be proud of it, because they think it is an indication of smartness. With great pleasure do they, in the presence of their children, repeat to their friends the untruths which their children have told. Children are apt learners, and they most readily remember and repeat the stories which mother tells.

One of the saddest scenes we ever saw, in our boyhood days, was that of a father and son, in a drunken spree playing together, and the son foolishly singing: "As the old cock crows the young one learns." Yes, the young one had learned his lesson well,—so well that he ceased not repeating it all through life. And when he became a father to children of his own, he, with a sad heart, could most truthfully say: "I am what father made me." There are thousands and thousands of fathers' and mothers' sons and daughters who can sing the same sad song today. And why not? Should not children learn to do as their parents do? "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." There can be no more orthodox teaching than this. It is scriptural and the best kind of common sense.

And, finally, What am I? Do I know or don't I know? Perhaps I do, and perhaps I don't. Reader, how would you answer this question? Some time ago we saw a man who seemed to be "up in the wind," and, as he zigzagged along, he repeated to himself: "Who am I? Sometimes, I think I am myself, and sometimes I think I am another fellow, and in my mix-up I don't know where I am and where I am going."

Evidently, he was somewhat off, and yet he was a great deal on. It seemed to us that while he was a small part himself, he was a large part what some other fellow made him. And may it not be so, to some extent, with us? We may be, in part, what others made us; and others may be, in part, what we made them. Is there any lesson in this thought for us? Surely, there is. We should be, in part, what God, through his Son, has made us, but, in no sense, is God, in part, what we made him. Do you see? H. B. B.

Whitherward Bound?

QUITE often we have articles on this subject; and it is right that we should have them, for there is nothing else of anything like the importance of our final destination when life is done. But the question implies something more than just the desire to know, sometimes—most often—it means that the writer thinks that the church is moving, in some important respects, in the wrong direction; and he would call attention to the situation as he sees it.

That we are changing, have changed greatly in the past thirty years, there can be no doubt. In some things we have made great advancement, and in the right direction. But, as the body is composed of fallible men, we cannot for a moment suppose that we have not gone astray in some things. Have we gained or lost? On which side is the balance? That depends on the one who expresses his opinion. We do not all see alike: one esteems the things in which we have advanced much more important than those in which we have retrograded. Another takes the opposite view; and there we have widely diverging opinions. The majority decides for the church, and we move on. But let us remember that majorities often make mistakes, and that when it comes to a matter of right and wrong before God, numbers, in and of themselves, stand for nothing.

But which way are we going—worldward or heavenward? That is the vital question. There is no question that in some ways we are doing a great deal better than we did a few decades ago. This is notably so of our mission work, both at home and abroad. And yet in this, too, we must ask ourselves whither we are going. The Savior had something to say about the activity of the Jews in making converts; and it was not complimentary. Keeping one's self in the right way is of vastly more importance than making a convert who will almost surely go astray if we do. But we are very unworthy servants if we spend all our time in keeping ourselves in the right road and have no care for those who are less fortunate than we are.

While we have progressed in mission work, we have retrogressed in our manner of living. We live much better than did our fathers and grandfathers. We have become more luxurious; we deem many things necessaries which are not only not so, but are really harmful. And here is our greatest danger. We fail to see for the church the lesson which history has repeated over and over again for nations. Some day we, or our children, will see the mistake; but our sight will almost surely come too late. We demand fine houses, expensive furniture, the best of clothing, and all kinds of delicacies for our tables. Most of those who secure these things have the money to pay for them; but that does not make the securing of them right. God wants us to be comfortable and happy in this world; but he does not want us so to pamper body, mind and soul as to make ourselves incapable of doing our best for him while we live.

The question of the direction in which we are moving and of our final destination is one which none of us can afford to neglect considering. We are moving onward: only a few short years lie between us and our passing out of this life. And what will be our destiny? Whitherward are we bound? Are we devoting our energies to the temporal, or to the eternal? It is one or the other: there is no middle ground. If our eyes were opened and we could see as we shall some day be able to see, would we value things as we do now? How much effort would be put forth to secure many of the things for which men and women are giving their lives and souls? There are not many things worth the price that is constantly being paid for them; but there is one thing worth a great deal more than the average person professing Christianity is paying for it. And is it likely that such will receive that thing? We need to think, more seriously than ever before, whither we want to go, and to watch our steps carefully in order to see whether they are taking us in that direction. G. M.

Helping Each Other.

IT is unfortunate that, as a Christian people, we often feel a timidity about helping each other to overcome habits that prove detrimental to us. Not wishing to disturb the feelings of a brother minister, or to incur his displeasure, we permit him to cripple his influence with the public by forming habits that are wholly unbecoming in the pulpit. We may talk to others about these habits, but we can not muster up courage enough to talk to the preacher himself about them. We are just a little too modest to do anything of the sort. We show more regard for the man's feelings than we do for the cause he represents. Rather than run the risk of disturbing his feelings for a day or two, we will permit him to become confirmed in habits that will more or less affect his influence all the years of his public ministry. We thus allow a false modesty, or an inexcusable timidity, upon our part, to interfere with the Lord's work. It would be far better for the cause we represent if we would get rid of this feeling of timidity, and be frank enough kindly to tell some ministers of the unbecoming habits that they are unconsciously falling into. If, in doing this, we will exercise a little judgment, the right kind of a minister will be only too glad for any reasonable suggestions that we may see proper to make. But if he should prove to be a man not having a teachable spirit, and will not kindly receive suggestions, then we can feel that we have done our duty towards the man, as well as towards the cause he represents.

Making Money for the Lord.

WE learn that a brother in Illinois has recently furnished the money to build a meetinghouse at a point in the West, where a building of the kind is very much needed. Such generous acts are to be encouraged. We have among us men who can make money easier than they can do anything else, and so long as they do business in an honorable way, and make the proper use of their money, they are surely serving the Lord with the talent which has been given to them. We believe in encouraging people to make money for the Lord and his work, and in giving them due credit for what they accomplish along this line. One with a talent to preach may serve the purpose of his Creator by preaching the Gospel, while the one with a fine talent for music may prove helpful to mankind by the songs he sings. Why should not the financier, who devotes his wealth to a good purpose, be counted among those worthy of special honor? His money can help preach the Gospel; it can help lead sinners to the cleansing fountain, and in the end add stars to his crown.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION OF SOUTHERN OREGON.

The semiannual Sunday-school Convention of Southern Oregon convened at Talent, Oregon, May 21. The meeting was opened at 2 P. M. by the former Moderator, Bro. M. C. Lininger. Bro. W. N. Carl, of Williams, Oregon, was chosen Moderator; Sister Cassie Carl, Reading Clerk; the writer, Secretary.

The first topic discussed was, "In View of the Work and Preparation Necessary, Is It Worth While to Be a Sunday-school Worker?" The subject was introduced by Bro. J. G. Miller, of the Ashland congregation. The thought was impressed that there are souls to be saved, and we should deem it worth while to put forth our best effort to win them to Christ. Our greatest hindrance to the work is indifference. The subject was further discussed by Bro. W. N. Carl and Sister Lydia A. Morton.

The second topic, "What Can Help a Sunday-school Teacher Do for Self-Improvement?" was discussed by Bro. W. N. Carl and Sisters Nellie Morton and Cora B. Decker. There should be more secret prayer, more studying of the Word, more interest in studying human needs and nature, —then teach as though you meant it. Present the truth so it can be understood, adapting yourself to the class. The Holy Spirit must direct if we are to plant good seed.

The third topic, "How May the Efficiency of Our Christian Workers' Band Be Increased?" was introduced by Brethren Bacon and Swishelem, and duly considered.

The fourth subject, "How to Develop More Spiritual Life in the Christian Workers' Meeting," was handled by Brethren W. C. Groff and M. C. Lininger. The thought was forcibly presented that, as Christian Workers each one should ask himself the question, "What am I doing to increase the efficiency and development of more spiritual life in the Christian Workers' Meeting?"

We now have three organized Sunday-schools and three organized Sunday-schools in Southern Oregon, working together peaceably, endeavoring to stand by the Bible and the decisions of Annual Meeting. At this meeting there were three Sunday-school superintendents and ten teachers. We had a good, attentive audience, and every one who is spiritually minded seemed to be encouraged and built up. May the Lord bless the efforts put forth in this part of his vineyard! Lizzie T. Detweiler.

HONEST MEN ARE NEEDED.

All over the world the cry is that honest men are needed. The word "honesty" means "justice" or "truth." It has been said: "An honest man is the noblest work of God." How true that is! You can depend on an honest man. By day or night he is at his post. If he says something, he means it and his promise is going to be fulfilled.

How sad it is that so many people are not honest! With greater honesty we would not even be compelled to lock our doors at night. We would need no prisons and policemen, if all were honest.

What a lovely place it would be, here below, if all men were truthful! Honest persons aim to serve the Lord. They read the Bible aright. They keep the commandments recorded in God's Holy Word. Thank God for the Church of the Brethren. Honesty and integrity are taught and practiced by her members in spirit and in truth.

It takes honest people to fill responsible positions. We need honest men everywhere. We need men that stand firm for right, justice, and truthfulness. God's blessing rests on honest people.

One of the most encouraging things, here below, is to meet the many honest boys and girls. How admirable they are! They will not steal, lie, and cheat. They will not use God's name in vain. They can be trusted. If they find other people's lost purses, they will return what they find.

We need honest men and women in the church, and, I am glad to say, we have them there. It is the honest minister that becomes a success, the honest Sunday-school teacher that does much good. If all men were honest in the sight of God, there would be no saloons in all the world. All houses of ill-fame would be obliterated. There would be no gambling dens. There would be no cigar factories.

Are we as honest as we should be? When we sell anything, let us give good measure, remembering that there is a time coming when we ourselves will be weighed in the balances. If Jesus has given us his approval we will not be found wanting.

An honest man will teach his children to be honest. He is a man of prayer but he is also a man who tries to pay his debts. He serves the Lord faithfully. Is a sinner honest with his God? Can one be honest as long as he lives in the world? It takes a Christian to be entirely honest. Let us teach our children to be honest. The child that is honest to its parents will succeed in life.

A dishonest man will surely come to grief, for the way of the transgressor ends in destruction. Let us be honest to our Savior, and even though the world hates us and persecutes us, that will not hurt us. We can then die happy, and reach the other shore in peace and safety, when all of life's trials are over. Edgar M. Hoffer.

THE SONGS OUR FATHERS SANG.

Our fathers left us a rich legacy when they handed down to us the melodies of bygone days. These hymns are rich in harmony, and many are filled with the deepest pathos, having a grand theme of the highest spiritual devotion.

These hymns stand in prominent contrast with many of the new songs and hymns, with their fascinating, rhythmic choruses which spring into popularity in a bound, but are as quickly forgotten. The real merit of a hymn is not in its rhythmic melody nor in the sentimental exultations of the passions of the human mind, We must feel a richer, worshipful sentiment permeating the whole heart, and excelling to true devotion.

When we sing such hymns as "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," we live over, in experience, the spiritual emotions of Wesley, who wrote it. Could such hymns have been written without Divine Inspiration? Standing as monuments of Christian piety, they but reflect the deep spirituality which was characteristic of his life.

Many hymns of today lack soul and spirit because they are written for commercial ends. Does the church seek after such hymnology? It is most gratifying to know that both young and old appreciate the worshipfulness of the old hymns our fathers sang and continue to use them in their spiritual devotions.

"The Hymn That Have Helped Me" was the subject of our students' prayer and consecration meeting, some weeks ago. The leader made a special request that each one choose ten favorite hymns—hymns that had been most helpful to them in his experience. It was conclusive that we worship most with the songs our fathers sang. Out of the thirty-four votes cast, the great Wesleyan hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," led the list with twenty-one votes. Then followed closely, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," with nineteen votes. The other eight were as follows in the order of their selections: "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," "Rock of Ages," "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me," "It Is Well with My Soul," "Some Sweet Day," "I Need Thee Every Hour," "Have a Friend We Have in Jesus," and "In the Cross of Christ I Glory." It is interesting to note that the ten hymns selected were hymns of praise and prayer. Following closely upon the above selection were, "Lead, Kindly Light," "My Faith Looks up to Thee," and "Just as I Am."

The most recent hymn of the first five, was written in 1871,—hence forty years old. The oldest was written in 1740, and has been sung for one hundred and seventy-one years. Three of them were written in the nineteenth century. The above result, as a choice of our student body, convinces me that many times the spirituality of our church services is greatly improved by singing the hymns that our fathers sang. C. S. Blickenderfer.

OUR SATURDAY EVENING LOVE FEASTS.

A love feast on Saturday evening is always well attended in localities where there are a number of congregations from six to twenty miles distant. Many people from these churches attend these feasts, stay all night, and have a good social visit with their friends on Sunday.

All this is very nice, but how about the church and Sunday-school at home? Perhaps a number of the teachers, the superintendent, the chorister, and a number of the laity are absent from home to attend the love feast. It surely looks very discouraging at the home Sunday-school. Sometimes there are two or three of these Saturday evening love feasts among surrounding congregations, each spring and fall, and consequently the home Sunday-school goes down as these periods.

Now, my dear readers, do you think it is right for Sunday-school teachers, superintendents, choristers, and others, to leave their home Sunday-schools three or four times a year, for the purpose of attend these Saturday evening love feasts, each spring and fall, to the neglect of the home work?

The next question is, why do so many people desire to have their love feasts on Saturday evening? There is nothing more sacred and holy than the Lord's supper, the feet-washing, and the communion services, which were the Savior's last teachings, just before his trial, suffering, and death. These services can not be more sacred on Saturday evening than on other evenings. Then, why have our love feasts on Saturday?

Here are a few reasons I have heard given: "We will not have half as large a crowd if we do not have the feast on Saturday evening." "Our friends want to come and spend Sunday with us."

Now I wonder if these are good reasons. (1) Does it take a large crowd to make a love feast holy and sacred? There were twelve at the first love feast, and no love feast since then can have been more sacred. When I have attended small love feasts, where everything was quiet, somehow the hour seemed more sacred than at large gatherings, where there was so much noise and confusion. I have heard a number of brethren and sisters express themselves in the same way, so it seems that a large crowd is not essential to a real spiritual love feast. (2) Can we not spare the time to have our love feasts during the week and entertain our friends a few days each spring and fall? Can our friends not spare the time to go visiting during the week, instead of always taking Sunday as a visiting day?

It is only natural that we should desire a large crowd at our love feasts, and have a pleasant visit with friends, but are these reasons right? I sometimes fear that our minds are so filled with the thought of large crowds, and our friends' visits, that the sacred, holy thoughts we should have, are pushed to one side.

Let us think more seriously about this matter! Let us watch and pray that we may have more holy thoughts and motives than these! Let us think more about the welfare of our home church and Sunday-school, than our own pleasure! Let us ever strive to honor and glorify our Savior, and, when in doubt, never fail to ask ourselves, What would Jesus do? Edythe Swartz.

THE BIBLE TEACHING ON DRESS.

1. Nothing should be worn merely because it is an ornament. Please read very carefully the following scriptures: I Peter 3: 3, 5; Gen. 35: 1-4; Ex. 33: 4-6. Putting on apparel for adornment is just as plainly forbidden as gold or hair plaiting. Superfluous ornaments are those parts of dress worn under the name of trimmings; such as, lace, fringes, embroidery, braid, strips of velvet, etc. Christian parents should refrain from putting ornaments on the dresses of their children, as much so as on their own clothing. Those who indulge their children in superfluous ornaments commit the double sin of doing wrong themselves and teaching their children to do what God has positively forbidden. Do not try to satisfy your own conscience by merely being plain yourselves. God requires that you should "train up a child in the way that he should go," and he will hold responsible at the judgment for the performance of this duty.

2. The wearing of gold for ornament and the use of costly apparel should be entirely abandoned. We mean apparel worn for its costliness, to present an appearance of superiority, as to show "with gold." This refers not to the articles, but to the materials. Some appeal to the Old Testament to justify the extravagance of the age. We are told that the Israelites wore ornaments—that Rebecca was presented with a set of jewelry. Admitting that fact does not prove it was right. The Bible is a faithful history. It records the failings as well as the virtues of those of whom it speaks. Some who are good in the main did some very foolish and wicked things. Some, when young, made mistakes of which they afterward repented.

Some one says: "In apostolic times the unholy women, as they do now, adopted a fashionable and worldly attire. They were known by their appearance. They had golden earrings like those they were themselves. If they had been true Israelites they would not have worn these useless ornaments." In Isa. 3 the various modes that fashionable women adopted to render themselves attractive are especially recorded and unsparingly condemned.

On the other hand, we have positive proof that the holy women of old abstained from superfluous ornaments. "For after this manner (that is without gold or superfluous ornament), in the old time, the holy women also who trusted in God adorned themselves." The above things are forbidden because (1) it is a waste of time; (2) it is of no real value to the body; (3) it does not promote the glory of God (Col. 3: 17; 1 Cor. 10: 31); (4) it increases pride and vanity, and ruins many people; (5) it keeps the poor from the churches; (6) it creates and fosters a flame of lust, leading to the worst crimes.

What does this gaudy ribbon and those ornaments upon your dress indicate to every one who meets you? It makes the impression that you are proud. Take care! You might just as well write on your clothes: "No truth in religion." Your action says: "Give me dress; give me fashion; give me flattery, and I am happy." The world understands this testimony as you walk the streets. You are living epistles, known and read of all men. If Christians act consistently, heaven will rejoice and hell will groan at their influence. If there were two heavens—one where there is all in all, and the other with a Paris in it, I presume that the road to the Paris heaven would be crowded with fashionable Christians.

During the years that you have been wearing these useless ornaments many immortal souls have gone down to eternal night, with a lie on their right hand, having never heard of the true and only Savior! The Holy Bible and valuable tracts might have been more extensively circulated in heathen lands, had you not been afraid of being thought unfashionable and not like other folks,—had you not preferred adorning your person and cherishing the sweet, seductive feeling of vanity and pride.

What, then, ought to be done? (1) Aim directly at pleasing God. (2) Aim at promoting the health of the body; it is God's temple. (3) Dress on saintly principles. Let the dress be such as will promote neatness, tidiness, simplicity and good taste; not slouchily and repulsively. (4) Dress so that a sound reason can be given for the wearing of every article. (5) Let your dress be a rebuke to fashion and extravagance, and a model worthy of imitation. (6) Do not be afraid to profess religion by your dress. Do not shrink from the singularity of being right in this particular. Leander Smith.

Annual Meeting Notes.

restatement of our attitude on voting and politics, was referred to Brethren W. M. Howe, G. W. Lentz and D. N. Eller for a report one year hence.

Another paper from the same District about preachers becoming land agents was respectfully returned. The query was thought to be too sweeping.

A query from Southern California and Arizona asked whether an Annual Meeting Committee, sent to a local church, has the right to urge all members from adjoining churches that are interested, to vote on their decision, and then coerce them to submit to their decision, under penalty of being expelled if they refuse to submit. The query gave rise to an interesting discussion, it being held by a number of speakers that a member can be expelled only when tried before his own congregation. The Conference decided that a committee has no right to go to the limit named in the query. In the estimation of many this is a very important decision.

A query dealing with the right of churches to employ and support pastors was referred to Brethren J. H. Longanecker, D. H. Zigler and T. C. Denton. They will report at the Conference of 1912.

A paper about our publications advertising a certain line of Sunday-school supplies was referred to the Mission Board without any recommendations. The paper from Western Colorado and Utah was returned.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin had a paper about preachers serving as land agents that was placed in the hands of Brethren J. E. Miller, S. H. Hertzler and Frank Fisher. They are to report at the next Annual Meeting.

The paper from Southern Indiana about the Credential Blank elicited no discussion whatever, on the merits of the question. This year there seems to have been no complaint about the application of the principles and rules laid down in the blank. All felt that the blank is the proper thing if no advantage is taken of it.

There was very little discussion regarding the use of individual communion cups, and the paper asking for permission to use such cups was respectfully returned.

The long paper asking the Conference to appoint a Peace Committee to work for the peaceful settlement of difficulties, local or general, and also to appoint a brother to represent the Brotherhood at the next Universal Peace Conference, stirred up quite a controversy. The Committee asked for was appointed, but the meeting decided not to be represented at the Peace Conference. The Committee appointed is Brethren J. Kurtz Miller, D. Hays and W. J. Swigart.

A few other papers were returned, and the meeting adjourned until the day following. In a general way the day had been a pleasant one,—probably the most enjoyable day of the Conference week.

Thursday, June 8.

Thursday was the third day of the Conference. Fully one-fourth of the delegates had returned to their homes and the crowd had become greatly reduced. The number present when the morning session opened was variously estimated at from 1,000 to 2,000. There were probably 1,200 present.

Two more missionaries for the India field were presented to the Conference and approved, viz., Bro. J. W. Kaylor, of Ohio, and Sister Rosa Wagoner, of Indiana. Then followed a consecration prayer by Bro. W. M. Howe.

This makes sixteen missionaries to be sent to the foreign field this year, and including those now on the field, along with those at home on furlough, we will soon have forty-eight missionaries engaged in foreign work, one for each State District.

A query asking that each congregation of 200 members or less be permitted to send two delegates to District Meeting, and one delegate for each additional 100 members, was referred to Brethren I. B. Trout, D. L. Mohler and Manly Deeter, carefully to consider and report at the Annual Meeting of 1912.

The discussion of the paper from Nebraska, asking that sisters be used more frequently on mission work, was, for a time, almost dramatic. The Moderator found it difficult to hold the speakers to the motion before the house. The motion was respectfully to return the query, while the speakers insisted on discussing the merits of the question.

This was true of some other papers sent by the State Districts. Some one would move to return a paper, which motion, after being entertained, cut off the opportunity of discussing the merits of the particular paper under consideration.

Some speakers who come to the meeting prepared to discuss the question in which they are interested, may be a little slow about securing the floor, thus affording an excuse for what might be considered a premature motion. Then when they do get the floor they learn that their well-prepared speeches can be ruled out of order, whereas, if they had spoken before the motion was entertained, they could have been heard.

It occurs to us that we need some improvements in rules, or in the application of rules, regarding this feature of our Conference deliberations. Motions ought not to preclude the possibility of discussing the merits of a question to at least a reasonable extent.

All the queries regarding papers in the interest of the orphanage movement, as well as regarding orphanage work, were returned, for the reason that orphanage work would seem to be receiving growing attention in all parts of the Brotherhood, and it was deemed best not to encourage additional plans, for the present at least.

Probably the most vigorous discussion during the meeting grew out of a query from Eastern Pennsylvania in regard to members identifying themselves with labor unions. It is a question that is greatly concerning our people in all the cities where we have congregations. After much consideration the query was referred to a committee of five, to report at the next Annual Meeting. The committee is composed of Brethren H. C. Early, A. P. Blough, I. H. Crist, Galen B. Royer and A. L. Wright.

A query requesting that land advertisements be excluded from the Brethren publications was referred to the General Mission Board without any special recommendation. It was, however, deemed necessary to explain, upon the part of the Mission Board, that the House is exercising great care regarding the class of land advertisements admitted. No advertisements of lands are admitted until after a thorough investigation. This is done with a view of protecting the interests of our people.

It was further explained that a few years ago some of the publications of the House were cleverly led into advertising a land scheme that proved to be misleading, and as soon as the facts were learned the advertisements were discontinued. Since then special safeguards have been thrown around all real estate advertisements in our publications.

In these notes we have not mentioned all the papers that were considered at the meeting. We have deemed it sufficient to refer only to the more important ones.

After the queries were all disposed of several reports were read and approved. The Educational Board made a favorable report of its work with the schools of the Brotherhood. Letters of greeting were read from the various mission fields and responded to. The report of the Committee on Resolutions was then read and adopted, and the meeting came to an end at 4:40 P. M., by Bro. L. W. Teeter offering a touching prayer.

All present felt that we had been permitted to enjoy one more spiritual and helpful Annual Meeting and, taking the Conference as a whole, it was one of the best.

Bro. Garver made a good presiding officer, and seemed to feel more at home in the chair than he did when he presided over the Conference at Harrisonburg, Va. The Reading and Writing Clerks kept their work well in hand, and at no time was the meeting delayed on account of the clerks.

We had a good Standing Committee, made up of earnest elders, who are not only loyal to the Brotherhood, but are sincere in their work, and are well informed regarding the growing needs of us as a people. Nearly half of them were on the Committee for the first time, but one could not discover any weakness in the body of elders on that account. Some of them proved to be splendid counselors, and the Brotherhood is to see more of their work in future Conferences.

The Auditorium was larger than needed for our Meeting. At no time was it full. The hot weather kept not a few from attending the services. Then the local attendance was surprisingly small. There were also other meetings, and in this way the crowd was divided.

Our people were never treated with more consideration. They were kindly lodged in the homes of the citizens, and more could have been entertained. We all left the city, feeling that we were never treated better, and shall carry with us many pleasant remembrances regarding St. Joseph and her people.

So far as we could learn, none of the visiting members met with an accident and there was very little sickness. One or two pickpockets undertook to ply their vocation, but they were detected and arrested before accomplishing much.

The local press treated us with all necessary kindness. The two papers, the Evening Press and the Gazette, not only published good reports of our meetings, but they frequently went out of their way to say creditable things about the members, and their presence in the city. For such treatment we certainly felt grateful.

We have not yet mentioned an incident of Monday, June 5, when Bro. H. C. Early, by special invitation, appeared before the City Ministerial Association for the purpose of explaining our doctrine, and to answer such questions, regarding our faith and practice, as the different ministers might see proper to ask. There were ministers present representing practically all the churches of the city, and the statements made by Bro. Early regarding our claims and teachings proved both interesting and instructive. He was treated with the utmost respect. No attempt was made to argue doctrine or to refute claims. It was simply a plain, clear statement of facts as understood by the Brethren.

The Committee of Arrangements proved fully equal to the work they had in hand, and showed by their careful management that they knew how to handle an Annual Meeting. At no time did they lose their heads, as we sometimes say of men who become confused, but kept cool and were always ready to do what they could to make it pleasant for their visitors. Bro. Kline made a splendid foreman for the committee, and though constantly busy seemed never to grow impatient because of his multiplicity of duties and the many little annoyances occurring in the management of a gathering of this sort.

So far as we could see, the dining department, on the cafeteria plan, was well conducted and gave excellent satisfaction. The food supplied was good, was well prepared and sold at very reasonable prices. One could select dishes enough for a meal at a cost of from fifteen to twenty-five cents. We liked the idea of serving plenty of fruit and vegetables. Most of our people, while attending the Annual Meeting, eat too much meat for their good.

We believe the cafeteria is the coming plan for feeding the crowds at an Annual Conference. It requires little help. There are no delays whatever in serving meals and it enables people to select for each meal just what suits their taste. As a rule they will take no more than what they care to eat and little or nothing is wasted. We should like to see the system installed at all our Annual Meetings.

While the singing may not have been as good as what has been enjoyed at some former meetings, this should not be charged up to the leaders, the people or the song book. The Auditorium is not suited for song services. It is not the kind of a building for the best results in music. We had good leaders, plenty of good singers and a splendid song book, but the interest and the building were against this part of the meeting. Bro. Herbert A. Studebaker and Bro. Harvey L. Young were the leaders. The former has led before, and his ability as a leader is widely known among us, but this was Bro. Young's first experience in an Annual Meeting. We may hear from him again.

Inside of a few hours after the singing of the parting hymn our people were on their way home, all feeling that, in a measure at least, the meeting had done them good. It needs to be seen whether we shall put into practice the things that we have learned, and whether we shall profit by the example of views on the various subjects presented for consideration. On this point, as well as on some others, we might dwell at some length, but here our notes and observations must close for this week, at least.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

CALIFORNIA.

Butte Valley.—Our church met in council June 3. Our elder, Bro. H. T. Mantei, presided. Considerable business was disposed of. Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting officers were elected to serve the last half of the year, with Bro. S. G. Hollinger as superintendent; Bro. Ross Hender, secretary. Sister Ella Hollinger was elected president of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Sister Hender, secretary-treasurer. The church also decided to celebrate Fourth of July with a suitable program. We expect to have a series of meetings in November, and a love feast with the close of these meetings. Our regular quarterly collection for our local home mission fund amounted to $7.35.—W. W. Allen, Butte Valley, Cal., June 7.

Lordsburg.—The amount of the offering lifted and placed in the hands of our delegate to carry to Annual Meeting is $160. Ed. W. E. Engind preached the communion sermon for the college students on Sunday evening, May 28.—Grace E. Wampler, Lordsburg, Cal., June 7.

Stonyford.—We are glad to report the "first fruits" at this place. Sunday-school opened today with a number of nine months with us. Bro. E. C. Overholtzer and family will take their leave from us. Bro. Overholtzer did much very acceptable preaching while here. He will leave his family near their children, Princeton, Cal., and begin a tour of the churches of the Northern District of California, in the interest of the Home Mission Board, of which he is Secretary. He is a District Missionary Secretary. Our first stop is at Patterson, Cal., where he is booked for a two weeks' series of meetings, and to help in dedicating their chapel. Splendid interest has prevailed here during the past winter.—W. E. Whitcher, Stonyford, Cal., June 7.

CANADA.

Battle Creek.—Our church is slowly moving along. April 30 we enjoyed a missionary sermon by our elder. It was surely wholesome food for us here in this great northwestern part of Canada. As a result we took an offering of $3.30, to be sent to the China Fund. May 21 we had a rally day Sunday-school and church services, after which two baptized Christians, both of them are young men and are Bible day-school pupils. A large crowd gathered at the water to witness the baptismal scene, which was impressive and in good many. Good order and attention were given. We feel truly glad and thankful for these results. The weather is fine, with good rains.—Maria L. Swihart, Kevinhurst, Sask., Can., via Maple Creek, June 1.

IDAHO.

Fayette Valley church met in council in the Fayette house May 25. Eld. Eby presided. Six were received by letter and two letters were granted. Eld. Eby was sent as our delegate to Annual Meeting. Bro. A. B. Eldredge was chosen to represent us at our District Meeting, to be held in Oregon. Bro. Eby, alternate. May 28 we held our love feast in the Fruitland house. A number of visiting members were present.—Eld. J. C. Neher, of Nampa, Idaho, officiated, assisted by Bro. Peter Fike and the home ministers. Two were baptized just before the examination service, and three letters of membership were received during the day. About one hundred communed.—S. J. Kenepp, Fayette, Idaho, June 3.

ILLINOIS.

Notice to Churches of Northern Illinois and Wisconsin.—Through a change in date, made by last District Meeting, our next District Meeting will convene on July 1, and queries, reports and business for this meeting should be in the hands of the Writing Clerk not later than July 15, in order that it may appear in the Program of Business for the District Meeting.—J. H. B. Wheeler, Writing Clerk, Elgin, Illinois, June 12.

INDIANA.

Beech Grove.—Our church met in council May 23, preparatory to our love feast, May 27. About eighty-five members communed. Visiting brethren present were Brethren David Hoover, H. L. Fadely, J. S. Aldredge, D. W. Bowman, L. S. Bilhimer, Luther Shively and Bro. Nimrod Ritter. Sunday-school on Sunday morning we met for Sunday-school, after which the visiting brethren gave us some interesting remarks. One was baptized in the afternoon, and a brother and a sister were received. The Sunday-school took up a collection of $6.37 for World-wide Missions. Our elder took up a collection of $14 was taken. This was sent to Annual Meeting with our delegate, Bro. D. O. Norris. Our elder stayed over Sunday night and preached for us.—Hattie Shull, R. D., Idaville, Ind., June 6.

Camden.—May 18 Bro. J. D. Mishler closed a very interesting series of meetings. Seventeen have been added by faith up and encouraged. Twelve united with the church by baptism, and five were reclaimed. A revival was held in our council. We decided to hold our love feast Oct. 21 and 22, with Eld. M. M. Sayler, of Peru, Miami County, Ind., in charge.—Mrs. D. L. Portner, R. D. 1, Portland, Ind., May 31.

English Prairie church met in council May 20, with our elder, Bro. Shutt, presided. Two letters of membership were granted. Ten received and a number because of the disorganization of the Pigeon River church. On the 27th we had our love feast, with Brethren Hoover, of Dunkirk, present. Our Sunday-school is increasing in number, with Bro. Chas. Light as superintendent. The offering for Annual Conference was $14.75. Bro. Steele, of Walkerton, Ind., expects to be with us June 24 to 27.—Bertha Agler, R. D. 3, Howe, Ind., June 6.

Mississinewa.—Last Sunday Bro. J. A. Miller began a missionary sermon at our Union Grove house, while Bro. A. C. Young preached in the Sunday-school. Over $13 was raised for the Annual Meeting collection. Our Sunday-school is also taking up a collection for children's work at the Union Grove house, soon. The forenoon will be devoted to talks during the children. The afternoon will be devoted to exercises rendered by the children.—John F. Wolwiter, Peoria, Ind., June 7.

Poplar Grove.—Our church met in council June 3. Our elder, Bro. S. W. Blocher, presided. One letter was granted. Arrangements were made for the Ministerial and Sunday-school Meetings, which will be held at this place in August. The Sunday-school was reorganized and will hold but six months in Bro. Samuel Cox. We expect Bro. J. D. Mishler, of South Whitley, Ind., to assist in a series of meetings during the latter part of August. The Aid Society will meet at the church during the summer months. The adjoining churches expect to unite with us in the Sunday-school meeting at this place July 4.—Kathryn M. Royer, R. D. 49, Union City, Ind., June 6.

Upper Fall Creek.—Bro. Martin preached for us at Middletown last Sunday. The attendance was just fair. The attendance was not large, but the meeting was good. There were six at the morning service and three at our service. Bro. Sayler Greyer, of Virginia, led the meeting. He stopped with us on his way to California. He also preached for us the following Sunday night. Bro. Fike will preach our missionary sermon the next Sunday, at which time a collection will be taken for the Annual Meeting. We are glad that the mission point may not be had at Middletown.—Florida J. E. Orem, Middletown, Ind., June 6.

Wabash church met in council June 1, with Bro. E. S. Brubaker presiding. Bro. John Strausburg, of Somerset, Ind., was with us. Our love feast will be Oct. 7. We decided to hold no more meetings and to close over the church. A committee was appointed to look after this work. About $14 was sent to Annual Meeting, to be used for mission work. Our elder is Bro. John Franch.—Lula Crumrine, Wabash, Ind., June 7.

IOWA.

Sheldon.—Bro. G. W. Kiefaber, of Mount Morris, Ill., will begin a two weeks' series of meetings at this place June 18. Our church met May 27, with Bro. John Robinson, who is soliciting for the Denver, Colo., Mission, gave us two excellent talks.—Jennie Glessner, Sheldon, Iowa, June 8.

KANSAS.

Bloom church met in council June 3. Our elder being absent, Bro. C. D. Hylton presided. Two sisters and one brother were received by letter. The Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Band, to meet each Sunday evening at 8 P. M. May 21, Bro. Hylton preached a missionary sermon for us. Alda Hylton, secretary-treasurer. The Lord has richly blessed us with refreshing seasons of late. We have a promising outlook for an abundant crop. Any of the brethren desiring a new location would do well to locate with us.—Cassie Martin, Bloom, Kans., June 6.

Morning Star.—We held our love feast May 28. About forty communed. Bro. Wm. Eisenbise, of Iowa, was with us, also Bro. Field, and Quinter were present. Bro. D. Heckman and wife, from Lawrence, Kans., were with us. Bro. Heckman preached at 10 A. M., we had an interesting children's meeting.—Katharine Kaufman, Hutchinson, Kans., June 6.

Murdock.—Our church met in council June 3. Bro. Peckover was elected president of the Christian Workers' Band. We decided to hold our series of meetings this fall. The writer will organize a Sunday-school about eleven miles southeast of the church next Sunday.—Mrs. D. W. Shideler, McCune, Kans., June 6.

Shaw.—Brethren W. H. Leaman and A. Neher went to Pittsburg May 28 and anointed Sister Minnie Hornet, who is very poorly. We hope and pray that the dear sister may be all well recover. Sister Cora Weaver was visiting old friends in the community last week. We had our Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting.—D. W. Shideler, McCune, Kans., June 6.

MARYLAND.

Peach Blossom.—May 28 and 29 our little band at this place was encouraged and baptized by the presence and helpful words of Bro. Jacob F. and Sister Graybill, of Nokesville, Va. Bro. Graybill preached three instructive sermons while with us.—Mrs. Ella Hoffman, Hagerstown, Md., R. D. 8, Funkstown house. Sister B. Mary Royer, also from the Hebron Seminary, Va., is with us for a few days. Sister Royer's mother is being held at Fairview every two weeks. We are studying the Book of Galatians. Quite an interest is being taken in the study. Our love feast is to be held in Easton June 10.—C. Ellen Hutchison, Cordova, Md., June 6.

MICHIGAN.

Marlan.—We expect to commence a series of meetings June 25, to be conducted by Bro. Mecdemus, of the Bethany Bible School. Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely. Bro. Eby's visit to the work at Homestead is very encouraging at present. Four have been received into the church by baptism. Pray for us, dear ones very much to have other members settle here. They have a union Sunday-school this summer, and have splendid interest. There are no other denominations working there. They desire very much to hold two services every week, but, on account of the long distance and lack of help, the Brethren can hardly see their way clear to give meetings oftener than every four weeks. Any minister wanting to change location would do well to visit Homestead and look into its needs before going elsewhere.—Rose Weller, R. D. 2, Copemish, Mich., June 6.

Sugar Ridge.—Our church met in council June 3. Our elder, Bro. J. M. Lair, presided. Four were received by letter. Letters were granted to Bro. Owen Burkett and wife, who have moved to Kentucky. We did not like to see them move, but we know they are in the hands of the heavenly field. Bro. Isaac Evarts has promised to hold a series of meetings for us sometime next fall. Sister Ella Snavely was chosen Sunday-school superintendent. Sister Nellie Teeter was elected president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Brethren David Neher and J. B. Sturgis were elected delegates to Annual Meeting.—Nellie N. Teeter, Scottville, Mich., June 6.

MINNESOTA.

Worthington.—We met in council June 3, with Bro. J. Schechter as moderator. Two letters of membership were received. The deacon brethren's reports were quite favorable. Officers of the Christian Workers' Meeting were elected, with Anna Schuh as president. Bro. Hutchison, of Kansas, will begin a series of meetings at this place June 17. We meetings will close with a love feast June 24.—Minnie Schechter, Worthington, Minn., June 9.

MISSOURI.

Waynesville.—Since our last correspondence our little band has increased. Two have come with us, and one was baptized May 7.—G. P. Burrow, Waynesville, Mo., June 2.

OHIO.

Hickory Grove.—May 28 we met in council at 9 A. M. at the Grove house. Eld. Jacob Coppock presided. We then prepared the house for our love feast, held May 27. Our services began at 10 A. M., and from there to evening. We had our home people and visitors. We had many very strong and impressive testimonies. On Monday morning Bro. Chas. Flora had charge of the Sunday-school, and gave a very interesting talk. We are the children of Peter, Pipecanoe City, Ohio, June 4.

Jonathan Creek.—Our Sunday-school was reorganized a few weeks ago, with Bro. Floyd Heiser as superintendent. Our Sunday-school Band of Workers has been reorganized and secured Eld. Rufus Wyatt, of Joplin, Mo., to be with us June 24 and continue for a series of meetings. June 25 an all-day meeting will be held, dinner to be served on the church. Eld. Wyatt will locate with us, if necessary arrangements can be made. Members of the adjoining congregations are invited to attend these meetings, and especially our all-day meeting.—Mrs. Ida Swihart, Roswell, Ohio, June 6.

Reading.—May 14 we began a two weeks' series of meetings. Eld. Geo. Detrick preached for us. Much interest was shown. Seven were baptized, one reclaimed and two received by letter. The church membership now stands at least May 29. About ninety surrounded the tables. Our council met May 31. Elders A. Harold Geeque, S. Strausbaugh and Bro. J. F. Kahler were present. Bro. W. W. Stroup was chosen delegate to the Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Conventions.—Rena Hoffman, R. D. 2, Moultrie, Ohio, June 4.

Trotwood.—Sister Anna Eby, from Bear Creek, was with us May 21, and gave us a very interesting talk on missions and mission work. We also had a collection to be sent for World-wide Missions, to be sent to Annual Meeting. The Annual collection amounted to $5.25. Bro. Chas. Greenawalt, Eversole, was with us May 28 and preached for us. Bro. W. W. Otto, Sister Stillwater, also gave us an interesting sermon June 4. These visits were much appreciated by all. Our Sunday-school attendance is gradually increasing, and we are all working with our might.—Mrs. Ida Workers' Meetings.—Norman A. Conover, Trotwood, Ohio, June 6.

OKLAHOMA.

Paradise Prairie church met in council June 3. We reelected officers for the Christian Workers' Meeting. Bro. John Hershberger was chosen to be our delegate. Letters were received by letter. Our love feast was held May 14. Eld. J. D. E. Snipe, of Stillwater, Okla., presided. We had a good meeting. Many visitors surrounded the Lord's table. We elected two deacons, Brethren E. Westfall and Ellis Henderson. They, with wives, were installed.—Jane Morris, R. D. 1, Coyle, Okla., June 8.

OREGON.

Notice.—The District Meeting of Oregon, Washington and Idaho will be held in the Coquille Valley congregation at Myrtle Point, Oregon, June 30. Those coming via Portland, Oregon, can take steamer to Coos Bay, then go, by railroad, to Myrtle Point, or from Portland to Roseburg by railroad, then by stage to Myrtle Point, a distance of thirty miles. Stage runs every day between Roseburg and Myrtle Point. All those desiring will be met at Roseburg

(Concluded on Page 384.)

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord"

Bowers, Sister Anna, daughter of John and Elizabeth Hoover, born at Martinsburg, Blair Co., Pa., May 4, 1859, died May 15, 1911, in Hagerstown, Ind., aged 51 years and 10 days. Jan. 1, 1879, she was united in marriage to Jacob Bowers. He died March 17, 1891. To this union were born four daughters and one son. She was a faithful member of the Church of the Brethren for more than seventy years, until her death. About four days prior to her death she called for the elders of the church and received the holy anointing. Services by Eld. D. M. Holsinger and Eld. D. P. Sayler. Text: Ecclesiastes 12: 1. Interment in the cemetery near by.—Chas. W. Miller, New Lisbon, Ind.

Hamilton.—Sister Ann, died in the bounds of the Hurricane Creek congregation, Ill., May 17, 1911, aged 76 years. He leaves a wife, two daughters, two sisters, one brother and one sister. He united with the Church of the Brethren in 1910, and has lived a Christian life ever since. Services by Eld. Henry Lilligh, assisted by J. E. McCracken, of the Methodist church.—Mrs. Ella A. Nicholson, Hurricane Grove, Ill.

Cline, Sister Anna, nee Swanger, born April 17, 1838, in Lebanon County, Pa., died at her home in Polo, Ill., May 24, 1911, aged 73 years, 1 month and 9 days. She was of a family of eleven children, of whom one brother and sister survive her. She was married to Jacob Cline, Oct. 25, 1863. To this union were born eight children. All of them were present at the funeral except one daughter, residing at Rock Lake, N. Dak. Sister Cline gave her heart to the Lord early in life and united with the Brethren at about sixteen years of age. She served her Master about fifty-eight years. She lived with her companion for forty-eight years. Nov. 26, 1909, the writer and Bro. A. M. Stutsman were called and she was anointed. She had been almost helpless for fifteen years with creeping paralysis. Bro. Cline served some years as deacon in the church, and two daughters are following in the footsteps of their parents. Text: The writer at the M. E. church. Text, John 14: 1, 2. Interment in the county cemetery.—T. A. Robinson, Mastodina, Iowa, June 3.

Thomas, Mary Alice, daughter of T. A. and Mary Thomas, born at Bowdells, N. Dak., July 4, 1905, died at Tacoma, Wash., May 23, 1911, aged 5 years, 8 months and 19 days. Sister Thomas had gone to the drugstore a few blocks distant, to get medicine for one of the older girls, leaving Alice and Tommy, playing, in the kitchen. In her absence Alice's clothing caught fire, and she ran out in the yard. When help reached her she had fallen in the grass and her clothing was entirely consumed. She lived about two hours after being burned. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the Church of the Brethren May 24.—J. U. G. Silverson, 712 South Fifty-second Street, Tacoma, Wash.

Tingley, Bro. Daniel W., born in Madison County, Ohio, June 11, 1841, died near Mechanicsburg, Ohio, April 16, 1911, aged 69 years, 10 months and 5 days. He was a consistent member of the Church of the Brethren. June 5, 1879 he was married to Mary C. Weiks. To this union one son was born. He is survived by his wife, his son, four sisters and two brothers. Services at the Brethren church in Summerford, Ohio, by Eld. David Leatherman.—Elsie Winget, R. D. 1, Springfield, Ohio, May 28.

Ulrey, Lillie May, nee Moothart, wife of Dr. John C. Ulrey, of Windom, Kans., born Jan. 29, 1880, in Macon County, Ill., died of a pelvic abscess at the Methodist Hospital, Mc-Pherson, Kans., June 3, 1911, aged 31 years, 4 months and 5 days, at the age of eighteen she united with the Church of the Brethren, and since that time always enjoyed the sweetest fellowship with her Master. She was secretary and treasurer of the Christian Women's Board of Missions at Windom, the home town, as well as active member. Her quiet, patient manner won for her a touch of loveliness that her teachers possess. She is survived by Dr. John C. Ulrey Dec. 25, 1898. To this union were born sons and two daughters, all of whom, with her husband, a mother, three brothers and five sisters, are left to mourn. She was a faithful wife and mother. She called for the elders of the church and was anointed and died in the faith. She died in triumph of a living faith. Her suffering was intense during her illness of about two weeks, but she bore it patiently while all possible medical aid was given. Services at the College Chapel, McPherson, by Bro. Wm. Yoder, of the Monitor church. Text, Mark 14: 8. Interment in the McPherson cemetery near the grave of her father.—Sarah Ulrey Eiler, Windom, Kans.

Williams, Infant daughter of Bro. M. C. and Sister Ruth E. Williams, born April 30, 1911, a short service was held May 1 at the home by Eld. S. D. Miller, after which interment was made in the Pleasant Valley cemetery.—M. H. Shaver, Mount Sidney, Va.

FLASHLIGHTS FROM REAL LIFE

BY JOHN T. DALE.

Those who have read any of the author's other books will want to read this one. The sketches and incidents given are real flashlights thrown upon things which are worth revealing. The author in his preface says:—

"Some of the sketches are based on facts which have come within the personal knowledge of the author, others are founded on incidents which have come under the observation of others, but they are all typical of the ever-changing experiences and mutations of life, as the grand panorama of existence moves onward."

Following are a few subjects taken from the table of contents:

Advice to Young Men
The Boy Knot
Dangers of Ship Life
The Father's Example
The Gullible Girl
The Professor's Advice
Single and Married
The Smoker's Peril
The Young Lawyer's Downfall

The Book contains 205 pages. Bound in cloth.

FIGHTING THE TRAFFIC IN YOUNG GIRLS

BY ERNEST A. BELL

DOUBTLESS the reading of this book will be a revelation to many. The fact that the traffic has been and is being carried on and made slaves for immoral purposes is not as yet generally known. This vile traffic has been but recently fully exposed. In this book the facts and horrors of it have been compiled. It tells also of the fight that is being waged against this iniquitous business. Many a young girl who has in times past chosen to mourn because she was the victim of such as make it their business to buy and sell innocent girls.

ARE YOU INTERESTED?

If you have boys and girls you want to know about the pitfalls that are set for them and be able to prevent their being entrapped. Everyone who is interested in the welfare of the rising generations should read this book. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. This book will do it. It also contains much helpful advice to fathers, mothers, sons and daughters.

The book contains over 500 pages, also 32 half-tone engravings, and can be had in either cloth binding, $1.50, or half morocco, $2.00.

WE WANT AGENTS EVERYWHERE

to sell this book. It is a ready seller, and we have a special proposition to make to you. Write us for terms. There is money in it for you and great good to be accomplished in behalf of the girls and boys in city and country.

Finger Posts on Life's Highway

Showing How to Succeed in Life

By JOHN T. DALE

A new book, full of pointers which point in the right direction. A book for the young, the middle aged and the old.

The purpose of the author, in gathering the material, during many years, was to assist those who are striving to gain character, intellectual power, business success, and merited esteem of their fellowmen. Years of a long and varied experience he has been able to collect into this volume more than one hundred articles on that many different subjects, touching human life from almost every possible angle. It is not a novel nor a story, nor yet a long and dry treatise upon some abstract subject, but a collection of articles on everyday topics, written in language and style easy to be understood, making the points so clear that the way of a truly successful and happy life is more easily found. The book abounds in words of wisdom, caution and warning.

We have great hopes for the sale of this book, knowing that it will appeal to all classes with equal force, and be the means of accomplishing good wherever it goes. Should any of our readers be interested in taking an agency for it, write us at once. We can offer liberal commission. The book contains 620 pages, bound in cloth. Illustrated. Will be sent to any address, postpaid, for $1.50.

Minutes of Annual Meeting from 1778-1909

This volume contains every known minute of the proceedings of the general conferences held by the Church of the Brethren to the Year of our Lord 1909. Many interesting things relating to the problems of church government and declarations of principles of faith, together with the methods of solving them, will be revealed to the reader. Minutes also reveal to us the firm stand the Brethren maintained through the years in reference to their opposition to war, intemperance, secretism, worldliness, etc. They also show the change and growth of sentiment in relation to the educational, missionary, and Sunday-school movement in the Brotherhood, and how these departments of work have grown. Taking it all in all, it is one of the books which have a right to a place in the library of every Brethren home. This is a 12.50 book, but in order to bring it within the reach of all this price is placed at $1.65, which is just the cost of publication, plus postage.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

by private conveyance, by notifying me. The writer not later than July 1, so that I can arrange for the same. State just how many will be in your party.—C. H. Barklow, Myrtle Point, Oregon, June 6.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Back Creek.—Our series of meetings at the Upton house is to begin Oct 1, instead of on the 7th, as was stated in last week's Messenger.—J. D. Wilson, Greencastle, Pa., June 6.

Huntingdon.—We met in regular council May 27 at Brumbaugh presided. It is pleasant to meet and talk about the things of worship to strengthen us for the duties we have to continue the little paper, "Church at Work," as it is quite a help to the church. It seems to be a good information of the work that is being done, and awakens interest. Bro. Simmers is still quite ill. We pray day-by-day continue to grow, and the children are learning more about Jesus, because they study their Bible lessons. They did in Xenia past. Bro. Brumbaugh preached on Sunday morning from the text, "God is Love." Bro. Chas. Ellis preached in the evening from the words, "Jesus' Sake."—Eleanor A. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa., June 8.

Lower Conewago.—Sis. Alice Hollinger and C. L. Baker convened with us in special council at the Bermudian house to ordain an elder. Bro. M. Cook, after a brief, but able address, on account of old age, to perform all the church duties unsuccessfully, and applied for help. Bro. O. W. Cook was chosen and ordained. Solicitors were also appointed for the various parts of the congregation to secure funds for a new fence, to be placed in front of the house. Our Sunday-schools are moving along nicely.—G. W. Harlacher, Dover, Pa., June 1.

Somerset.—Eld. D. H. Walker, of Somerset, Pa., delivered eleven able sermons at the Bethel church, in the Middle Creek congregation, this State. The meetings began May 27 and closed June 4. The Word was delivered to the simplicity and purity. The attendance throughout was good.—G. M. Dickey, R. D. 4, Somerset, Pa., June 8.

TENNESSEE.

Jonesboro.—The Brethren had preaching in town on Sunday. Bro. Austin Diehl conducted the services. We had a very good attendance, considering that the other churches were held in town on the same day. There will be preaching on the second Sunday of each month at 4 o'clock, and further notice. We hope that the brethren who live close enough will find it convenient to be as much as possible.—T. S. Larimer, Jonesboro, Tenn., June 6.

White Horn.—May 9 Bro. Jesse D. Clark, of Jonesboro, Tenn., came to us and preached two able and instructive sermons. Each time good interest was manifested. The church is greatly in need of a resident minister. The church holds adjoining congregations preach for us the third Sunday of each month.—Nora McCollough, R. D. 2, Whitesburg, Tenn., June 8.

VIRGINIA.

Antioch church met in council June 3. Eld. Isaac Bowman presided. One letter of membership was granted. Much business came before the meeting, and decisions and advice were given along the line of nonconformity. Bro. Joseph Bowman was reappointed church correspondent, with Bro. J. A. Naff as assistant. Bro. Chas. Flora was elected delegate to our District Sunday-school Institute, with Bro. J. F. Mitchell alternate. The following day Bro. J. A. Naff preached a good temperance sermon from Prov. 23: 31, 32.—Martha Mitchell, Wirtz, Va., June 8.

Valley Bethel.—Our church met in council May 6. A collection of $5.00 was sent to the Mission Board. Eld. J. F. Miller delivered an interesting address on "Prayer and Fasting." June 4 Bro. Our Sunday-school met in the grove, with a very good attendance. The Christian Workers' Meetings are also in progress.—Vena S. Bussard, Bolar, Va., June 5.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Clifty.—Eld. J. W. Rogers was with us June 3 and 4. He gave us two much-appreciated sermons. We are glad for his kind words. Bro. Rogers has a few people at this place. He has a long distance to come, but he seems untiring in his efforts for the salvation of souls. The meetings were well attended. Our union Sunday-school is moving along nicely with good attendance and interest.—Mary Crist, Box 43, Clifty, W. Va., June 7.

German Settlement.—We met in council June 3 at the Maple Spring house. Our elder, Bro. Jesse Pike, presided. One letter was granted. Sister Pearl Hamstead was appointed church correspondent in the writer's stead. Our Sunday-school and meetings near, we had no services at night. June 4 we reorganized our Sunday-school at Maple Spring house. Eld. M. Sisbaugh and Jesse Harsh as superintendents; Bro. Chas. E. Arnold, superintendent of the home department; Sister Grace Pike, superintendent of the cradle roll. Eld. M. Sisbaugh and Eld. John E. Arnold preached for us.—Maggie E. Arnold, Eglon, W. Va., June 8.

WISCONSIN.

Maple Grove.—Our Bible Institute and series of meetings, conducted by Bro. E. E. Eshelman, of Chicago, Ill., closed May 15. We held our love feast May 20, Bro. Eshelman having charge. We have, as visible results, an increased interest in our meetings. May 28 we had an enthusiastic reorganization of our Christian Workers' Society, and we look forward to a progressive summer's work in this society. We believe Bro. Eshelman to be a strong expounder of the Word, but the success of his meetings was hindered by the busy season and considerable rain.—W. H. Greenawalt, Stanley, Wis., June 6.

Woodan.—Our meetings conducted by Bro. E. E. Eshelman, of Chicago, Ill., have just closed with good attendance and interest. While it was a busy time, we believe that those who did attend were strengthened and built up. Bro. Eshelman gave Bible lessons two hours each afternoon, and a half hour before services each evening. This was very helpful to our young members. Our brother went from here to Berthold, N. Dak.—Cora Byer, Stanley, Wis., June 8.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED.

Lick Creek.—We met in council June 3. Our elder, Bro. J. F. Holsinger, presided. Four letters of membership were received and one was granted. Sister Pearl Slivius was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school. Bro. Fred Boomler was chosen to represent our congregation at Annual Meeting. One sister was received into the church by baptism. Bro. Holsinger preached three sermons while with us. Bro. D. D. Miller, of Mexico, Ind., will preach three sermons here at the Denmark house June 10 and 11.—Bessie Kieffaber, Coal City, Ind., June 7.

To the Churches of Southern California and Arizona.—The contemplated Sunday-school Institute, which was to have been held at Long Beach August 5 and 6, has been recalled because of circumstances over which we have no control. The regular Sunday-school Workers' Conference Convention will be held as usual, the time and place to be announced later.—Wm. M. Wertenbaker, Secretary of the Committee, 1254 E. Fiftieth Street, Los Angeles, Cal., June 5.

Patterson.—Brethren J. W. Deardorff, J. C. Seibert, and L. E. Miller, from Empire, Cal., came over June 3 to organize our little band of members into a church and ordain elders in number. We chose Bro. Deardorff as our elder, and Bro. W. F. Hagyes as foreman. We also elected our Sunday-school officers for the next six months. Bro. C. E. Gilbert is our superintendent. We decided to hold Christian Workers' Meetings, with the brethren as president. Bro. E. C. Overholtzer came June 3, and on the evening of June 4 began a series of meetings, to continue two weeks, more, to close with a love feast. June 4 our little chapel building was dedicated. Bro. L. E. Seibert delivered the address.—Etta B. Haynes, Patterson, Cal., June 8.

Beaverton Spring.—Our church met in council April 23, with Eld. James A. Sell presiding. We organized by choosing the following officers: Eld. C. V. Long, pastor and elder in charge; Bro. D. C. Replogle, secretary and treasurer, Bro. Geo. W. Replogle, had been elected at a previous meeting. A love feast was held on Saturday evening. This was the second feast we have had at which the sisters broke the bread and blessed the cup. We enjoy this privilege.—J. H. Miller, Roanoke, La., May 22.

Roanoke.—Our love feast was held May 21. Children's Day services were held the same day. The services were well attended and much enjoyed. Bro. S. C. Miller, of Chicago, Ill., delivered the communion address. An unusual feature of the day was the large number of young ministering brethren present. Those present were Brethren Ralph Schlosser, of Shoenock, Pa., Jacob Myer, of Elizabethtown, Pa., and Levi Siegler, of Edgzig, Md. Other visiting ministers present were Bro. J. H. Longanecker, of Palmyra, Pa., Bro. H. B. Shenk, of Lancaster, Pa., Bro. Frank Byer, of Chicago, Ill., Bro. Nathan Martin, of Rheems, Pa., and Bro. D. Kilhefner, of Ephrata, Pa. Four ministers of our own congregation were present.—Minnie O. Landis, 219 College Ave., Lancaster, Pa., June 9.

Copper Hill.—Our church met in council May 27, with Eld. C. E. Eller, of Salem, Va., officiating, assisted by Eld. D. A. Neff, of Salem, Va. Some business in connection of a former meeting was completed. Bro. D. H. Shaver was installed into the ministry. Bro. Shaver has been in the ministry about three deacons, Brethren Edward L. King, Eugene King and Charles H. Williams.—V. T. Wimmer, Copper Hill, Va., June 8.

South Side, Kansas City.—Since our last report three more have been received into the congregation by baptism. One of them is an aged lady who has not walked for seven years. She is present at all the services. Our Sunday-school has had for many years, which is causing a scarcity of work and many are busily able to prepare lessons. The Sunday-school attendance at our South Side Mission has fallen off since the hot weather, because many of our scholars have no summer clothes fit to be seen in, so they say. Some have asked what we need. We can use almost anything, especially children's clothes, from babies up to children of ten or twelve years of age. We need many girls' dresses. Send your donations to Mrs. Ida Keller, 1000 Forest St., Kansas City, Kans., and send bill of lading.—I. H. Crist, Kansas City, Kans., June 11.

Maple Grove.—Our church met in council June 3. Bro. A. Miller presided, assisted by Bro. David Hochstetler. The church decided to have our love feast about the first two weeks' preaching previous to the love feast,—one week at the Maple Grove house, and one at the Bethseda chapel.—Harvey Yost, Grantsville, Md., June 9.

Life and Sermons of Elder James Quinter

We have just completed the Second Edition of this book and are filling orders every day. We feel certain that several of our customers neglected to place an order in advance, and have printed a few hundred copies besides those needed to fill the advance orders.

The work should prove helpful to thousands of our readers who know little of Bro. Quinter. In his day he was one of the most scholarly and devout men we have had, and it will do our younger generation of members good to learn more of his life and experiences. His sermons will prove especially interesting.

The book contains 426 pages, large, clear print, an excellent book paper. The frontispiece is a splendid likeness of Elder Quinter and adds much to the appearance and value of the publication. The introduction is written by Eld. H. B. Brumbaugh. Besides the interesting sketch of Bro. Quinter's life and labors there is a full account of the funeral services and numerous tributes of respect from his co-workers.

Part Two contains some forty of Brother Quinter's sermons, delivered before here and there throughout the Brotherhood.

The binding is an artistic cloth, on which back and side titles are stamped in white foil.

If you are interested, order today.

AFTER JULY 1ST—$1.25

Are you a subscriber to the Inglenook? Do you have a copy of the Revised Cook Book? If so, we have nothing to say to you. But if not, then read on.

Fully fifteen thousand persons weekly enjoy the good things that are found in the Inglenook. One year ago only half that number read it. The subscription list is increasing constantly. The verdict of everyone is that "The NOOK is getting better."

These facts can result from only one thing. That thing is—that the management of the Inglenook has succeeded in producing a magazine that has for its standard the BEST, along historic instructive, entertaining and moral lines, and has accomplished this aim, thereby attracting and satisfying its readers.

So much has been said in this paper and in others about the Revised Cook Book and its use that it would be almost presumption to say more here. We will just say, though, for your special benefit, that if you still want to be in the crowd and subscribe for the Nook and get the Cook Book, and will do so before the first of July, you can have them for $1.00 where that has been charged all along. If you neglect to do it and wait till after that time, you will have to pay $1.25, according to a late decision of the General Mission Board.

To make it very easy for you to do this between now and July 1st, we are appending hereto an order blank. You need do nothing but fill out this blank and send it with a dollar to us, BEFORE JULY 1ST, and the Nook and the Book will be forthcoming at once.

GET THE NOOK AND THE BOOK!

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

"SET FOR THE DEFENSE OF THE GOSPEL."—Phil. 1: 17.

Vol. 50. (Old Series Vol. 60.) Elgin, Ill., June 24, 1911. No. 25.

AROUND THE WORLD

Russia's Great Need.

One of the foremost Russian writers declares that his people, when given the opportunity, "are capable, more than any other, of receiving the noble Word of the Gospel, which man's perfection." It is one of the most pathetic facts in the tragic history of that nation, that with all the pomp and splendor of ecclesiasticism, as enunciated by the Greek-Catholic church, her people are famishing for the real essence of the Gospel. They have the "form of godliness," but lack the power thereof. They need the "Bread of Life," but have been given the "stone" of a barren and formal ecclesiasticism. Naught but the Gospel will satisfy the soul's real need.

Praying for Liquor Dealers.

It is planned by the Christian people of Binghamton, N. Y., led by the Women's Christian Temperance Union of that city, to engage in a constant and uninterrupted season of prayer during the time that the Liquor Dealers' Convention shall be in session there, Aug. 14 and 15. This way of attacking the liquor evil is, perhaps, a new one, to many people, but the promoters of the plan hope that Christian professors throughout the State may join in this supplication at a throne of grace. It is urged that the Lord still reigns, and is as ready to answer prayer as he was in the days of old, which is doubtless true, and readily admitted by all. The question, however, of greatest importance is this, "Have we complied with all conditions leading to successful prayer?"

Encroachments Upon China.

It is to be deplored that China in its struggle for internal reforms and the mental and moral elevation of its people should be continually harassed by the attempted aggressions of so-called Christian nations. Russia, profiting by the absence of Chinese troops from the Province of Ili, adjoining Russia's Siberian frontier, is making rapid inroads into Chinese territory, often removing the stakes, indicating territorial limits, tens of miles in a single night. Great Britain, also, is making aggressive claims as to territory lying between Burma and China proper, which section has always been under Chinese control heretofore. Just how nations can justify robbery, plain and simple, when they would severely punish it, in case of an individual, is hard to understand. As long, however, as "might makes right" we are not yet in the golden age of peace.

The Missionary Exhibition at Boston.

While immense crowds and intense interest were aroused by this marvelous exhibition of world conditions and of Christian efforts to bring the world to Christ, we note that a number of religious journals are seriously questioning the propriety of introducing the "show" feature into a religious service of that kind. The Baptist Commonwealth frankly questions whether "these dramatic stage presentations of religious facts are the best way to stimulate interest in a Christian enterprise, and whether the interest, so stimulated, will be abiding and marked with the Christian spirit of self-sacrifice. One thing is very certain that if we accept the 'Pageant of Darkness and Light' and similar exhibitions, we can no longer condemn the theater as an institution." These words are well worth considering. Shall we do evil that good may abound? There is no gospel warrant for so doing.

"Speaking Evil of Dignities."

Apostolic precept warns against the altogether too common tendency of humanity to "despise dominion and speak evil of dignities." And while even the spirit of subordination may be lamentably prevalent in this, our "land of liberty," other countries are not disposed to deal so leniently. A lady, recently arrested at Vienna, Austria, for a trifling infraction of the law, learned from a fellow-prisoner that the enactment in question was passed long years ago, in the time of Empress Maria Theresa. Thereupon she proceeded roundly to denounce the long-deceased Empress, and became so violent that the attention of the guards was aroused to her railings. Then, because she spoke evil of one of the ancestors of the present Emperor, she was again haled into court, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. Perhaps the sentence may seem unnecessarily harsh to us, and yet some check should doubtless be placed upon offenses of that kind. Making use of the incident in an application to the church of the Living God, we call attention to the very deplorable lack of respect often shown by the rank and file of the church to those who have been set apart to minister in holy things. The apostle tells us that the faithful shepherd is worthy of "double honor," and yet too often there is "evil speaking" and a "despising of dominion," on the part of the membership. Surely, "these things ought not so to be."

Change in Evangelistic Methods.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the well-known evangelist, has decided that a return to simpler methods of conducting evangelistic campaigns is imperative. Heretofore simultaneous meetings in the same city, by a number of evangelists under his direction, have been a leading feature depended upon to create enthusiasm and swell the number of converts. Experience has taught him that there have not been adequate results from so many meetings held at one time, and Dr. Chapman is now falling back upon the "more practical plan of only one large meeting each evening, conducted as simply as possible." More and more it is being recognized that large crowds and much stir do not necessarily mean conversions. One man, converted according to the apostolic plan, is undoubtedly a more real gain to Christianity than a thousand only emotionally impressed.

A Great Sunday-school Convention.

"The Open Bible and the Uplifted Cross" is to be the one chord which will vibrate through all the activities of the thirteenth International Sunday-school Convention, which meets from June 20 to 27 at San Francisco, Cal. Over one hundred prominent speakers are to give their best efforts to the success of the gathering, and subjects of the most far-reaching character are to be considered. The progress and problems of the Sunday-school, the International Lesson, the Sunday-school in its relation to the home, to missions, to temperance, to education and to the pastors, and the study of other phases of the Sunday-school field, will receive needed attention. The sixteen million members, enrolled in the 275,000 Sunday-schools of North America, are, by the delegates of this meeting, brought in touch with this great agency for aggressive work. Much has been done in the past, but more remains still to be accomplished.

Graduates that Stood for Principle.

In a town not far from Elgin graduating exercises were announced some weeks ago for those who had completed the prescribed high-school course. The usual exercises, beginning with a prayer and ending with a benediction, had been arranged for, and were about to be engaged in, when persistent objections were filed to the religious features by the Catholic priest of the town. Thereupon the twenty-eight Protestant graduates decided to withdraw from the exercises, and, walking out, left the three Catholic graduates at the prayerless meeting. Some days later special graduating exercises, accompanied by the customary religious feature, were held for the graduates that stood for principle and were not to be swerved from it. With the Bible ruled out of the public schools, it is not strange that an attempt should be made to divest the graduating exercises of what little religious influence there has been connected with them. It is encouraging, however, to note that, in the instance given, there was so bold a declaration for religious rights.

No Prison Bars for Anti-Trust Law Offenders.

While the recent Supreme Court decisions in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trust cases seemingly clear the way for criminal prosecution under that law, there seems to be a way of escape by the interpretation, handed down by the tribunal above mentioned, which says that "restraint of trade must not be unreasonable." One is made to wonder just where such an interpretation would lead, if applied to the ordinary infractions of law. Would a grafter, a defaulter, or any other ordinary transgressor be immune, provided he were to plead that he only agreed to reform "within six months' time"? Apparently there is some reluctance in the application of law penalties when it comes to the wealthy corporations, and we are not very likely to see trust magnates adorned with a striped suit and a clanking chain, breaking stones on a hot and dusty highway. But while man may discriminate and shield the opulent offender, we are sure that in the "last and great day" every man will be judged by a righteous and heart-searching God, who does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, nor is he, in any sense, a respecter of persons.

Loose Religious Views.

The recent "heresy trial" of a noted minister of the Presbyterian church is but an instance of the wave of rationalism and unbelief sweeping over the religious world of today. Here was a man of profound scholarship, a graduate of one of their leading schools, who was found to hold most doubtful views on the fundamental doctrines of the Word. Miraculous features he either flippantly questioned or openly denied, and one is really puzzled to find anything that he thought worthy of being incorporated in his religious (?) belief. Unfortunately this is not an isolated case, for there are others, in this country as well as throughout Europe, who, apparently having wasted the good word of God and the powers of the age to come," have fallen away, and now "crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame."

Mission Fields as Educators.

While it is generally admitted that missions, in and of themselves, are the very life of the church,—the only reason for its continued existence,—not so many, perhaps, have ascribed an educative power of vast possibilities to our missionary enterprises. A noted missionary worker of London, England, recently said, "Many obstinate errors, bequeathed to the church from the past, are modified by the varied requirements and experiences of the mission field. There we realize that the Gospel is for 'all the world,'—not only for the narrow limits of the land we call our own. Undoubtedly the reaction of the foreign work, in all its magnitude, upon the home work, transforms the churches to their exceeding advantage, making them world-wide in grasp, and broader in vision." Doubtless many of our own number can testify to the truth of the assertion quoted above. Should it not, then, spur us on to still greater achievements, resting assured that the Lord's promise is more abundant in its extent than we can possibly fathom?

The Divorce Evil.

How to stem the tide of the ever-increasing divorces, and impress upon society the sacredness of the marriage relation, has been a problem of our best thinkers. There have been arguments for and against existing laws of divorce, and by many it is thought that increasing divorces are simply due to the laxity of the laws on the subject. But inflexible divorce laws alone do not settle the question. In a noted university city of Germany, where no divorces whatever are permitted, seventy-five per cent of the children born are illegitimate. In London, also, where divorce laws are very strict, a great number among the poorer classes are living together unmarried. The real remedy of the divorce evil must, after all, be sought in a change of the character of the contracting parties,—a greater degree of Christian grace and forbearance. Parents, as well as ministers, have the opportunity for a wonderful amount of wholesome teaching regarding the true intent and character of the marriage relation. Such instruction, tactfully imparted, will do more good than additional and multiplied divorce legislation, however well meant.

What Archæology Is Doing.

Delving among the musty records and ruins of past ages may not be considered a rare accomplishment by many, and yet it is one of the most renowned sciences. It adds to the sum total of human knowledge, and by its magic wand we need but a touch of imagination to see again the scenes of long ago, as we are brought face to face with the mute reminders of man's activity in the dim past. By recent discoveries we know to a certainty that Abraham could write,—a fact long disputed,—and we also know how he wrote,—in cuneiform characters,—on tablets of clay, such as Ur of the Chaldees, by the archæologist's effort, has come to have a real meaning to the earnest Bible student, rather than a mythical and mysterious significance. Doctor Peters, at Nippur, has uncovered a civilization going back thousands of years before the Christian era, and De Morgan, at Susa, has found indications of a bronze age still older. Inscriptions as commonplace as the daily business transactions of a merchant, written in a language the very characters of which were once unknown, have been deciphered, translated and proved. Even broken bits of dishes have told a story all their own, of the household life of long-forgotten races. Best of all,—in the many instances where archæology's discoveries in any way touch scriptural facts, they confirm, supplement and strengthen the record that, long ago was written by holy men who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit."

ESSAYS

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

Are You Ready?

BY HENRY NISWANDER.

Are you ready for the meeting
On that great and solemn day?
Are you waiting for the greeting
Of kind friends who've passed away?

Are your lamps all brightly burning?
Are your vessels filled with oil?
Are you waiting the returning
Of the Savior of the world?

Are you ready for the sounding
Of the trumpet in the sky,
When the change will be astounding,
In the twinkling of an eye?

If your life is pure and stainless,
And your work has been well done,
Then the change will be but painless,
Blest the life in that bright home.

A Summer Evening Coincidence.

BY OMA KARN.

"Walking with Jesus by day and by night,
Never a moment I'm out of his sight,
Safe through the journey, whatever betide,
Jesus, my Savior, will faithfully guide."

BORNE on the wings of the soft evening breeze, the words of this soul-cheering hymn came floating over from the other street, and, breaking sharply in, on its ringing melody, was the high-pitched voice of a child, in urgent expostulation.

Glancing up from a book of engravings, to discover the cause of this discordant note, I witnessed a very striking illustration of what follows when we break away from this Divine leading. A father and son, the latter a sturdy toddler of three years, out for an evening stroll, had come to a street crossing.

Evidently the father had turned to take their way along a street with dingy-looking buildings on one side, and the elevated railway on the other. It was not an inviting-looking way and the little son was determined he would not go. "This way, this way," he cried, laying hold of his father's hand with both his own, and with all his small strength endeavoring to pull him along the way they had been following,—an attractive way, with smooth pavements, well-kept curbs, beautiful shade trees and flower-decked lawns.

For some little time they parleyed, the father trying to make his little son see the wisdom of going his way. But the youngster would have none of it. "This way, this way," he again shouted, again exerting his strength to draw the unwilling father along his way.

And then the father did a very wise thing. He was a young man, but his actions showed that he had some very good ideas about the training of children. Gently and firmly disengaging his hand from the grasp of his son, he said heartily and cheerily, "Very well; go this way."

The little son, with a cry of delight dropped his father's hand and started off as fast as his small limbs would carry him, in his exuberant enjoyment of having his own way, failing to notice that the presence of his father was not at his side. Amazement and consternation chased each other over the baby features when he became aware of this fact. Stopping to look back, he saw his father standing where he had left him, when he let go his hand, his arms folded and a look of the utmost unconcern on his face.

The little son hesitated and stood quite still. Studying the immovable father for a moment, he turned and looked up along the attractive way. Baby though he was, a struggle between the two contending forces that, from infancy to the grave, strive together for possession of our soul, was taking place within him,— an engagement in which the dark angel won the victory, for with an airy wave of the dimpled hand, and a gay "bye, bye," he again started to go along the attractive way.

For about one-half block all went well. Then, in front of a very handsome home, he came to a halt. Remodeling was taking place there, and the street was blockaded with lumber, brick, cement and the various things necessary to carry on the work, the most formidable obstacle to the little son being a wide plank, elevated some distance from the ground, and extending across the entire width of the sidewalk. Here, again, the small adventurer hesitated, stopped, turned and looked at the father still in the same position. He looked up along the attractive way, then at the father, both look and action showing that he was thinking of turning back.

But alas! Another look along the attractive way and again its fascination won. Resolutely walking forward to the elevated plank he attempted to climb over. After some strenuous efforts he gave up this idea. But he himself did not give up. To the parent, and the interested student of human nature, he was an interesting study at this moment. One lost sight of the childish wilfulness in the interesting study of the "stick-to-it-ive-ness" that pointed plainly to a future determined will power that is not easily overcome by hindrances.

Not being able to climb over, he turned his attention to another way of accomplishing his object. Stooping down and peering under the plank, he, after a moment's inspection, prostrated his small self, wriggled out of sight for another moment, to rise up on the other side, his clean body, white garments, and beribboned hat, a sight sufficient to provoke his gentle, dainty mother, into administering a dose of good, old-fashioned slipper discipline, had she been there to witness his appearance.

Again he started forward and again, for a short distance, all went well. Then tripping over a piece of debris, he went sprawling, this time unwillingly, on the dusty pavement. The chubby face was twisted into a pitiful, painful tremor, and he blinked hard to keep back the tears as he raised himself up, brushed off his soiled garments and started on,—this time without looking back. A few steps farther, and, lo, another stumbling object and another fall. This time he was hurt, so cruelly hurt that he seemed unable to at once arise. A sweet-faced, motherly-looking lady, came forth from a nearby residence, picked him up, brushed off his soiled clothing, led him back to the plank over which she helped him, and then, pointing to the still waiting father, sent him on alone. Bruised, soiled, weeping aloud, he came running back, to spring with sobs of relief into the arms that opened to receive him. Clasped close in that strong, protecting embrace, they passed from sight over the way the father had chosen, —a way, which, after a little distance, ended in a beautiful avenue, leading away to the green fields and cool woodlands of the open country.

My book lay unnoticed on my lap. A far more striking picture than any that it contained was before the mental vision. A picture of ourselves, when determined to have our own way, we break away from the Father's leading, to follow what appears to be a more attractive way. How soon that way becomes rough! How many hidden dangers lurk there! How many painful falls are ours! How often we turn and look back! How many love-moved hands are extended to help us to turn back! And oh, the beautiful grace and forgiveness we see when we do turn back! The Father is waiting where we left him, loving us still, ready, eager to receive us again, and, lost in the contemplation of the beautiful picture, these thoughts portrayed, I dropped the thread of my meditation, fully to take it up again as the singer, who for some time had been silent, again began, softly and sweetly, with the words of that beautiful prayer-hymn,

"Savior, lead me, lest I stray,
Gently lead me all the way;
I am safe when by thy side,
I would in thy love abide."

Ah, how safe, how very safe we are! And how utterly worthless is the best of the world's pleasure, when compared with the feeling of perfect security, the serenity of mind, the peace and the joy that is ever present with those who walk at his side.

As a fitting completion of the picture there came through the fast-gathering darkness, the words of that triumphant faith-hymn:

"He leadeth me: O blessed thought!
Oh words with heavenly comfort fraught!
Whate'er I do, where'er I be,
Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me."

The Annual Church Visit.

BY S. N. M'CANN.

In Four Parts.—Part Two.

THE questions to be asked have more value than is often realized. If they are prayerfully asked and answered, they cannot fail to make for a higher spiritual life in the church.

The first question is meant to make one review the baptismal vow, and test himself as to whether he is standing or falling. "Are you still in the faith of the Gospel as you declared in your baptism?" This question means, Do you still receive the Word of God as your rule of faith and practice? Do you believe on Jesus Christ as the Son of God, your Savior and Master? Do you still renounce the world with its sinful ways and practices? These questions mean all we promised when we said to the church, "We are tired of sin and we want to covenant in baptism to live for Christ and his Church." They mean all we promised when we said we would lay off our gold and superfluous adornment, and adorn ourselves in modest apparel, with a meek and quiet spirit. They mean all we said when we promised to do good for evil, not going to law, not going to war, not striking back, either with tongue or sword. They mean all we promised when we said we would come out from the world, not being unequally yoked with unbelievers in secret orders, in the dance and in other questionable places of amusement. They mean all we said when we promised not to take oaths, not to swear at all but to speak the truth only. They mean all we said when we promised to quit such a filthy habit as tobacco using, foolish joking and jesting and other fleshly lusts.

Practically the whole Brotherhood answers this question once a year. Do we realize how much we say when we answer this very important question? When we all say, "We are of the same faith and practice, making God's Word our constant Guide," we should grow into that union and fellowship for which Jesus prayed.

It seems to me that we ought to be the most closely united people in the world. This one question ought to help us to stand shoulder to shoulder in the great work committed to us by our Lord and Master.

A conscientious answer to this one question by the church, year after year, should so unite us that we could not grow apart. Divisions and strife could not develop among us. Each individual member realizing how imperfectly he has been able to live up to his baptismal vows,—realizing how far short he has fallen below what he believes and strives to reach, grows more forbearing with others who fail here and there.

Our having to hold "this treasure in earthen vessels, that the exceeding greatness of the power may be of God, and not from ourselves," helps us to think evil of no man. Each member who honestly answers this question, is struggling to bring his life into close fellowship with Jesus, and thus into closer union and fellowship with his body, the church. To be of the same faith and practice, is to grow from year to year if the faith and practice are founded on the Gospel.

Justification and Sanctification.

BY JOHN W. MILLER.

JUSTIFICATION and sanctification are very important words to the average Christian and Bible student. No more important question ever occupied the human mind than how men are to be justified before God. A serious error on either of these subjects must be fatal to the interests of the soul. Both respect the facts of sin and salvation, and have the same final purpose. They are taken to be the same or parts of the same thing,—things equal to the same thing are equal to each other.

It is not the purpose of this paper to discuss their significance and meaning, so much as the distinction between the two. We may not be able to indicate, with precision, the difference between the doctrines which they represent, but whatever the difference may be, they are not speculative, nor are they generally apparent to the popular mind, but relate to distinct facts. They are not unimportant differences but of gravely practical character.

The recognized significance of the word "sanctification" in the Bible embraces three results—separation, consecration, and cleansing, and the means of obtaining it are through the truth. The Spirit sanctifies through the instrumentality of the truth, and as such perpetuates the regenerate life. A mind occupied with the pure thought of God will be sanctified from all impure thoughts. A memory stored with Divine utterances will be a gallery of beautiful paintings, like apples of gold embroidered with silver.

The existence of sanctification is discoverable by its effects or fruits. It is a spiritual instinct, a living impulse that pervades the inmost recesses of the man, and vitalizes his soul.

"Justification," as a term in the English language, is a "vindication, an acquittal, or clearance from guilt." For the truth of this any lexicon may be consulted. I quote from Deut. 25: 1, "If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked." Here "justify" evidently signifies "to acquit," and is opposed to pronouncing sentence or condemning. Job 9: 20 says, "If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me," i. e., if I attempt to vindicate or clear myself, "my own mouth would pronounce me guilty." In the New Testament we find it employed in the very same sense. In Matt. 12: 37, we read, "By thy words thou shalt be justified and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Here again justification is opposed to condemnation. Rom. 8: 33, 34 says, "It is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth?"

Justification is an act of God terminating upon man. This appears from Rom. 8: 33, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth." God justifies men by the blood of Jesus, as is evident from Rom. 3: 28, "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." Rom. 5: 1 reads, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

What, then, is the distinction between justification and sanctification? They are these: Justification is an acquittal from guilt. Sanctification is the purifying of the nature. Justification is a delivery from the punishment of sin. Sanctification is a delivery from the dominion of sin. Justification is that part of the New Covenant which says, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins, and iniquities will I remember no more." Sanctification is that part of it which says, "I will put my laws in their minds and write them in their hearts."

The effect of justification is peace. The effect of sanctification is purity. Justification is at once complete. Sanctification is progressive through life. Justification is an act of God at large. Sanctification is the peculiar work of the Spirit. Justification introduces us into a new character; sanctification introduces us into a new temper.

Both justification and sanctification are exercised by faith,—"Justified by faith;" "Sanctified through faith that is in me."

As related to associated doctrines, justification stands nearest in this to regeneration. Recognizing that regeneration is the birth of the soul into the new life, the penitent soul is justified in the formal recognition of the fact. Sanctification comes closer in its nature to conversion, which enfolds the human agency of this transformation, and, unlike regeneration, may be repeated in the soul's experience, but sanctification again resembles regeneration in that the efficient agency of both is the inward moving of the Holy Ghost.

Hence it is said of the sanctified or justified persons, that they can not sin, because they are born of God i. e., of the incorruptible seed of the Word, which seed abideth in them, and influences their whole conduct.

Persons of this description live in God's fear and favor, enjoy the peace of God which passeth all understanding, purify themselves as God is pure, are conducted by his counsel here, and at length are received into his glory.

Spiritual Efficiency.

BY GEORGE D. ZOLLERS, DECEASED.

THE efficiency of the church of Christ is not determined by her numerical record, but by the quality of her members. God ratified the loyal identity of eight persons in the floating home of refuge from the memorable deluge, rather than a gathering of the fittest exponents, outside of his own type of culture. He is disposed to devise the plan for character formation by his own code of counsels, with faith as the supporting and guiding power.

> "A few were saved in Noah's ark,
> While many millions drowned."

A small number, armed by the Spirit's power, will do more execution than stupendous numbers who only march under a pretext of loyalty and identification with Christ and his selected ones, or,—as Christ denominates them,—his "elect." The well-drilled soldiers in Xerxes' army, comprising millions, were his main dependence rather than the masses inefficient in the wielding of weapons, and easily daunted in battle. Gideon achieved his daring feat with a "survival of the fittest,"—a reduction to three hundred out of thirty-two thousand,—to defeat an almost unnumbered host.

God has always gained his greatest conquests by the fortitude of the "remnant weak and small, but strong." "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight." The inactive in the church,—and, as a result, degenerate in faith and moral courage,—will be unfit for God's purpose in the day of test and conquest. It pays to be spiritually born, and to acquire the spiritual equipment. "They are not all Israel who are of Israel." Our birthright, practically, must come through Isaac, who was supernaturally born, or we can never endure the pressure which our heaven-appointed warfare implies. Better not urge to church fellowship beyond propriety, or the reaction will be fiercer than the induction.

It is a momentous burden upon a church to be necessitated to govern too many members not born of the Spirit. Only the really "born again" children will be docile and tractable. Naomi was loth to encourage the daughters of the Moabites to affiliate with the chosen stock of Israel lest there remain a hankering for their kindred and their gods. Ruth, however, convinced by Naomi's godly life and character, determined, by a God-given resolution to live and die with the people whose "God is the Lord." Thus she was ready to accept Naomi's God,—a genuine convert after a ten years' campaign of gloom and turmoil and death clouds, and "sowing in tears."

Count the percentage of increase, and the fruitage through succeeding generations, and you can form an approximate estimate as to where the Lord will summon his "innumerable multitude" in the ultimate of time. "The Lord knoweth them that are his, and let him that names the name of Christ depart from iniquity." This will evince their identity, insure the "seal" of God, and number them with the "elect." It will free them from every vestige of yearning for earthly appendages, for their aspirations will be incessantly absorbed in the higher life and the sublime citizenship,—the purchased possession by the unsullied blood, of a "new heaven, and a new earth." Faith has opened to the "elect of God" a far-reaching vision, and a keen foretaste of unfading treasures, triumphant joy and immortal blessedness.

Anointing.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

ANOINTING with oil, as a religious rite, dates back to the priesthood under the law. When the tribe of Aaron was selected for the purpose allotted them they were not permitted to perform their ministrations at the altar until they were anointed with the oil, compounded after the prescribed weights and measures of the apothecary. The ordinance was so securely guarded that the oil was not permitted to be used for any other purposes. "Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, shall even be cut off from his people."

A priest was not permitted to perform the functions of his office until he was arrayed in the prescribed robe, with a mitre and crown, and oil poured upon his head that ran down upon his beard, and spread to the skirts of his garments.

When God made choice of men to rule over his people as kings, he set them apart, and assured them of his approval, by anointing them with oil. This not only placed them in the royal line, but gave them power to perform their duties, being sustained by the power of him who holdeth the destiny of nations in his own hands.

When the Lord ordered a tabernacle to be erected as a place for his people to assemble in his holy service, it, with all the vessels connected with its solemn rites, was anointed with holy oil. They were thus consecrated to him, and their use for any other purpose was forbidden.

This is what caused the bodyless hand to write the doom of Belshazzar in flaming letters on the walt, at the time of the impious feast. When Nebuchadnezzar invaded Palestine and destroyed the temple, he carried away the golden vessels as a trophy of war, and enriched his own palace in Babylon with these sacred relics. Belshazzar reached the limit when he drank wine out of these vessels. "That night was he slain."

All this goes to show that God will not permit holy things to be trifled with, for he has stamped his supreme authority upon them.

Prophets as well as priests and kings also received this unction. When the Lord bestowed upon men the power of prophetic vision, when he gave them power to draw aside the vail and look over into the coming years or centuries, and communicate messages of instructions, warnings of danger, or promises of glorious prospects, he inducted them into their holy office by the application of oil.

Besides the above there were anointings for various other purposes. There was a common anointing that accompanied daily ablutions, "When thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face." It was bestowed upon honored guests. "There came unto him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment and poured it on his head."

The dead were anointed to preserve the body and also to express love and sympathy. "And there came Nicodemus and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, and took the body of Jesus and wound it in linen with the spices."

Sick people were anointed as a means of recovery from disease. "They anointed with oil many that were sick and healed them." Anointing was also emblematical. It symbolized the unction of the Holy Spirit. The Savior said, in referring to his own work: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

One of the beautiful and expressive names of the Savior was Messiah, which means "the Lord's anointed." The apostle John, in speaking of the plenitude of the Spirit, given to true believers, says, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things."

Anointing also symbolizes union. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. It is like the precious ointment upon the head."

When Mary poured the precious perfume upon the Savior's head, he said, "She hath wrought a good work upon me. She hath come aforehand to anoint my body for the burying." She expressed her love and sympathy for him and his work in a way that was expressive, and at a time when it was helpful. "She hath done what she could."

We have, also, in the Scriptures a literal anointing of the sick. "Is any among you sick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him" (James 5).

This anointing is for the sick alone. Associated with prayer it is said to save, raise up and be the means of forgiveness. This provision, made for the sick, is a gracious one. In their loneliness, deprivations and suffering they are remembered and provided for. The contemplation of the subject becomes to them a feast to the soul. It helps the soul to express the thought of consecration, a giving up of both soul and body to God, of union and fellowship with him and his people, a delight in his ordinances, and a resignation to his providences. It impresses the comforting guidance and help of the Holy Spirit. Thus committing soul and body into the keeping of his faithful and loving hands, help is sought, in humble supplication, in connection with the anointing with oil. "He is faithful who promised" and is "able to keep that which is committed to him," and is also "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us."

If the faith is strong and unfaltering, the promise is sure. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick."

This is not a matter to reason out and prove from the standpoint of science. It is a matter of implicit confidence in One with whom "all things are possible," and One who can work when all human agencies fail. We are sometimes led down to the gates of death to realize our own weakness, and to learn to love and trust our God the more. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." But we may feel too unworthy to press our claim as a righteous man. Encouragement is given by reference to Elijah, who was "subject to like passions as we are," whose fervent prayers both closed and opened heaven for rain. If he received such wonderful answers, what may we not expect?

The Home Minister.

BY KATIE FLORY.

It is quite often true that the ones among us who deserve our deepest respect, prayers, and sympathy, are the ones who get the least.

Too often the little courtesies, kindnesses and remembrances, which mean so much and are due the home minister, are neglected and given to the stranger. After he has done his best, may we not, or have we not, been guilty of picking flaws, holding them up and looking at them through the magnifying glass? Such criticisms are very unkind, unjust and impolite.

Instead of holding such an attitude toward the minister or elder, let us watch for opportunities and even make them, to do him a kindness, and make him feel that we have confidence in him, and that we appreciate his unwearying efforts. "Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father." We need not be backward in telling him how much good his sermon has done us, if it really has. Many a time it has and yet we have not said a word about it to any one.

How often has our heart and burden been lifted when we went up to the house of the Lord so distressed and perplexed we knew not what to do! We were quietly longing and praying for a message from the Lord. The Lord knew our anxiety and through his servant, the home minister, our burden was lifted; we felt relieved, unconsciously we were helped.

We can do the minister great good by assuring him of our prayers, for has he not many a burden to bear of which we know not? Silent and hidden are the tears he sheds, all because of the great concern he has for his flock, who need his tenderest care.

His relation to his God, and his standing among his people make his position a very responsible one, therefore it takes great care and watching to live up to what is expected of him. The eye of the world, too, is upon him. He has not reached the condition when he will not make mistakes, so, then, let us pray for our elder and minister, that God will bless him, and that he may so be a blessing.

In time of deep sorrow, sickness or death we want and need comfort and sympathy. Then it is that we call into our homes the ones who we think are able to give the needed relief. The home minister who has been instrumental in helping us out of many a difficulty and trial, and who has helped us to develop in the Christian life by his frequent exhortations is not then called upon. It must be some one a little better(?) or, perhaps, one who has a little more honor in the church and, of course, as such times the best things must be said and done in the very best way. More often than not the ones who deserve our sincerest respects and honors, and the ones who could really help and deeply sympathize are the ones passed by and unregarded. A gap is made between you and your home minister which would never have been made had a little forethought, discretion, and wisdom been used. Thus the bond of Christian union, love and good wishes, has been made the weaker. Let us not forget to "give honor to whom honor is due."

The Christian Life.

BY IRA S. W. ANTHONY.

The veteran soldier is ofttimes accused of creating mythical tales as to his bravery, and repeating them so frequently that he finally believes them to be actual occurrences. Likewise, veteran sinners or pessimists, to ward off conviction, frequently advance ideas, in regard to the Christian life, which they finally advocate as actual forces. Thus the origin of the idea, that it is hard to live a Christian life, must be accounted for, since we cannot conceive of a sane, unbiased man advocating such an asininity otherwise.

To say that the Christian's life is hard, is to deny both biblical and psychological facts. In Matt. 11: 30 Christ says, "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light," and Paul in his first epistle to the Ephesians says, "His (Christ's) commandments are not grievous." These are the only direct assertions, available in support of the easiness of the Christian life, but turn to Second Timothy and read the matchless autobiography of Paul, that valiant soldier of the cross, who possessed a solely empirical knowledge of Christian existence, and see with what resignation and ease he bade his friends "Farewell." Then, too, Jas. 1: 2 and 1 Pet. 1: 6 plainly indicate that the Christian's life is a joyous one, even if it is fraught with persecutions.

Thus the story runs through the entire New Testament, hence for a man to assert and successfully maintain that the Christian life is hard, he must not only disestablish Christ's own statement, but also the conjunctive verdict of all the apostles and church fathers, from the apostolic era down to the present one.

In a study of man it is customary to consider him only as a religious being, since he possesses such strong innateness of this idea. Considered thus, there is but one code of morals extant, suitable for the development of an ideal life and this is that of the Great Teacher. This system of morals—religion rather—bases everything on service, and the honor of exacting service is the greatest incentive to endeavor. Hence the pattern for every life worth while, regardless of the liver, is found in the teachings of Christ, for the spirit of service is bred into the bones of both saint and sinner. But the life of service carries with it not only a natural inclination towards Christianity, but also an irrepressible sense of pleasure, as can be inferred from the testimony of the apostles, as well as gleaned from personal experience. And as pleasure is the uppermost object of feeling—one of our inherent, act-impelling powers—so it necessarily follows that the Christian life is spontaneous and natural in the soul, with an unsullied impellent.

To carry this idea further, a study of psychology reveals the fact that mental actions are preservative, that they aim to lead existence into that path or into those habits which tend to a happy and desired culmination.

Then, what else can we infer but that even this carnal nature of ours, which, we say, is so defiled, is continually yearning and reaching out for that higher and nobler sphere of activity? This seems rather paradoxical, but still it is true, since life is but the concretion of the mental images. Hence, for a man to be a sinner, he must fight the natural issues of life, and raze the cardinal edifices of nature. Do you call this easy?

Furthermore, to assume that a Christian's life is hard, we plainly accuse God of establishing an ideal for us, the attainment of which is at variance with both the moral and physiological attributes with which he has endowed us. This is "inconsistent with the divine holiness and purity," for "as God cannot be tempted to evil, neither tempteth he any man." God is not the author of sin, but sin entered into the world by the malicious caprices of the devil.

The sinner's life, truly, is grievous. He must live in direct antagonism to the teaching of his childhood days; he must ignore his mother's prayers; he must turn a deaf ear to the beseeching of friends; and he must counteract the vigor of a Christian atmosphere.

Furthermore the whole tenor of the New Testament displays the encumbered existence of the sinner. Turn to 2 Tim. 3: 16 and Prov. 13: 15 for a meager comparison, and there you will find the epitome of the entire Holy Book, in regard to the unrighteous. In Rom. 6: 23 Paul says, "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." Paul evidently implies (at least we infer) that sin is a burden, since it pays wages, which, economically considered, are earnings assigned for work. And as all work, howsoever small, requires an expenditure of energy, it necessarily follows that work is a burden, even if but to those brain cells that issue the mofor fiats. Hence the conclusion that sin is a burden, because it pays wages, is logical. On the other hand we infer that our efforts Godward are so microscopic, that we don't earn wages, hence God, in his mercy, bestows gratis "eternal life," not as a remuneration, but as a gift. Why, then, do we say that the Christian's life is hard and the sinner's easy?

Still, some people take a Buddhistic view of life and argue that we are "prone to sin," so it is natural for us to sin. Very well, but are we "prone to sin"? Does the Bible say so? Search from lid to lid, and you will find no such statement as "prone to sin," however, such phrases as "shapen in iniquity," "conceived in sin," "by nature the children of wrath," "death passed upon all men" are found in both Testaments. These appear synonymous to "prone to sin," as they stand in this article, yet don't be found guilty of Bible study on the infidel's plan, but study the context as well. This done, you will see that more hopeful sentiments always follow. We must remember that from Adam to Christ we were steeped in sin, hence sinners by nature, but through Christ's crucifixion we all died, for "if one died for all, then were all dead." Just as the one who died for all rose with new life, so, also, did the "all" for which he died rise with new life. In other words, as a race we were once dead, but by our Sponsor's victory over death and the grave, we have been resurrected, rejuvenated, lifted to a higher sphere of existence. We have been restarted from an entirely new starting point, and under the guidance of a new and matchless Leader, in commemoration of which fact we reckon time from that date.

Thus, with these instances in view, how can any one say that the Christian's life is hard and that the sinner's is easy? Is this not "straining out the gnat and swallowing the camel"? Can we expect our young people to accept Christ when we preach that the Christian's life is irksome? What a wonder that any ever venture within the fold! Let us grace our countenances with a perpetual smile, and convince people by the Gospel of our vital, exemplified Bible that the Christian's life is easy, and that the good Shepherd will never want for a flock to lead.

Theocracy or Theocrasy—Which?

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

"Theocracy is the government of a State by the immediate direction or administration of God."

"Theocracy is a mixture of worship of different gods, as of Jehovah and idols."

Theocracy is God's plan of administration.

Theocrasy is man's plan, and virtually sets aside theocracy. Theocrasy is highly displeasing to God, and he everywhere pronounces his curse upon it.

Christ says, "No man can serve two masters. Ye can not serve God and mammon."

There are two kingdoms: (1) the kingdom of God, or of heaven. This consists of "righteousness and true holiness." (2) The kingdom of this world. Christ is the King of the former kingdom. He is the "King of righteousness." But he has his administrators, who rule and govern according to his directions, or commands. Whether they be patriarchs, judges, mediators, prophets, kings, etc., they are all vicegerents of God. Such was Moses. In this sense Moses was lawgiver, judge, mediator, prophet, and king. "Moses commanded us a law, even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob. And he was king in Jeshurun" (Deut. 33: 4, 5).

God always did raise up representatives in his kingdom, to rule and govern according to his directions. If we do not wait God's time and plan, we displease God, and bring trouble and division among us. Of Esau and Jacob God said, "The elder shall serve the younger." Jacob and his mother would not wait God's time and plan, hence they brought upon themselves trouble and division. Annual Conference acted wisely when it placed its restrictions upon electioneering.

Theocracy always brings trouble and division. God, through Moses, said unto the children of Israel, "When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me; thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose," etc. (Deut. 17: 14-20).

The chapter shows that all this was to be done in the line of theocracy. About 339 years after this the elders of Israel said to Samuel, "Make us a king to judge us like all the nations." This was twenty-six years before the death of Samuel the judge.

This must have been very humiliating to Samuel. We know that it was displeasing to him. They could not wait God's time and plan. God's plan was theocracy. "I will set a king over me, like as all nations that are about me," to judge, rule, or govern, in line of God's directions. Their plan was theocracy. "Now make us a king to judge us like all the nations." Well might God say, "They have rejected me, that I should not reign over them."

"To judge us like all the nations," is not in God's plan of Deut. 17. But to judge, or rule, according to God's directions is certainly taught. Some ridicule the idea that God favored a typical king in his kingdom. Christ, the antitype, was like Moses, the type. Paul says, "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 14: 17). This kingdom is established in each individual heart of God's people. If so, then there must be a king. Hence we read twice that "Jesus Christ hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father" (Rev. 1: 6; 5: 10).

But theocracy is God's plan in his kingdom, both in the individual heart and in the universal church. Samuel said that if Saul would have ruled in the line of theocracy, "Now would the Lord have established thy kingdom upon Israel forever." But Saul disobeyed, and was rejected. Samuel anointed David, a man after God's own heart. His whole reign was theocracy; and hence "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" prevailed.

Solomon, his son, became his successor. Theocracy was the first half of his reign. "Righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" prevailed. When he was about forty years old, he fell and changed his government to theocrasy, in violation of God's command in Deut. 17, and his father's entreaties of 1 Kings 2. Bible readers know the result. What direful calamities and divisions! Pen can not describe the woful results! True, for David's sake two tribes were preserved from total oblivion; for such was the final doom of the "ten lost tribes of the children of Israel." (See Smith.)

"Neither be ye idolaters. Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry" (1 Cor. 10: 7, 14). "Little children, keep yourselves from idols" (1 John 5: 21). Only by so doing can we retain theocracy, and thereby avoid trouble, and division, and final ruin. "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book" (Rev. 22: 18, 19).

Inspiring Reminiscences.

BY DAVID M. ADAMS.

"Remember the Lord afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind" (Jer. 51: 50).

THE effect of sacred memories upon one's life can not be fully estimated. How frequently has a man retraced his steps and refrained from carrying into execution a contemplated evil because the dying words of a sainted mother recurred to his memory. Who can tell how often certain proposed crimes have not been committed on account of father's prayers flashing upon the mind of the would-be perpetrator? On the other hand, there is nothing more effectual in filling the life with Christian thoughts, kind words, helpful deeds, holy impulses and noble aspirations, than is the plying of the soul by sacred reminiscences.

There are memories that we should cherish, and there are memories that should be dispensed with, or consigned to oblivion. Away with such memories that rob us of Christian joy, depress our spirits and render us less courageous for the work we have at hand! We should allow no past event to hang as a millstone about our necks to interfere with us in our Christian course, or to hinder us from remembering the Lord, and letting Jerusalem come into our mind.

Paul declared that a part of the preparation he made for future victory was forgetfulness of the things that were behind. He did not mean that he ceased to remember those things of the past that were comforting to his heart, and tended to increase his faith, confirm his hope and make him stronger as a friend and servant of Jesus Christ, but that no past event should interfere with his Christian fidelity, or prevent him from taking advantage of the opportunities of the present.

Enshrouded by the sinful environments of the kingdom of wickedness; amid the evils and temptations of besotted Babylon, Jeremiah entreated the wretched and disheartened Jews to "remember the Lord, and let Jerusalem come into their mind." He did not want them to imbibe the Babylonian spirit, settle in their sins and become contaminated with the evils of the city, but his desire was that they should remember Jehovah, remember the holy city, remember the temple and their bygone days of religious worship. He endeavored to inspire them by reverting their minds to those things they held dear to their hearts in bygone days, and to keep them close to God by the sacred memories of the past.

In this world of greed and gouge and gain, may Jehovah be constantly kept in view! In the dark hours of life,—hours of trouble, sickness and bereavement,—remember the Lord. In the hour of temptation, remember the sacred music, the prayers, the multiplicity of gospel sermons you have heard. When disposed to neglect your Christian duties, remember the vows you have made. In the presence of wicked and perverse people remember the church to which you belong. Remember the day you were baptized. Remember the ordinances of God's house. If you have lost your first love, broken your vow, and gone back into sin, remember the Lord, and let Jerusalem come into your mind.

How Long?

BY ELEANOR J. BRUMBAUGH.

WHO has not waited on God for some long-delayed, much desired blessing? Most people have. Even those who have not yet accepted Christ, seem to think that, on account of his mercy and goodness, God will grant their petition. He sometimes does, in order that he may teach them and lead them.

The fact that we have the word "wait" repeated many times in the Holy Scriptures, indicates that to wait is a necessary part of our service. Belonging to the Altemus series of books, is a booklet entitled, "Expectation Corner." Read it, if you can. It has many helpful suggestions. "My soul, wait thou only upon God. My expectation is from him," is explained, in an interesting way, in the form of an allegory. I tarried at the "Delayed Blessings Office," to wipe away a few tears.

There are different ways of waiting on God. Are you waiting patiently? Or do you fret and complain, thinking hard things of God? Sometimes perhaps you say things about God that must grieve him. The only thing you dare say of him is that he is good. If you can not see it so, your vision is defective, and not God. Let us believe God's promises, looking on the things eternal. We look too much on the temporal, live too much in the flesh. It is possible to live in the Spirit, even now.

How long shall we wait on God? We limit the time on one another. If something is not done in such a time, I will use the law. I will wait so long. No longer. When our patience is tried, we read 1 Cor. 13, and wait on the Lord. Pray for the one that aggravates you. When God does not give us things we so much desire, and that, to us, seem very reasonable and necessary, we sometimes show our disappointment by being unkind to those around us.

A husband once scolded his wife because the child took cold. O, how unkind! It is a great mistake, and hinders the answer to our prayers. We never improve conditions by saying unkind words, or doing unkind things. To meet wrongdoing with added wrongdoing, always makes matters worse. The very best way to overcome evil, is with good. If you can be still, quietly asking God's blessing on the one who is saying unkind things about you, you will receive a blessing rich and comforting, and so will the other person.

How long shall we wait on God? Wait on him every day, and every hour. If we do this, we will find many reasons for giving thanks. Heartfelt praises will ascend to him, while we wait on him. We will think praises to him, and sing praises to him as we go about our work (some kinds of work admit of this), doing all as unto him.

We spend too much thought on the things we think God has not done for us, and too little on what he has done. The fact is, we do not recognize what he has already done, and still keep asking for some things he has already given. He will teach us if we are willing to be taught of him, but if we close the way with unbelief, we must suffer for it.

Some people call and call upon God to save them from their sins. He has already provided salvation. It is our part to accept it. We must stop sinning, and begin doing the things Christ tells us to do.

How long must God wait for us to do the things he tells us? How long must he wait for us to believe the things he says? How long will people do other things instead of studying God's Word, and seeking to know him better through the Word? We can easily see that God is more longsuffering than we are. When we have really done our part, God has already done his part, and salvation is ours. How long will you keep God waiting?

"For full surrender to him?
The blessed consummating
Of all life's joys within?"

We must wonder why some people wait so long to give themselves to him, when there is such blessing in a life of service for him. The testimony of those of us who have given ourselves to him, ought to be enough to induce others, and it does, in many instances, but so many are yet away that we long for stronger testimony, holier living, more power. How long, O Lord, until the reign of righteousness?

Huntingdon, Pa.

THERE is no such distinction in reality as secular or sacred, and no war of interest, whatever, between spiritual and temporal things, in God's sight. These are distinctions without any difference in reality. All truth springs primarily from the heart of Christ, and social, political and scientific truth are as fully akin primarily, to purely religious truth, as flowers in the same bed are in a generic sense akin to each other.

THE ROUND TABLE

Knowing and Doing.

BY WEALTHY A. BURKHOLDER.

THE great question is still being agitated in the world, "What shall we do to be saved?" When the Master was here going about doing good, as was his mission, the question was the same, "What shall we do?" The question was answered and the same answer settles the question today, as well as then. Do works of righteousness. Do as I have commanded you to do. "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city."

It is not enough to know the will of our Heavenly Father, but his will must be obeyed. When the rich young ruler was told what to do, he no doubt felt interested in the subject, but there was something he loved better than the Master, and no wonder he turned away sorrowfully. Those great possessions could have been blessed for good, and with the knowledge that he could be the means of making others happy with his money, he could have had great joy, because there is perpetual joy when we are conscious of doing good to the poor and needy, or to the cause of right, on any line.

The narrative tells us that the young man had been carefully brought up. He said he had kept the commandments from his youth up. He was a model young man, and Jesus looked upon him with pleasure, and loved him.

Now the test comes, "Go and sell all that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven and come, follow me." He was very rich in money and he turned away sorrowfully, because the money was his god. The promise is, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added." So it would have proved in this case. But the ruler did not have faith enough to make the sacrifice, and we do not read that he ever accepted the conditions offered.

The way is plainly laid out, but it is a narrow way and hence all do not accept the conditions. There are many things that come in the way, to hinder and obstruct the pathway of those who would do the Master's will. We are living in a fast age, and all around us are enticements and allurements to draw the mind from the great work. There are so many things that tempt us to step aside from the path of duty and entangle us with the affairs of this world, and ere we are aware we are found on the enemy's ground.

"What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Truly it is an important question. The answer is just as important and far-reaching: "Follow me. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me and I will give rest unto your souls." Christ has promised to be with all his people, even unto the end of time. With such company, why should any go back to the beggarly elements of the world? Remember, we all have an individual account to give, and we must all appear at the judgment seat, there to give an account of how we kept his commandments. Listen: "Every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess." What will the confession be?

> "And must I be to judgment brought,
> And answer in that day
> For every vain and idle thought,
> And every word I say?"

The Word of God.

BY H. A. STAHL.

THE most wonderful book that has ever been produced is the Bible. The Bible is the one best Book. Although written by many different persons, in different ages of the world, it constitutes one comprehensive whole. Every writer has his own style and his own standpoint of observation, and yet they never come into conflict with one another.

The Bible is the most intensely human of all books. It treats of men as they are; brings out their faults as well as their virtues. No other book has been so severely criticised and assailed. Infidels, in all ages of the world, have endeavored to convict it of falsehoods and contradictions, but never with success. It is far in advance of the times in which it was written, and just as much in advance of our own age. Its teachings exert a most wonderful influence on science, philosophy, art, literature and civilization in general. And, what is most remarkable of all, is this, that the more these progress, the more does the infinite superiority of the Bible come to view. All that is most profound, and all that is most practical, in human life, is here recorded and mirrored forth.

We may acknowledge all this, however, and yet not understand the true character of the Bible in the least degree. What has been stated thus far, rationalists, and honest infidels even, are compelled to admit. So much is manifest to the natural understanding. It is only when, by the power of faith, we rise above this standpoint of observation, and recognize the Bible as the Word of God, that its true nature begins to dawn upon us.

Human as is the Bible, it is also Divine. It is the Word of God. By this we do not mean simply that God inspired holy men of old to give expression to truths in reference to himself, and our relation to him, which it was necessary for us to know, but we mean that the Scriptures are the utterance of God himself in human language.

In the Bible the mind and heart of God are portrayed. His life, his love, his will, his character, his purposes are all disclosed to the eye of faith. To fathom the Bible we must fathom God himself. Here the Eternal and Infinite One utters himself, and the Written Word, though connected with what is local and temporal, is of infinite and eternal significance. The Word made flesh is the center and completion of the Written Word.

In Jesus Christ dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. He is the utterèd Word of God, the absolute, concrete, personal expression of all the truths and spiritual realities embodied in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. Such as he is, such are also these truths and realities, infinite and eternal. As the incarnation of the Son of God is not a temporal, but an eternal fact, passing, in the resurrection and ascension, into a glorified form, and yet remaining the same, so also is the Written Word an embodiment of God that shall indeed be transfigured, but is destined to endure when time shall be no more. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." I expect to read the Bible in heaven, followed, it is true, with new light, but still the wonderful and unfathomable Word of God.

Homiletic Hints.

BY E. B. HOFF.

Service the True Index to Love.—John 21: 15-23.

JESUS had arranged with the disciples to meet him after the resurrection in Galilee (Mark 14: 28 and 16: 7). It was there in Galilee, where most of his mighty works were done. It was there, on the mountain, that he gave them his great, world-saving commission (Matt. 28: 16).

But, alas! he found them fishing; however, he turned the fishing scene into a tremendous call, as he had already done early in his ministry (Luke 5: 1-11; John 21: 1-14). He again, as many times before, dazed his disciples with his power and his love. So now he proceeds to give Peter the supreme lesson of his life.

Peter had always meant it good, but, as a leader and spokesman, he was impetuous, and sometimes professed more than he was willing or able to do. He had said that even in the face of death, if all others were offended, he would die with Jesus. But, oh, how sad, when again and again he denied his loving Master (Matt. 26: 31-35 and 69-75).

Now Jesus takes him kindly but firmly to task and says, Do you love me more than these do? Do you love me? Do you love me? If you do, manifest it, not by saying, but by serving those that are mine (21: 15-17). After much of this kind of loving and serving, and serving and loving, you will be willing to be bound and die a martyr's death (a thing you have not been willing thus far to do). It was a thing he afterwards was glad to do (John 21: 18, 19).

This is what it meant when Jesus said to Peter, "Follow me" (21: 19). This is what it means when Jesus says to any of his disciples, "Follow me." Serving the needy is serving Christ,—the truest manifestation of love,—the evidence of an acquittal before the throne of God (Matt. 25: 34-40).

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

Patriotic "Sons of God" (1 John 3: 2).

Eph. 6: 10-18.

For Sunday Evening, July 2, 1911.

I. "A Good Soldier of Christ" (2 Tim. 2: 3).—(1) Must "be strong" for service and suffering (v. 10). (2) "The whole armor"—well armed (v. 11).

II. The Enemy (vs. 11, 12).—(1) "Wiles of devil"—cunning, crafty. (2) "Principalities"—powerful. (3) "Spiritual wickedness,"—wicked spirits—pride, envy, malice.

III. Our Duty (vs. 13, 14).—(1) "To withstand." (2) "To stand." (3) "Stand therefore"—armed.

IV. The Armor is Divine.—(1) "Girt with Truth" (v. 14; Isa. 11: 5). (2) "Breastplate" (v. 14; 1 Thess. 5: 8). (3) "Shield" vs. "fiery darts" (v. 16). (4) "Sword of the Spirit" (v. 17; Matt. 4: 1-2).

Note.—People nerve and warm up on the Fourth of July. It would be good to warm up spiritually—good for the home, the church, the country, the world. Be a patriotic "child of a King."

PRAYER MEETING

The Wise Use of Time.

Eph. 5: 15-21.

For Week Beginning July 2, 1911.

1. Keeping in Mind the Final Reckoning.—Some day the solemn scene of the judgment will confront us, and even the smallest detail of our life will pass before the scrutinizing eye of a just and impartial God. We shall have to account for the spending of our time,—a most precious gift to mortal man. It is no small thing to live. Wasted moments can never be recalled, and we should look well to the fleeting sands of time. If we fail today, we need not, of necessity, be discouraged for tomorrow. We should live, however, in full consciousness of the reckoning day when God will call us to account as stewards of our allotted days. In godly fear we should redeem our time, presenting ourselves to God as his willing servants (2 Peter 1: 10-14).

2. God's Plan for Us.—God has a plan for every life, and a wise use must be made of our time, in order to come up to all the specifications of the Master Builder. It is no more important that the mechanic follow the architect's plan, or that the traveler follow the way marked out by the signboards, or that the locomotive continue its journey along the tracks laid for its progress, than that we should know God's will and do it. Yet to know God's will and do it is one thing, while to know God's will and DELIGHT to do it, is the very highest form of service, and such an endeavor makes good use of every passing moment (Psa. 90: 9, 12; Prov. 9: 9-12).

3. A Spirit-filled Life Is the Secret of Victory.—The consecrated tongue will spend no time in idle jesting; the heaven-enlightened eye will not be lusting for unlawful sights; the pure heart harbors no deceitful thoughts; the clean hands touch no unclean things; the consecrated feet do not walk in forbidden paths. Every moment is sacredly devoted to God (Matt. 24: 42-51).

HOME AND FAMILY

A Prayer for a Blessing.

(Suggested by Modern Church Methods.)

"Oh, Lord; I come to thee in prayer once more,
But pardon if I do not kneel before
Thy gracious presence, for my knees are sore
With so much walking. In my chair instead
I'll sit at ease, and humbly bow my head.
I've labored in thy vineyard, thou dost know;
I've sold ten tickets for the minstrel show;
I've called on fifteen strangers in our town,
Their contributions to our church put down.
I've baked a pot of beans for Saturday's spree.
An old-time supper it's going to be.
I've dressed three dolls, too, for our annual fair,
And made a cake which we must raffle there.
Now, with thy boundless wisdom, so sublime,
Thou knowest that these duties all take time;
I have no time to fight my spirit's foes,
I have no time to mend my husband's clothes.
My children roam the streets from morn till night,
I have no time to teach them what is right.
But thou, oh, Lord, considering all my cares,
Wilt count them righteous and wilt heed my prayers.
Bless the bean supper and the minstrel show,
And put it in the hearts of all to go.
Induce the visitors to patronize
The men who in our program advertise,
Because I've chased these merchants till they hid
When'er they saw me coming,—yes, they did!
Increase the contributions to our fair,
And bless the people who assemble there.
Bless thou the grab-bag and the gipsy tent,
The flower table and the cake that's sent.
May our whist club be to thy service blest,
Our dancing party gayer than the rest.
And when thou hast bestowed these blessings, then
We pray that thou wilt bless our souls.
Amen." —Anonymous.

Making Things Comfortable.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

"My, but I am glad to see you!" Glancing up to see who had received so cordial and sincere a welcome from Barbara, we saw an old lady, with a kindly face and manner, untying her bonnet strings and asking about Uncle Henry.

"I woke early this morning, and while the birds were singing I said to myself, 'I believe I'll go today,' and so here I am."

"You always had the faculty of coming at the right time," replied Barbara. "Do you know what we call you here among ourselves?"

"Not a bad name, I hope," said the old lady, smiling. "It does me good to be here, and I should be disappointed if you did not want me."

"Just plain 'Comfort.' Other people can do various things, but when you come it means more comfort for the entire family. The children begin to call you 'Aunt Comfort,' and I am a little afraid they would like to adopt you bodily if such a thing could be."

The old lady smiled in the friendliest fashion, and then she sat down and talked about mutual friends in the most interesting way. She was a neat, knowing, delightful old visitor, and Barbara's face lighted up like a child's with the pleasure of having her. And so it was, when one and another of the family found that she was there, they were all happy together.

And we wondered why there are not more of us who have the old lady's gift. She was plainly wanted wherever she went. She had the happy faculty of making others feel that there were sunshine and joy in their own homes. Like the fabled goddess of old, where she stepped flowers, not of brilliant hue, but the blossoms of contentment and joy, left a lasting fragrance.

There are some people whose manners have the effect of making other people ill at ease. They are so graceful, so correct, and so anxious to impress upon you the fact that unless you too appear that way, there is something wrong; that you are only conscious of a feeling of relief when you find yourself beyond their scrutiny. You have a feeling that in their presence you must sit up very straight, and have the latest pronunciation for every word. Your movements are embarrassed because you are conscious of the effort to appear easy and natural. Those people may be much surprised to learn that in the strict sense of the term they do not have good manners; they are lacking in the very first requisite of good manners, which is to set people at their ease and make them comfortable. Manners which are so good as to worry the outsider are a failure. They are like table linen, which might be too dainty for use; or the sofa pillow, which no one may rest his head upon. The old lady who visited Barbara had sweet manners. In some way she knew how to make every one happy in her presence. That is a marvelous gift.

Study the art of making people comfortable, and you have a task for a lifetime. Cultivate that kindly interest which makes awkward boys forget their hands and feet, and helps girls to lose sight of the fact that they are not dressed as well as the other girls by whom they are surrounded. In conversation, think more of drawing out the ideas of your friends than of making telling speeches yourself, and you will find a welcome everywhere. We look to women for much of this thoughtfulness, as we look to them for the home comforts. One of the arts of home-making is to make people comfortable, and no matter how old we should be, we could keep on learning more and more about it. There are some housekeepers who put neatness and order above comfort, and so make their loved ones wish for some other place to stay; yet neatness and order are indispensable to the comfort and well-being of the family. It is only when everything else has to give way before the habit of extreme cleanliness that the inmates are likely to be made uncomfortable. If a newspaper on the floor, or a few books on a couch, or the baby and his playthings are frowned upon as so many things out of their place, and as being disorderly, the children are likely to seek more comfortable quarters elsewhere.

What are a man's ideas of comfort? They vary somewhat from those of a woman. Frills and furbelows are not for him. The various forms of decoration, by needle or brush, so popular in late years, generally remain unnoticed by him. When his attention is called to them he says something complimentary; but he does not really care much for those things. He does care to have some place in his home that he can call his very own; some portion of the house where his will is law, where no conflict of authority can arise. He wants one place where he can do as he pleases. The need for it springs from a desire for the sense of proprietorship. He should be able to do just as he likes in this room, without any fear of mussing things. He should have the privilege of leaving books and papers and other things where he alone can find them. If you want to make it more comfortable, there are really useful articles, such as penwipers and soft pillows, that he will appreciate. Charles Dudley Warner has this to say about a man's room: "Man is usually not credited with much taste or ability to take care of himself in the matter of comfortable living, but it is frequently noticed that when woman has made a dainty paradise of every other portion of the house, the room she most enjoys, that from which it is difficult to keep out the family, is the one that the man is permitted to call his own, in which he retains some of the comforts of his bachelor days."

To most women the sense of order is instinctive; a man abhors slovenliness. Well-cooked, nicely-served food is a blessing, which a man knows how to appreciate. When God created woman he gave her the very loving heart, and be sure he meant her to exercise it and give of her plenty to those around her; so when she is busy for those of her own household she is filling her place. We need simple goodness and lives like the simple life of Christ. The more we study his unostentatious life, and copy it, the better for our homes. He told us to be kind one to another, tender-hearted. Faber says, "Kindness is the turf of the spiritual world." It is the foundation for a home where comforts abound and comfortable people reside.

The Golden Day.

BY ROBERT BURDETTE.

THERE are two days in the week upon which and about which I never worry. Two care-free days, kept sacredly free from fear and apprehension.

One of these days is yesterday. Yesterday, with all its cares and frets, with all its pains and aches, all its faults, its mistakes and blunders, has passed forever beyond the reach of my recall. I cannot undo an act that I wrought, I cannot unsay a word that I said, on yesterday. All that it holds of my life, of wrong, regret, and sorrow, is in the hands of the mighty Lover of God; can bring honey out of the rock, and sweet waters out of the bitterest desert—the love that can make the wrong things right, that can turn weeping into laughter, that can give beauty for ashes, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, joy of the morning for the woe of the night.

Save for the beautiful memories, sweet and tender, that linger like the perfume of roses in the heart of the day that is gone, I have nothing to do with yesterday. It was mine; it is God's.

And the other day I do not worry about is tomorrow. Tomorrow with all its possible adversities, its burdens, its perils, its large promise and poor performance, its failures and mistakes, is as far beyond the reach of mastery as its dead sister, yesterday. It is a day of God's. Its sun will rise in roseate splendor, or behind a mask of weeping clouds. But it will rise. Until then the same love and patience that hold yesterday hold tomorrow. Save for the star of hope that gleams forever on the brow of tomorrow, shining with tender promise into the heart of today, I have no possession in that unborn day of grace. All else is in the safe keeping of the Infinite Love that holds for me the treasures of yesterday. The love that is higher than the stars, wider than the skies, deeper than the seas. Tomorrow—it is God's day. It will be mine.

There is left for myself, then, but one day of the week—today. Any man can fight the battles of today. Any woman can carry the burdens of just one day. Any man can resist the temptations of today. O friends, it is only when, to the burdens and cares of today, carefully measured out to us by the infinite wisdom and might that gives with them the promise, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be," we willfully add the burdens of those two awful eternities—yesterday and tomorrow—such burdens as only the mighty God can sustain—that we break down. It isn't the experience of today that drives men mad. It is the remorse for something that happened yesterday, the dread of what tomorrow may disclose.

These are God's days. Leave them with him.

Therefore, I think, and I do, and I journey but one day at a time. That is the easy day. That is the man's day. Nay, rather, that is our day—God's and mine. And while faithfully and dutifully I run my course, and work my appointed task on that day of ours, God the Almighty and the all loving takes care of yesterday and tomorrow.—Los Angeles Times.

It is always better to help others to criticise themselves than it is to criticise them. They will believe themselves and they are not likely to believe you. The way to bring about this healthy and helpful condition of self-criticism, with its accompanying desire for improvement, is to show by our lives, silently, the better way, while resolutely refraining from urging it on others. It was a high tribute paid to a Christian man, who is not now living, when one who had known him intimately said: "He never told me that I ought to do better, but I always came away from any conversation with him wanting to do better." If we would do this for others, let us seal our lips to criticism, and incarnate the better way in our lives.

Do not look forward to what might happen tomorrow; the same everlasting Father who cares for you today will take care of you tomorrow and every day. Either he will shield you from suffering or he will give you unfailing strength to bear it. Be at peace, then, and put aside all anxious thoughts and imaginations.

"We talk about the sleep of death. How much deeper, how much sadder, is the sleep of life—the unresponsive heart, the unawakened mind, the hand palsied by lack of will to do!"

☞All business and communications intended for the paper should be addressed to the BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE, ELGIN, ILL., and not to any individual connected with it.

Entered at the Post Office at Elgin, Ill., as Second-class Matter.

BRO J. C. STAYER, and wife of Woodbury, Pa., called at the MESSENGER office.

BRO. JAMES M. MOORE is in the midst of a revival meeting in Sterling, this State.

AMONG the recent callers at the MESSENGER sanctum we mention Bro. M. J. Brougher, Greensburg, Pa.

BRO. DAVID MILLER, of Gaston, Ind., gave us a short call. This was his first visit to the Publishing House.

BRO. SAMUEL MINK, of Shrewsbury, W. Va., reports some helpful services and five accessions to the church.

WE acknowledge the receipt of the Annual Catalogue of Blue Ridge College, Union Bridge, Md., for 1910-1911.

DURING a late revival meeting at Boyer, W. Va., conducted by Bro. A. S. Thomas, sixteen put on Christ in baptism. One was reclaimed.

DURING a protracted meeting at Jacobs Creek, Pa., conducted by Bro. C. A. McDowell, fifteen applied for membership and were baptized.

BRO. W. R. MILLER, who is now at Carlisle, Nebr., writes that he has crowded houses each evening. From there he goes to Red Cloud for a week.

OWING to a rush of work in the House we did not get the Minutes printed as soon as we had expected. They will probably be mailed the last of this week.

WE think we can have the Full Report ready for filling orders the last of next week. Those desiring copies should let us hear from them at an early date.

THE Sunday-school, Ministerial and Christian Workers' Meetings of Eastern Maryland are to be held in the Sams Creek church, beginning at 10 A. M., July 26.

BRO. S. S. BLOUGH, late of Batavia, Ill., may be addressed at 403 Miami Street, North Manchester, Ind. He is now engaged in some evangelistic work at Franklin Grove, this State.

THE Sunday-school workers and the Christian Workers' Societies of Western Colorado and Utah, are holding their first annual convention at the First Grand Valley church, Colo., July 4.

THE Brethren church on South Lewis Street, Staunton, Va., was almost demolished by a tornado which passed over the city on the afternoon of Sunday, June 4. The entire roof was blown off.

THE following constitute the Sunday-school Board, appointed by the late Annual Meeting: Lafayette Steele, Walkerton, Ind., Chairman; Levi Minnich, Greenville, Ohio, Vice-chairman; D. H. Zigler, Broadway, Va., Treasurer; H. K. Ober, Elizabethtown, Pa.; James M. Mohler, Leeton, Mo.; I. B. Trout, Secretary, Elgin, Ill.

BRO. E. E. ESHELMAN is now engaged in a protracted meeting at Berthold, N. Dak. It has been arranged for him to take pastoral charge of the church at Batavia, Ill., and he will soon enter upon his work.

BRO. A. F. MILLER and wife, of Darlow, Kans., are on a trip to Maryland, to visit the scenes of their early life. They attended the late Annual Meeting, spent a few days at Elgin, and while here called at the MESSENGER sanctum.

BRO. ANDREW P. PETERSON, of Weiser, Idaho, called at the House on Friday of last week and took pleasure in looking over the large printing establishment. He thinks the business has grown immensely since he visited the Publishing House at Mount Morris, years ago.

BRO. STEVEN P. BERKEBILE, wife and son, India missionaries at home on a furlough, spent a few days in Elgin last week. They went from here to Jewell, Ohio, where they may be addressed. They are planning to return to their field of labor in India the coming fall.

BRO. J. E. MILLER, president of Mount Morris College, and wife, sailed from New York for the Old World, June 10. They were accompanied by Bro. E. T. Keiser and wife, of Pomona, Cal. During the trip the party will visit Palestine, Egypt and other places of interest.

OUR patrons will do well to give the June issue of the Missionary Visitor a careful reading. It contains not only the financial report for the mission year, which closed March 31, but it contains interesting reports concerning the conditions and work at all of our foreign mission points.

ON Friday of last week Bro. Herbert A. Studebaker, of Converse, Ind., conductor of the song service at the late Annual Meeting, called at the MESSENGER sanctum. Bro. Studebaker is a good leader in our song services, and we are likely to hear more of him at our future meetings.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for a public debate at Beaver Dam, Ind., between Bro. B. E. Kesler and E. G. Denney. The latter represents the Disciple church. The usual points of difference between the Brethren and the Disciples will be quite fully discussed. See special notice on page 397.

SOME of the Districts are arranging for a Sunday-school Teachers' Institute, of several days' duration, to be held annually, in charge of competent instructors. They find that a one-day session is not sufficient to give the desired training, and that at least three or four days must be given to the work, to achieve the desired results.

BRO. JOSEPH STUDEBAKER, of Flora, Ind., says that he is very much pleased with the new song book, "Kingdom Songs," and thinks the selection of music could hardly have been better. He is sure that the book will grow in favor, and will be greatly prized wherever introduced. He is making arrangements to spend much of his time among the churches, and will, of course, use the "Kingdom Songs."

BRO. E. C. OVERHOLTZER, after a sojourn of nine months with the members at Stonyford, Cal., has moved his family to his old home near Princeton, Cal. As secretary of the Home Mission Board of Northern California, and also as Sunday-school Secretary, he is to make a tour of the District. His first stop is at Patterson, where he is booked for a two weeks' series of meetings, and where he is to assist in the dedication of their chapel.

THE biweekly articles, from the pen of Sister Elizabeth D. Rosenberger, that appear in the Home and Family Department, are widely read and appreciated. The one which we publish this week will strike most husbands about right. The wives and daughters may do well to read the article before the paper falls into the hands of the head of the family. Should he be a preacher, consider how nicely the suggestion will apply to him and his room or his corner, if he has nothing better!

THOSE of us who fear, lest the church depart from the Truth, by reason of the changes that, at times, are being made in her methods, need to remember that the Lord is at the helm, and that, whatever may threaten, even the "gates of hell cannot prevail against her."

MANY of our congregations are having daily prayer meetings for a week or more preceding their series of meetings. Invariably they report most salutary results. And why should they not? The practice is apostolic, highly conducive to increased spirituality, and a most excellent preparation to a fruitful series of meetings.

SISTER LUELAH HARDEN, of Helmsburg, Ind., writes us that there are eight members at that place, and that they are very anxious for some preaching services. They would be pleased to receive a call from some of our ministers who feel impressed with the importance of preaching the Gospel to the isolated and their neighbors.

WE must again call the attention of our correspondents to the importance of giving the addresses of all newly-elected ministers, when sending their names to us. Probably more than half of our correspondents omit the addresses of these ministers in their reports. This makes it necessary for us to write the parties for the further information needed.

OF late we notice that special services are held, in many of our congregations, for the aged saints who are not usually in attendance at the regular services. The idea is a most excellent one. It is a loving tribute to those who have long borne "the heat and burden of the day," and such a kindly remembrance brings joy and gladness to the aged pilgrims in the evening of life, as they near the lonely shores of the silent river.

BRO. ANDREW HUTCHISON writes us from Worthington, Minn., saying, that he is starting out on another long preaching tour, with a view of spending the winter in California. He adds that he plans as though he is to live always, and yet he realizes that the call to close his earthly pilgrimage may come any day. Until June 10 he may be addressed at 1210 Twenty-fifth Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

CONCERNING the recent excitement in Jerusalem, about the discovery of the Ark of the Covenant, etc., Mr. Forder, in a letter to Bro. W. R. Miller, says: "The affair at the Mosque is very much exaggerated. The excavators moved a few pavement stones in the cave under the Rock, and sank a shaft twenty feet deep into Solomon's stables. Nothing was found and nothing was taken away. If money had been paid to all the Sheiks at the temple area, nothing would have been heard of the matter. It is all jealousy against the leading men." He further said that the government had recovered all the money, tents, etc., taken from the Miller party by the Bedouin robbers, and that over a hundred Kerak and local chiefs were then in prison at Damascus, awaiting executions. So it would seem that those who were the cause of the uprising a Kerak are to pay the penalty of their misconduct.

EACH year the Presbyterian Mission Board of England publishes and submits to the Synod an extended report of work done on certain foreign fields. We have before us the report, ninety-one pages, of the work done in China, Formosa and in parts of India. The report, which is a most interesting one, is splendidly illustrated and also contains a number of good maps. It gives one a good idea of what is being accomplished and where the fields are located. A noticeable feature of the report is the fine showing of natives that have been educated and trained for various lines of work on the different fields. At the head of the work in each field there are a few earnest and well-informed English missionaries, who seem to have given special attention to the training of native workers. And, judging from the appearance of the buildings, shown in the photographs, as well as the appearance of the educated natives, we should think that these missionaries are not only well equipped for their work, but that they have a good plan and are working it well.

We have a card from Bro. John P. Bailey, New Market, Iowa, saying that he is now past eighty years, and has read the Bible through since the beginning of 1911. We had the pleasure of meeting him and his aged wife at the late Conference. Bro. Bailey represented his church at the Meeting and takes a great interest in the work of the church. He still does some preaching.

An Encouraging Compliment.

On page 394, under the heading, "The Departing Guests," will be found an editorial clipped from the St. Joseph, Mo., News-Press, that deserves more than a passing notice. We suggest a careful reading of the third paragraph. -Here an editor, who has known little of our people and their claims, is telling his readers how the Brethren are proving to the world that a body of men and women may live in well-to-do circumstances, may possess a high order of spirituality, and be noted for well-cultivated brains, without yielding to the influences of the crazy foibles of fashion, or giving themselves over to the frivolities of the nerve-straining age. The simplicity of our members, and their absolute freedom from the tyranny of the fashionable and heartless world, made a decided impression on the minds of the thinking people of St. Joseph. Not a few of the leading ministers of the city would be pleased to see this simplicity, spirituality and freedom from frivolities transferred to their congregations. They see in us, in these particulars, what was prominent in the early Christian churches. And yet there are possibly a few among us who would do away with this peculiarity of the Brethren church, and have no more distinction between us and the world than there is between the popular churches and the leaders of fashion. It would seem that some of those outside of the church often see more in our simplicity than what some of our own members see.

Correcting Mistakes.

A correspondent wishes to know whether such crimes as lying, stealing, swearing and getting drunk can be considered and disposed of by the members directly concerned and implicated, or must they be reported to the church. As a rule, such crimes would better be reported to the church for disposition, but in a number of instances they have been disposed of in a more quiet way, and with good results, too, at that. If one tells a falsehood about his brother, goes to him, apologizes, asking his pardon, and the two becoming perfectly reconciled,—and the matter has not disturbed the public, there is nothing to be gained by ventilating the case further. Weak members have been rebuked for swearing, have amended their ways and been led up to a higher plane of living without having their unintentional mistakes paraded before others. This is true of some who have shown a decided weakness along other lines. They have been helped by their friends, and in all probability the lessons learned were more impressive, and did more good in the end than if they had been cited to council. It will be found a good policy to correct as many mistakes outside of the church meetings as possible, and when a matter is once well settled, it is very unwise for those not directly concerned in the case to stir it up again. Some of that charity, or love, which covers a multitude of sins will come into good play at such times. What we are here saying is not meant to apply to the cases that have become notorious, and demand a public action for the good of the accused, as well as for the protection of the church.

Tertullian and Trine Immersion.

The Christian Standard and some other papers, holding to single immersion, a form of baptism that originated about A. D. 360, persist in saying that Tertullian, who wrote in the early part of the third century, taught that the three dips in baptism were more than the Lord appointed. Now, it so happens that Tertullian never said anything of the sort. Describing baptism, he says: "When we are going to enter the water, but a little before, in the presence of the congregation, and under the hand of the president, we solemnly profess that we disown the devil and his pomp, and his angels. Hereupon we are thrice immersed, making a somewhat ampler pledge than the Lord has appointed in his Gospel."—Writings of Tertullian, Vol. I, page 336. "The ampler pledge" refers to the promise made before baptism, and not to the three dips in baptism. As proof that Tertullian believed that the Lord taught the threefold immersion, we quote further. He says: "After his resurrection he promises in a pledge to his disciples that he will send them the promise of his Father; and lastly, he commands them to baptize into the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, not into an impersonal God. And, indeed, it is not once only, but three times that we are immersed into the three persons, at each several mention of their names."—Tertullian, Vol. II, page 395, Ante-Nicene Christian Library, Edinburg edition.

Here Tertullian gives the baptismal formula as authority for the triple immersion observed by the church of his time. It was the only form of Christian baptism known to him, and was to be performed into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And, to make himself more clearly understood, he adds: "Not into an impersonal God." That is, not into one person as constituting the Godhead. To his mind there might be some excuse for dipping once only into the name of one person, but since there are three persons named in the formula, there can be no logical grounds for the one action; hence, in carrying out the purpose of the formula, he states distinctly: "Three times we are immersed into the three persons, at each several mention of their names." This language is too plain to be misunderstood, and shows that the author believed that Jesus meant to teach trine immersion, when he gave the baptismal formula to his disciples.

To say that the term "ampler pledge" refers to the triple action is to wrest Tertullian's language, and give it a meaning never intended. Candidates for baptism made pledges before they entered the water, but the action in baptism was not looked upon as a pledge. Had Tertullian meant to convey the idea that the three dips were more than the Lord requires in the Gospel, he might have said something like this: "We are thrice immersed, doing somewhat more than the Lord has appointed in his Gospel." But since he wrote something different, it is reasonable to conclude that he meant something different. As stated, baptism is not a pledge. It was not so regarded by our historian. It is an action. It is doing something, and Tertullian does not say that those who submitted to triple immersion did more than the Lord commanded. His testimony, in the two citations given above, is wholly on the side of trine immersion. He was baptized by the threefold immersion, believed in it, taught and practiced it. All the preachers and bishops known to him baptized in the same way. In fact, it was the only practice known to Christendom for the first three centuries of the Christian era.

Our World Without Sin.

There are times when we wonder and wonder what heaven will be like. Again there are times when we, as God's believing children, get together in large numbers, where all is peace, love and union, and we are made to say: "This is like heaven." We frequently heard expressions of this kind during our Conference at Winona Lake, last year. Our people expressed themselves in this way because of the beauty of the location and because of the sweet and loving spirit that was so manifest everywhere during the sessions. So then, beauty of location and the spirit of love would seem to be two prominent elements in our ideals of what heaven will be. When we get sin out of this world of ours, we will have this ideal largely filled.

These thoughts come to us in an unusually forceful way this summer afternoon as we sit, surrounded as we are, by nature's most beautiful pictures. The birds are singing their most entrancing songs; the air is laden with the perfume of the flowers, sweet and beautiful; the shadows are lengthening and deepening as they recede toward their hiding places behind the summer-clad mountains. All is peace and quiet, and the thought of heaven comes to us—What will it be like? Well, we don't know. What God has done and is doing for his children is beyond human ken. But we were trying to think how nearly like unto heaven this world of ours would be, were all the forces of sin removed from it. What would be some of the most important changes that would be made?

First, we would have taken out of it all that Satan brought into it. To name all this in detail, if we could, would require the writing of a book, and this is not our purpose now. But there are some things that it may be interesting for us to think about, and it may do us good to work in that direction.

1. Take sin out of the world and we would have but one interpretation of the Bible, as there would be no selfish purposes to be carried out, and no temptations to accept and entertain wrong views. The mind uncontaminated with sin would be pure, and desire only to love God and do good to everybody.

2. Were there no sin in the world, we would, with but one interpretation of the Gospel of salvation, have but one church, one family of God, and all men would be members of this church, as all would love God and be subjects of the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The churchhouses we now have, as well as the mosques and temples for idol worship, would all be needed as places of worship as all would be worshipers of the true God, and it would require all the churches, cathedrals and temples that we have in the world today, to accommodate thousands and millions of peoples that would, with thanksgiving on their lips, flock to the Lord's house for worship and service.

The ministers and all Christian workers would be needed to lead and conduct the services of the Lord's house. But the character of the preaching, teaching and working for the Master would, necessarily, be changed. There would be no need of evangelistic teaching, as there would be no sinners to convert. If there were no sin and no Satan to tempt us, there could be no wickedness. People, today, must be converted and be born again because sin has robbed them of their life, power and liberty. The world without sin would make every man and woman,—as a child born into the kingdom of Jesus Christ,—not only liberated from the power of sin, but more,—entirely free from the influence and effects of sin.

3. Had we no sin in the world, there would be no secret societies, with their night sessions and guarded doors. We would all be loving members of the church of Jesus Christ and would have no need of signs and grips as a means of knowing each other, to the neglect and disadvantage of others. We would all be brethren, living and laboring for each other's mutual good and happiness. Thousands of fathers, instead of spending their evenings in the lodges, too often in banqueting, drinking and carousing, would be the priests of the happy homes, as God intended they should be, thus making the ideal condition most longed for by all Christian mothers.

Again, were sin and its author barred out of this otherwise good and beautiful world of ours, we would have no further trouble with the terrible curse of intemperance, with all of its attendant vices. No saloons, no drunkenness, no fighting, no broils, no dancing halls, card tables, skating rinks, gambling tables and hundreds of other associated evils that follow in the trail. All kinds of sinful indulgences, as they now disturb and destroy the peace and happiness of the people, would disappear as the morning fogs before the rising sun, leaving the world flooded with light, warmth and renewed life.

And then, what about war, our standing armies, navies and great battleships? They would all be out of business—all gone. There would be no use for these instruments of devastation, misery, pain and death, because peace would then cover this earth of ours as the waters cover the seas. General Sherman was right when he said: "War is hell!" It is the work of sin and the devil from the beginning to the end. The devil came to destroy and kill, but Jesus Christ came to heal and save. If every man, woman and child in the world would let Jesus rule and reign in the heart, Satan would be put out of business and the millennium would be here, and peace,—blessed peace,—would flow over this world as a river.

Can we have this peace? It is possible. It is God's will. Jesus suffered and died that we might have it, and the Holy Spirit is calling upon us to awaken and help to bring it about. " Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel of salvation and peace," is the battle cry of the church of Jesus Christ. Be strong in the Lord and the victory will follow.

The Departing Guests.

Under the above heading the News-Press, St. Joseph, Mo., said some very nice things about our people and their Conference. We clip the following:

The National Convention of the Church of the Brethren, which has been in session in St. Joseph for a week, has concluded its work, and the thousands of visitors, who have been here for the occasion, are returning home. Expressions heard at every hand convince one that they have enjoyed their stay here; that they are well satisfied with the treatment they have received and that they go away bearing good will and pleasant memories of the St. Joseph gathering.

That is sufficient reward for St. Joseph. The spirit of hospitality was never displayed here to better advantage. Room was made for 12,000 to 15,000 visitors, perhaps but half that number came. Two reasons are assigned for an attendance smaller than usual; one is the extremely hot weather this early in the season, and the other that these Conventions rarely meet in cities as large as St. Joseph, being rather in the nature of a Chautauqua, with rural settings. Be that as it may, the point is that St. Joseph was ready for them, and thereby demonstrated, to its own satisfaction, its complete equipment as a convention city, namely, the Auditorium as a gathering place, and ample facilities, through its public and private hospitality, to make a very large number of visitors comfortable at modest and reasonable rates.

St. Joseph has really enjoyed the visit of the Brethren. It has seen in them an earnest, religious, sincere people; a fine example of peaceful, simple life, and an impressive contrast to the frivolities and strife and borrowed worries of these nerve-straining times. They have impressed the truth that the modiste and the milliner and the crazy follies of fashion are no more necessary now than ever to the comeliness of women, and that the tailor and the barber do not supply brains and quality in men. "The apparel oft proclaims the man," Polonius told Laertes. True words, and here we have had their exemplification—people who were good to look upon; severely garbed, but wholesome-bodied and wholesome-minded; gentle, friendly, peaceful, neighborly folk; well-to-do in the world's goods because of their industry and thrift and frugality, but not subordinating their spiritual aspiration to temporal vanities.

We hope the Brethren will come again to St. Joseph. There is a movement to subdivide the country into districts, with permanent meeting places in each. We trust that the visitors have come to think so well of St. Joseph as to regard it favorably in the future.

Talks at the Annual Meeting.

There were a number of splendid addresses delivered during the late Conference week, and some of them would make interesting and instructive reading. The Conference dailies published parts of a number of these addresses, and below we are giving a few selections. More might be given, but space will not permit.

Relation of the Home to the Church.

Bro. H. C. Early delivered an address on this subject in the afternoon of Sunday, June 4. Concerning this address the Daily Gazette printed the following:

After dwelling upon the importance of the subject, Elder Early made the point that the home is the first institution God set up. It is the foundation of all society, government, the nation, the church, heaven and hell, and in order that these may be strong, the home must be strong. Home is the outgrowth of man's social instinct and nature, the speaker said. The rests also upon marriage. A home must embrace at least two people, husband and wife, living together agreeably, and an ideal home embraces parents and children living together in right relations to one another. The home is a place of discipline and training.

Discussing the relation of the home to the church, Eld. Early said that the home is the foundation, the source from which the church feeds, and a happy, right home is the foundation of happy, right life. No life, said he, can reach its best without the best of foundation. Eld. Early gave his idea of the proper relation of parents to each other and to their children, as well as the relation of children to their parents. The Lord gave Adam a suitable helpmate, he said. Husbands and wives should love one another, this implying absolute fidelity to each other in the marriage state and complete cooperation. In the government of the home, the elder contended, the husband, by nature and Scripture, is the head, he to rule and defend,—the wife to obey and trust. Parents should love their children, should provide for their needs of body, mind and heart, and exercise government over them. Children owe their parents love and obedience.

"Such homes as these," said Elder Early, "become the foundation of virtuous society, pure government, a strong nation, a big, powerful and growing church, a triumphant heaven and a defeated, ruined hell.

"An ideal home," he declared, "is a place where husband, wife and a family of children dwell harmoniously together.

"There have been 800,000 divorces during the past forty years, to say nothing of the many applications not granted.

"Young men should read the Bible on the subject of marriage.

"The absolute fidelity of a husband to his wife lies in the fact that he loves her as his own flesh."

Eld. Early, who is the retiring Conference Moderator, is one of the strong men of the church and has delivered many able addresses, but those who heard him yesterday said that it was his best. At its conclusion he was congratulated by a crowd as large as those which have complimented any three other speakers since the big meeting began.

The Best in Life.

Bro. Galen B. Royer spoke on the above topic, and in part he said:

"In looking out into the world and judging from men's aspirations and seeking, one concludes that the best thing of this world is the getting of riches. And Paul taking this same ideal for illustration talks about the best thing of life in the terms of God's riches. Eph. 8 tells of 'the unsearchable riches of Christ.'

"There are the riches of God's goodness. The Psalmist says, 'The earth is full of the goodness of God.' And how good is the earth; so good that some people never look above it and even live in its lowest plains. They simply live to satisfy unto themselves and no more. They are worshipers of nature, but to their own selfishness. The poor heathen are worshipers of nature because they know no better. 'The goodness of God should lead us to repentance,' Paul says, and God's wondrous goodness of earth is enough to lead him this way.

"But this is not the best of life. Then there is the riches of God's grace, seen in the cross of the Lord Jesus. How abundant is our salvation! Not the scanty salvation some think about but 'abundantly' are we saved. My brother, sister, there is not live in the scanty salvation of simply forgiveness of the cross. Precious as is the Savior and his wondrous redemption, how precious it is to be forgiven. But this is not yet the best of life. Not that I would undervalue our reconciliation unto God, but there is still something in store for the child of God that is better than being forgiven, and that is living in his love. Something better than being saved from past sin, and that is being kept saved day by day through God's riches in Christ. The cross is salvation, whereas now Christ at the right hand supplies all our need and that is still far better. My God will supply all your need according to his riches in glory. Precious truth. This is the Best of Life.

"Our mintage has three coinings—coppers that the poorest of our nation have; silver that common people have; gold that the rich have. So in grace. Everybody has access to the coins—the poorest of the poor. Many are satisfied with the silver and forgiven them and content in caring not that any one else is. The few are the multi-millionaires of heaven, living day by day according to the grace of riches of glory. Our missionaries are among those living in the riches of his glory."

Conversion and Regeneration.

Bro. I. B. Trout's discourse on "Conversion and Regeneration" was full of gospel points. We give this much of it, as condensed for the Daily Press:

The speaker said that in his opinion the greatest subject is redemption, and then comes regeneration and conversion. He said that the Christian religion is the only religion in all the world that claims for its followers a heavenly birth. "If it were not for the two great doctrines of redemption and conversion," he said, "the Bible would be null and void. The church ordinances, relative to rites and ceremonies, pale into insignificance beside the doctrines of redemption and conversion." He declared they were of only relative importance.

He took his text from the last half of John 3: 7: "Ye must be born again." This was not only a new doctrine to Nicodemus, to whose question it was a reply, but it was a new doctrine to the world at that time and is almost a new doctrine at the present time. Eld. Trout declared that conversion meant a turning around. He quoted a number of Bible passages relative to this question. "Some call it regeneration, some call it conversion, some call it getting religion," he said. "I am not so particular as to what you call it, as I am to what it is in your life and my life in practice. No rational, accountable being before God can enter the kingdom of heaven unless they are born again."

He declared that the agency of the new birth is clearly set forth in God's Word. He said that God is the power and his Word the agency, but there is only one way to get converted. "The process of regeneration or conversion," he said, "brings a man from outside of Christ to inside of Christ."

"Many think they are converted when they decide to do better," said Elder Trout. "Many aim to do about right—to graze the mark without hitting it. Sin simply means missing the mark."

Sound Doctrine.

Concerning the sermon by Bro. C. B. Smith on "Sound Doctrine" we glean:

Eld. Smith, in speaking of instructive teaching, said that teaching that aims simply to please caused instruct,—that often teaching is aimed at the head and not at the heart. He declared that there is no practical preaching except doctrinal preaching, which means the presentation of the entire teaching of Jesus and the apostles and not only a few of their peculiar doctrines.

Some one has said that there are three kinds of preaching—historical, doctrinal and practical. It seems to me there can be no practical preaching without doctrinal preaching, declared Eld. Smith, in this age more than in preceding one, men need to be taught soundly, sound doctrine. But before this can be done, two things are absolutely essential. One is that the teacher must get the teaching and the other that the teaching must get the teacher. Study to thyself. Better far is a man who is not a preacher than a preacher who is not a man.

Elder Smith then called attention to the doubts which are in the world's air. He said that instead of studying to show themselves approved of God, many study to show themselves approved of men. He said that sound doctrine implies giving the people the positive and not the negative in religion. He said that doubts have to be counteracted. People are asking for certainties, he declared, and should be given them. He said that the minister is a messenger and should tell just what the Sender told him, no more, no less. He said the question is not whether a doctrine is beautiful, but whether it is true, and admonished all to learn the truth and follow it.

Soul Winning.

Among other things Bro. B. F. Heckman, in his discourse on "Soul Winning," made these remarks:

"What does it mean to win souls?" asked the speaker. "It is not merely to get them to accept Christ but also to build them up in Christ, teaching them to observe all things, have their inheritance among the sanctified.

"Soul winning is the Christian's business. Our Lord has said: 'As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you.' Having gone, therefore, disciple the nations. It was our Lord's mission in the world and when he left the work was given to his followers: 'We are ambassadors in behalf of Christ.'

"Every day life and living counts in winning souls. They are won by godly lives of men and women. Thus the Christian is God's arrow to shoot the sinner, to win him for Christ.

"What kind of people are to do the work? Transfigured people,—those who have their ideals in Christ Jesus. In them is manifest the savor of the knowledge of God. It is necessary for the soul winner to keep himself in the love of God, while winning souls, lest he be drawn into sin.

"The work is the work of the Holy Spirit. 'Not by might nor by power but by my Spirit, saith Jehovah of Hosts.' It is the Word of God the worker is to use, for it is 'the power of God unto salvation.'

"Thus it is with hearts full of the Holy Spirit and love that the Christian reaches out to do whatsoever, in whatsoever place, at whatsoever time, to reach men for Jesus Christ."

The Men's Class.

It is a very easy matter to have a large class of men in any of our Sunday-schools where all the brethren attend and take an active part. But when they refuse to perform their full part in making up the class, they should not expect others to do more for the school than they are doing. When the men, who do not belong to the church, see our own people attending Sunday-school promptly, it will not be difficult to get them to attend also, especially when they are treated like learners in a class should be treated, and are made fully to understand that their presence is appreciated. There ought to be a men's class in all our schools, and such a class can be formed in the way here stated. If we would have others study the Scriptures, we should set the example. If we would have the men of our community attend our class, we must show them by our conduct that we think enough of the class to give it our support.

BARRON, WISCONSIN.

The church, here at Barron, will hold her love feast June 23, at 7:30 P. M. This is, at present, a mission point with about thirty members. It is a nice little, fairly strong church, and a neat and fair-sized church-house gives evidence of their great zeal for the principles of the Brethren. But losses have been sustained through the moving out of several families, including some of the active workers. Some have been removed by death, and there have been internal troubles of a character that manifests itself in worldliness and the improper treatment of some. Too often the promises of love have been used when the fallow ground needed cultivation. Thus several have been lost to the work here, and the remnant is scattered and weak.

However, there certainly is an opportunity here to do work for the Master. Quite a number of young people, verging into manhood and womanhood, stand just outside of the fold. Several of them are Brethren's children, and quite a number of boys and girls are very loyal to our little Sunday-school.

Several members live in Barron, where we are located, and expect to start Sunday-services very soon. At present we have services on Wednesday evenings at our home. There is ample opportunity, here in town, to build up the work,—do it seems to us,—and we crave the prayers of God's children in behalf of the work at Barron, that his Spirit may lead us into right channels of the work. We expect to commence revival services June 11, to continue two weeks, closing with our love feast.

Any of the Brethren, passing through this part of Wisconsin, or who are looking for a location, are earnestly requested to visit the Brethren here at Barron, as there are excellent opportunities here in almost every way.

PREACHING FUNERALS.

We have no account that Jesus ever preached a funeral sermon. Instead of preaching at funerals he raised people to life. He was invited to the house of Jairus (Mark 5: 38) to see a little child. The father wanted him to come at once. He said: "My little daughter lieth at the point of death." She was only a child, because she is spoken of as "a little daughter." Christ made no preparation for a funeral, but for a resurrection. Luke tells us that this daughter was twelve years old. Jesus was the Great Physician to heal and raise to life. Peter, James and John were to be eye-witnesses to this wonderful scene. Jesus was willing to allow the parents of the child to be present. This was one of the miraculous things that Jesus came to show the people. It was to demonstrate the power that was entrusted into his hands,—the power of the resurrection.

Jesus, as his custom was, went about doing good. He came to the city of Nain with his disciples and many other people. As he neared the gate of the city, a dead man was carried out. His mother (a widow) was in the funeral procession. Jesus had compassion on her and said: "Weep not" (Luke 7: 11-13). Jesus touched the bier, and the pallbearers stood still. Thus, centuries before, Moses told his people "to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord" (Ex. 14: 13). There is a power in standing still, when the Lord does his work. Jesus aroused this young man by saying: "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." Soon this young man was seen in a sitting posture, and Jesus then delivered him to his mother. O what joy! Instead of seeing her son lowered into the tomb, she could return home with great joy. The disciples and others witnessed this wonderful scene.

In the case of Lazarus we have another man raised to life. At Bethany was a happy home of two sisters and two brothers. It is probable that their parents had died. Jesus had a great concern for this family. He loved them (John 11: 36). Jesus had heard of Lazarus' death. He called it a sleep (verse 11). The disciples said, "Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well." It was then made known to them that Lazarus had died.

Lazarus had lain in the grave four days when Martha heard of Jesus' coming. She could not wait any longer, but soon met him, and began to tell him of her grief. How sad she felt over the loss of such a loving brother! She said: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Then Jesus spoke of the resurrection, "Thy brother shall rise again." Martha at once hurried to her sister Mary, saying, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee."

When Jesus calls we should not hesitate, but go at once. Jesus met those sisters and saw they were heart-broken. He saw the Jews weeping, which caused him to groan in spirit and to be troubled. Jesus said, "Where have ye laid him?" "They said unto him, Lord, come and see." As soon as Jesus saw the place of burial, he was moved to weep (verse 35). He told them to take away the stone. Then he offered a short prayer. "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me." With a loud voice he cried: "Lazarus, come forth!" When Jesus calls, the dead will hear. There was no funeral to be preached, but a dead person was raised to life.

This makes three young persons that Christ raised from the dead. "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive; but every man in his own order."

Goshen, Ind. J. H. Miller.

LESSONS FROM THE TRANSFIGURATION.

Jesus had been teaching his disciples for some time, so that they would be ready to take up the work after he would leave them. He told them about the suffering which he would experience at Jerusalem. The elders and the chief priests and scribes would apprehend him, and cause his death. This was hard for the disciples to understand, for they knew that Jesus was the Son of God and that he had power. He had cast out devils and healed the sick, so they could not believe that men could kill him. Peter told Jesus that this should never come to pass. He and the other apostles were reminded, however, that the Lord's work must be done, although it might mean death.

About a week later Christ told the disciples more minutely what would come to pass. He took Peter, James and John up into a very high mountain, where he engaged in prayer. He wanted to get away from the world. After they had come to the designated place, Christ began to pray before them, and while he was praying, his countenance was changed. His clothes shone in dazzling splendor. His face was bright as the sun.

While the apostles still gazed upon the glorified Christ, two men, Moses and Elijah, appeared unto them. Now Moses and Elijah were men of God while here on earth. God worked through them. They now appeared in glory as Jesus was also in glory. They began to talk with Jesus about the events to happen at Jerusalem.

Peter and the other two men were so sleepy that they did not understand what was going on. They were like we are sometimes, so drowsy that we do not know what people are talking about. When they were fully awake, they saw these two heavenly visitors, talking with Jesus. Just as they were getting ready to leave Jesus, Peter said to him: "It is a good thing to be here. Let us build three booths, one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elijah."

While Peter was yet speaking, a very bright cloud came suddenly upon them and covered them. As they entered the cloud, the apostles became very much frightened, but soon a voice was heard out of the cloud. God was talking, and when they heard this, they fell on their faces upon the ground. This voice said that this Jesus is the Son of God, that he is dearly loved by him and that he is well pleased with him. They were told to hear whatever Jesus would tell them. Whatever Jesus would command them would be pleasing to the Father also.

After this had all happened and the two men had gone, Jesus came to the disciples and told them not to be afraid. Looking about them, they saw no one but Jesus only.

Coming down from the mountain, Jesus told them that they should not tell what they had heard or seen to any person until after he was raised from the dead. Perhaps these things did not fully understand what all this meant, but doubtless it was a glorious experience to them.

INDIA NOTES.

—The other day, when Sister Himmelsbaugh came in from a trip in the hot sun, she took out from her pocket the clinical thermometer, and was surprised to find that it was registering 105. The heat of the day had forced it up like that,—not the last fever case, for she had no fever cases for several days, and always shakes it down after using it. This is our hot weather.

—At the present time Bro. Ross is making a trip to the Himalaya Mountains, to come down when he learned that some of his people were sick. It was a great sacrifice, and in many ways, I would think, not quite called for, but devotion to the work in hand, and to the workers in hand, too, is sure to be rewarded sooner or later, in ways unthought of.

—Bro. E. H. Eby and wife had gone to Poona, where there was a little son added to the Eby family. After the mother came from the hospital, she got to feeling worse, and they have all gone to Panchgani, where, we trust, they will have a pleasant and profitable time, and get fully well again.

—What we shall do in the heated season is often a question with us, as is the case, perhaps, with all missionaries. It is a serious question, look at it however we may. If we go to the hills, and there rest and enjoy the good air and delightful climate for a month or two, we have the always-present-with-us feeling that it is most likely that things are not what they should be at home. And if we stay at home, when it is raging hot, we can't work well. We get very tired and weary, with no good coming of it, and we wish we could be away on some hill station, reading a good book for the time being. So there you are. It is a question. And in this we have not mentioned the matter of finance, which, on a hill station, is no small consideration. But missionaries have to meet questions. A greater question is the problem of the education of their children. It is one of two things: either husband and wife must be separated from each other for some years, or the children must be separated from their parents for some years. But, while missionaries have to meet these questions, they are not forgetful of the fact that parents at home have some tremendous problems to solve also.

—March 16, 1911, a bill was presented to the Governor's Council the purport of which is to make primary education compulsory in India. It has first special reference to boys, but a clause also in which provision is made for the girls, in this way, that, whenever a community or district is sufficiently advanced to justify the step, the proper authorities may declare that Section 17 of the Act is now applicable to the district, and the working of the law becomes at once operative. "Every boy not under six and not over ten years of age," this is the wording of Section 4, to specify to whom the Act applies. And section 6 also precludes another evil: "No person shall take into his employment any boy who ought to be at school under this Act." At present, the Act is being circulated, together with the discussion that took place among the members of the Governor's Council when it was presented, all over India, for perusal and criticism of those interested. Japan began with this in 1872. It practically made education compulsory in 1890, and in 1900 it made its primary education largely free.

—Some days ago we had a case of a young brother being accused of housebreaking and theft. I did all I could to free the brother, and it was not without its good effect, for in the primary court he was dismissed and pronounced "not guilty." But there were other irregularities, to most of which I personally called the attention of the Government. The result is that the case is up again in the higher court, before the first-class magistrate. The other time it was before a second-class officer. The first-class magistrate has rather varied opinions of the second-class magistrate, so it became a matter of no little interest to a number of people what the outcome would be. And our Bhil-Christians fear somewhat. However, I had the privilege of an intimate conversation with the magistrate, and of telling him that the leader of corruption in the case was not figuring prominently, and that I knew who he is, and I told him about all I knew. This is not good policy for a politician, but I am not a politician, I am a preacher. Anyhow, when the case came up again, the magistrate, seeing there was no lawyer on the side of the defense, and that the Government prosecutor would manage the complainant's case for him, appointed me to defend the case to the best of my ability. The outcome we will see later.

—Last week we had, at Anklesher, two Bible classes, two periods a day and two and a half hours to each period. Brother Lellu Jalim taught one class, and I the other. For the next two weeks Bro. Adam Eby is arranging to have charge of the latter. Classes I and II have given their examination, but the papers are not yet graded. After a term of Bible study, we think it always wise to close with a real stiff examination. Our work in the villages depends greatly upon the native workers we can station among the people, and their work depends much on their tact, ability, grace, knowledge of the Truth, and trust in the Lord. The village school-teacher may be called one of the best workers we have in outlying villages in India. The missionary is naturally at the end of the district which falls to him. Pray that these units in the great work may be divinely guided, always.

—Some of us, on the field, where the battle is thick and hot, and where the fight for the bright all over the horizon, often have to wonder what is the matter at home, that there are not more mission workers always ready, and why parents fear to encourage their children to look into the world field for the Lord, and why it is counted a great thing to give up home and go a little distance away, for the Master's sake. You are all ready to do it for good pay, if it is a business proposition. But when it comes to doing this for the Master, and trusting him in the work and for the church, then something happens. Perhaps it were better to say that nothing happens. A few are ready for the field. God bless them! We are not yet doing a tenth of what we ought to do before the Lord. Really, if Nineveh repented and was saved, it is only by our real repentance as a church, that we shall be saved as a church, for the greatest work of the Master has come to be not the greatest work of the church. The church, in many places, has made the Master's calling. Her greatest work is to preach the Gospel to every creature. Is she doing it today? Has she done it in the last century? Is she considering the question and in real earnest getting ready to do it? O Lord, how long!

Anklesher, May 12. W. B. Stover.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

CALIFORNIA.

Denair.—The members of this place have great reasons to be encouraged and are blessed by having Bro. W. C. Leavell and family move here. There are four members in the family. We have a Sunday-school every Sunday at 10 o'clock morning. Last Sunday evening we reorganized a Christian Workers' Meeting, with Sister Mary Leavell, president, and Sister Mabel Leavell, secretary. We think of organizing a Church Conference here soon. We would be glad to see what church congregation here is with us.—Effie C. Mahoney, Denair, Cal., June 11.

Empire.—By action of the Empire church a new congregation was organized at Patterson June 4. This place is about thirty miles north of Empire. This is the first division of our territory. We regret to be separated from the dear members at Patterson, but we are glad that we have the privilege of forming of the new congregation. A chapel has been erected, in which, for the time being, to hold our services. Plans are also being made for the erection of a churchhouse as soon as it is considered proper to do so. There are twelve members at Patterson, and several letters are to be read yet. A minister and a deacon are now living there, and other members are expecting to locate there. Bro. Lawrell, a minister, recently located at Denair, twelve miles south of Empire. This is another addition of this congregation where we hope to organize a church in the near future. We are glad for the growing condition of the Empire church, and hope that she may enlarge her borders. Last Sunday it was decided that the Sunday-school should convene at 10 o'clock Fourth of July.—Myrtle M. Julius, R. D. 3, Box 213, Modesto, Cal., June 13.

Pasadena.—Church met in council this evening. Christian Workers' officers were elected, with Bro. Quinter Bosserman as president, and Sister Bessie Rothrock, secretary. The church decided that the local temperance committee, appointed sometime ago, should act as a standing committee for the year. The evangelistic meetings, to be conducted by our elder, Bro. W. B. Trostle, are to be held in the Methodist chapel in the near future. Who will assist? Our field worker is to be continued another year. Bro. Trostle has read from the Children's Home Society of California, as read. It stated that Bro. J. H. Brubaker of Covina, Cal., was elected a member of the Board of Directors of the society, and solicited our coöperation in supplying needed funds and finding new homes for the homeless, now cared for by this institution. Bro. W. B. Trostle delivers expository lectures on the Book of Revelation each Sunday evening. We are fortunate in having the opportunity to hear them.—Mary Nill, 417 Locust Ave., Pasadena, Cal., June 11.

Patterson.—We are in the midst of a very interesting series of meetings. Bro. B. C. Wine is preaching for us with the Word in power. Thus far one has made the good choice. Our love feast will be June 16.—W. F. Hayner, Patterson, Cal., June 11.

Reedley.—May 21 we were favored with a sermon by Eld. D. R. Hilton of Easton, Cal. His text was "Christian Indifference." Our collection for the Annual Conference amounted to $18. June 4 Bro. Geo. Wine preached for us on "Universal Peace." We enjoyed his sermons very much. Our church met in council June 18, with Bro. Gotschberry presiding. Two were received by letter. Brethren P. H. Smith and M. F. Noll were elected as superintendent and Sunday-school secretary. Sister Rhoades, secretary-treasurer; Bro. Morris Keller, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. The past year we had a committee to select the Sunday-school literature, but at this meeting it was decided, almost unanimously, to have all workers use the primary Union Lesson Quarterly. Our Sunday-school has grown in interest and attendance, under the management of Bro. F. E. Peters. We regret that he has arranged to go to other fields of labor.—Susie Mitchell, Reedley, Cal., June 13.

Sacramento Valley.—Bro. W. Q. Calvert, of Inglewood, Cal., came to us May 8 and held a two weeks' series of meetings prior to his going to the Annual Conference. Our sermons were much appreciated, but there were no additions to the church.—Anna E. Overholtzer, Florin, Cal., June 10.

COLORADO.

Denver.—We held our annual missionary meeting May 14. I preached a missionary sermon at 11 A. M., at which time an offering of $12 was given for the Annual Meeting collection. May 21 at 11 A. M. we had the pleasure of hearing old songs and having them lined before singing. Two veteran elders, that have passed the threescore and ten years, were present at the time. Bro. Peter Nead preached a sermon in German, and Bro. L. F. Love, addressed us in the English language. The meeting was enjoyed by all. Many of our children and grown people had never attended such an old-time meeting before. Besides the good and blessed old aged brethren, who have suffered many hardships for the church, we may be bless by the many sacrifices upon whom the work of the church will soon devolve! The work of the Denver church is with all of her members in a moving along nicely.—C. E. Wolf, 1109 South Washington St., Denver, Colo., May 22.

Fruita.—Our regular council six letters of membership were received and two granted. There being much business on hand, a special council was appointed for next week. Daniel Horning was elected to the ministry and installed. He is a brother to Emma Horning, our missionary to India. At the same time Bro. Oliver Austin was advanced to the second degree in the ministry. Both these brethren will enter Bethany Bible School. Elders H. H. Mohler and A. A. Weaver, from the Grand Valley church, were present and took active us in the election and installation of these brethren. Our love feast of May 7 was very enjoyable. About 140 communed. Sister Anna Mohler presented a paper at Annual Meeting.—Helena A. Waltz, Box 203, Fruita, Colo., June 12.

Good Counsel held a love feast May 14, with Eld. Ezra Kinzie officiated. Sixteen members surrounded the Lord's table. On Sunday, at 11 A. M., we had a very interesting program rendered by the children. This was greatly enjoyed by all present.—Maude C. Hinish, Haxtun, Colo., June 9.

IDAHO.

Boise Valley.—We met in regular council last Saturday and transacted considerable business. Our elder, Bro. S. F. Brower, was reelected as our elder for the coming year. The other church officers were also elected for one year. Our Sunday-school was reorganized by electing Bro. Jesse G. W. Flory as superintendent. The Sunday-school seems to be growing. Brethren Brower and Flory went to the Council Mission Board also reported, showing that they are busy, and trying to accommodate the work in every part of the neighborhood as possible, and get everybody to work. Besides our home church, we are now supplying one point with preaching twice a month, and are arranging for another; also in our territory. The solicitor for District Missions reported $142.75 sent in. There is yet lacking $13.25 of the $2 per member, asked by the Board. We have installed a gas-lighting plant at a cost of $16.50, to give us ample light. We elected Bro. Flory as delegate to the District Meeting in Oregon, July 12; Sister Jennie Brower and Bro. David Brower were elected to the District Meeting of the new District of Idaho and Western Montana, to be held here June 8. The next love feast comes on the Fourth of July at 10:30 A. M., to be followed by a Christian Workers' program after dinner.—David Bettis, Nampa, Idaho, June 14.

Leslie.—Our Sunday-school in the Big Lost River Valley is increasing, so that our little log cabin is getting most too small. There is another town, where Bro. Garman lives, in which they want a Sunday-school. We expect to organize soon. Bro. Garman's letter is here now. Bro. Garman, one of our teachers, can not attend very Sunday. Our crops look fine, and we have plenty of water. We hope to get some other members to move here and help us in the Master's work.—Mrs. Bro. Bettis, Leslie, Idaho, June 16.

Nampa church met in council June 2, at 8 P. M. Our elder, Bro. J. L. Switzer, presiding. Two letters were received before the meeting. Two letters were received.—Rose Bradley, 20 Nampa Ave., Nampa, Idaho, June 14.

Nezperce.—Our church met in council June 7, at 7:30 P. M. Our elder, Bro. J. L. Switzer, in charge. Two letters, one absent, Bro. B. J. Fike presided. The official board reported union and harmony among the members, and the Nezperce church in a healthy working condition. We elected our church council at 7 P. M. After examination services several were received into membership by letter, and by confession for the first time. It was a beautiful sight to see so many young members at the table.—Mrs. Bro. Ben Shoemaker, officiated.—Wm. H. Lichty, Nezperce, Idaho, June 14.

ILLINOIS.

Astoria.—We, with eighteen members from the adjoining churches, enjoyed a good love feast in the Astoria church, May 20. Eld. D. L. Miller officiated and washed the Lord's tables. Bro. S. G. Bucher officiated. Bro. Henry Hollinger, of Pennyvania, delivered a good sermon on Sunday morning, and also one in the German. Bro. Shuss on Sunday evening. Next Sunday evening we expect Bro. John Herr, of Pennsylvania, to preach for us.—Ida Hollinger, R. D. 3, Box 13, Browning, Ill., June 13.

Waddams Grove.—Our quarterly council met in council with our elder, Bro. P. R. Keltner, presiding. We was elected as our delegate to the Annual Meeting. Brethren Jacob Eby and Harry Bogenrief were chosen as delegates to the District Meeting. Our love feast was held June 10. Ministers present were Elders Jacob Eby, Samuel Studebaker and August Kuhlman, of Yellow Creek, Eld. D. B. Eby, of Waterloo, Iowa, and Bro. Bogenrief, of Mount Morris, Ill. Elder Keltner, of Idaho, who officiated. On Sunday morning Bro. Bogenrief preached for us at Mount Morris, and in the Missjesthewa congregation. The former officiated. He remained and preached for us on Sunday morning, which we all enjoyed.—Anna Eby, Polo, Ill., June 14. Brethren, Ind., June 16.

Cerro Gordo.—We held our love feast June 15, with Bro. Hiram Roose officiating. Some members, past eighty years of age, were with us at the love feast. Ministers present from adjoining congregations were Brethren Hiram and Levi Roose, of Bethel, Ill., Brethren Jacob, Jr., Jacob, Sr., and Burse and J. R. Miller. It was one of the best communion meetings we ever had. Bro. Jacob Eby, Jr., and Bro. Hiram Roose gave us four soul-cheering sermons, and three were made willing to accept Jesus as their Savior. Just before our Annual Meeting we organized a Sunday-school for our young minister, Bro. Irvin Weaver.—Monroe Martin, Bromer, Ill., June 14.

Buck Creek church met in council June 10. Bro. D. H. Zuck presided. Bro. Jacob Hollinger was elected as reserve. A love feast was appointed for Oct. 28, at 10 A. M. A collection of $11.50 was taken for the support of our two missionary meeting. Our Christian Workers' Meeting is progressing nicely. We take up a collection once a month for mission work, which amounted to $4.30. We appointed Sister L. Studebaker to hold a series of meetings this fall, to begin sometime in October.—Mrs. Ida Hollinger, Rural Route B, Teeter, R. D. 2, Mooreland, Ind., June 13.

Lordsburg.—Our church met in council. Eld. E. N. Gosnerd presided. Further arrangements are being made for our District Meeting, which is to be held in October. Bro. Gray, of Illinois, commenced a series of meetings here on Sunday night, which are being well attended. Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely.—Lula Goshorn, Ladoga, Ind., June 12.

Maple Grove.—We met in council May 27. Our elder, Bro. Chas. Neff, presided. Several letters were granted. Our series of meetings will begin here on the first Sunday in June. Our love feast Sept. 2. Bro. S. J. Burger, of Howe, Ind., will conduct the meetings.—Mrs. Ella Neff, Howe, Ind., corresponding meeting during the summer.—Clara E. Burtsfield, New Paris, Ind., June 14.

Wolstenville.—We enjoyed a very pleasant members' meeting, Sunday morning, May 28. Bro. Jacob Hollinger and wife came before the meeting. Sister Angeline Burchard and Mary A. Stern were chosen to distribute missionary literature in the city. Our love feast will be held our last meeting in the summer.—E. E. Stern, Noblesville, Ind., June 10.

Rittenhouse.—Our church met in regular meeting at Sugar Creek. Spring Creek and Eel River churches was to be held May 27, but on account of conference, it was put off, to be held at the Spring Creek church, at 9 A. M. All are invited.—Nora E. Stick, Bringhurst, Ind., June 14.

Pleasant Hill.—We have been favored with another love feast. There were thirty-six brethren and thirty-one sisters at the tables. Our aged elder, Bro. Jacob Hollinger, and his brother, George Gump (who is older and lives in the Cedar Creek congregation), were with us. Brethren Jacob Sarah Gump and Phoebe Bashor, were not able to be present. Four visiting ministers were present: Elders Jacob Brower Bethany, Harrie Eisen and S. J. Burger, were present. The latter preached for us Saturday night. Bro. Eisen preached at the church for breakfast, and one hundred for dinner. We had Sunday-school at 10 A. M., and at 11 A. M. Bro. Burger delivered a very spiritual and inspiring sermon.—Nora Hoyle, Leiters Ford, Ind., June 14.

Pyrmont.—Our regular council was postponed from June 10 until Tuesday evening, June 13, on account of the funeral of Bro. Eld. Solomon Metzger, which all were attended. The members were well represented at the council. One letter of membership was granted. The solicitor's committee was appointed, consisting of Brethren Benjamin Metzger, Eld. W. Metzger and Sister Catharine Metzger. Sunday-school was reorganized for the next six months, with Bro. Frank Metzger, superintendent, and Sister Ella Metzger, secretary. Our singing school, which was conducted by Bro. Joseph Studebaker, closed last night. The class was fairly well attended, considering the busy time and the very warm weather.—Lucy B. Utley, R. D. 1, Box 41, Delphi, Ind., June 14.

Somerset church met in council at the Cart Creek house June 3. Our elder, Bro. E. S. Brubaker, presided. All business was disposed of in love and union. Our love feast was set for Aug. 12, beginning at 4 P. M.—Emma Winger, R. D. 16, Somerset, Ind., June 14.

Summit church met in council June 10, at 7:30 P. M. Our elder, Bro. D. M. Garber, presided. The council was assisted by Brethren J. F. Spitzer and David Miller. Bro. W. L. Hatcher, Peru, Ind., has brought property here and will be with us the first of the year. For the remainder of the present year we have secured the services of Bro. J. P. Wampler, of Peru, Ind., and Bro. Elmer Hatcher, of Mexico, Ind., for the other half. We decided to have children's exercises in connection with the harvest meeting. The date will be given later.—Grace Hiatt, Summitville, Ind., June 12.

Union church met in council June 3. Much business was disposed of. One letter of membership was granted and seven were received. Our harvest meeting was appointed for July 9. It is to be an all-day meeting. Our love feast will be held Oct. 14, beginning at 6 P. M. promptly. We decided to invite Bro. W. R. Miller to come to us at his earliest convenience and give us a series of lectures and stereopticon views on the Holy Land. We also appointed a missionary meeting in our Sunday-school, with Sister Dora Henricks as superintendent, and Sister Nancy Neher as secretary-treasurer, which will add to our average attendance. We have also decided on the birthday offering, the income of which is to be used for the support of a missionary in India. Our church held special preaching services on Sunday at 11 A. M. and at 8 P. M., in behalf of the Annual Meeting. At 8:30 the children were called to Burr Oak recently, to anoint an afflicted brother.—A. Laura Appelman, Plymouth, Ind., June 14.

IOWA.

Albia.—We have Sunday-school and preaching services every Sunday. We have had a number of members receive letters by baptism. Bro. Frank Roberts officiated.—Samuel Miller, Albia, Iowa, June 12.

English River.—Our spring love feast was a rich, spiritual gathering. Our ministerial force was ample. Brethren D. M. and Geo. Flory, and Jacob A. Garber, from Virginia, and Chas. Gibson, from Illinois, were with us. Bro. Garber officiated by all present. Our elder was absent.—Mrs. Ella Ellenberger, Iowa City, Iowa, June 14.

Ottawa.—The members of this church enjoyed a love feast June 3. Eld. Daniel Hays officiated. Brother Hays' visit was the only visiting minister. He gave us two sermons on Sunday. Our congregation was also favored and stopped on their way home from Annual Meeting, to enjoy the communion services. In May we granted eight church letters to members leaving for Kansas. Bro. Hays presented petitions to the church by baptism during the last two weeks. Our elder, Bro. D. M. Garber, was with us on the other Sunday from here attended the Annual Meeting. Our Sunday-school is planning to have a picnic in a grove in August. It is a program by the children and a general dinner for all.—Mrs. Ella Ellenberger, R. F. D. 6, Box 85, Iowa City, Iowa, June 14.

Portis.—We held our regular council meeting June 3, with Eld. I. S. Lerew presiding. Quite a number of members were present. The church decided to begin a series of meetings about the middle of June, and to secure the help of ministers with it. We have not as yet procured our evangelist to conduct the meetings. Bro. Jesse Hoover was framed for District Meeting, to be held this fall at Belleville, Kans.—J. E. Brant, Portis, Kans., June 13.

Washington Creek.—Our church met in council June 10. Our elder, Bro. Jacob Hollinger, from the Astoria church, of Ohio, was with us June 11, and at 11 A. M. gave us an instructive sermon, based on Rom. 5: 10. His evening sermon was also good. Bro. Jacob Hollinger, Sr., is very low and is moving along nicely. Our love feast will be held at a future date. Bro. Hollinger was appointed delegate to District Meeting. We will give the definite date later.—W. H. Behrens, Lone Star, Kans., June 14.

MARYLAND.

Long Green Valley.—Our love feast was held June 3. We had a full house. Ministers present, several visiting brethren and sisters were present. Brethren W. R. Rook, D. Hays and A. P. Snader were the visiting ministers present. Bro. Snader officiated. The communion was held after the preaching service on Sunday morning. Bro. James Quinlan led our Christian Workers' Meeting on Sunday evening, at 6:30 o'clock. All services were well attended and much interest was manifested by all present.—Ida M. Snader, Glyndon, Md., June 14.

Meadow Branch.—Our church met in council June 10 in our Westminster house. Our elder, Bro. Uriah Bixler, presided. Two letters of membership were granted. It was decided to have a Children's Woodworth Day, and Bro. Uriah Bixler appointed organized congregation of that place. Our love feast will be held Nov. 4 and 5. Bro. Uriah Bixler was appointed to preside that a temperance sermon was preached under their auspices by Bro. J. Allen Myers, of Mt. Airy, Md. Bro. Myers was present and assisted in forwarding the writer, with his wife, to the office of bishop.—W. H. Beard, Westminster, Md., June 12.

MICHIGAN.

Lake View.—Our church met in council June 1, with Bro. Geo. E. Deardorff presiding. Two letters of membership were granted and one received. Brethren Jacob Wolfe and Jesse Ikenberry were chosen delegates to District Meeting; with Bro. Roy Whitehouse and Sister Ella Wolfe as alternates. The following officers were elected for one year, with Sister Ella Keith as superintendent. Officers were elected for the Christian Workers' Meeting for the coming year. Bro. Roy Whitehouse, president. We decided to hold our love feast Sept. 9, at 10 A. M.—Mrs. Ella Keith, Lake View, Mich., June 14.

Vestaburg.—The members of this church held their love feast May 21. Eld. Frederick Geo. Stone and Eld. Jacob Keltner, visiting brethren were Elders J. E. Frederick, Geo. Stone and Jacob Keltner. Eld. Frederick Geo. Stone preached and preached on Saturday afternoon. A special council meeting was held on Saturday afternoon. Jacob and Emanuel Snyder were elected deacons. Bro. M. M. Bollinger officiated the ministry. As Bro. Snyder was absent, only Brethren Jonnson and Bollinger were ordained.—Mrs. Jacob Snyder, At 6 P. M. on Sunday, a young lady was received into the church by baptism. J. E. Keltner officiated.—Vestaburg, Mich. After the baptism Bro. J. E. Frederick preached to an attentive audience.—M. M. Bollinger, Vestaburg, Mich., June 13.

MISSOURI.

Nevada.—We have had some good meetings. Eld. Geo. Hirsh began a series of meetings in the Methodist church. Bro. Smith from the Annual Meeting at St. Joseph. Mo. Bro. Hensley preached seven inspiring sermons and gave the children a good talk. Bro. Hensley preached for the Methodists with the Sisters' Aid Society and gave some very helpful suggestions. Bro. Hensley left for Kansas City this morning for their home in South Dakota this morning. The pleasant association with this dear brother and sister will be cherished and long remembered among us. We believe that our brethren and sisters have been made stronger by their having been with us.—Mary Smith, 210 N. Oak St., Nevada, Mo., June 14.

Pecos Valley church met in council June 3. Our elder, Bro. J. E. Miller, presided. We reelected our Christian Workers' Meeting officers for the coming year. Bro. Ira Hall, president. June 10 we had our love feast. It was well attended, and a spiritual meeting was enjoyed. Twenty-six surrounded the Lord's tables. Bro. P. L. Fike officiated.—Annie Diedliker, Peace Valley, Mo., June 13.

Sixth St. Joseph Mission.—We are now taking a rest after the burden of helping to lodge and feed the people at the Annual Conference. Many of our members secured work on the grounds, which they so much needed, and were therefore deprived of attending the services as much as they would like to have done. We had services, here in the Mission, at 2 P. M. each evening, and our Missionary Committee was engindered from going to these meetings, on account of work. The speakers were fifteen from the visitors made a good impression upon the members and citizens of this city. Not a few of our brethren took advantage of the opportunity to visit the Mission, while at the Conference, to secure supplies of clothing. Eld. D. W. Crist, of Los Angeles, Cal., began a series of meetings on Sunday evening, and closed on Sunday of the service three, who had previously applied for membership were received by Bro. W. Kinsey, and Sister Hoover, an aged invalid brother was anointed by Elders Crist and Burnham.—Mrs. Ella Miller, No. 1209 Sixth street, and family have now gone back to their home in Towner County, N. Dak., where they have taken the burden of the work upon only on us.—E. N. Huffman, 542 Kentucky Street, St. Joseph, Mo., June 13.

NEBRASKA.

Enders.—We met in council June 16. We had a pleasant and profitable meeting. Three letters were granted. The writer was chosen superintendent of the cradle roll. We are looking forward with pleasure to our Children's Day, to be held next Saturday. Since our last report one dear young sister was buried with Christ by baptism. We have also have a temperance program in the early part of the next quarter.—Orrilla C. Ogle, Enders, Nebr., June 12.

Omaha.—We had our love feast last night. Twenty-eight members surrounded the Lord's tables. Bro. Levi Snell, of Campbellton, was baptized. It was a very impressive service. Bro. Snell and wife, Bro. A. J. Nickey and wife, Sister Alice Allen, Sister Maud Sizzle have all come into the fold with us. Brethren Snell and Nickey preached for us Friday and Saturday nights. The week is moving on.—Mrs. Minnie Cory, 2 Alice Garber, 2528 Lake Street, Omaha, Nebr., June 12.

South Morgan.—Our love feast was held at the home of Bro. W. P. McClellan. We had good weather and a moonlight night. One was baptized on the evening of the feast. Bro. Geo. Siers and wife, of Arcadia, Nebr., are with us. Bro. Siers' son and family, of Kearney, Nebr., were with us. We enjoy such visits, but very few in number. We have had a good meeting, with good attendance. Good order prevailed. Bro. Geo. Siers offered the closing meeting. We have had two children on Sunday morning, instead of Sunday-school. Bro. Siers preached for us on Sunday morning and evening. Both were appreciated very much.—Susie McLellan, R. D. 3, Litchfield, Nebr., June 11.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Fraternity church met in council June 10, with Eld. C. R. Faw presiding. We had a pleasant council. One was soon be added to the church by baptism since our last report.—Emma A. Spaugh, R. D. 1, Winston-Salem, N. C., June 12.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Salem.—There have been no services at this place for two weeks. The church is being calcinined. Sister wast was damaged quite a little by fire. But will be repaired at once. As there were no services at the church today, Eld. Will Shively and a few of the members met at the home of Bro. Jos. H. Stong for a season of prayer in behalf of Sister Stong, who has been in poor health for some time. She requested to be anointed. After a season of prayer she was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord.—Mattie Moore, Newville, N. Dak., June 14

OHIO

Charleston Mission.—Our love feast was held June 3. The attendance was large. About thirty surrounded the Lord's tables. A large number of brethren and sisters were present from the Circleville Mission. Our elder, Bro. Barnhart, officiated. Brethren Harvey Noel and Herbert Richard were also with us. Bro. Barnhart was with us over Sunday and preached two good sermons. We had good spiritual feasts for the soul.—Orpha E. Kelsey, R. D. 8, Chillicothe, Ohio, June 12.

County Line church met in council June 3, with Bro. James A. Gutshall presiding. Our love feast will be held on Saturday at 7 P. M. We decided to have a Fourth of July meeting. Bro. Jesse Hoover, of Oregon, preached for us on Sunday evening. June 8 one brother was received into the church by baptism.—Laura Miller, R. D. 1, Box 54, La Fayette, Ohio, June 11.

Logan.—Our church met in council May 27, one week earlier than usual, on account of some going to the Annual Meeting. Our elder, Bro. A. B. Horst, was moderator. One was received by letter. Bro. G. A. Snider, of Salem, Ohio, is to conduct a series of meetings, to begin the last of July or the first of August. The Sunday-school will go to Lake Logan on a picnic on the first Sunday during the series of meetings. Our love feast will be held May 18 & 19. A. M. Wine will be in the day-school meeting July 4, inviting the churches of Bellefontaine and Sidney to join in with us.—Martha L. Yoder, R. D. 8, Box 16, Bellefontaine, Ohio, June 10.

Louisville.—The notice of our communion meeting, which was announced in the Gospel Messenger, was a week too late to be recalled. The feast has been postponed until some future suitable day, on account of the several meetings now over this part of the country June 4. The date will be given later. The storm did much damage to the fruit and considerable to the Canton congregation. Ohio. It is in such a wrecked condition that it has to be repaired and refurnished before the feast can be held in it.—Geo. S. Grim, Louisville, Ohio, June 14.

Mohican.—May 7 our District Sunday-school Secretary, Bro. Cassel, visited our Sunday-school and gave us an interesting talk on the Sunday-school work. We are soliciting funds for the Akron Mission, to which our church pledged $95.45. On May 10 our church met in council with Bro. Jesse Murray presiding. Bro. Friend, from the Black River church, was also present. Two letters were granted. Bro. Jesse Bowman was elected superintendent of our Sunday-school for the next six months. Our love feast will be held May 30. It is to be an all-day meeting. Bro. Angiemyer will hold a protracted meeting for us sometime in November. June 4 a missionary meeting was preached by Bro. Angiemyer. Worst, after which a collection of $11.55 was taken for the Annual Meeting collection.—Lena Lehman, R. D. 1, Box 77, West Salem, Ohio, June 11.

North Star church met in council in the afternoon of June 14. Our elder, Bro. S. Z. Smith, of Sidney, Ohio, could not be present. A meeting was appointed to be held by Bro. J. F. Baker. Bro. David Minnich assisted in the work. We decided to hold our love feast Oct. 7 at 2 P. M.—Lydia E. Miller, R. D. 2, New Weston, Ohio, June 15.

Painter Creek.—May 11 Eld. Chas. D. Bonsack began a series of meetings here, and closed on the evening of the 28, preaching, in all, twenty-two sermons. May 28 he addressed a large gathering of children, after which he preached the missionary sermon. His discourses throughout were very instructive and practical and proved to be a spiritual uplift to our people. May 30 one united with the church through the baptismal gate. On the evening of July 2 Eld. L. A. Bookwalter is expected to give a temperance address at the Pittsburg meeting-house, Minnich, Greenville, Ohio.—Mrs. West Dayton.—Our church met in council June 15. Our elder, Bro. D. S. Filbrun, presided. Two letters were received and one was granted. All business was transacted pleasantly. Last Sunday our pastor, Bro. Filbrun, gave an interesting talk to the children. Bro. I. L. Erbaugh was chosen president of our Christian Workers' Meeting for the next six months.—Cordie Murray, 3039 W. Third St., Dayton, Ohio, June 16.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Buffalo Valley church met in council June 3. Our elder, Bro. Green Shively, presided. We held our love feast June 6. Bro. J. H. Richard, of Maitland, Pa., Bro. P. G. Shelley, of Richfield, Pa., and Alfred Miller, of Loganton, Pa., were with us. Their presence and sermons were greatly appreciated. Two agreed to live a new life and will be buried with anointed.—Sara E. Royer, Millmont, Pa., June 12.

Chiques.—Our love feast was held May 13 and 14 at the Chiques house. We had ample help in the ministry. Eld. Wm. Gochenour, of Virginia, was with us. Many members surrounded the tables of the Lord. We hope this feast will be a great spot in our lives, and one to nerare to our Lord, and fit us for better service.—Henry S. Ebersole, R. D. 6, Mount Joy, Pa., June 11.

Huntsdale.—Our love feast, held June 7 and 8, was well attended. Ministers present from other congregations were Brethren Levi Hoover, Jacob Hoover, Samuel Hoover, D. S. Lightner and Henry Beelman. Bro. Levi Mohler officiated. Their presence was a great source of appreciation. Bro. Ira Miller was advanced to the eldership. One brother was baptized since our last report. We expect to have a temperance meeting in the near future.—A. A. Evans, R. D. 8, Carlisle, Pa., June 12.

Jacobs Creek.—Recently we enjoyed a special season of spiritual refreshing. Bro. C. A. McDowell, of Robinson, Illinois, came to us May 3, and remained with us until the house May 28, and continued until last evening. He preached the Word with power. The church had several calls to repent. Last Saturday evening we had a blessed communion service. It was a great feast to the saints. Bro. McDowell is a writer of very young members were in the service.—Frank B. Myers, Mt. Pleasant Mills, Pa., June 12.

Leamerville.—Our church at this place held her love feast May 27 and 28, meeting. Three visiting ministers were present, Bro. R. T. Hull, of Juniata, Pa., Bro. Geo. D. Cleaver, of Curwensville, Pa., and Bro. A. N. Leckrone, of Tyrone, Pa., were present. Our home ministers, Brethren James A. S. Hull, Eric Sell and David A. Sell, were present. We had seven to receive the right hand of fellowship the second we held in our new church. The house was crowded. Many were turned away for want of room. Members from adjoining churches were also present. Some of the members of the Bell's Mills church were present. Our last report one was added to the church by baptism, and three by letter. Two were reclaimed. We also granted three letters of membership.—Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely. Our enrollment is over 100, with a good average attendance. We have recently purchased a new Sunday-school, which are doing a good work.—Archie Claar, R. D. 1, Hollidaysburg, Pa., June 12.

Ligonier.—We held our love feast on Sunday evening, with Bro. S. H. Hoover presiding. Bro. Jesse Ober was with us very much. About forty surrounded the Lord's tables. There was no preaching on Sunday, owing to the inclement weather. We believe we gain more spiritual strength when there is not so much to divert attention. During the afternoon Bro. Wm. Worst preached six young people into the fold. Ages from nine to fifteen years.—Clara Wolford, R. D. 2, Ligonier, Pa., June 12.

Lower Cumberland.—An enjoyable love feast was held in the Mohler congregation, May 27, commencing at 9 a. m. and 11. About thirteen visiting ministering brethren were present. The church was represented by Eld. Jacob Hoover, of Gettysburg, Pa., Bro. J. Shope, of Penbrook, Pa., Levi S. Mohler, of Manheim, Pa., and S. H. Widders, of Harrisburg, Pa., and Bro. Jacob S. Mohler, of Lancaster, Pa., Mt. Brethren Levi S. Mohler and William Miller of Jacobs Mills, Pa., and Bro. Henry Bert, of East Berlin, Pa. The house was crowded. Most of them were participants at the Lord's tables. Bro. Levi S. Mohler officiated. The meeting was spiritual and profitable, and all the speakers seemed to be directed by the Holy Spirit.—Mrs. Annie Hershey, Mount Holly, Pa., June 12. Barnhart spoke from Hosea 8: 12. One certificate was received.—Mary Ann Hoover, Shrewsbury, Pa., June 12.

Middle Creek.—We held our love feast June 11. We had a pleasant feast, which was largely attended. Our elder, Bro. Hiltie Hoover, officiated. Preaching was in order each day. Bro. Josiah Berkley, has been stricken with paralysis. Five were added to the church by baptism.—Carrie Walker, R. D. 2, Rockwood, Pa., June 14.

Mattawana.—Bro. S. C. Miller, of Chicago, who is doing some canvassing in our congregation, was with us June 11, and preached two strong sermons at the evening hour. We spoke for us in Lebanon on "The Existence of God and the Inspiration of His Word," in the evening. The attendance was good. Only one came to the altar.—Annie Bollinger, 1 Sisters' Aid Society is active.—A. H. Brubacher, R. D. 7, Lebanon, Pa., June 12.

Rockton.—We held our love feast June 11. We feel to thank our Heavenly Father for blessings so far to be with us in the services. Our elder, Bro. Abram Fyock, and wife, from Antietam, Pa., were with us. Bro. Fyock was assisted Brethren Urban Cleaver and J. B. Hollopeter to the ministry. Two letters of membership were installed, leaving one at the close of the love feast services. Bro. Fyock went from here to the Bethel church to hold a week's series of meetings. Bro. Fyock preached for us on Sunday morning at our love feast. The Word was spoken with power. Our dear mother, Caroline Bender, is very low with cancer of the stomach. She is in her seventy-eighth year.—Elizabeth Hollopeter, Rockton, Pa., June 12.

Summit Mills church met in council, preparatory to our love feast, which is to be held June 18 and 19, if nothing occurs. The fifteenth quarterly local Sunday-school Convention of the Church of the Brethren convened at this place June 4. The attendance at the sessions was fairly representative, and the interest manifested in the exercises was decidedly gratifying. The following were the topics that were handled by the hosts of Sunday-school workers present, much good can be accomplished now that we have entered the field: Services were about 100 communicants. Bro. Yoder preached three very interesting sermons on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, preceding the love feast. One young man was received into the church by baptism. We are much encouraged, and trust that the seed sown may bring further results later.—Olive M. Saylor, Meyersdale, Pa., June 12.

West Johnstown church met in council. Eld. Mohler called council to prepare the business for the general council, which convened in the Rockwood church in the evening of May 4. Considerable business was disposed of. Bro. Vernon J. Diehl was elected clerk of the District Meeting. Eld. Samuel Z. J. Blough were present, and ordained Bro. J. H. Cassady to the eldership. Bro. Cassady preached for us May 28, and David Rummel, jr., were elected to the deacon's office. Our semiannual love feast, May 7, was largely attended. Visiting ministers were present from the Quemahoning church, and Elders David Hildebrand and W. M. Howe, of the Johnstown church. Bro. Blough officiated.—Jerome E. Blough, R. D. 6, Johnstown, Pa., June 11.

TENNESSEE.

New Hope church met in council June 10. We elected two delegates to District Meeting, to be held at the Knob Creek church. Bro. Jesse Hoover preached immediately after meeting. Bro. T. M. Laughrun preached for us on Sunday morning and evening.—Laura Saylor, R. D. 2, Jonesboro, Tenn., June 17.

VIRGINIA.

Elk Run.—Our church met in council June 10, with Eld. Jacob Zimmerman presiding. Two letters of membership were granted and four received. We expect Bro. M. J. Cline, of Beaver Creek, Va., to begin a series of meetings sometime in August. We will hold our communion Sept. 30, at 2 P. M.—Mrs. Ida D. I. Churchville, Va., June 12.

Midland.—Our church met in council June 8. Bro. Dennis Weimer presided. One letter of membership was received since last report. The Annual Meeting will be held at the Midland church July 27, at 10 A. M.—Eva E. Hinegardner, R. D. 1, Midland, Va., June 14.

Selma.—There is a golden opportunity at this place for the establishment of a church, and surely it seems as if some one needs to be sent here to help it. It is not a sad thing to think that this place, with only eight members of the Brethren church, should starve spiritually for the want of a minister, a church and an organization. No one can realize, until having experienced such isolation, how the heart craves and longs for the fellowship or those of like precious faith. This is a resident town, and we believe it is evident that the work may succeed. Is there not some one who will volunteer to go to this place, even though some sacrifice should be made? Remember, my brother, that sacrifice made a far greater sacrifice than any man can make, in order that we might live, and, moreover, that we might find great truth the world over. Will not some one respond to our trouble cry, and come and help us?—Mrs. Andrew Rex, R. D. L. Carter, Selma, Va.—Ada K. Carter, Selma, Va., June 9.

Stumptown.—The two different congregations that meet full city of the valley returned to their respective homes, little thinking what was to take place in the city and country before the dawn of another day. About 1 P. M. a terrible tornado swept the valley from Pinhorville, going west as far as Swoope's Depot, leaving destruction in its wake. There was a strong wind and rain, with hail as large as hens' eggs, in some localities. Houses were lifted in the air two feet high. Houses and trees were blown down, windows broken, and crops and orchards damaged. Fruit was almost entirely ruined. Some farmers lost their entire wheat and corn crop. Many lives were lost, and many wounded, but all that stands The Church of the Brethren, on South Lewis Street, was almost demolished. All of the roof was blown off, the sides of the sheeting and rafters left. Some of the rafters were forced through the roof. Thus the rain drenched the church, spoiling carpets, books, and furniture. Others of the were injured only by breaking the window lights and destroying the shade trees in the yard.—P. Stoffey, Staunton, Va., June 12.

WASHINGTON.

East Wenatchee.—Our church met in members' meeting June 10. In the absence of our elder, Bro. A. B. Peters, Eld. J. J. Fihrun presided. Three letters were received, and one was granted. An election for Sunday-school officers resulted in Sister Lizzie Bashor as superintendent and Brethren Bro. C. E. Holmes will represent us at our District Meeting, with Bro. J. J. Fihrun as alternate.—Ella Bashor, The Dalles, following, Bro. Warren Sinbaugh, who has recently returned from Bethany Bible School, gave us a most interesting address on "Rescue Work in Chicago."—Vinnie Fihrun Sellers, Lock Box 373, Wenatchee, Wash., June 12.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Boyer.—Eld. A. S. Thomas, of Bridgewater, Va., came to our place May 13 and began a series of meeting, continuing until May 24. We preached twenty-one sermons. Many came out on the Lord's side and were baptized. One was reclaimed. Two were received into the church at this place. The members at this place feel better prepared to live and work for the Lord. The meetings were held in a very forceful but pleasant manner. All seemed to be pleased with the preaching. The weather was fine, but one week the weather was hot, the nights short and people were working hard, but the interest was good. The last night closed an interesting and prayer meetings are on the increase. There are other applicants at this place.—Allen Calhoun, Boyer, W. Va., June 9.

Shrewsbury.—Our church has just closed an interesting series of meetings held by Bro. Rogers, of Bragg ville, W. Va. We had six days' series of meetings, and had our love feast June 10. Twelve surrounded the Lord's table. Five more were added to the church on Sunday, June 12. We are glad for those meetings and rejoice to see so many interested in the church.—Sam Mink, Shrewsbury, W. Va., June 14.

CORRESPONDENCE

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches"

ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION AT ELKHART, IND.

The Northern Indiana Christian Association (composed of secret societies) will hold a convention in the Beulah Mennonite church, Blaine and Ninth Streets, Elkhart, Ind., on Wednesday and Thursday, July 5 and 6. The opening session will be held on Wednesday evening, and will be addressed by that well-known leader in the cause of anti-secrecy, Rev. A. Blanchard, President of Wheaton College, Ill. Thursday will be devoted principally to the business pertaining to the Association, and in the evening there will be an address by National Field Agent, Rev. W. P. Shrigley, of Washington, D. C. Let both friends and foes of the lodge come out and hear an honest discussion of this important subject. There will be a question box.

J. E. Hartzler, Pres., Elkhart, Ind.
T. H. Brenneman, Sec., Goshen, Ind.

A PUBLIC DISCUSSION.

Some time ago it was mentioned that, during our series of meetings at Beaver Dam, the members of the Church of Christ challenged us for a public discussion of the New Testament doctrines. After some consideration we accepted the challenge, and arrangements were made to begin the discussion Aug. 7 and continue ten days,—two sessions each day. Bro. B. E. Kesler will represent the Brethren, and Rev. E. G. Denney will represent the Church of Christ. Considerable interest is manifested locally, and some want to have the discussion reported and published.

Now, all who wish to have a copy of the book may notify me at once, and if enough advance orders are received to justify bringing out the report, I will secure a reporter. Notice of further arrangements will be given in due time.

J. G. Stinebaugh.

WHERE DID JESUS DRINK THE CUP?

"But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of? . . . And he saith unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of my cup." (Matt. 20: 22, 23).

"And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me. . . . He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done" (Matt. 26: 39, 42).

"And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me" (Mark 14: 35, 36).

"And he withdrew from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done" (Luke 22: 41, 42).

All these scriptures show very clearly that Jesus had a cup to drink,—a bitter, bitter cup,—one from which his sensitive nature shrank in terror, yet which he was willing to drink, subject to his Father's will. Did this cup consist of his agony in the garden, or was it the suffering on the cross? Did he drink it in Gethsemane or on Calvary?

Some noted authorities contend that he drank it in the garden,—that the cup there actually did pass from him. He was thus enabled to reach Calvary, and his prayer was answered. If the cup did not pass from him, then his prayer was not answered, which, say they, was impossible,—hence never had an unanswered prayer. The pause in Mark might favor this view. There we are told that he prayed for the hour to pass from him, which we might regard as the time then present, and the cup and the hour as identical.

Bro. A. O. Wieand, in his "Sunday-school Notes," says: "Note especially that Jesus is here praying by the method of 'seeking.' He does not ask outright of the Father, because he is not absolutely sure of the Father's will. He is fully resolved to cling to the will of the Father, but the Father's will must be glorified even if he must drink the bitter cup. But he has not yet quite full assurance as to whether or not it must be. And, furthermore, he will not let go nor cease praying until he is perfectly satisfied. This view is like the better. It is not quite so mathematical but it is more filial.

The misgivings of Jesus in Gethsemane may be likened to the misgivings of John the Baptist in prison,—the misgivings of a noble, believing soul, when on the brink of a terrible crisis. John had proclaimed beforehand of Jesus' Messiahship. Jesus knew was to be slain before he came to earth. He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. But to allow one's name to be placed on the pinnacle of suffering, and then shrink in that suffering in experience, are two different things. To have misgivings on the brink of great suffering is no sign of weakness. It only shows a vivid apprehension of the awfulness of the thing. There was no sin connected with them. They are some things we have to God himself. His experience with me,—a wayward, sinful being,—has been new to him, for fifty years ago I was not a separate moral agent. Before the flood, it repented God that he had made man, and yet his foreknowledge, in a way, was as clear to him that man would transgress, but before creation he had not dealt with that transgression in actual experience.

While even the chosen three could not enter with Jesus into the agony of Gethsemane, yet it is clear that his great suffering was on the cross. The agony of the garden did not keep the disciples from sleeping, but the suffering on the cross awoke nature itself to sympathy. The agony in the garden brought drops of bloody sweat to the world's Redeemer, but the nails pierced his hands, thrust his heart, and forthwith there flowed out blood and water. In Gethsemane he had misgivings as to the Father's will, but on Calvary he cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

But we need not depend on human reason to decide whether Gethsemane or Calvary constituted the cup. Holy Writ makes it plain. Let us turn to John 18: 11, "Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" This scripture spoke three words. The agony of Gethsemane was past, but the cup had not yet been drained.

Lebanon, Pa. J. G. Francis.

ABILENE, KANSAS.

We met in council June 1 at the Navarre house. Our elder, Bro. Geo. Manon, presided. We had a spiritual meeting, and some very important business was transacted. It was decided that the love feast be held Oct. 28 and 29, just prior to a series of meetings, to be conducted by Bro. A. C. Dargett, of Covert, Kans. Bro. Dargett has decided to have at least ten days' prayer meeting before the meetings. We tried it last year and were quite successful. We feel that it is the secret of a successful meeting. A temperance committee was appointed in each arm of the congregation, to take care of the temperance question. Brethren Roy Rock, Elmer Hoffman and Sister Mary Ohmart were appointed in the Navarre congregation; Brethren C. A. Hartman, W. A. Mower and Sister Entrekin, in the Holland congregation. From time to time we see new life and vigor in our church. We hope we may grow and prosper, and be a shining light to the world and a salt to the earth. J. C. Forney.

Navarre, Kans., June 6.

Detwiler, Sister Mary, died at her home near Minoa, Pa., May 27, 1911, of heart trouble, after being helpless for seven weeks, aged 61 years, 2 months and 23 days. Sister Detwiler united with the Church of the Brethren in her youth, and lived faithful until the peaceful end came. Her husband, one son and two daughters survive. She lived to see the New view Church of the Brethren by the writer. Text, Rev. 14: 13. Interment in the Shelby cemetery.—W. H. Holsinger, Tullytown, Pa.

Flora, Bro. Joseph C., died May 27, 1911, aged 78 years, 3 months and 9 days. He was a member of the Church of the Brethren for his infancy, which finally caused his death. With all his suffering he was one of the kind souls of this world as much as possible, always being bright and cheerful. He was born in Franklin County, Pa., where he grew to manhood and received his education. He graduated from Daleville College, and prepared himself for some special line of ministerial work, but on account of his affliction he could not accomplish his great desire. Later he moved to Quinter, Kans., where he resided at the time of his death. He had been a beautiful Christian character. The burden of his heart, all through life, was for the eternal saving of many souls. Many were his acts and words of encouragement to those who were in his presence, during the intense suffering and weakness of the past in the Master's service. He was a competent Sunday-school teacher of a class of young men. Just a few weeks before his death he experienced the joy of seeing some more of the members of his class unite with the church. He leaves almost all of the members of his class in the new church now, and one of them is taking up the work that he had done. Six of them united with the church at the last meeting, and all witnessed the laying away of the one who had loved them so much. Services by Bro. A. Crist, assisted by Bro. J. W. Jarboe. Text, Job 14: 14. Interment in the Quinter cemetery.—Mrs. Ella Engler, Quinter, Kans.

Fox, Sister Sarah, nee Garber, born Feb. 7, 1841, in Wayne County, Ohio, died May 25, 1911, at the home of Bro. Jesse Adel, Iowa, May 12, 1911, aged 70 years, 3 months and 8 days. She was married to Isaac Hoff Dec. 20, 1866, and moved to Iowa in 1868. In 1885 Bro. Hoff died, leaving her four children. Three of them are living. One of them died in infancy. She was married to J. Fox in 1871. She was married to Bro. C. J. Fox in 1879. To this union one child was born. After her marriage she united with the Church of the Brethren and lived a devoted Christian life. She was loved and respected by all who knew her and her life will ever be remembered. She and her husband spent several years at Grand Junction, Iowa. While returning to their home at Waterloo, they stopped off at Glidden and spent a day with relatives and friends. She was stricken with an attack of pneumonia the next day. Despite the best of medical skill and trained nursing she was unable to combat the ravages of the disease. Services were brought to a close and home and services conducted in the South Waterloo church by Brethren A. B. Hollinger and Wm. Hall. Text, I. M. Levy, 15. Interment in the South Waterloo cemetery.—A. P. Blough, Waterloo, Iowa.

She was united in marriage to John Lutz Nov. 9, 1884. To this union were born five sons and two daughters. She united with the Church of the Brethren about twenty-three years ago, remaining a faithful member to the end. She died in the triumph of a living faith. She leaves her husband, two sons, two daughters, five brothers and one sister. Services by Brethren Noah Hoover and John Sutsman.—Ezra Hale, R. D. 4, Box 118, Arcanum, Ohio.

McAllister, Lenard, died at the home of Bro. John and Sister Ida McAllister, Bolar, Va., died May 29, 1911, aged about one year. The little child was a bright little fellow and is greatly missed in the home. He leaves a father, mother and one sister. Services by Eld. A. A. Miller. Interment in the neighboring cemetery.—Vena S. Bussard, Bolar, Va.

Metzker, Sister Susan, nee Ling, wife of Bro. Geo. B. Metzker, died April 1911, in the bounds of the Pipe Creek church of the Fairview congregation, Blair Co., Pa., aged 62 years, 11 months and 11 days. She had a complication of diseases from which she suffered for several years. She united with the Church of the Brethren in her youth and lived faithful until death. She leaves a husband, one son and three daughters. Services in the Clover Creek church by the writer, assisted by Eld. A. B. Brumbaugh. Text, Isa. 57: 1. Interment in the Brumbaugh cemetery.—W. H. Holsinger, Shellytown, Pa.

Price, Sister Sarah E., died June 13, 1911, at her home in Kansas June 3, 1911, aged 73 years, 7 months and 21 days. Sister Price was born in Jefferson County, Ohio. Her father about fifty-three years ago. To this union four sons and two daughters were born. Her husband and three children preceded her in death. She leaves a daughter and two sons. She was a dear mother in Israel. She has been a consistent member of the Church of the Brethren for nearly all her life. For several years she had made her home with Brother and Sister Ellis Nickerson, where she died with every expressed a willingness to go. Services by Brethren J. P. Harshbarger and L. D. Yoder. Text, Isa. 57: 1, 2. Interment in the Salem cemetery near Nickerson. The family extend their thanks to the many friends and kind neighbors for their help and sympathy during their bereavement and the illness of this dear mother.—Josephine McGeough, Nickerman, Kan.

Reber, Sister Ada, nee King, born in Berks County, Pa., April 18, 1874, died in the bounds of the Ridgely congregation, Md., June 6, 1911, aged 37 years, 1 month and 18 days. She was a faithful member of the church, and the wife of one of our deacons. She is survived by her husband, five children, her mother, two brothers and two sisters. Our sister had been sick for two or more years, and for the past seven months she was practically confined to her bed with lung trouble. She was anointed. Services at the Ridgely church by Bro. L. R. Brumbaugh and the writer. Text, 2 Cor. 4:16. Interment in the Denton cemetery.—W. F. Imler, Ridgely, Md.

Rhodes, Sister Maria, nee Hatter, born at Sinking Spring, Ohio, March 8, 1845, died June 2, 1911, aged 66 years, 2 months and 16 days. She was married to David M. Rhodes on Sept. 4, 1864. To them were born four sons and six daughters. One son preceded her. The rest of the children were present at the funeral, except one daughter, who lives at Port Arthur, Texas, and one son, living at San Francisco, Cal. She was a member of the Church of the Brethren for years. The church feels her loss very much. The kind hands of her daughters, Katie and Mae, administered to her wants. Sister Rhodes had been anxiously waiting till the summons came. She leaves her husband and nine children. Services at the Salem church by the writer.—J. A. R. Couser, Peebles, Ohio.

The Gospel Messenger

A weekly religious journal, 16 large pages, is published in the interest of the Church of the Brethren, and is the only church organ published by the authority of the Conference. Price, $1.00 per annum.

It most earnestly pleads for a return to the apostolic order of worship and practice.

It holds that the Bible is a divinely-inspired book, and recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice for the people of God.

It also holds to the doctrine of the Trinity; teaches future rewards and punishment; and emphasizes the importance of a pure, holy and upright life before God and man.

It maintains that only through the sinful until death have the promise of eternal life;

That Jesus' atonement and its terms are conditions of pardon, and hence for the remission of sins;

That the observance of dipping to consolidate three times face-forward is Christian Baptism;

That Feet-washing as taught in John 13, is a divine command to be observed by the church;

That the Lord's Supper is a meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening, or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ;

That Washing and Anointing are necessary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ;

That a Nonconformity to the world in dress, walk, dress, customs and, conversation is essential to true holiness and Christian piety.

It maintains that in public worship, or religious exercises, Christians should appear as directed in 1 Cor. 11: 4, 5.

It also advocates the Scriptural duty of Anointing the sick with oil in the name of the Lord.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the Apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and records of modern religious life, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe. Send for sample copy. Address:

Mr. World and Miss Church-Member

A Twentieth Century Allegory.

By Rev. W. S. Harris.

It is a forcible allegory, somewhat after the style of Pilgrim's Progress, but in no sense an imitation of it. Fathers and mothers, it is the book that you should get for your son and daughter, and at the same time read yourself. You will be stronger for the church after having read it. It illustrates vividly how Satan lures the church member, step by step, from the pure Gospel, till finally he is lost forever.

Illustrated by 18 full-page drawings, the work of Sister J. Hoff.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED

Thornapple church met in quarterly council June 10. Brethren S. M. Smith and P. S. Benner were chosen as delegates to District Meeting; Wm. Smith and E. M. Starbard, alternates. We also elected Bro. R. H. Miller Sunday-School Secretary. Bro. Miller is to begin in the early part of September, followed by our love feast. Bro. Geo. Swihart will assist us in our meetings. The wife of Bro. Chester Paff, a young minister of marked ability, was baptized recently. Our prayers are that she may nobly assist him in his labors.—B. F. Kendall, R. D. 2, Box 311, Greentown, Ind., June 17.

Oneida.—Our little band of workers has been busy, working for the Master. We expect to hold an all-day service on the Fourth of July. We will have preaching in one of the home ministers in the forenoon. A basket dinner will be served. Children's services will be held in the afternoon. Our neighboring brethren and sisters are invited to enjoy the day with us. Last Sunday the members were strengthened by hearing a sermon about the Annual Meeting. Those who were not permitted to be with the Conference greatly enjoyed this. Our collection amounted to $10. We expect Sister Sadie Miller to be with us next Sunday. We still need the brethren. We are anxiously looking forward to the time when Bro. S. M. Geoughnour will be here to tell us the old story of the cross, and give Bible talks on matters that are so interesting.—Emma Folger, Oneida, Iowa, June 16.

Mount Morris church met in council June 17. Our elder, Bro. J. G. Royer, officiated. A number of letters were granted. Brethren Chas. Keltner and Solenberger were chosen as delegates to District Meeting; Brethren Gaffin and Rodeffer, alternates. Arrangements for the District Meeting will be held here in August, were put into the hands of the deacons. June 11 Bro. Geiser, of Baltimore, Md., gave us a very good, practical sermon, and in the evening Bro. Berkebile, of India, gave us an inspiring sermon. June 18 Bro. D. L. Miller gave us an interesting report of the Annual Meeting.—Ella Brunskill, Mount Morris Ill., June 18.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The brethren and sisters of the District of North Dakota, Eastern Montana, and Western Canada, will please note that the District Meeting of the above District will be held in the Salem congregation, thirty-three miles north of Devils Lake, on the Farmers' Railroad. Those coming from the West, over the Great Northern R. R., will take train No. 6 or No. 4 to Devils Lake. The train on the Farmers' Railroad will be held until No. 4 arrives at 4: 15 P. M. Buy your tickets to Newville. There will be conveyances at Newville, to convey those who come to the District Meeting—a distance of about seven miles. Those coming over the "Soo" line will stop off at Calio, where they will be met by notifying the undersigned. I will be able to announce the rate that the different roads will make, next week.

I herewith most earnestly request that all those coming to this Meeting will notify me of the same, so that I can inform the officials of the local railroad how many people they will have to handle, as they will be obliged to borrow some coaches from the Great Northern Railroad. President Kelly and the Superintendent of the Farmers' Railroad informed me that they will spare no means to treat our people right. Now, if those who come will notify me by July 7 or 8, they will confer a great favor upon me, for which I thank you in advance.

J. W. Cripe,
Committee on Transportation.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Another Annual Meeting has passed into history, and we are left to think. Will our Father be pleased with what was done? We trust he can look with favor upon the work of the Conference. If not, may he so direct that all mistakes can be corrected. I may not always have things go my way, but the question with me is, Was the Lord pleased? If he is satisfied, then I am also satisfied.

My soul was full of joy as I listened to the young brethren delivering their sermons and addresses, so well prepared and so pleasantly delivered. The enemy will have to get a number of these young and middle-aged brethren and sisters out of the way, before he can make much headway toward the downfall of the church.

No, my dear brethren, the principles upon which the Church of the Brethren is planted are eternal, and they are here to stay. You and I may fret and worry ourselves, and perish in an attempt to overthrow the rules and regulations which have been given for the government of the members of the church, but the body will go right along in the even tenor of her way.

One of the very impressive scenes (never to be forgotten), was the presenting of the missionaries who are to go to foreign fields. When Bro. Miller called them to the front, naming each one, and giving the place of work, it appealed to every fibre of my whole being. To see those dear young people lay their whole life upon the altar, to spend and be spent for the welfare of others, was a memorable scene. It may have been more touching to me than to some others, because one of the number was my own dear niece (Anna Hutchison), who has long been to me more like a daughter than a niece. She is a daughter of my youngest brother.

Worthington, Minn., has been my field of labor since June 11. I find this to be a very pleasant place in which to work. There are about sixty members here, and quite a few of the scattering type. They are too busy, looking after the Lord's work, to find faults in others. I admire that class of people. Those who live here, who are not members of the Church of the Brethren, seem to be a thoroughly good class of people. The church is in several miles in the country. I am to be in Minneapolis, Minn., about June 27. Later on I go into North Dakota and other points. If I am able enough to work, I aim to winter in California.

A. Hutchison.

TAKING CARE OF MOTHER.

During our recent Conference at St. Joseph, Mo., I had occasion, one day, to enquire the way to a certain point in the city. The person of whom I sought information was a blacking man in the city. After giving me the information sought, he remarked, "I saw something among your people yesterday that I had not seen for a long time. I saw two young people of your Fraternity assisting their mother up to the Auditorium." I answered, "Well, that was good." "Yes," said the stranger, "it looked very good to me."

Home Department of the Sunday School

The need of the Home Department is not limited to any locality. It is needed in every church no matter where that church may be. It is sadly needed in the great metropolis, with its unchurched millions. It is needed in the towns with their thousands outside of the Sunday-school. It is needed in the village and rural communities, where only a few are indifferent. It is needed in your school. It will work in every community whether city or country, where one or more persons are out of the Sunday-school.

Are you a subscriber to the Inglenook? Do you have a copy of the Revised Cook Book? If so, we have nothing to say to you. But if not, then read on.

Fully fifteen thousand persons weekly enjoy the good things that are found in the Inglenook. One year ago only half that number read it. The subscription list is increasing constantly. The verdict of everyone is that "The NOOK is getting better."

These facts can result from only one thing. That thing is—that the management of the Inglenook has succeeded in producing a magazine that has for its standard the BEST, along historical, instructive, entertaining and moral lines, and has accomplished this aim, thereby attracting and satisfying the people.

So much has been said in this paper and in others about the Revised Cook Book and its value that it would be almost presumptuous to say more here. We will just say, though, for your special benefit, that if you still want to join the crowd and subscribe for the Cook Book and the Cook Book, and will do so before the first of July, you can have them for $1.00, the price that has been charged all along. If you expect to do it and wait till after that time, you will have to pay $1.25, according to a late decision of the General Mission Board.

To make it very easy for you to do this between now and July 1st, we are appending hereto an order blank. You need do nothing but fill out this blank and send it with a dollar to us, BEFORE JULY 1ST, and the Nook and the Book will be forthcoming at once.

AROUND THE WORLD

Recent Discoveries Along the Nile.

The remarkable discoveries of papyri on the Nile Island of Elephantine, add greatly-valued testimony to the truth of the Bible story. Many Bible critics have insisted that the Books of Nehemiah and Ezra were more or less apocryphal. Now the learned Egyptologist comes to the front. He takes the Elephantine inscriptions and proves how there is a perfect agreement with the Bible story, and especially are the events referred to by Nehemiah and Ezra fully substantiated. How remarkable that the frail papyrus should have survived the vicissitudes of ages, to come to light in these days of the twentieth century as an indisputable witness for the Word of Truth! How it confirms our faith in the Holy Oracles!

Mrs. Eddy's Legacy in the Courts.

The large estate of the founder and promoter of Christian Science is at present being fought over in the courts. It is quite safe to venture the forecast that there will not be very much, in the way of tangible assets, to quarrel over, by the time the legal experts are through with the matter. Once more it will be shown that the average "last will and testament" has but a slight chance in the courts, when there is plenty of money to tempt the cupidity of disappointed heirs and scheming attorneys. Some one has well said, "The mistake Mrs. Eddy made was in dying rich." We would amplify it by saying that her greatest failure was to lay up her "treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

Mecca and Medina Threatened.

The recently-reported, serious losses, sustained by the Turks in their struggles to suppress the Arabian rebels, render the situation in that section an extremely precarious one. The holy cities, Mecca and Medina, are seriously threatened by the armed bands of the rebels, and should they succeed in gaining complete possession, even temporarily only, it would mean the loss of considerable power and prestige, so far as Turkey's dominance in the Mohammedan world is concerned. This accounts for the strenuous efforts now being made by the Turks to regain full control of Arabia. It is unfortunate that the licentiousness and rapacious greed of Turkish oppression are so pronounced that they have aroused the most bitter feeling among the Arab tribes. How true, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap"!

Protecting Homes Against the Saloons.

The California Legislature recently passed a law, forbidding saloons and residences to be on the same party telephone line, in order to keep children and women from hearing the vile conversation of the saloon and its frequenters. While this would seem to indicate that the saloon is about the same old cesspool of corruption, no matter where it is located, one is made to wonder how long our lawmakers are willing to temporize with a known evil! If a saloon is so utterly vile and corrupt that even a telephone line is liable to carry its contagion, why not apply the ax to the root of the tree, and do away with the rank iniquity once and forever? For a nation of people, laying claim to more than ordinary intelligence, we have some very foolish ways of dealing with a most pernicious evil,—one whose ravages are admitted by all lovers of righteousness.

Ignorance the Main Cause of Poverty.

The Associated Charities of Cincinnati have been considering the best ways and means of helping the needy of that city, with a view of assisting them to make the most of the resources at their command. These workers have found that ignorance, incompetence and industrial oppression are the three main reasons of poverty, but that the first far outweighs the other two in real significance. To instruct incompetent and improvident wives in the elements of economical housekeeping, the association employs a visiting housekeeper, who, going from house to house, carries on an extensive campaign of education in the things most essential. Her teaching, necessarily, is by example as well as by precept. Order and cleanliness are the first lessons thoroughly impressed by practical demonstrations. Floors are scrubbed, and dishes and windows washed. The children, and even the mother herself, at times, are included in the work of complete renovation. The housewife is taught how and what to buy for the table, how best to prepare it, and how to eliminate waste. Several families have already been brought from a state of idleness, dirt, and sickness, into one of cleanliness, work, health, and new and well-managed homes. Many of our city missionaries find that preliminary efforts, similar to those outlined above, are absolutely necessary, before religious impressions can be effectually made, and the plan is well worth investigation by others.

The Sunday-school Army.

The large gathering of Sunday-school workers at San Francisco, Cal., to which we referred in our last, is at this writing in the midst of enthusiastic and inspiring sessions. From the report of General Secretary, Marion Lawrance, we learn that there is a total of 14,946,504 Sunday-school pupils in this country,—a gain of 1,431,006 pupils since the last convention, three years ago. There are 76,172 more teachers, and the number of Sunday-schools has grown from 161,750 to 173,459. These figures, rightly appreciated, mean much for the future of our country. The study of the Bible, properly conducted, will mean more for the moral and religious development of the nation than any other agency that can be devised. It is encouraging to note that, amid the many disheartening evidences of vice and corruption, we have among us an institution which eventually will result in a better and more exalted standard of morals in the community.

"Good Citizenship Day."

We all agree that of days memorial and commemorative we have a great abundance,—more, perhaps, than we can properly observe in the manner originally intended. The latest addition to the list of memorable days is being proposed by William Jennings Bryan, and others, who suggest that a day be duly set aside as "Good Citizenship Day," to impress more fully, upon each citizen of our country, the great value and privileges we enjoy. The thought of inspiring nobler and more exalted aims, as to our citizenship, is commendable indeed. We would, however, suggest this amendment, that 365 days of each year be set aside as "Good Citizenship Days,"—not forgetting the all-important fact that an active exemplification of Christianity be made the ruling element of our civic life. When it comes to true patriotism, no one can excel the earnest believer who, by living according to "Golden Rule" principles, does good to all with whom he comes in contact.

The Passing of the Shakers.

We have referred, at times, to the decreasing numbers of the Shakers, and now the "winding up of the financial affairs" of some of their settlements in the State of Ohio and the only remaining one in the State of New York, calls attention to the fact that communistic experiments of that sort, though claiming apostolic precedent, are bound to be failures in the end. It will be remembered that the Shakers originally were the followers of "Mother Ann Lee," to whom they accorded the same degree of reverence they gave to Christ. Upon her death, in 1784, the society was reorganized on a communistic basis, with celibacy, nonresistance, and equality for women, as leading characteristics. In spite of the "share-and-share-alike-of-goods" principle found imitators in a score or more of sects, but nearly all of them were marked by the failures incident to experiments of that kind. With the final extinction of the Shakers, a most interesting attempt to settle a problem in social economy will pass into the annals of history.

No Danger of War with Japan.

While alarmists may seek to revive, at every possible opportunity, the specter of a possible war with Japan, we are assured, upon the authority of Dr. Charles E. Brown, of Oakland, Cal., a noted worker for peace, who has just been in Japan, that any possibility of hostilities between the two countries is absolutely out of the question. We must remember that (1) Japan has suffered from two expensive wars, the last two years apart; (2) on her war debt is a burden of $100 per capita; (3) her tax rate is nearly one-third of the income of the common laborer or mechanic, and forty per cent of the income of the well-to-do; (4) Japan would not accept the needed funds for a war with America; (5) Japan's best customer is "Uncle Sam," and the people are very slow to cut off, at one stroke, the source of revenue that is an essential factor of their national prosperity. There is something to think about in the statements given. Especially should we note that Japan's heavy tax rate,—one to which Americans would hardly submit,—is a direct outgrowth of her costly wars. Her small population being out of all proportion to the large war debt, now resting upon the people, their burdens are grievous indeed.

A Moslem Mosque for London.

From apparently authentic sources we learn that Moslem subjects of King George will build a half million dollar mosque in London as a coronation gift. It is a well-known fact that, strange as it may appear,—Islam has several thousand followers in England. It is expected that these will contribute a considerable portion of the required funds, and it is further announced that many prominent Christians have also agreed to contribute to the building of the proposed mosque. One is made to wonder how it was ever possible for the doctrine of the False Prophet to gain a foothold in the British metropolis, and stranger yet, it is that professed followers of Christ should contribute to the promulgation of erroneous teachings. The Word plainly says, "If there come any into you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed."

King George's Coronation.

June 22 witnessed the long-heralded coronation of George V., as ruler of a realm on which the sun never sets. The great eagerness with which all England looked forward to the great event, testifies to the intense loyalty of the people, who seem to have been even more deeply affected upon this occasion than they were during the coronation of his well loved father. To describe the regal magnificence that prevailed would require more space than is at our command, nor would it serve any good purpose. We may well rejoice, however, in the fact that the continued reign of King George will mean, practically, an era of peace, so far as he is concerned, and so far as his influence reaches. Far more we may we, as believers, rejoice in the thought that, while earthly distinction, such as was bestowed upon King George, is not ours, we have One "who loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father." That is a happy privilege well worth our best efforts!

Helping the Unemployed.

How best to help the "down-and-out" of humanity is a problem that has puzzled the best sociologists. Divine Writ tells us: "If any would not work, neither should he eat," but what are we to do when the luckless vagrant assures us there is no work for him? For some reason there seems to be an inability, on the part of many, to secure the needed work, in the face of the fact that the Kansas harvest fields and scores of other openings vainly beckon to willing workers. To remedy existing conditions along this line, Mr. James Eads How, a wealthy young man of St. Louis, is now devoting his best energies. By personal experience he has gained an accurate knowledge of the life and general surroundings of the unemployed, and he declares that, instead of the 1,000,000 that are usually out of work, there are now 4,500,000. Mr. How has set himself a task of no slight magnitude, in his work of alleviation. He proposes to arouse, by organized efforts, the best there is in each man, and then find him a position. To this end he intends to establish a cooperative organization in every city, by which the aim sought may be fully reached. His endeavor is a most praiseworthy one, and affords a practical suggestion to others.

Brahmins as Leaders of India's Unrest.

It is being recognized as a settled fact that the 15,000,000 Brahmins in India are the real leaders of the "unrest," pervading all parts of the country. If any one thinks of these men as devoid of intellect and lacking a comprehensive grasp of the situation, he is very much mistaken. The present British policy of denying Brahmin admission to government service, while intended as an effective reminder that their pernicious activity is ill-advised, seems only to widen the breach. What the future may reveal, as to the eventual termination of the impending struggle, is hard to tell, but competent judges of the situation claim that much will depend upon the native Christians, and the attitude they may assume as promoters of loyalty to English control of India. Whatever may be said of the real efficiency of Christianity as a factor in the largest of England's dependencies, one thing is sure,—they are working for peace and orderly conditions, and are endeavoring to instill the same principle in the flocks under their care. They well-meant and conscientious effort has met with an appreciative commendation on the part of the English officials in charge of affairs in India, and they are free to admit that the future weal or woe of the country will largely depend upon the rising influence exercised by native Christians under the leadership of their spiritual guides.

Elders and the Holy Spirit.

BY PAUL MOHLER.

EVERY once in a while I hear of some church that is not prospering because the elder does not look after it properly. Perhaps it would be more nearly correct to say that only once in a very great while do we hear of a church that is prospering as it ought to because of the faithfulness of the elder in charge. Well, either way you put it, the elder certainly does have a great deal to do with the condition of the congregation.

Paul recognized that fact when he exhorted Titus to appoint elders in every city and then went on to give the qualifications necessary for the elder (bishop) in Titus 1: 5, 7. And he sought to impress it upon the elders of the church at Ephesus when he said to them, "Take heed unto yourselves and to all the flock, in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops, to feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood" (Acts 20: 28, Am. Rev.).

I wish that "command" would take as strong a hold upon our elders today as does the command of John 13! Wouldn't it make a wonderful change? And isn't it just as binding? Do you say that it is just Paul's command? Well, so is the prayer covering command of 1 Cor. 11.

But this is more than Paul's command. Notice that Paul says, "The HOLY SPIRIT hath made you bishops." Although we know that bishops were appointed by men,—by Paul, Barnabas and others,—Paul places the responsibility of the elder where it belongs, upon the Holy Spirit. I feel quite sure that it is as great a grief to the Holy Spirit for one of his elders to fail in his duty as for one of the lay members to fail in his.

Brethren, think of it! The Holy Spirit has made you bishops to FEED the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own precious blood! What a tremendous responsibility to what an August Being! How can one think of accepting such an office as an "honor"! How base must that elder be that uses his office to feed himself from the church! And how much better is the man who accepts the honor, assumes the responsibility, and then neglects his duties?

And right here is the common failing of all classes of church officials. Some, indeed, who are called to office reject the appointment, thereby rebelling against the Holy Spirit, thinking, mistakingly, that thereby they, like the man that buried his talent, have escaped responsibility. For them judgment is certain to come. But the greatest number of offenders among us consists of those who are not faithful to the trust they accept. They allow the cares of this world to take up their time, so that they can not attend to their pastoral duties. They are not careful to set a good example in their own lives, and thus their lives discredit the church. They make no real effort to help the members of the church into a better life even when they do visit them, but talk of crops and markets or nonpractical theological questions, or about the faults of other members, other churches, etc. I tell you there is mighty little real earnest getting-down-to-business among the officials of the church today; and if you ask me, I'll say that I think that accounts for the failure of a good many of our stronger congregations to hold their own against the world.

Oh yes, I know the church does not help the elders enough; I know that every regularly-organized church should support an elder to give his whole time to the work of the church. But why do not the churches do so? Because the ELDERS HAVE NOT TAUGHT THEM TO DO SO! So it is up to the elder, after all. And excuses don't excuse. The Holy Spirit made you bishop, or you are no real bishop. The Holy Spirit certainly expects you to do the work or get out of the way of the man who will. Do you say you can't make so much sacrifice for the church? Well, Christ died for it, as Paul says. If you have not the spirit of Christ you are none of his, and are therefore out of place in the eldership. "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me." If that doesn't mean self-sacrifice for the church, it means nothing.

I have talked with a number of ministers who expect to serve the Lord faithfully SOMETIME. At present it would be very inconvenient to give much time to the Lord's work, but after they have accumulated enough property to keep them in comfort, without any attention on their part or any help from the church, they expect really to do something for the Lord. Now, doesn't that sound fine? Isn't it a good thing to be independent of the help of the church? The worldly mind says it is. It is a humiliating thing to have to receive help from other people. The natural man is not humble, so it seeks to provide against any such humiliating experience as the Lord had to endure every day of his ministry. For did not our Lord himself live of the gifts of his followers? And so we will always have ministers who are too proud to receive their living from the church which they serve and too fearful of poverty to do the work of the Lord on what the Lord has already given them. Oh yes, if the Lord will only give them enough cash down to insure their living throughout their lives, and a good legacy for their children, they will give all their time to his church, and will probably tell people to trust the Lord for everything!

But the Holy Spirit has appointed you to feed the church. Must the church go unfed until your fortune is made? Must you be anxious for the morrow, for fear that the Lord cannot provide? Must you seek first these things,—the food and raiment,— and then attend to the Kingdom of God and his righteousness? Shame, shame on such weakness!

Now just a word more about the support of the elder. The church really needs to support the elder more than the elder needs the support. It is not good for any church to be selfish. Growth in grace will always go hand in hand with growth in giving. We have not been taught this fact as we should. Naturally there must be a good deal of teaching along this line before the churches will do their duty. The elders should teach this truth but be patient. And the elder who makes the most sacrifice for the church will have the most influence in teaching the church to give. I hope the time will never come when the officials of the church will not be self-denying; but I also hope the time will soon come when the church will not COMPEL them to be so.

The Annual Church Visit.

BY S. N. M'CANN.

In Four Parts.—Part Three.

THE second question is one that touches the vital points in true Christian fellowship. It is the one question that helps to tell whether our religion is only a tinkling cymbal or a sounding brass. It is the one question that helps us to know whether we can suffer long and be kind, whether we envy or not, whether we ARE EASILY PROVOKED or not, whether we are disposed to talk evil or not, whether we can bear all things, believe all things, hope all things, and endure all things or not.

"Are you, as far as you know, in peace and union with the church?" If we can not answer this question in the affirmative, then the brethren who are on the visit act as peacemakers, and seek to set matters right. What a grand opportunity the visiting brethren have, to call down the blessing of God upon their heads, for Jesus says, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the sons of God." No bitterness, no hatred can long exist in the church if this question is honestly answered. Troubles, difficulties, strife must be adjusted, else there can be no communion, no full fellowship with the church.

The visiting brethren failing to restore peace and harmony between brethren who are at enmity, report the matter to the church in council. The church then seeks to bring about peace and fellowship. Failing in this she locates the cause, if possible, and pronounces judgment accordingly. If the church can not locate the cause of trouble, nor reconcile those at strife, she forbids them the full privileges of the church until peace can be restored. A member not at peace is asked not to commune with the church.

With such a power in our church government for peace and union, how can discord and strife develop? How is it possible for division and schism should creep into our body and separate us? Our past history tells us that it is possible. Should we not take the warning voice of history, and individually search the ground upon which we stand, in the light of God's holy Word, according to our baptismal vows, and our yearly answers to the church's questions? Have we been answering these questions in a merely formal way, or have we, prayerfully and conscientiously, answered them? This question is surely in harmony with God's Word and in harmony with the Spirit's teaching. The deacons who work in harmony with the spirit of this question could appropriately be called peacemakers.

When we consider the stress that Jesus laid upon peace, and the blessing he pronounced upon the peacemaker, we are glad that the church has provided for a set of peacemakers in every congregation of the Brethren.

The deacons may sometimes mistake their mission and not work and pray for peace, but that is no fault with the mission of this question. The spirit of this question, properly carried out, will render the deacon's mission a blessing both to himself and to each member of the church. How can discord ever get a strong hold in our body if the deacon comes to us once a year with the spirit of this question, and we receive his visit in the spirit of peace?

I fear we, as ministers, do not emphasize the importance of the yearly visit as we should. We do not lay stress enough upon the importance of the deacon's work. He should be impressed with the sacredness and importance of his work. No wonder the apostle says, "They that have served well as deacons gain to themselves a good standing, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus." No wonder that Paul lays stress upon the importance of the deacon. "Holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience."

Beauty—Here and Beyond.

BY J. H. MILLER.

I AM a lover of beauty in nature. May and June seem to me the most beautiful months of the year. As we view the landscape spread out before us, we must conclude that God is a lover of beauty. He made the world in all its loveliness, when there was no eye but his own to see the works of his creation.

When we see the forests clothed in green, and the opening flowers smiling a welcome to their Creator, it is a most charming scene. Surely, every hill and dale helps to make a picture of rare loveliness. This beautiful world that God gave to his children, together with the sun, moon and stars, is a vision that reflects the loving care of the great Creator.

When I stood at the mouth of the Grand Canyon of Arizona and gazed down the rocky cliff, I beheld the most beautiful mountain scenery I ever saw, and I was made to say with the Revelator: "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty. Just and true are all thy ways, thou King of saints."

How much beauty God has placed in all his handiwork! When we view the great realm of dazzling light, sparkling in the great dome of heaven by the Omnipotent Hand of the Creator of the universe, what shall we say? Is he not a lover of beauty? Listen to the sweet warbling of the birds, as they fly through the air and display the beauty of their plumage, and again you are lost in wonder and admiration.

The highest type of nature is man. God said: "Let us make man in our own image, and in our own likeness." Certainly God must be a being of surpassing excellence and power! As we think of man in his blessed state before the fall, we get a faint glimpse of the grace and power that once were his. As we think of the blessedness of a soul free from sin, we can form some idea of the superior beauty of man in Eden's bowers.

We love to dwell upon the immortal part of man,—the soul. A sinless soul is acceptable in the sight of God. Lazarus was happy in Abraham's bosom. Such souls shall see the beauty of the upper world, and partake of the tree of life.

What a marvelous beauty God has given to the human soul! It moulds the bonds of charity, sweetens the voice of our being, and in cherished beauty shines out through the eyes. Such a face will blossom in the delicate beauty of the morning-glory. As a sunflower turns to the sun, so the soul turns toward the Sun of Righteousness all the day long.

There is a power in the beauty of a Christian life to soften the hardest heart. Christian beauty has wonderful charms to draw the most indifferent ones close to God. The violet will some day lose its charms, and be a fading flower, but our home in the glory world will be fair and glorious forever. Some day the child of God will be standing by the sea of glass, viewing a scene beautiful beyond description,—there to praise God forever.

Solomon says: "The glory of a young man is his strength, and the beauty of old men is their gray hair." May we worship God in the beauty of holiness, and lean upon his arm for strength and protection! The prophet saw a vision of beauty in the promised King,—"Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty: they shall behold the land that is very far off" (Isa. 33: 17). May our faith and works, combined, carry us to that beautiful home! It is the land of our Father, the cherished home in glory. There we shall behold God in all his beauty!

Boy Training.

BY DR. G. H. VAN DYKE.

THAT the training of our children is the most vital question with which parents have to deal is at once admitted to be true. However, the number of parents who have made any special preparation for this serious and difficult task, before it presents itself, is exceedingly small. Considering the knowledge and wisdom that ought to be used, the character of the material upon which to work, the amount of preparation, and the difficulty in forming character, one almost concludes the results are about as good as could be expected. One could select ten subjects, with any one of which the average new parent is more familiar than this, the most paying of them all. The difficulty of developing many of the better qualities in children decreases somewhat in proportion as the number of children in the family increases. Family discipline is the strongest humanizing and Christianizing influence in the world—aside from God's Word. But either we are not training well, or Solomon's dictum about training up a child, etc., does not apply to our generation. I do not believe the latter, but the former, and that the boy suffers from the defective or unbalanced training more than the girl. Are the boys receiving the training that fits them well for manhood? Let us see what some people say about this subject.

Current Literature, page 521, quotes an article from Mrs. Cornelia A. P. Comer, where, in speaking of this subject, she asks the pertinent question, "Is the quality of the human product really falling off?" In discussing this subject, by contrasting the qualities of the present with the past generation, she feels that certain qualities, which are very essential in the make-up of a man, are disappearing rather fast—such qualities as courtliness, fortitude, and virtue. But she does not charge this up to lack or kind of training, so much as to the changed environment, for, she says, "when one gets light by pushing a button, heat by turning a screw, water by touching a faucet, and food by going down an elevator, life is so detached from the healthy exercise and discipline used to accompany the mere process of living, that one must scramble energetically to a higher plane or drop to a much lower one." She says further that "training is not a matter of the mind and body alone, but is fundamentally the education of the soul. In your training this has been neglected, and here is your cruelest loss."

So far as religious training is concerned she says, "Because of the tranquil religious state, we are teaching very little religion, and even that is done half-heartedly. Thus you have the distinction of growing up with a spiritual training less in quantity and more feeble in quality than any Christian generation for nineteen hundred years."

Concerning the training of our boys she says, "What the rising generation lacks is force—personality—power to endure. Unselfishness and character is not even known to it. Nice lads, with the blood of the founders of our nation in your veins, pecking away at the current literature of socialism, taking out of it imperfectly understood apologies for your temperaments, and calling it philosophy—where will you be if a great day should really dawn? When your day comes, you will be tossed on the scrap-heap, shoved aside by boys of a sterner fiber and a less easy life, boys who have read less and worked more, boys who have thought to some purpose, and have been willing—as you are not—to be disciplined by life. Certain ingredients are as necessary to a man as yeast to bread, or iron and carbon to steel. A combination of steadiness of purpose, breadth of mind, kindliness, justice, wholesome common sense, certainly a capacity for the task in hand, that produces a worth-while man. Force, personality, power to endure—these your fathers had, these you are losing. Yet life itself demands them as much as it ever did. For, though we may be getting soft and losing our stamina, the essential elements of life remain unchangeable."

Certainly every person does not take this view of the subject, but can any one whose knowledge is broad, and who has had a large personal experience, and who tries to formulate a serious judgment vary far from the above? Let us be real personal and ask ourselves some questions.

1. Will the methods of boy training and even the results of a half century ago do for today?

2. Is the general average of Christian character as strong today as a half century ago?

3. Is the boys' general average as clean a life as a half century ago?

4. Concerning the results of the training of our own children, is there as large a per cent of the boys of our own church homes becoming responsible members of our church as a half century ago?

To some of these questions we are bound to answer in the negative. It is safe to say that there never was a time when social impurity was as prevalent among religious people as now. This is very clearly due to faulty teaching, or no teaching, of the boy on this subject. Because of this deplorable condition, an army of leading educators and teachers is bringing this subject to the attention of the parents, who are first and rightfully responsible for the fault. State boards of health,—notably, Indiana, Washington, Massachusetts, and some others,—many city boards, and a large number of private organizations, representing physicians, lawyers, and ministers of the highest standing, are doing a great deal of work to bring this question home where it belongs. The State of Washington has placed a course of Social Morals in each of its three normal schools, and the teacher is expected to pass it along to the pupils in a sane way. There is a rapidly-increasing demand for this information on the part of school-teachers, because of the howling shame requiring it. Medical colleges—good and effectual places—are introducing regular lectures on this subject. Meetings held in connection with the Child Welfare Exhibit of Chicago strongly recommend the proper discussion of the subject. It is doubtful if any school or college which pretends to prepare young men and women for life can be excused for withholding such information. The only reason for demanding that it be taught is the awful prevalence of social impurity. There are two reasons why the birth rate is falling off noticeably, both in our country and in others. One is so-called (but improperly) social disease. The other is unwillingness to assume the responsibilities of parenthood. Both of these reasons could be overcome by the right kind of teaching, given at the right time. What must be the maternal bequeathing, and what the heritage of the child, whose approach into the world was purposely jeopardized by a mother unwilling to bear him? And can such secrets keep from leaking out in acts and heart-searchings between child and parents? How the knowledge of such a secret must blight the very soul! How the good impulses of such a child must be kept back by the maternal influences of such a mother! How can such a child be free in God's great world of love, life, and light? Is it good or bad for Christian women to teach younger women how to prevent maternity?

It is well for us to begin to measure our responsibility with results instead of by former methods. What answer can we make to the Vice Commission of Chicago in its words of warning to the parents of our country? When the Chapman-Alexander group of evangelists completed their world tour, coming closely in contact with people of many of the largest cities of the world, some of them said that of all the places visited, the children of the United States, and especially of Chicago, were the most disrespectful. This is not the child's fault, but the fault of his teaching.

The final question is, Are we satisfied with present results? Let us open our souls and hearts to the Christian's responsibility and duty; and then with faith, first in God, second in the boy, and last in our own good purpose, seek to bring about a stronger and more noble manhood and a higher state of Christian living in the coming generation than we have in the present.

The False Prophet.

BY D. E. CRIPE.

THE false prophet and the beast of Revelation are intimately connected together, both in their work and in their final punishment. As this beast is not a literal animal, but a figure or type of some beastlike principle in man, so the false prophet can not be a literal man, but a personified type of something which is found in the world and in the church.

Mohammed has often been named as the false prophet, pointed out in the Scriptures. If he had been the only prophet whose teaching had been contrary to God's will, and done harm to man, this might be correct. But there have been, and there still are, many false prophets and false teachers, who lead astray those who desire to serve God, and all these are false prophets. Therefore Mohammed is only one of the army of false prophets which have deceived the people. He is not the false prophet, but only one of them.

The false prophet, associated with the beast, is evidently a personification of all the false prophets—the entire host of them grouped together and spoken of as one man—and stands as a type or figure, both of their deceptive work, and their final doom. This doom is different from that of the ordinary wicked, for the beast and the false prophet are cast into a lake of fire, which was prepared for the devil and his angels, a thousand years before they themselves are consigned there. Those who have learned God's will and pose as his servants, who stand as angels of light, —and voluntarily, intentionally, deceive the trusting, seeking ones who desire to serve God,—are far more guilty than any of the ordinary wicked people.

The first evidence of the false prophet is seen in the garden when the serpent said, "Ye shall not surely die." Traces of him are found in those who resisted the preaching of Noah. He was in the camp while Moses was up in the mount, and prevailed on Aaron to make the golden calf. He resisted the true prophets of God in every age. He was with the priests and Pharisees when they prevailed on the people to say, "Release Barabbas and crucify Jesus." He was in Galatia and preached another doctrine different from that which Paul preached. To the Corinthians he said, "There is no resurrection" (1 Cor. 15:12), and to others he preached that the resurrection is already past (2 Tim. 2:18).

Paul speaks of him, when writing to the Thessalonians, and calls him "The man of sin." He "opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God." Assuming that he has more power and more wisdom than God, he sets up or tears down the Law which God has given, and changes the conditions by which salvation may be obtained. Paul says the Lord will not come until this man of sin be revealed. He knew the man was there—he is always on hand—and already at that time he was beginning to work. In later years he manifested himself more boldly, and there has been no age in the Christian dispensation but the false prophet was there with his pernicious, false teaching.

Of all the servants of Satan, the beast and the false prophet,—those who use brute force to bind the will of man, and they who, by false prophecy and false teaching, lead the seeker astray,—are the only ones who outstrip their master in frustrating the will of God, if their punishment is an indication of the crime. For the beast and the false prophet shall be tormented a thousand years before Satan's punishment begins.

It is not strange that the beast and the false prophet shall be doomed to destruction before the millennial reign begins, for peace and happiness could not reign here as long as brute force and false teaching divert and mislead the people. The earth can not be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea, until the beast and the false prophet are cast into the lake of fire.

Sermon Building.

BY JESSE D. MOHLER.

Good sermons are somewhat like has been said of good teachers: "They are born, not made." The ideas and thoughts given have largely been stored beforehand in embryo, and take tangible form when the conditions have become right for their development.

We believe, however, that every minister finds occasions for sermons when there seems none to be brought forth, and a sermon must be made. It is humiliating to take pencil and perhaps scissors and go borrowing for ideas to make a frame work for a sermon, in which we ourselves can furnish only the filling. But the farmer preacher has often been forced to something of this kind; and is liable to find similar conditions some time in the next few months of plowing and planting, and of planning for the following week's work.

We have always deplored the necessity of so gathering a sermon when the occasion has been forced upon us; but have never considered it the right of a minister to borrow a thought that does not find correspondence within himself. If this is observed, even the quickly-made product is, in a manner, brought forth from his own ponderings.

"This does not, in any way, sanction a copying or following of the discourses of another without first absorbing its truths and casting aside such portions as are not suitable to one's own individuality, or do not strike a sympathetic chord within one's own musings. But we are, of necessity, borrowers of thought;—not in the form we give it forth, but in the impressions that give form to our own thoughts.

Our opinions of the writings or sermons of another depend, not so much upon the truths they contain, as upon whether they present something that is related and in slight advance of what we have already pondered over, crystallizing that which has been vague impressions within our own mind. In this sense we may occasionally make a sermon by gathering the gist of the impressions made by some one else.

No one has a right, under any circumstances, to store up another's thoughts indiscriminately and give them a dressing of his own. To do so is plagiarism, a crime against another, a belittling of one's self, an imposition on his audience, and a possible trifling with truth.

Quoting others as authority for statements is in place, but a congregation does not care so much for quotations as for original thoughts. They, perhaps, can read better things than their minister can tell of his own; but want the vivifying power of the producer of thought in the speaker before them. To give this, the minister must first make the thought his own, regardless of where he got the impression. If one feels that something is so good it should be quoted, let him study it until he can quote with the same fervency as his own.

In a former article mention was made of the need of reading much more than we ever expect to preach. A thoughtful reading of an article may at the time be all one gets from it. Later, when in search of material for a sermon, reading up on a subject, or studying within our own mind, an embryo left by that reading will be touched and a life given to it. There are very few absolutely new things being said; but the wider our range of reading, the more embryotic thoughts we harbor, the more we can respond to truths in another's productions, and the more readily can sermons be born, not made.

In sermon building three types or classes are usually recognized. These are: (1) The textual sermon; (2) the topical; (3) the expository. Each has a field of its own, and yet somewhat overlaps the others. The main difference we have seen is that the different classes suit the different styles of preachers best. All must have a foundation of scriptural truths, but some have more readings as a basis for teaching than others.

The expository discourse has been used, perhaps, more in the past than at present. This decline in use, we believe, is not due to a lack of desirability so much as a slighting by the user and a desire for more entertainment on the part of the hearer. A minister may resort to this style of preaching in order to get something easier. It really calls for deeper study of the Word, and of the problems of life, than either of the other styles of sermon.

The expository sermon takes a number of verses, a chapter, or several chapters, and gives an exposition of the teachings, very much as might be done with our Sunday-school lessons. Many strong preachers have found this an excellent method. A danger lies in the possibility of surface work, of depending on the volume of scripture treated, rather than on the rich thoughts that might be given. We have observed that this is a more suitable work for those of ripe experience than for the young man, or for the man not thoroughly acquainted with scriptural teachings.

The tendency in expository preaching being to scatter the thoughts too widely, the textual sermon more readily induces close work, leading to a definite point. This takes a verse, a portion of a verse, or several verses, as a scriptural basis for the lesson of the day. Related portions of scripture from Genesis to Revelation are in place, but all scripture used and ideas presented should have a bearing on that text.

It is not best to divide up a text into several parts. Every sermon, to be a sermon, must have a definite point in view. Two points may be held in a text under some conditions, but one had better save a part of his text for another sermon, rather than undertake more than two main lessons in his sermon. You can not fasten many teaching points in any one lesson.

The topical sermon has perhaps more advantages to the speaker than either of the others. Its foundation must be scriptural. A text may or may not be used, but a suitable text is an advantage, as it gives direct authority for the subject under treatment. Many of the sermons, for which ministers read a text, are really topical sermons. A subject, sometimes not even named, is far more in evidence than the text, in the sermon delivered. Such is a topical sermon. It deals more with general ideas of scriptural teachings than with the direct bearing of texts.

As intimated above, each man is more adapted to one style of preaching than another; but we believe it is good practice to vary one's custom, and occasionally prepare a sermon of another style. Our teaching should not be in the same trend all the time. If we have preached strongly of justice, we should take up the side of mercy. If we have taught much of the love of God, we ought for a time to consider his demands, that we may build a good sermon on that line.

When it comes to the actual building of a sermon, there is no royal road to success. There may be nearly as many ways of getting at it as there are men to build sermons. No one man can, with authority, tell another just how he had better proceed, but some general principles are in place.

We believe that no man should undertake the preparation of a sermon, or even to work over an old sermon, without seeking the special directions of the Holy Spirit for that work. Man is too incapable to handle the Word of God for the salvation of others without such help.

Scripture and scriptural teaching must be the basis for thought, and thought, not words, or fancy, or oratory, must be the substance of every truly good sermon. Those thoughts have a relation that will give them a logical form, and that will appeal more to the hearer than if presented in any other way.

Half the success of a sermon is in the audience. We stated above that our interest is much more in a thought that is related to ponderings of our own, but slightly in advance. Likewise an audience appreciates a discourse that tells them clearly what has been hazy to them, and opens up a new field; but does not appreciate a sermon that is clear beyond their own conceptions. One's sermons should then be fitted to his congregation, as well as to the subject, and the minister's analysis of the Scriptures.

There is no calling that outshines that of the minister, when well filled; and the building of sermons is a building of character and a molding of destinies to the hearers of its teachings.

Guidance.

BY KATIE FLORY.

It is necessary to have a guide as we journey through life, because of the many hard things to be endured. There are commanding heights to ascend, where the deepest of joys may be experienced. There are valleys to descend where there are deep sorrows and dark clouds.

In order that our sorrows may not consume our joys, because of the roughness of the way, we need a Perfect Guide,—one who has gone over the way before us, and knows all about the hard and trying places.

God never left his people without a guide, a law, a command, a statute. The pillar of fire was a visible guide to the children of Israel, and it guided them through the great and terrible wilderness till they reached the promised land. God, "at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets." To Gideon, Moses, Hezekiah, and many others, he gave signs, as evidences of his guidance.

How does the Lord guide today? By the Scriptures, by the Holy Spirit, by his Son. "Though we or an angel from heaven, should preach unto you any gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak from himself; but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak: and he shall declare unto you things that are to come."

For guidance, we, today, ought not to expect signs and tokens when we have the "Thus saith the Lord," and understanding minds to comprehend God's Word. An evil and adulterous generation seeketh a sign, was Jesus' answer to the proud Pharisees.

True, the Bible may not give a rule for every course of action in life. Paul, in Acts 16:7, knew not which way to go, and started out in the wrong direction. Then the Holy Spirit acted as a guide, for it says, "The Spirit of Jesus suffered them not" to go into Bithynia. The beauty of it was that Paul was receptive and willing to be guided and so was led aright. He was not stubborn, as so many of us are. The thing for us to do, too, is to wait, pray, and listen for God's voice,—to be receptive when we are in a strait and perplexity, and have no "Thus saith the Lord" for a certain course to pursue, or a certain thing to do.

Often wise counsel from wise people will be a help. Let us never dictate to God how to be guided. Let us never ask for a dream or a sign, to be shown the way to take, but, instead, let there be perfect receptivity and a willingness and determinedness to do his will. Perfect guidance will be the result.

"In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he will direct thy path." It may be a little surprising how God has promised to guide even in the smallest details of life. In our dress, what to wear, our conversation, the things we should and should not talk about, our daily work, where to go and where not to go,—everything we may be guided. The Spirit told Philip to get into the chariot with the eunuch. This looks like a little thing. Have we not often been prompted by the Holy Spirit to say something to a certain individual, to do a certain thing because the Holy Spirit was wanting to perform some act of service through us and we could not resist him? Every Spirit-filled child of God has had such experiences.

Too often we think and decide for ourselves when we are wholly unable to do so. We must feel our need of a Guide; then will we ask, and success will be ours.

We must desire to know God's way in everything, having no will of our own. One reason why God can not lead some people today, is because they are not willing to do his will. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know." We must ask for it definitely. We must expect it. "Ask in faith, nothing doubting." Too many of us are doubters and don't believe that God will do such things for us. Read James 1:5, 6 right here.

Then, too, we must follow our Guide, and the closer we keep to him, the easier it is to follow. It may seem like taking a step in the deepest of darkness, sometimes, but only a step at a time is all we need to know. We need not know what God wants us to do next week, or next year. All I have to do today is God's will.

O, how sweet to be every hour and day guided by faith, by the Unseen Hand and Eye! How comforting to know that we are kept and guided through this life of faith and trust,—and that God is leading, controlling, directing, and planning the lives of each of his children! Who would fear to follow such a guide?

Dust and Divinity.

BY I. N. H. BEAHM.

By special request from a brother in the West I write on the subject in hand.

How can man be dust and divine at the same time? This article purposes to answer the question. The query before us has agitated a great many minds. The subject has often been ventilated. It has sometimes been contradicted.

There are some who take the position that everything is God, and therefore even the human body is divine. This is the doctrine of Pantheism. Christian Science is not very far from this view of the case, if at bottom differentiated at all.

There are others who take the position that even consciousness,—mind in all its manifestations,—is but the effect of matter, as light comes from the lamp or candle. This is the doctrine of pure materialism. What is mind? Never, matter. What is matter? Never, mind.

Then there is another doctrine, which regards the body in a very primary sense, and teaches that our knowledge of external things, at least, is gained through the senses, and is, therefore, essentially sensuous. But the doctrine then traces from the sense knowledge on through memory powers; the pictorial functions of the mind, as imagination; the powers of analysis, comparison, and synthesis; the intuitions of the truth, the beautiful, and the good; the various phases of emotion,—egoistic and altruistic; and the highest functions of volition; all, to the transcendental realm of complete obedience to Jehovah. This doctrine maintains that while man is essentially flesh and blood, vitalized dust of the earth, there is something in him that far transcends the limitations and functions of matter, and rises to the conception of the divine, and is able to live in the realm of the spiritual. This doctrine is called transcendentalism. Therefore, while man has been taken from the earth and is earthly, even "dust and ashes," yet he is transcendentally great, inherently and constitutionally, because "The Lord God formed man of dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

Man's duality is essentially and specifically taught by Paul. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved" (2 Cor. 5:1). "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day" (2 Cor. 4:16). Once more, the Master himself says, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul" (Matt. 10:28). Man is essentially dual,—clearly dust on the one hand and divinity on the other.

Man is from the dust of the ground on one hand. Man is from the hand of God on the other. Therefore man is essentially dust, and he is intrinsically divine. The body must return to the dust whence it came; the spirit will return to God who gave it. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return to God who gave it" (Eccles. 12:7). Man is essentially dual. Of the earth earthy and of God spiritually. This duality of man is but one expression of the many dual phases of the universe.

Luke says, "Adam which was the son of God" (Luke 3:38), therefore Adam was divine. But we know also that he was dust. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground" (Gen. 2:7), therefore, man is dust and divine. In man, dust and divinity meet. Man is a great dual organism—matter and spirit. There is a dust-man, and there is a spirit-man. He is a material, spiritual organism. The spirit of life dwells in the material organization. Man is stamped with the fiat of rationality. He is the image of God. "So God created man in his own image" (Gen. 1:27). Man is the golden link between heaven and earth. He is a combination of both. Two worlds claim him.

When man accepts Jesus Christ through the Holy Ghost, we have a reincarnation of the Christ, or, in other words, man has been restored. By sin he wandered away from God. By Jesus Christ he is again identified as divine. The sinner is somehow in a state of divine dormancy. So man—spirit-man—is divine —of God, from God—whether he is a Christian or not; but an unconverted man is dust in the ascendency and divinity in the descendency. In the Christian the dust is subjugated by the divine. The body is controlled by the divine. Dust is in abeyance and divinity is in control. "In the flesh there dwelleth no good thing," morally or righteously speaking. The human body is full of putrifying sores from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot. "From the sole of the foot even unto the head, there is no soundness in it; but wounds and bruises, and putrifying sores" (Isa. 1:6). By the reincarnation of Christ, that is, by the subjugation of the flesh, through faith in Christ, we have the triumphant administration of the divinity. Every man has a dusty administration as a sinner, or a divine administration as a Christian. Man is dust and divinity. When the dust-man dominates, we have a beast. When the spirit-man, Christified, dominates, we have a son of the Most High.

More men are controlled by dust and lust than by divinity and trust.

What a marvelous piece of work is man, stretching from the lowest level of dirt and dust to the loftiest height of light and trust—immortality and divinity! His possibilities in range are anywhere between the lowest and the highest.

Paul differentiated himself from his body. He says, "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection" (1 Cor. 9:27). He speaks of his body as "the body of this death" (Rom. 7:24). It is a dying body, a dead body. Dead, because the spirit of life is in control. We may understand, however, that, so far as this life is concerned, the body is a unit in its neutral, vital, and motive functions—in its nutritive power, its circulative forces, and in its moving tendencies. The mind, in its ideational, emotional, and volitional functions, is also a unit. And further, the body and mind, functionally considered, are so completely identified and interdependent that they are a unit. If the flesh be in control, the mind is one with it; and we have the "carnally minded." If the spirit of God be in control, we have the flesh subordinate; and even the sinful flesh becomes the servant of righteousness by the Spirit.

We may, with philosophic and scriptural propriety say "dust and divinity." Abraham says, "I, which am but dust" (Gen. 18:27). John says, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God" (1 John 3:1). All men are dust. All men are the sons of God. "For as much then as we (the spirit-men) are the offspring of God" (Acts 17:29). All the sons of God on this earth are of two classes—lost and saved. The lost sons of God are the sinners unsaved. The saved sons of God are the Christians. The "Prodigal" was a son in swine society. After his return, he was a son in divine society. There was a vast difference between the stinting, starving, slothful, sinful animal of field and famine life, and the clean and consistent, tasty and truthful, bountiful and beautiful manhood, in all the sweetness and richness of home joys and comforts. There is a world of difference between a sinner and a saint. Spiritually, the sinner is the adopted son of the devil, and the saint is the adopted son of God.

Knowledge or Spirituality,—Which?

BY G. E. YODER.

The subject of an educated ministry has been thought of considerable, and has been discussed in our various District Meetings as well as other religious gatherings. This is an important subject, and should be well considered, inasmuch as a church needs an educated ministry, and some educated lay members, in order that she may accomplish her work. I feel that the Church of the Brethren has, to a degree worthy of mention, always had an educated ministry. Possibly not educated in the way we usually think of education; but, judging from their "fruits," borne to the Master, and their "footprints on the sands of time," we are forced to conclude that they were educated men; that is, educated for their work and mission of life.

There is a difference between education and knowledge, even though they may be synonymous in some particulars. An educated man is not a man who has simply acquired knowledge, but a man who has put his knowledge to proper use. The Latin root-word means "to lead," "to draw." A man may have considerable knowledge of God's Word and still not be educated at all in that particular. When educated, the knowledge "leads" and "draws" his life to the standard of the Word.

In speaking of an educated ministry, too often we are prone to hold up the knowledge side of a man, and make that the standard by which he may enter fully upon his ministerial duties, and forget to take into consideration the proper use of the knowledge. I do not, for a moment, wish to underrate knowledge, but it does seem to me as though knowledge is the wrong standard by which to admit men to the ministry, if we need a standard. A man may have the knowledge qualifications for a minister, and still not have the Biblical qualifications. "Knowledge is power," and it makes little difference, as far as the "power" is concerned, whether we use it for the Lord or his enemies. Hence the necessity of its proper use.

THE ROUND TABLE

Wrong or Right Thinking.

BY A. HUTCHISON.

In Two Parts.—Part One.

We all do some thinking, but are we doing the right kind of thinking? Let us look a moment at the language of Solomon. He says, "Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye, neither desire thou his dainty meats: For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he. Eat and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee." Paul gives us a timely caution on this line. He says, "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God" (Heb. 3: 12). Jesus says, "For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. For every tree is known by his own fruit" (Luke 6: 43, 44). Therefore we should remember that "as he thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23: 6, 7).

Yes, every tree is known by his own fruit. It is certainly the true way of measuring the man,—by the fruit developed out of his life. Jesus says, "For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes" (Luke 6: 44). If a man thinks figs, so will the fruit of his life be. And if he is thinking thorns or brambles, he need not expect to gather either figs or grapes. The man who has a pure mind, and thinks pure thoughts, will never become a thief, a robber, or any other evil character.

We quote from Paul again, as given in 1 Cor. 3: 1-3, "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?"

The whole thing depends upon what type of thinking we are doing. Jesus says, "For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies" (Matt. 15: 19). We have St. James saying something on this line in the following: "For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work" (James 3: 16). We well know that such a condition of things, as described above, will not result from correct or right thinking. 1 Cor. 13: 7, 8 gives us plainly to understand that "charity beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth."

Charity (love) is the greatest power in the life of the Christian, with which to meet the different problems of life. Philpp. 2: 14, 15 says, "Do all things without murmurings and disputings: That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation among whom ye shine as lights in the world."

Here we can see the difference between wrong thinking and right thinking. The one produces murmurings and disputings, and unpleasant conditions generally, while the other brings out all the good graces, and the admirable traits of a pure Christian life. Even those who make no pretension to being Christians themselves admire a true Christian. As he thinketh, so he will be,—Christian or sinner.

Homiletic Hints.

BY E. B. HOFF.

The Resurrection of the Saints Assured by the Resurrection of Jesus (1 Cor. 15).

Paul established the church at Corinth (Acts 18: 1-18). When he did so he made known the fundamental facts of Christianity (1 Cor. 15: 1-3). Among these facts was that of the resurrection of Christ (15: 4). That Christ was raised from the dead is an established fact, because he appeared to a number of his disciples (15: 5-8; compare also Acts 1: 2, 3, and Matt. 28; Mark 16; Luke 24; and John 20, 21).

Christ having been raised gives assurance of the possibility of the resurrection of the saints, but, on the other hand, if Christ has not been raised, the whole plan of Christianity is false and there is no hope beyond the grave (15: 12-19).

Christ, therefore, having been raised becomes the first fruits of the resurrection for those who are his at his coming, and when thus, through the resurrection, he shall have destroyed the last enemy, which is death, he will give up the kingdom unto the Father that God may be all in all (15: 20-28).

Is it worth while to live a life of sacrifice and live in jeopardy day by day if there is no resurrection (15: 29-34)?

But, after all, how can there be a resurrection after the body is destroyed? The body that is laid away shall never come forth, but God prepares for us a new body,—not a body of flesh and bones but a spiritual body—a heavenly body—for flesh and bones can not inherit the Kingdom of God (15: 35-49).

When he comes in the glory of the Father, with all the angelic throngs of heaven, there will be a great change. God's people, both dead and alive, will be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and the great victory will be won (15: 50-57; compare also 1 Thess. 4: 13-18).

Not only will the Christian be raised but the sinner as well will come forth to his God of condemnation (John 5: 28, 29 and Dan. 12: 2, 3).

No wonder, then, that Paul should earnestly exhort to unmovable steadfastness and the always-abounding in the work of the Lord. There is a reward for every faithful child (15: 5, 8).

A Reminiscence.

BY D. B. GIBSON.

Nearly seventy years ago I, a little boy about five years of age, was taken by my father, Eld. Isham Gibson, and mother to a love feast at a brother's house. I looked on with big eyes, and wondered at the scene before me.

A saintly man, Bro. George Wolfe, of Far Western fame, stood at the head of the table, laid aside his vest, took a towel and girded himself, poured water into a basin and washed father's feet, and after wiping them, he kissed father. This continued until all had their feet washed and washed some other brother's feet. Then they saluted each other around the table. I wondered what would be done next.

An ample repast was spread on the table and thanks offered for the food. And as they ate, Bro. Wolfe arose and took bread in his hands. They all stopped eating. Thanks were given for the bread that represented the broken body of Christ. The brethren passed the bread to each other, as also did the sisters. Then followed the cup in like manner. Next there was a brief prayer; then a song, and then the dismissal.

I asked my parents some questions about it. They told of Alexander Mack and that the practice came to them via North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky to Union County, Illinois, then to Sangamon, then to Adams County. The practice continued until 1859, of which fact I am a living witness. There are also a few others to corroborate the foregoing. This is given as a historical reminiscence.

Hard or Easy Places.

BY J. H. MORRIS.

There are many men, and boys, too, who are looking for easy places. They never stay long at a place because they feel that the place is too hard. A certain young woman loved her husband so well that she could not see him go off to his work without telling him that his work was too hard for him, since he was not very robust. This continued until he began to think that his work was actually too hard, and, indeed, every kind of work was too hard. The young man soon found himself in bed, a sick man, and everything was too hard.

Many a good man has been ruined because he believed that he was not strong enough to tackle a hard piece of labor. He lost much of the joy of life by not attacking and conquering difficult things. Sometimes you hear a boy say, "I can not do it yet, but will you allow me to try again? I will try." The natural attitude of a natural boy or girl is to try difficult things, or to fill difficult places. The man who is always looking for an easy place or the "snap," has, some time in his life, been spoiled by some over-indulgent father, mother, or friend. There are hard places in this world, and strong, courageous men and women are needed to fill them. The Christian can not expect to be wafted to heaven without any effort on his part. He has many forms of evil to meet and conquer, and he must be willing, sometimes, to make the hardest kind of an attack, and thereby take the hard place.

Pluck the Thorns.

BY W. R. KINDIG.

It has been said by a great American who has passed into the beyond: "I would rather than all else that it should be said of me, when I am gone, that I plucked the thorn and thistle from the pathway of my fellow-man whenever I could, and planted a flower wherever a flower would grow." This noble sentiment is the very essence of Christ's teaching.

He who aids his fellow-man, and helps to smooth his pathway, lays hold upon the higher meaning of life, and solves the mystery of happiness. The man who helps to make life worth while for his neighbor, makes life worth while for himself.

Then, let us follow the exalted precepts of our Savior,—pluck the thistles of weakness and the thorn of despair from the path of our fellows wherever we can, and plant, instead, blossoms redolent of cheering words and helpful deeds, for we shall not pass this way again.

Life Contrasts—Temperance.

Gal. 5: 15-26; 6: 7-8.

For Sunday Evening, July 9, 1911.

I. Contrasted.—(1) Standpoints: (a) Self—"bite and devour" (v. 15). (b) My brother—live "in the spirit" (v. 16). (2) Forces: (a) Worldly—"the flesh" (v. 17). (b) Godly—"led of the Spirit" (v. 18). (3) Results: (a) Sinful—"Drunkenness, reveling" (v. 21). (b) Holy—"love, peace, goodness" (v. 22).

II. Contrasted.—(1) Spirits: (a) Christlike—"crucified the flesh" (v. 24). (b) Devilish—"vain [fleshly] glory" (v. 26). (2) Modes of reasoning: (a) By the day—"soweth" (v. 7). (b) By the life—"reapeth" (v. 7). (3) Destinies: (a) Heaven—"soweth to the Spirit" (v. 8). (b) Hell—"soweth to the flesh" (v. 8).

PRAYER MEETING

Prayer That Has Power.

James 5: 13-20.

For Week Beginning July 9, 1911.

1. The Prayer of Faith.—Without faith it is impossible to please God, and unless God is pleased with our supplication there will be no answer. In the case of the sick, referred to by James, he is to call for the elders of the church that they may pray with him, and the declaration follows: "The prayer of faith shall save the sick." The fervent prayer of Elijah is referred to as an example of abounding faith. He asked and obtained (1 Kings 18: 36, 37).

2. The Persevering Prayer.—Christ said, "Whatsoever ye ask in my name I will do it." The Lord hears the prayers of his people. He can not but hear. Justice to his creatures demands it. He is ready to bestow the promised blessing, but all hinges on our perseverance, our continued asking (Luke 18: 1-8).

3. The Prayer of Entire Consecration.—We can not serve God and Mammon, Christ and Belial. God is a jealous God, and the glory which belongs to him he will not share with another. It is all or none. Just in proportion as the world gets a grip on us, just in that proportion we lose our grip on God. Why should we expect God to love and cherish any suppliant who is in love with the world and the things of the world (1 John 2: 15-17)?

4. The Prayer of Loving-kindness.—He who cherishes enmity in his heart toward another is seriously handicapped in his supplications at the throne of grace. The injunction is, "Confess, therefore, your sins one to another." Prayer that has power must come from a heart that abounds in love (1 John 3: 10-17).

HOME AND FAMILY

Sometime We'll Know.

BY HENRY NISWANDER.

Sometime we surely all will know
Why Jesus Christ has loved us so,
And why he left his home above,
And came to earth to prove his love.

His life he gave that we might be Redeemed for all eternity.
His blood was shed for all mankind,
In him a Savior all may find.

He brought from heaven his Father's will,
His mission well on earth did fill.
He paid the debt and let us free,
The deaf he healed, the blind may see.

His will he left that we may read,
And his wise counsel we should heed,
If we a home in heaven would gain,
And with the saints forever reign.

Pride.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

"Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall."

THERE is a noble or a rational pride that all should have. There is a pride that puffs up and fills one with vanity and conceit. This all should avoid. This is the kind alluded to in the above text. The Bible, throughout, condemns it.

An individual may possess excellent qualities and endowments, and may have acquired many things by honest endeavor, and feel great pleasure in his attainments. He may experience this joy without any comparison with others. He may not feel that he is the superior of others, or treat others as his inferiors. It is simply the uplifting satisfaction that comes with his success. It is a noble feeling and shows self-respect. It is not wrong for one to know his worth and hold himself accordingly.

But when this feeling assumes the form of comparison with others, to thrust them down in a spirit of self-exaltation, for the purpose of courting applause, it is then a very different thing. It is pride in a bad sense. It shows a vanity and haughtiness that is contemptible, and is the harbinger of a fall, sooner or later.

When one magnifies his own importance and is filled with conceit, and acts as if conscious of greater importance than others, which is just as likely when there is but little worth,—this is pride in the Bible sense. It is haughtiness, vanity, self-sufficiency, arrogance, and will invariably put on appearances, in some way, to draw attention.

Here is where it has its connection with display in dress. To wear the gewgaws of fashion, that have no claim for comfort, and are worn only to draw attention, is an indication of vanity which comes from pride. Pride is manifested in many other ways besides that of dress and is always contrary to the meek, simple, modest and humble nature of Christianity.

Christians should avoid all useless ornamentation of dress, or general display of all kinds that has no merit or claim but that of show, to draw attention.

One of the worst forms of pride is to be proud of our humility. "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord." "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble."

Obedience and Courage.

BY IDA M. HELM.

"Go ye and stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life" (Acts 5: 20).

THE apostles were energetic, aggressive workmen in the Lord's vineyard. In face of the opposition and persecution of the world, and the strict charge of the Jewish council, not to teach in the name of Christ, they filled all Jerusalem with the teachings of Jesus. They were cast into prison but when the angel set them free and told them to go and teach in the temple all the teachings of Jesus, they went immediately to the work to which the Lord called them. When called into question by the council, Peter and the apostles answered, "We must obey God rather than men."

Here is a true story that will illustrate the point. In the days when the Duke of Wellington wielded a mighty influence over the English, one day an English farmer saw a band of huntsmen riding about on his farm. He had one field that he was anxious they should not enter, as the crops would be greatly injured by the tramp of the horses, so he sent a boy to guard the gate. The boy refused to let the huntsmen pass through the gate. Their threats and bribes were of no avail. Then one of the men advanced and said in commanding tones: "My boy, do you not know me? I am the Duke of Wellington, and I command you to open the gate that I and my friends may pass through." The boy removed his cap in respect and stood with uncovered head in the presence of the great man, the man whom all England was glad to honor, and said firmly: "I am sure the Duke of Wellington would not want me to disobey orders. I must keep the gate shut."

The Duke was greatly pleased and he said, "I honor the boy who will be neither frightened nor bribed into doing wrong. With an army of soldiers like him I could conquer the world."

With an army of soldiers like Peter and the other apostles, the church could soon conquer the world for Christ. Every one of us can be such a soldier if we will,—a soldier that can be neither frightened nor bribed into obeying the commandments of men. We can do all things in the strength of Christ, and we are commanded to teach all the commands of Jesus.

The Manners of the Congregation.

"I SOMETIMES think," said Stilphen, with the furrow down the middle of his forehead that with him betokens deep and perplexed thought, "I sometimes think that for downright bad manners and sheer impoliteness the average church congregation excels."

I stared in astonishment.

"Seems to me that's pretty sweeping," I ventured to remonstrate, when I had caught my breath.

"It is pretty sweeping," he admitted, "and it ought not to be true, but I'm afraid it is. You won't find anywhere, in any other company of people half-way decent, such an exhibition of genuine poor breeding, and such thoughtlessness in the treatment of others as you're likely to see any Sunday at your First church, or at our St. Ignatius."

He settled down in his seat in the way he has when there's a story coming; so I waited.

"I've thought of this in a general way a good many times," he went on, after a minute, "but it never got into me as it did last Sunday. I'd been coughing a bit during the week, and at first I thought I wouldn't go to church in the morning, for fear of disturbing the people; but I finally concluded to go and take a back seat so that I could slip out, if necessary, without making any commotion. So I went up into the gallery and sat there. Of course I had a good view of the congregation from that point, and I give you my word, Smithers, I was fair ashamed of it and for it before the service was over.

"In the first place the people came straggling in all along from half-past ten to eleven o'clock. Of course, everybody knows that the service begins at half-past ten, and every house has watches and clocks galore; but there they were, five, ten, fifteen, and twenty minutes late, as though the appointment wasn't of enough consequence to make arrangements to meet it on time. There's Nevins, yonder," nodding in the direction of a prosperous broker, sitting a few seats ahead of us. "Now, Nevins was telling some of us, the other day, that he hadn't missed the eight-seven a single morning since he moved out from the city. Nevins got to church last Sunday just seventeen minutes after the train—I mean the service—had started. Didn't seem to mind it, either, but marched up the aisle as though he wasn't a bit ashamed of missing his appointment. My wife says he's always late; wonder why? Of course, it's downright bad manners. The late-comers disturb those who are already there, and take their attention away from what's going on; can't help it. If you try to listen to what the man in the pulpit is reading or saying, and I pass up the aisle right by your side, you're bound to have the train of thought interrupted, whether you want it to be or not. And it's much worse for the preacher, of course. Don't see how he stands it. Should think these late-comers would break him all up."

"But," I ventured to say, conscious of a certain lack in this matter of punctuality myself, "it isn't always possible to get to church exactly on time, you know. Circumstances sometimes detain one."

"Oh, of course, we'll make all necessary allowances. But it's pretty hard for me to believe that the Lord spends the whole week getting together a lot of circumstances to keep people from coming to church on time Sunday mornings. No, it's a matter of habit, and it's a mighty impolite habit. It isn't always convenient for me to catch that eight-seven train, but I must do it. I have appointments in the city that I must meet, so I manage to be at the station on schedule time. Now, if I'm late at church I'm practically saying that my appointment with the Lord and his people isn't of enough importance for me to take any special pains to meet it. It's a good deal as though you invited me to dinner at six o'clock, and I came strolling in leisurely at about twenty minutes past six, just because it wasn't quite convenient to come earlier. Wonder what you'd think of me?"

"Go on," said I: "What's the next count?"

"Well, the next thing is, the way the people behaved when they got there. I declare to you they made me think of a pack of cantankerous children; if I didn't love animals so well, I'd say like a drove of stubborn mules. The minister said, 'Let us all join heartily in singing such and such a hymn,' and I'm blest if there wasn't a lot of 'em who didn't open their mouths at all—some didn't even take their hymn books from the rack, as much as to say, 'Sing yourself; it's too much trouble for us.' Same way with the responsive reading and the Lord's Prayer. Only a few joined in, and the rest sat stock still. Might have thought they were a deaf and dumb asylum out for the day. Common politeness would seem to teach them to do better than that.

"But it was even worse when the sermon began. A home missionary from out West somewhere preached. You just ought to have seen the people when the pastor announced him! They looked at each other in the most indifferent way, as much as to say, 'Well! if I'd known that he was to preach, I'd have stayed at home!' Some of them scowled, two or three went out, and the rest settled back with a bored expression, to endure what the preacher might have to say. He saw it all—couldn't help it. I fancy there ain't much going on in the pews that the man in the pulpit doesn't see. I felt real bad for him; almost like getting up and saying, 'Please excuse us, sir; we mean well, but we don't know any better.' Well, the sermon wasn't much, I confess, but it was probably the best the man could do, and common politeness would have made the people receive it with courteous attention. But all the way through they were staring around the room, or turning over the pages of the hymn books, or looking at their watches; and when the sermon was over, there was a movement of relief all over the congregation, which the preacher must have noticed, if he wasn't a blind and deaf idiot altogether. Now I'm giving you cold facts—just such facts as you'll see in your own church any Sunday. I tell you, it doesn't look right to us fellows who are looking on from outside. It seems to us that in the house of the Lord we have a right to expect the finest courtesy and the clearest exhibition of good breeding to be found anywhere on earth, and we're not finding it, Smithers, we're not finding it."

"There's one other thing," he resumed, after a pause, "and that is the attitude and conduct of a congregation in prayer time. It's almost frightful when you think what prayer is supposed to be, to see the carelessness and thoughtlessness of the people who are supposed to be joining the minister in his talking with God. But that isn't simple impoliteness—it's worse—it's irreverence. Maybe I haven't any right to speak of that, but you praying men would better think of it a little."

And just then the train rolled into the station.

☞All business and communications intended for the paper should be addressed to the BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE, ELGIN, ILL., and not to any individual connected with it.

Entered at the Post Office at Elgin, Ill., as Second-class Matter.

Bro. J. A. Vancil, formerly of North Dakota, but now of Lanark, Ill., called at the House a few days ago.

Bro. J. Homer Bright wishes us to announce that his address has been changed from Chicago to Union, Ohio, R. D. 1.

Bro. John P. Bowman, of Michigan, should hereafter be addressed at Prescott, R. D. 2, instead of Hardwood Lake.

Bro. Levi S. Mohler, of Elizabethtown, Pa., is booked for a series of meetings at Beaverdam, Md., beginning October 14.

After the late Conference Bro. Geo. W. Flory, of Covington, Ohio, went to Cambridge, Nebr., to do some evangelistic work.

We are informed that since the Annual Meeting six have united with the church at the South St. Joseph Mission, St. Joseph, Mo.

At Woodstock, Minn., 150 persons assembled at the riverside to witness the baptism of five who had applied for membership. Two others await the rite.

Bro. L. R. Holsinger devoted two weeks to evangelistic work in the Plum Creek church, Pa., and as the fruits of his efforts eight persons put on Christ in baptism.

The District Meeting for North Dakota, Eastern Montana and Western Canada, to be held in the Salem congregation, N. Dak., is to last three days, beginning July 11 and closing on the 13th.

Writing from Omaja, Cuba, under date of June 13, Bro. Grant Mahan says: "We have plenty of rain, fine weather, an abundance of work, and good health. What more is needed?"

Bro. I. J. Rosenberger, who was kept away from the late Annual Meeting on account of his wife's health, writes us that he has so far attended thirty-five Conferences, while his wife has attended thirty-four.

A short time ago Bro. Christian Ness, of Dallastown, Pa., closed his earthly pilgrimage. We are not informed regarding the date of his death. He is said to have been eighty years old at the time of his departure.

After the close of the St. Joseph Conference Bro. H. C. Early went to Meyersdale, Pa., where he devoted a few weeks to a series of meetings. The interest became so great that the whole community seemed interested, and a number applied for membership. Full particulars have not yet reached our desk.

It is suggested that the evangelists among us, who have a few weeks or a few months off, in which they can serve churches, make known the fact through the Messenger. This would enable churches desiring series of meetings to confer with them regarding their service. Such announcements can be made editorially, when we are requested to do so.

The Sunday-school Meeting of Southwestern Missouri and Arkansas, to be held at Fairview, Mo., is announced for July 9.

Bro. Francis M. Smith, of Fruitdale, Ala., writes us that friends of the mission cause in the South have donated fifty copies of the Messenger to be placed in families in his community. He further says that they are doing a good work.

It is officially stated that the Relief Fund for Chinese famine sufferers has been closed, and therefore no more money need be sent for that purpose. All donatiogs, hereafter received by the House, will be at the disposal of the donors.

Bro. John Herr and wife, of Pennsylvania, visited the Publishing House on Thursday of last week. To our regret their stay in Elgin was short. We should have liked if they could have remained longer, and visited some in our homes. This was their first call at the Messenger sanctum.

The greatest need in the mission field of China is a good physician. And what is true of China, in this respect, is also true of India. We have much to say about preparing missionaries for these fields, but we should rather be concerned about good doctors. It would be a good thing if the Mission Board could, at once, send two doctors to China and two to India. See what Bro. F. H. Crumpacker, of China, has to say on page 411.

A writer in an exchange, referring to his mission in the city, says: "Our working force has been increased." Some new members had reached the city, and they, of course, were expected to take part in all of the services. On reading the announcement we were led to wonder if all the members of the Brethren church, who settle in cities where we have services, can be counted on as workers. Do they locate in cities with the intention of taking an active part in the work of the church, or do they mean to play the part of drones? It must be left for them to decide as to where they would like to be classed.

Judging from the printed programs sent us it would appear that a number of the Sunday-schools, and some of the congregations, are preparing to celebrate the Fourth in a real sensible way. Good speakers have been selected, appropriate subjects assigned, and in a number of instances preparations have been made to spend the day in nature's great temple. Meetings of this kind will help to keep the young people from attending the unbecoming, worldly celebrations, and it is to be hoped that our people will, from year to year, continue to throw their influence on the side of a sane Fourth, accompanied by a strong religious sentiment.

We suggest that the head covering for devout women, referred to by Paul in 1 Cor. 11, be studied in the light of a "devotional covering." It is a covering to be worn by sisters when engaged in praying and prophesying, and is suited to any devotional exercise, such as thanksgiving at meal time, the family altar, secret prayer or the public religious services of every class. Whenever a sister is devotionally engaged, she will find this covering in perfect keeping with the occasion, and if she will study the covering and its use, in the light of devotion, she may get, from the Scripture cited, a meaning that has not yet come to her in its full force.

While every member of the church should have an anxious concern for the prosperity of the cause, the minister, especially, should have an overwhelming sense of his responsibility. The burden of his message should weigh heavily upon him. Of a noted statesman it was said, "He never rose in the House of Commons (England) without feeling his knees tremble under him, and," says his biographer, "I am sure that no man who has not some of that feeling will ever succeed there." The same feeling, though far more intense, must pervade the true ambassador of God. Like Paul, he should say, "Woe is me; if I preach not the Gospel."

Bro. S. N. McCann is at a Hospital in Baltimore, Md., where he went, a few days ago, for a surgical operation that may keep him confined for several weeks. The operation is not considered dangerous, but it is one that requires many weeks of care and absolute rest.

We are in receipt of catalogues from Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa., Bridgewater College, Va., Daleville College, Va., Elizabethtown College, Pa., and North Manchester College, Ind., all for 1910-1911, and very creditable publications, showing what the respective institutions of learning have to offer to the young men and women of this country. We mention the different school catalogues as they come to our desk, so they can be ordered by those seeking educational advantages.

The members of Oregon, Washington and Idaho are to hold their District Meeting in the Coquille Valley congregation, at Myrtle Point, Oregon, July 13 and 14. This may be the last meeting for the three States, as the late Conference granted permission that the territory be divided into three Districts. And, by the way, we like the method pursued by the District in obtaining permission to divide. It occurs to us that this was the method contemplated when the Annual Meeting in 1903 decided, "That, when new State Districts are intended to be organized, a full statement of the proposed organization be presented to General Conference and recognized by her before they can represent on the Standing Committee."

The Mennonites, who are now doing considerable foreign mission work, are probably more particular about the faith and standing of their missionaries than any other Protestant body in this country. They specify the special qualifications for all officials, and then present in detail the articles of faith that must be understood and accepted by each missionary. This includes baptism, the communion, the religious rite of feet-washing, the prayer covering, anointing, the holy kiss, nonresistance, swearing, secrecy, nonconformity, and a number of other points. These rules are laid down for all the Mennonite churches in India, and, of course, apply to their missionaries in all lands. As a result of their care they secure a fine, loyal body of missionaries.

The Minutes of the St. Joseph Conference are printed, and all orders received have been filled. But a number of the State Districts have not yet sent in their orders. We can not understand why some of the Districts should be slow about having their respective congregations supplied with copies of the Minutes of our Annual Meeting. These Minutes should be distributed in all congregations in less than a month after the Conference closes. We should suppose that the right active overseer would want his members to have the Minutes as early as possible, and that, instead of depositing them on the table at the meetinghouse, and telling the members to help themselves, he would see to it, that a copy is placed in each family of members without unnecessary delay. In fact, we know pastors who will manage to have the Minutes delivered to every home where there are members.

The Fourth of July will soon be here, falling on Tuesday of next week. All over the land Independence Day is to be celebrated, and it is no more than proper that it should be observed in a Christian and patriotic manner. Many of those who celebrate will abuse the occasion. It has become customary to so regard the day. We would urge the readers of the Messenger to abstain from any act that is not in keeping with the spirit of the day. Especially do we call the attention of those who prepare programs, to the importance of respecting the principles for which the Church of the Brethren stands. We are not a war people, nor do we believe as the world believes, regarding parades and military displays. It looks very inconsistent, indeed, for a people, unlike the world in their appearance, to be seen parading the streets with military banners and the music of fife and drum. We can and should celebrate in a quiet and more becoming manner, and, as far as practicable, give our programs a religious tinge.

A NUMBER of the churches, we observe, are electing the Sunday-school officers. This is certainly proper. Since the Sunday-school is the creature of the church, the church should say who shall officer it, and how it may be managed. Furthermore, the school should be conducted in the interests of the church, and those selected to teach should, as far as practicable, teach the New Testament principles as the Master intended they should be taught. We have reached the time when we should value our Sunday-school more highly than we have been in the habit of valuing it, and for that reason more attention should be given to this line of work.

THE man who wants to go into the tobacco business in this way can get rich and do it honorably. It is said that if a young man at the age of twenty will put twenty dollars at interest, instead of spending it for tobacco; then do the same thing the next year, adding principal and interest, and keep up the practice until he is seventy years old, will realize several thousand dollars—enough to insure him against want. This would beat the life insurance companies and make better men in the end. One with an ordinary income could keep up this saving habit all through life, and still give not less than twenty dollars a year to carry on the Lord's work. To say the least of the suggestion, it is a fine way of disposing of the tobacco problem.

OCCASIONALLY we are censured for publishing articles in favor of the supported ministry, it being held by a few that such articles would not have been published by Brethren Kurtz and Quinter, a generation ago. We happened to open the Gospel Visitor for 1865, at page 168, and there noticed a very strong article by J. W. B., of Shelbyville, Ill., with this heading: "Ministerial Support." The writer starts out by saying, "For several years past I have been convinced that our ministers should be supported by the church." On this question the MESSENGER has never published anything more positive. True, others were permitted to present the other side of the subject, and that is just what we are doing. We permit both sides to be heard. In this particular we are doing just what was done by the editors of the Visitor forty-six years ago.

The Apostle Not Ignorant.

WE have an article from a correspondent, who would have us believe that the twelve apostles, chosen by Christ, were ignorant and illiterate men,—men who had no college training whatever,—thus showing that the Master does not place a very high estimate on preachers who have been favored with a college or university education. He is probably correct in saying that the apostles were without college training, but it is not fair to hold them up before the public as ignorant and illiterate men. Whatever may be said about their lack of special mental training, it is marvelous what some of them knew. In their addresses they were never at a loss for words and as logicians they seem to have been the peers of any one in the Jewish Senate. They could doubtless read the Old Testament in either Hebrew or Greek and could talk the Latin language fluently. Their education in the Greek was not classical, and yet the writing they did in Greek has withstood the criticism and scrutiny of the most learned linguists of ancient and modern times. Talk about the apostles being ignorant! Some of our more devout college and university graduates would be only too glad if they could speak and write with the force and accuracy for which these chosen men of God were noted.

Conversion a Matter of Fact.

OUR relation to Christ, as members of his mystical body, is not a matter of feeling; it is a matter of fact. We are not of the household of faith simply because we feel that we are related to Jesus, but because we have, in good faith, done what he said we should do, in order to become identified with his kingdom. The conditions of pardon and acceptance have been clearly stated. To the apostles, when sending them out to preach the Gospel to all the world, the Master said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16: 16). To those who inquired after the way of salvation, on the Day of Pentecost, Peter made this statement: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 38). Those who believed, repented and were baptized, as directed by Christ and Peter, could rest assured that they were saved from their sins. By taking Jesus and Peter at their word, they could know for a certainty that their sins were pardoned, that they had put on Christ in baptism, that they were numbered with the believers and were, therefore, children of God.

They did not reach this conclusion by mere feeling. With them it was a matter of fact. By those authorized to speak for God, they had been told what steps to take, in order to secure the promise. They took these steps and then knew that the promise was theirs. With them it was a reality. They were as sure of their relation to the kingdom of God as is the foreigner certain of his relation to the government of the United States, when he complies with the conditions required of those who wish to become citizens. After complying with the conditions, he does not tell his friends that he feels that he is a citizen. He tells them that he is a citizen. He is positive about it. With him it is a matter of knowledge.

So with those who are truly converted. If they have complied with the conditions of pardon, as set forth in the New Testament, they know that they have passed from death unto life. They know that they have been pardoned, have been regenerated, have been born again, have been made a new creature in Christ Jesus. Having done their part, they know that God will do his part. Knowing these things, the feeling, of course, will follow, as the result of the faith they have in the Word of God. They feel that they have been pardoned and accepted of God, because they have complied with the conditions. Feeling, with them, is the result of a knowledge of facts possessed. They do not appeal to their feeling as evidence of their conversion. Their evidence is in the Word. God, through his Son, has made the conditions of pardon known, and having complied with these conditions, they know whereof they speak when they refer to their conversion as a matter of fact. The feeling is an after-matter, and, while an essential part of the experience of the converted man, is no part of the evidence in support of his conversion.

The Close of Another Year.

THE American legal year begins with January and closes with December, but our years, as we live them, have different dates for their beginnings and closings. Much depends on when we begin and when we close the special work which we have to do. The school year has different beginnings and different closings. Some are longer and some shorter, but all of them, because of what they mean to us, are years of care, concern and anxiety.

For the last thirty-five years our life has been largely measured by the Juniata College years. This is because we have grown up with it, since we saw its origin in a small room fourteen by sixteen feet, in which there were a small table, a blackboard with two feet, leaning against the wall, and a half dozen chairs. We read about the small cabins and huts in which some of our great men were born and had their early growth. Humble as have been some of the homes in which some such men have been born, and unpromising as have seemed their early lives, no more so was the outlook of our college in its birth and early life. And though a weakly child, it had the tender care of a mother's love, and its life and growth were watched with an unceasing care by the few that gave it birth; not so much because of the planted tree as for the fruit it was expected to bear. It has been growing both in size and fruitage, and during this growth and fruitage we have been watching with great concern as to the realization of our prospects and hopes, so that, in this watching, our years have been changed from the calendar year into the college year, which runs from September to June. And as these years open and close, our anxieties and responsibilities are weighed and measured, and the question comes to us: What has the fruitage been? Because of advancing years and the employment of younger men, our active responsibilities are growing less, but because of our interest in the cause and the church, and the ideal, as to what the college was to be or should be, in relation to both, our concern remains unchanged.

Our relation to, and our interests in, this work, from the beginning, through all these years, has been so close and deep, that from the opening to the closing of the college year, and during the intervals, our daily prayer has been: "God bless our school." We are glad to believe that this is the prayer of every one directly concerned in the college, as well as that of its many friends, scattered throughout the church and the world. Why all this? Why pray for God's blessings on the college? Because we want, through it, to do work for God. It was through this desire and purpose that it had its beginning, and because of this it has had its continued being. It is because of this desire and purpose that we are so earnestly laboring for its perpetuation. Again; we pray that we may have God's blessings on the work, because we need it; because we can not get along without it, and because we believe that we have had it all along.

During the college year, just closed, the Lord has been with us in giving an encouraging attendance of students, in a successful year of work, in the religious tone that pervaded the work throughout the year, and the splendid spirit shown during all the Commencement Exercises. These are occasions of deep interest and mental strain, that the Lord may be glorified in all that is done, and unto this end we all labored. As a result, we enjoyed one of the most satisfactory closings of the years, so that we have been made to feel that the Lord has been remembering us in the desires and purposes of our hearts, and has been giving us the things we need, and we believe that he will continue to do so.

Our Closing Exercises began, properly, on Sunday, June 11. In the morning we had a sermon to the Christian Associations of the college by Eld. J. M. Blough, of Bombay, India; at 3 P. M., the Graduating Exercises of the Sunday-school Teacher-training Class. Of these graduates there were twenty-four, and twenty-two of the different seal courses.

On Sunday evening at 7:45 the Baccalaureate Sermon was preached to a full house, by Eld. T. T. Myers. On Monday evening, June 12, the Graduation Recital of the Voice Department was held. On Tuesday, at 3 P. M., the Class Day exercises of the Business School, and at 8 P. M., those of the Bible School took place.

On Wednesday, at 9 A. M., Class Day exercises of the School of Education were held; at 2 P. M., Class Day of the Academy; at 6: 30 P. M., Round Top Meeting; at 8 P. M., Class Day of the College Department.

On Thursday, at 9: 15, Commencement Exercises were held. An address was given by A. Duncan Yocum, Ph. D., of the University of Pennsylvania; presentation of diplomas by the President, I. Harvey Brumbaugh. At 2 P. M. the Alumni Association had their meeting, and their banquet at 7: 30 P. M.

Thus closed another school year of Juniata College. In addition to Sunday-school graduates there were sixty diplomas given to the students of the different departments of the college. And what does all this mean? It means much,—more than we may think,—more than we can now know. It means that this large number of men and women go out from this institution of learning better prepared to do acceptable service; better work for the church and the world.

It has been our privilege to see hundreds of young men and women come here in their undeveloped condition, and to see them go away not only intellectually converted, but so morally and religiously cultured and refined that their personality and mental powers seem to be almost wholly changed. And now to know that a large number of these, with this added power, are utilizing their force in the cause of the Master, makes us greatly rejoice, and we feel that Juniata College is truly worth while. And to know that three of the number, who were accepted as missionaries to foreign fields, were Juniata students, adds greatly to our joy.

We are always pleased to learn of the success of our students in the different callings and professions of the business world, but it adds greatly to that pleasure to learn of their success in the high and holy calling of Jesus Christ in saving souls unto eternal life.

Another thing affords us great satisfaction on such occasions. The association of the students of our different institutions of learning produces a kindly feeling towards each other, and eliminates the spirit of personal and selfish advantage, showing that we are all working for the same end and purpose—that of lifting men and women out of the ways of ignorance and sin into the light and life of righteousness, as revealed through the Gospel unto eternal life.

The Delegation for 1911.

THIS makes the fourteenth year that we have published the tabulated report of the representation at our Annual Meetings. We are glad to know that these reports are proving both interesting and instructive. They enable us to study a phase of the Conference that could not well be studied otherwise. Below will be found the report for the St. Joseph Meeting:

By this it will be seen that the representation at this Conference was the second largest known in the history of the Annual Meeting. The representation at Winona, last year, broke all records, being 486. The St. Joseph Meeting, with 440 delegates, fell forty-six behind. It was, however, the largest in the West. Below we are letting our readers see the representation from 1877 to and including the present year:

Year.	Elders.	2nd Degree.	1st Degree.	Deacons.	Laity.	Sisters.	Total.
1877,	93	104	18	14	10		239
1898,	216	128	24	17	16		410
1899,	126	100	22	26	18		292
1900,	149	114	25	24	16		348
1901,	156	110	26	37	22	10	360
1902,	167	107	27	44	13	8	366
1903,	162	117	23	44	13	11	371
1904,	160	116	18	48	8	12	362
1905,	165	91	30	38	8	16	348
1906,	173	127	21	44	14	14	393
1907,	100	47	10	62	16	18	263
1908,	201	95	13	63	16	43	431
1909,	193	104	17	44	6	18	381
1910,	228	103	29	64	14	33	476
1911,	227	101	11	45	16	40	440

This year, for the second time since we have been publishing these tabulated reports, over half of the delegates were elders, having a majority of fifteen. This means that the influence of the elders is gradually gaining in the delegate body. Including the fifty-one elders on the Standing Committee, there were, in the voting body, 278 elders, not enough to carry a question against the united votes of all others, but enough to have blocked every motion that was presented. Last year, with a delegation of 483, there was only one more elder than this year.

There is quite a falling, off of representation by ministers in the second degree, there being 128 last year and only 101 this year. This falling off also applies to ministers in the first degree. But the St. Joseph Meeting was the banner Conference for the sisters in the delegate body, there being forty of them, two more than in 1907, when the number, out of a delegation of 263, reached thirty-eight.

This year Southern Ohio is the banner District, with a representation of thirty-three, or five less than last year. Both Middle Indiana and Eastern Pennsylvania come in for the second place, with a delegation of twenty-eight each,—a falling off from the representation for the year previous. The third place is taken by Southern Illinois, leaving Northern Indiana only two behind.

It will be observed that the First District of Arkansas and Southwestern Missouri did not, aside from an elder on the Standing Committee, have a delegate at the Conference. This is also true of Western Maryland and a few other Districts. West Virginia did not have a delegate present, and Tennessee only one.

The complexion of the delegation might be studied with interest, but we pause only to note that out of thirty-three delegates from Southern Ohio nineteen were elders. Out of sixteen from Northern Illinois and Wisconsin ten of them are in the eldership. There are many other points to which we should like to call attention, but we leave our readers to look them up and make their own comparisons.

Discoveries in Jerusalem.

REFERRING to some late, purported discoveries made at the temple platform we quoted, last week, what Mr. Arnold of Jerusalem, had to say on the subject. But there is a paper published in the city that expresses a different opinion regarding the find and the value of the articles reported to have been secured. From this publication, The Truth, we give the following:

All Jerusalem has been stirred for weeks over the abstraction of sacred treasure from the crypt underneath the Mosque of Omar, on the site of Solomon's temple. We do not believe that any valuable things have yet been discovered, but that treasures were found cannot be doubted. It is not known whether they were hidden here or taken away in the night, when the two explorers were compelled to leave.

In the absence of official report, one hesitates to write; but the following from The Truth, a weekly paper published here for the Jews, seems so reliable and is so interesting that I give it quite fully:

The nocturnal theft of the sacred relics is an episode of historic and vital importance, and we are positively sure that the articles abstracted, when once universally declared to be bona fide, will revolutionize all religious thought and infallibly solve many historic and philosophic problems! It is moreover beyond the shadow of a doubt that the place of concealment of the valuable objects, so long coveted by every Jew, and so much enlarged upon in the Babylonian and Jerusalem Talmud—yes, that spot was not even known to the sacerdotal authorities of the Sanhedrim of the Second Temple.

It appears, from what we have heard on excellent authority, that the illustrious antiquarians came to their work of exploration in Jerusalem with a definite plan and program, based upon ancient Hebrew documents, written in Samaritan characters, dating from the destruction of Solomon's Temple and from the subsequent exile of the ten tribes of Israel to Persia. These documents are said to have been only recently unearthed in the north of Ireland, and it was by virtue of their definite indications and minute measurements that the exact hiding-place of the precious paraphernalia of the First Temple could be precisely located.

The summit of Mount Moriah, where the Mosque of Omar now stands, having been considered by every successive ruler too sacred for any but the unshod foot to tread, it would never have entered the imagination of any one to penetrate below its surface. Moreover, the place, supposed to have been ransacked and despoiled, is the most unlikely receptacle for such inestimable treasures. The hypothesis is that the find consists of sacred relics from Solomon's Temple, in every credited by the Jews than by other nationalities, for the reason that in the Talmud, as well as in other ancient Hebrew books, it is plainly recorded that most of the rich treasures of the First Temple were carefully concealed by the vanquished Israelites, in order that the victorious foe might not lay hands upon them.

A gentleman who has lately left for Europe, and whose truthfulness we have no reason to doubt, confided to us, amongst other information, the nature of the explorer's quest. The following is a part of the inventory enumerated in one of the discovered parchments:

1. The Stone Tables of the Law.
2. The Stone bottle containing Manna.
3. The Urim and Thummim.
4. The Crown of David.
5. The Golden Sword of Solomon inscribed in Samaritan characters: "The sword of peace."
6. The Ark of the Covenant overshadowed by golden cherubim containing the first tables of the law (broken by Moses).
7. Sundry vessels connected with the service of the Golden Altar.

According to this authority, the Urim and Thummim are inlaid with twelve precious stones, each bearing the name of one of the twelve tribes of Israel. The Sheiks, who have been suspected of complicity in this dramatic and sacrilegious pillage, are in prison; and are daily subjected to corporal castigation and raillery. A commission, composed of Ottoman dignitaries, specially appointed by Constantinople, has already arrived in Jerusalem to make full investigation, and award exemplary punishment to those found guilty of sacrilege. The engineer, who acted as interpreter to the eminent excavators and who is well known in Constantinople, is also under arrest.

If the documents supposed to have been discovered near Dublin, Ireland, on which authority the explorers based their assiduous and indefatigable researches, were of Israelitish origin, then the arguments in favor of the British-Israel identity have won the day.

Loose Work on Mission Fields.

ONE of the leading churches in the United States is more or less disturbed regarding some loose work done on mission fields. This body of people holds to immersion as the only scriptural mode of baptism, and yet some of the missionaries sent to the foreign fields persist in receiving into church fellowship unimmersed converts, claiming that the views held by the home church on baptism are too narrow. The sending out of missionaries sound in the faith, is becoming a matter of vital importance to some of the earnest men of the denomination referred to. Their mission board has probably sent workers to the foreign fields without carefully examining them regarding their knowledge of the Scriptures and the faith they hold. In the zeal to get mission work started, this point has been overlooked by more denominations than one. People who furnish the money for mission work should know what is being done. Our Mission Board has, so far, been very fortunate in the selection of workers. With one exception they have proved to be faithful to their trust, preached sound doctrine and done a good work. But we believe the time is here when every mission worker, whether for the home field or for some foreign field, should pass an examination regarding his literary attainments, his knowledge of the Bible, his ability to teach, and his willingness to maintain the doctrine held by the church. The ancient Waldenses, a fine missionary church, required special Bible and literary preparation upon the part of all workers, before taking charge of a mission point.

A School of Methods.

AT Canton, Ohio, a Bible school of methods is to be established. This probably means that instruction will be given on the best methods of doing all kinds of church work, including, of course, the preaching of the Gospel. The idea may be new to some, but the field is a broad one. We have schools devoted to best methods of farming, stockraising, fruit raising, etc. In fact, the best methods of doing everything, along secular lines, are taught somewhere, and, surely, the best methods of carrying forward the Lord's work should receive attention. All over this land we are losing much for the want of the best methods in our Sunday-school and church work. But while looking for methods, there is danger of overlooking what might easily be learned from the Scriptures, and in the right kind of a Bible school these methods should be taught. Candidly, however, it is surprising what a demand there is among sincere church workers for the best of methods. Hundreds are anxious to learn how to do this, that and the other thing along church lines.

PRESCOTT, MICHIGAN.

Eld. Lemuel Hillery and Bro. Isaac S. Grady, both of Goshen, Ind., left their homes June 8 to visit friends in Mason County, Mich. June 13 they reached Ogemaw County, Mich. They were met at West Branch by Bro. John Horning, who brought them out to his home, where Bro. Hillery met Sister Fisher, one of his old acquaintances. Sister Fisher is crippled with rheumatism, but gets around quite well by means of her crutch. Bro. Hillery was almost worn out when he got here, as he had a fall this spring from which he sustained injuries, besides being otherwise afflicted.

After resting a few days, we met at Bro. Horning's house on Thursday and Friday evenings, where Bro. Hillery gave us some soul-cheering thoughts, for which we were thankful. On Saturday afternoon, June 17, the Brethren met at Bro. Levi Myers' place for church council. We got the business in shape and made arrangements for our love feast and organization, which will be held in the writer's barn, twelve miles east of West Branch, and eleven miles southwest of Prescott.

Today Bro. Hillery gave us some spiritual food. The house was crowded and he had the best of attention. Bro. Hillery will preach for us again tonight. Arrangements have been made for more meetings to be held at Bro. Horning's house, sometime this week, as Bro. Hillery can not travel around very much. Bro. Grady will go home on Monday, but Bro. Hillery will remain with us until after our love feast.

We have also decided to hold a Fourth of July meeting in Bro. Oscar Mason's grove. Sisters Horning, Blocher and Mason, and Brethren Ira Blocher and Horning were appointed to prepare a program for the meeting. We have Sunday-school every Sunday at 9: 30 A. M., followed by preaching services. We have also decided to have preaching every Sunday evening.

Any who are thinking of changing location will do well to come this way. We now number forty-three brethren and sisters, and have good prospects for more. All letters of inquiry should contain a stamped envelope.

A SUCCESSFUL YEAR FOR MOUNT MORRIS COLLEGE, ILL.

A school is a community in which the citizens are in the hopeful, ambitious period of life. The busy, youthful alacrity of the students who find every task a pleasure, makes life pleasant, and time passes quickly. Hence, a school year, nine months, from September to June, soon becomes only a pleasant memory.

This has been true of the past year at Mount Morris College. The fall term opened with the largest attendance for that term in the history of the institution. Later it became evident that practically every student was a worker. Soon no one could resist the ever-present spirit of hustle, and before long each student and teacher felt that "Success" was the motto of the year.

Neither a strong teaching force nor many students can make a school successful. The students must be ready for the work they are to take. Nearly all of the corps of teachers of this institution have been permanently connected with it for a period of years, and their teaching ability has already been demonstrated; but their work this year was especially effective, because of the superiority of the entire student body. A higher standard of scholarship was possible than ever before.

It is encouraging to note the steady increase in attendance of the College Department. The recognition which the universities give the work of Mount Morris College, has broadened its reputation so that it is more able to attract the graduates of accredited high schools. During the last term of the year nearly one-fourth of all the students enrolled were in the College Department. On Commencement Day the degree of A. B. was granted to seven young people, several of whom are arranging to enter the graduate schools of universities which accept a diploma from this institution.

The work of the Bible Department has received the attention from the student body which it has merited and in each class the attendance has been especially large throughout the year. The method of study has been neither emotional nor apologetic, but the subject matter of each course has been pursued in a serious, reverential manner, keeping the teaching of the Book in mind and yet giving it the scholarly study which it deserves. A course in this department, taught in a thorough manner, has the same educational value as a course in any other department of this institution.

The work in Agriculture has also been especially successful and popular. Twenty-six students took work in this Department. The demand for the coming year is such that it has been found necessary to provide more room for the Department. The Lowden prizes, which are offered by Hon. F. O. Lowden, are an especial incentive to work along this line. Fifty dollars is given to students who do best work in class, and an equal amount is offered for winning essays on agricultural subjects.

It is pleasing to those who are especially interested in the success of Mount Morris College to note the gain with the increase in attendance and scholarly methods, there has been a steady growth in religious activity. Students meet in Mission Study classes, maintain a Volunteer Band, take active part in prayer meeting and do various lines of Christian work, such as aiding in the maintenance of services at mission points in charge of the local church. An especially large number of active young ministers were in school during the past year and a number of them spoke acceptably in the chapel.

The outlook for the coming year is especially bright. A large number of rooms in the dormitories have been engaged. In order to keep the equipment in the most attractive form possible, the management is refurnishing the entire ladies' dormitory with new, hardwood furniture of mission design.

President J. E. Miller, under whose successful direction Mount Morris College has advanced so rapidly, is spending the present vacation abroad. The investigations which he will make in the lands where the Greek and Roman classics were produced, will prove valuable to him in the class room and we look forward to interesting chapel talks concerning his trip. Charles H. Keltner.

HANCOCK, MINNESOTA.

The last love feast we attended in the East was at Baltimore, Md., May 25. It was an enjoyable meeting. On our way to and from Baltimore we visited relatives and acquaintances whom we had not seen for many years.

May 28th we met in worship with the members and friends at York, Pa. Here the congregation is large, compared with many places in the West. That night we preached at a schoolhouse about four miles southeast of York, near Brother's brother, Daniel M. Bowser, lives. This was our last public service in the East.

May 29 at 6:30 we left York, in company with Bro. J. A. Long, for our Annual Conference. A few were added to our number at Harrisburg, and a few more at Petersburg. Our train left the latter place in several sections. Bro. W. M. Howe, with his special car, filled with a number of brethren and sisters from Pennsylvania, was ahead of us. We caught up with them before we reached Chicago. So they had room in their car, but the sections were made for some of us, whose tickets read over the same road, to occupy a place with them. This proved very acceptable to us.

We arrived in St. Joseph, Mo., on Wednesday morning at 8:20. We took a car to the Auditorium, where the Lodging Committee was in readiness, and soon assigned us a very desirable place, about five minutes' walk from the place of the Conference.

Sister Mary Schlaway writes up the proceedings of the Conference, we will pass on to the time of our leaving, which was on Thursday night, at 2 A. M., for Des Moines, Iowa. Here we took the Interurban line for Wagner's Grove, where Bro. Geo. N. Falkenstein lives. He was the foreman of the Committee of Arrangements when the Conference was at Des Moines. He kindly met us and took us to his home.

The next morning, in company with Eld. J. Q. Goughnour and wife we started for Hancock, Minn., our home. Here Bro. Goughnour is to preach for us for a few weeks. He and Sister Goughnour depend much upon personal work in a series of meetings. Our meetings have a good beginning, and are to continue indefinitely. A love feast is to be held at the end of the first week.

Hancock, Minn., June 13.

PING TING CHOU, SHANSI, CHINA.

Why do we need a doctor? Well, because the people are in a diseased condition and need help along that line. Especially here, we have opportunity for a much deeper healing that needs to come to them. This healing the Lord can bestow when these poor, blind souls have been led to know that they really have a Lord that loves them.

I am not a prophet, neither do I want to predict in these words, but let me say to our dear young people, who are troubled about what they can do in life, to make a success, I can give them a plan, which, I believe, will be satisfactory, even though they have not asked me. Here it is: (1) Enter a medical college and stay till you have a diploma. (2) Don't hang out your shingle where you will live in a starving way for years, trying to make a reputation, and that among a people where they are questioning your ability all the time, thus making it hard for you to even get a living out of it. (3) When you have your diploma, come to China where you can have a reputation, envied by any practitioner, in a month. Here are sick people looking for relief. You will have a lot of hard work to do. Here are plenty of dirty people to clean up. But, listen, you will not be living in a starving condition, for the General Mission Board of the Church is promising to support you with enough to eat and wear. Then, too, remember, here is the real joy. Your soul will be constantly running over. A few illustrations from personal experience will help you to see the appreciation. A man walked thirteen miles, several times, hoping that he could get some help for his aged father. He came carrying eggs and eatables to us, and gave us words of praise that no worker can hope to get in the homeland, by a critical multitude.

A second instance was that of the man who was trying to kill his neighbor when the gun exploded and blew off his own hand. He soon had something like blood poisoning, but by the healing power of God he was made well. Time and again he fell on the ground in front of us, and bowed his head in appreciation of the help we gave him. He came with an offering of a few cents, in addition.

Another one helped was a poor opium sot who, in reaching out for help, came to us and said if we would help him break off, he never would forget it. He is about through the time for his breaking off. The Lord has wonderfully blest him in that he has not suffered much pain, as some do, in this breaking away from the old habit. He comes to us as the opium refuge with a smile and a good morning and this only (in English). He is from a village, some distance out, and bids fair to help in the opening of the place for us. He has a little boy that he wants in our school.

These examples of appreciation could be multiplied, but let me say to the young man or woman looking for a life work: A doctor in China has unlimited opportunities, and his constituency will be numbered by the thousands here, while at home it will be numbered by tens and hundreds. May the Lord move the hearts of a number of our young people to get to the medical work and come in the name of the Lord! Just one more word to the interested ones: Do not spend your college and medical courses finished till you are thirty, let a younger person take that course and you come out for evangelistic and teaching work. After thirty one is working against odds learning this terrible language. But the hard worker can learn it even in the thirties. May the Lord send the proper men and women to the medical schools, and then send them to China.

One more word, and that of pressing importance. We have absolutely no doctors here. Government nor any one else supplies us with such. Occasionally we have an old chap that is posing for such, but his principal business is to take needles and stick them into the sick, and then give them a concoction of a lot of roots to take as medicine, which, if I would take, would make me sick. May the Lord have mercy on these poor heathen in their ignorance!

A few days ago I was called to see a sick young man who had some kind of a blister on his shoulder or neck, caused by the carrying of burdens with a pole, and though the place was calloused, it got inflamed and swelled up. He went to one of these old quacks who put into that fellow's inflamed neck one of those dirty needles that had been used in some one else before, that had a bad sore, and the needle had not been even washed. Thus this chap was infected in a terrible way and the father came to me, pleading with me to save the boy's life. Again the prayer was heard by a kind Father, and by clean applications and a few cleansing poultices, the fellow got well. This man was made several times sicker by going to this quack than if he had never seen him.

We, in the interior, have no doctors. Some of the Missions have them, but in this whole province, which is a territory about as large as Illinois, we have only eight physicians. Five of these are in one town, and at present two of them are leaving for America. The other overworked fellows are in three other towns and at present one of them is "invalided" home, and not likely to return. Another is on his way to America now, for his furlough. So our force is four physicians for a field as big as Illinois. Three of them are in one town. The field is ripe for medical work. If I knew how to treat disease I could have people standing around my door all day, waiting for their turns. We only take such cases which we feel we can help up, accompanied by prayer, will heal. May the Lord put it into your hearts, dear young people, to have a work!

Is this all? The Mission Board voted to send out eleven or twelve men to the field this year. Will we be satisfied with three or four? God knows the burden of our prayers. Parents, do we want our children to be missionaries? The Lord never shut out an earnest praying mother from sending her children out, if she did the praying that the Lord hungers for. F. H. Crumpacker.

May 19.

So-called impossibilities are singularly easy of accomplishment to resolution; and the determined soul feeds and fattens on difficulties. The earnest soul is the powerful soul, and whether you wear a fool's cap or a royal crown, the will to succeed imparts the power to succeed. Defeat is but the curse of nature on half-heartedness. No man has a divine license to fail.

KNOWLEDGE OR SPIRITUALITY—WHICH?

In electing ministers I am wondering whether we do not too often take their intellectual development into consideration more, and esteem it above spirituality and consecration in the Lord. A ministry, ripe in knowledge, may be able to give very interesting discourses; but it will take a spiritual ministry to reveal the Will of God fully, and lead men and women to the higher life. In the Word we may find some excellent suggestions along this line.

In 1 Cor. 2 Paul tells something concerning his preaching, though as a man he had but men's knowledge. He says: "And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, proclaiming to you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching were not in persuasive words of wisdom, but in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." He also says that he speaks wisdom among them that are full grown, "yet a wisdom not of this world, nor of the rulers of this world, . . . but we speak God's wisdom in a mystery, even the wisdom that hath been hidden, which God foreordained before the worlds unto our glory." Again are we told that God revealed them unto us "through the Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God. For who among men knoweth the things of man, save the spirit of man, which is in him? Even so the things of God none knoweth, save the Spirit of God. Now we received not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is from God; that we might know the things that were freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Spirit teacheth; combining spiritual things with spiritual words." (The above is quoted from the American Revised Version.)

It seems to me, in the face of the above and other teachings in the Word, that the spiritual, consecrated, and "surrender all" brother, who is talented with speech, and a knowledge of God's Word, has good qualifications for the ministry. The principles and conditions of the Word, related to the minister and his life, should become the standard that governs in the election of ministers, rather than knowledge. We look at knowledge as being a great help, but we can not see it in the light of a fundamental. The former is taught, however, as a fundamental in the Word. Should we not, then, make these fundamentals of the Word the standard, and adopt some means by which to help those who have the Gospel qualifications (who can't help themselves) to secure knowledge, and other helps, by which they may be qualified to the extent that they may become such instruments in the hand of the Lord as will be most effective, and accomplish the most good? The church needs educated men and women, but I fear that they are going to be of little service to the Lord unless that education is fully consecrated to the service of the Master. We need men and women who will permit the Spirit to guide and direct them in the study of the Word of God, and whose heart yearns to know the will of the Lord; rather than those who, by their intellectual power, put forth an effort to read into the Scriptures the ideas of man. May the Lord help us to have a Holy Spirit filled church and ministry, as in the apostolic age; that the Word might be preached with such power that we also might hear words similar to the "Brethren, what shall we do?"

Elk Lick, Pa.

It is of vital importance that we obey God always. Temptations to obey the commandments of men may sometimes come to us. If we obey them rather than the commandments of God, they will work eternal death and destruction in us, but if we are obedient to the commandments and teachings of Jesus, they will work in us everlasting life and happiness. Even though the great ones of earth may oppose us, in following Jesus we must be true and loyal to him and his church. The world admires honest and loyal Christians.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

CALIFORNIA.

Live Oak—Our church met in organization June 12. Bro. H. Forney, of Chico, Cal., and Bro. M. E. Anderson, of Bangor, Cal., were called to officiate in the work, with four ten members enrolled. We have one elder and three ministers in the second degree, with Bro. W. R. Brubaker in charge. Bro. P. S. Hutmas is our church correspondent and Messenger solicitor. We have preaching every Lord's Day at 3 P. M., Sunday-school at 2 P. M. in the Live Oak Hall. Bro. D. Click is with us at present to hold on his place. Bro. A. G. Hershberger, of Sterling, Ill., held last Lord's Day, and Bro. H. Forney, of Chico, Cal., preached on Monday evening. Both gave us some encouraging sermons. Sisters are here every week, looking for locations. Bro. R. Crites arrived here yesterday with his family. He, as well as others, is pleased with our country. We ask an interesting share in your prayers for the vine that is just started at Live Oak, so that it may live for Christ.—P. S. Hutmas, Live Oak, Cal., June 21.

Lordsburg—One young man was buried with Christ in baptism last year. Eld. H. A. Whitmer officiated. Eld. H. Forney, of Reedley, Cal., visited his father for a few days, and preached for us last Sunday evening and Monday evening.—Lordsburg, Cal., June 14.

Pomona—In the absence of our morning service, June 19, four of our Sunday-school scholars were received into the church by baptism. Eld. J. W. Cline, our delegate to the late Conference, gave us an interesting account of his visit.—Clara B. Wolf, 310 Kingsley Ave., Pomona, Cal., June 20.

CANADA.

Fairview church met in council June 17. Our elder, Bro. D. P. Short, presided. Four letters were granted, eight received. Bro. Wm. Hoover was called to be our Sunday-school Meeting; Bro. D. A. Peters, alternate. Our love feast is set for July 5 at 1 P. M., on Sunday, the following Sunday our series of meetings is expected to begin about the 15th of July.—Jennie L. Heckman, Mutrie, Sask., Can., June 21.

Pleasant Valley church met in council June 19. Our elder, Bro. J. H. Brubaker, presiding. One letter of membership was received. The date for our love feast was set for July 15. We decided to open a series of meetings at the close. We grove with a Sunday-school program, as we did last year.—Cora M. Brubaker, Bulla Shed, Alta., Can., June 18.

COLORADO

Arriba.—Our church met in council June 17. Four letters were received. We decided to hold our love feast Sept. 9.—Nellie Shumaker, Arriba, Colo., June 21.

First Grand Valley.—Our church met in council June 17. Four elders, Bro. J. H. Miller, Bro. Russell Root and wife, who have been engaged by the District Mission Board to labor in Colo., were missed. Bro. Root moved into Colo. were added to our number, and we gladly welcome them into our fellowship. Our Sunday-school was reorganized for the next six months, with Bro. Homer Wenger as superintendent; Sister Cora Dyke, reelected president of the Christian Workers' Meeting.—D. M. Click, Grand Junction, Colo., June 17.

Sterling.—This church has decided to have a meeting on the Fourth of July. Everybody is cordially invited. There will be a free dinner for all.—Ella G. Turner, Iliff, Colo., June 19.

IDAHO.

Weiser church met in council June 17. Eld. L. H. Eby presided. Three letters were granted. We decided to represent by letter in the District Meeting at Weiser, Idaho, July 12 and 13. Bro. D. H. Holl was elected church clerk, to succeed Bro. J. H. Brubaker, removed. Eld. L. H. Eby was reelected as our elder in charge; Bro. D. H. Holl, reelected assistant elder; Bro. Edward Hoover, Sister Sadie Mow, secretary; Sister Annetta Mow, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Sister Almeda Thomas, secretary-treasurer. Eld. L. H. Eby, Bro. D. H. Holl are our delegates to the District Meeting of the new organization, Idaho and Eastern Oregon, held at Boise, Idaho. Eld. A. I. Mow and Bro. W. D. Byer are alternates.—E. W. Pratt, Weiser, Idaho, June 21.

Winchester.—Our elder, Bro. H. C. Longanecker, and wife, from Tekoa, Wash., stopped with us on their way to Oregon to the Nesparce church. He preached for us on Wednesday evening. The collection taken at our Annual Meeting amounted to $15. We have the new chairs for our church.—Amanda E. Flory, Winchester, Idaho, June 18.

ILLINOIS.

Allison Prairie (Illinois).—June 11 we held our annual children's day services. Forty-six children took part in the program, and a collection was taken for missionary purposes for one hour. June 18 Bro. S. W. Garber, of Decatur, Ill., came to us from Mulberry Grove, Ill., and filled our pulpit to preach. Our average Sunday-school attendance is very good this summer.—Minnie Mow, R. D. 5, Greenville, Ind., June 19.

Bethel.—Bro. R. H. Nicodemus, of Chicago, Ill., has just closed a two weeks' series of meetings at this place. Two have united with us, seven received into church fellowship, as the results of the meetings, and we feel that a number are under conviction. We are sure that Bro. Nicodemus' labors with us have not been in vain. Here we all, members and all, been lifted to a higher plane of Christianity, with more of a desire to do the work of the Master.—Ella Napierville, Ill., June 21.

Moline Mission.—Thus far we have had two meetings in the Union Congregational church. The first meeting seems to be a great interest aroused among the listeners. The latter has a meeting in this meeting in five different papers and visited from one hundred to three hundred houses with cards, giving the speaker's name and his subject. Though the pieces are small, the Messenger is read by many, and we only secured the promise of one brother who will come. It seems that we have the door open for us, and ministers can give their time to come and fill future appointments. Now, that the Annual Meeting is over, we hope to hear from many of our ministers, offering their services. It is much easier to answer calls when we know the dates of ministers each day, begging them to come and then to make dates with them after getting their consent to come. Brethren, let us hear from you.—O. A. Hosk, Thirtieth St., Moline, Ill., June 21.

Notice.—The Mission Board of the Southern District of Illinois will meet at Cerro Gordo, July 3. Our workers should report at once. Eld. Enoch Eisenbise, secretary of their appointment, will confer a favor by remitting soon.—W. E. Hackman, Cerro Gordo, Ill., June 21.

Pine Creek church met in council June 15. The meeting was opened by our elder, Bro. C. C. Price. Brethren C. M. Barnhizer and John Price were elected as delegates to our District Meeting, which convenes at Mount Morris, Ill., Aug. 6. We decided to hold our love feast Oct. 2 at 1 P. M. Much business came before the church, but a number of interesting subjects were referred to a Church Council Meeting. We are to have a series of meetings, beginning the latter part of August. We desire to prepare for this meeting, and decided to meet each Wednesday evening to practice singing. We expect to receive great benefit.—Bertha M. Stauffer, Polo, Ill., June 22.

Rockford—Our love feast was held June 18, and it proved to be a good, spiritual service. Bro. Nelson Shirk, of Mount Morris, Ill., was with us, as well as other visiting members. Our work in this city continues to be very encouraging. At our feast the house was filled with friends of the cause. Our Sunday-school is most encouraging. Our church-house is too small for the Sunday-school services. The work gives promise of a bountiful harvest in the future.—P. R. Keltner, Rockford, Ill., June 21.

INDIANA

Beaver Creek.—Our church met in council June 10, with our elder, Bro. Norris, presiding. Sister Norris was also with us from the latter of membership was granted. We decided to have our love feast Nov. 11, at 5 P. M. Sister Alma Hale was chosen school solicitor. Bro. Norris gave a very powerful sermon on the subject of prayer, which was appreciated.—Sarah Hahn, R. D. 1, Pulaski, Ind., June 19.

Camp Creek church met in council June 8, at 2 P. M. with our elder, John Shively, present. The quarterly collection was taken, and a good feast was reported and preparations were made for our communion, held on June 14. We decided to hold an all-day harvest meeting on the first Sunday in August. Bro. John Appleman, of Plymouth, Ind., is to do the preaching, if we can get him. Bro. Kitson, of Syracuse, Ind., is engaged to do the preaching at our protracted meeting this fall or next winter. Our love feast was well decided by many of the brethren and sisters present. Visiting ministers present were Brethren John H. Sellers, John M. Miller, of Goshen, Ind., and Solomon D. Wolf, of Walkerton, Ind. Bro. Steele stayed with us over Sunday and gave us three interesting sermons. His subject was "The Sabbath-school and the Training of Children." Bro. Steele also officiated at our communion.—W. E. Shively, R. D. 2, Bourbon, Ind., June 19.

Clear Creek.—Our church met in council June 17. Bro. I. B. Wike was selected as our elder for one year. Our love feast was appointed for Saturday, Sept. 2, beginning at 10 A. M. We decided to have the new song book. Bro. Wike sang.—We expect Bro. Michael Flory, of Girard, Ill., to begin a series of meetings with us about the 13.—Lizzie E. Hunkinton, Ind., June 19.

Etna.—Our report in Gospel Messenger of June 17, should read "talks by the children," instead of "talks by the children." Bro. Steele accidentally gives us "Showalter".—John F. Shoemaker, Shideler, Ind., June 17.

Landesville.—We met in council June 15. Our elder, Bro. Harry Ritter, was with us before the meeting. Letter was granted. We decided to hold our harvest meeting Aug. 4, and our love feast Sept. 8, at 2 P. M.—Mrs. Ida Ritter. We decided his resignation and the church granted it. Sister Dora Stitch was elected to act as secretary for Christian Work Meeting.—Adetta Enddley, Landess, Ind., June 20.

Mississinewa.—We met in members'-meeting last Thursday evening, with Eld. A. C. Young presiding. Three were received by letter, including Bro. W. Rarick and his wife. We decided to hold our love feast Oct. 23, at 10 A. M. We reorganized our Christian Workers' Meeting with Bro. Ralph G. Rarick as president, Sister Ruth Snider, secretary-treasurer. We elected Brethren Roscoe Snider, Ralph G. Rarick and Sister Mary Snider delegates to the District Meeting of Northern Indiana. We expect to hold an all-day children's meeting July 2. Bro. J. L. Mathias is to preach in the forenoon, dinner, and the children will render a program in the afternoon. We expect Bro. J. H. Brubaker to begin a series of meetings at our Union Grove house about Nov. 15.—John F. Shoemaker, Shideler, Ind., June 20.

Mount Pleasant.—How we appreciate our opportunities as we should! This is one of the many questions that we ought to think about. Here in this part of the vine we have a small membership. We have no pastor and have no preaching services, only when we can get some one to come. Some time ago I secured the promise of Bro. Geo. L. Studebaker and wife to come and hold a few meetings for us. They came June 14 and labored with us over Lord's Day. While here in the city they made a number of calls. Our brother gave us two sermons, and Sister Studebaker one. Sunday evening Bro. Studebaker took for his subject, "The Second Coming of Christ." He made us feel that Christ is nearer than we had ever felt before. May God's blessings rest upon him and his wife.—Nora Hoffman, R. D. 11, Peru, Ind., Council St. Muncie, Ind., June 19.

Happy Corner church met in council June 15. Eld. Moyer presided. Five letters of membership were granted. The church decided to hold her annual harvest meeting Sept. 24. Our love feast, Oct. 12.—O. D. Wolf, R. D. 5, Goshen, Ind., June 22.

Nettie Creek church met in council June 17, with our elder, Bro. L. W. Teeter, presiding. Everything was dispored of quietly. One letter was received into the church by baptism.—Rosie Clark, New Lisbon, Ind., June 17.

Santa Fe church met in council June 15 at the Copper Creek house. Eld. D. B. Wolf presided. Our love feast is set for Sept. 23, at 4 P. M.—P. F. Hostetler, Bennetts Switch, Ind., June 22.

Spring Creek.—We held our love feast June 18. Brother Henry Ritter and wife were present. Emil was elected. Officiated. On Sunday morning Bro. Neff delivered the examination sermon. In the afternoon Bro. Ritter and wife spoke. It was a good attendance at both services. It was one of the best feasts ever held in the district.—Cora Wolfe, Silver Lake, Ind., June 20.

Springfield.—We held our love feast June 17. We had a very good meeting. On account of the rainy day our members did not all get to the meeting. About sixty communed. The elder was assisted by Brethren Yeager, Bowman and Hester. Bro. Burger officiated, and on Sunday morning preached to a large congregation. Bro. Hester preached for us on Sunday evening.—Etta Elson, Wakarusa, Ind., June 23.

Sugar Creek.—We held our love feast June 10. One hundred and forty-two communed. Bro. Ira Kreider, of Cedar Creek church, and Bro. Geo. Snell, of the Spring Creek church, were with us; also a number of members from the adjoining churches. We had a very interesting and spiritual meeting.—Blanche Arnett, South Whitley, Ind., June 18.

Walnut.—The members of this church met in council June 17. Eld. Amos Brubaker presided. Brethren Hoover and Heinicks were with us. We decided to hold our love feast Oct. 24, Bro. Levi Fike to officiate. Bro. Levi Fike's sermon was very impressive. His subject was "What Will the Harvest Be?"—Emma Frost, R. D. 11, Peru, Ind., June 19.

IOWA.

Dallas Center.—Our love feast was held June 10 and 11, a large number from surrounding churches participating. Eld. Bro. S. H. Miller, of Sunnyside, Wash., officiated. On Sunday morning Bro. Miller, Bro. Jacob Ackens, Peru, gave us interesting address on the "History, Mystery and Power of Prayer." In the evening, instead of our regular Christian Workers' Meeting, reports and thoughts were given to us on the work of the late Annual Meeting by different ones of our home members who had attended. Sister Ida Stine, of Panther, Iowa, gave us two interesting talks, on the "Church Council Meeting and the other on "Tattooing."—Maude A. Myers, Dallas Center, Iowa, June 13.

Iowa River church met in council June 18, with Bro. F. M. Wheeler presiding. Quite an amount of business came before the meeting. Several officers were reelected, consisting of writing clerk, committee on cemetery and church solicitors.

our church decided to hold a series of meetings some time this fall. June 18 one was baptized.—Laura L. Heffert, Marshalltown, Iowa, June 19.

Kingsley.—On the evening of May 24 Bro. John Robinson, of Muscatine, Iowa, gave us a sermon at the East house, which was much appreciated. May 27, in the afternoon, precious to our love feast, Bro. Wingert's oldest son was received into the church by baptism. Bro. J. E. Rolston, of Sheldon, Iowa, was with us in all our services, both on Sabbath day and on Sunday. We enjoyed his work very much. In the afternoon of May 31 we met for council. The church decided to have a singing convention some next month. A committee was appointed to secure some one for the work; a committee also is trying for some time to secure someone to help Bro. Wingert in the ministry. A call has recently been sent to Bro. Chas. Hutchison, of Hope, Kans., to help in the work.—Phebe Foft, Kingsley, Iowa, June 19.

Salem.—We held our love feast June 19. Several visiting members were present. Bro. Hoff was with us Sunday morning. Members were Bro. Solomon Buckley, of Canton, Ill., Bro. D. B. Couser, of Lincoln, Nebr., and Bro. Wm. Gump, of Ohio. Bro. Buckley officiated at the feast and also preached for us on Sunday. Sister Sadie Miller was with us June 16 and 17, she gave us a very interesting missionary talk on work in India. Owing to a storm on the evening of the 18th, she gave an interesting talk in the forenoon of the 19th, instead of in the evening. Both were very interesting and much appreciated by all. A collection of $13.45 was taken. Bro. Edward Follis was reelected Sunday-school superintendent; Sister Anna Myers secretary. A committee was appointed to arrange for a program and basket dinner, to be held in celebration of Independence Day.—Edna Wray, Pennsboro, Ind., June 19.

South Keokuk church met in council June 17. Our love feast will be held Aug. 26, 27, 28. M.—We decided to adopt "Kingdom Songs" in our Sunday-school. July 4 we will have preaching at 2 P. M., a program in the evening. We expect Sister Sadie Miller to be with us June 26.—D. F. Shelly, Ollie, Iowa, June 19.

KANSAS.

Altamont church met in council June 3. Our elder, Bro. J. S. Clark, of Parsons, Kans., presided. Our Sunday-school officers were all retained for six months, with Bro. S. C. Morrison as superintendent. A committee was appointed to arrange for a series of meetings, to be held in the near future, in connection with a two days' love feast and basket dinner. The writer was chosen assistant correspondent, in the absence of Sister Cora Morris.—W. H. Hamsher, Altamont, Kans., June 19.

Larned.—Bro. D. N. Eller, of Salesville, Va., came into our midst June 8 and remained eleven sermons. Considering the busy season, the attendance was good. One accepted Christ. June 11 we had a basket feast at Mr. Shideler's, and Bro. Della Tigner is our Sunday-school superintendent; Bro. Guy H. Hutchison, assistant.—Ella Christian, Larned, Kans., June 19.

letter of membership was granted. A committee was appointed to secure a sister to conduct the singing at the meetings beginning Oct. 22. Our love feast will be held in connection with it.—H. L. Brammell, Ozawkie, Kans., June 20.

MICHIGAN.

Muskegon.—We feel very much encouraged over our work here. Yesterday we had an attendance of thirty-three and a collection of $1.50. We use the Brethren's Sunday-school supplies. We are planning to have a Sunday-school and neighborhood picnic in the near future.—Mrs. Minnie Wolf. We expect Bro. J. M. Smith, of Woodland, Mich., to deliver an address.—Herbert Morehouse, R. D. 1, Muskegon, Mich., June 19.

Sugar Ridge.—We enjoyed an excellent sermon from Bro. Lemuel Hillery June 11. The same evening we had a good sermon from our elder, Bro. Wolfe, our brother, J. Homer Brigish, who expects to go to China this fall. On the evening of June 17 and 18 we had the services of Bro. Brigish. Bro. M. M. Sherick, Bro. Isaac Raleigh gave us a good sermon on Sunday morning.—Nellie Teeter, Scottville, Mich., June 19.

MINNESOTA

Hancock.—We began a series of meetings June 11. We had our love feast at the end of the first week. Two received Christian baptism April 29. They were baptized by Bro. Goughnour was the only visiting minister present. Some of our members live at Big Stone, S. D., and they have been us, taking in several meetings and also the love feast. A love feast is to be held at Big Stone the first Sunday in July, and all the members over there, who could not all of some over here, it being a distance of about fifty miles. The meetings are conducted with good spirit, and they will close on Sunday night.—Samuel Bowser, R. D. 3, Hancock, Minn., June 19.

Minneapolis.—The work here is again moving along, after an interruption of several weeks, caused by the writer's wife and family being quarantined for scarlet fever. We thank God that the case was a mild one, and that we are all well. God has called for work. The writer returned to this place about a month ago, after an absence of nine months. We are glad to be here, and rejoice to find things in an encouraging condition. We ask for your prayers for those who have so lately put on Christ, that they may be kept and preserved are many, and we ask you to pray that they may all prove strong and faithful. Not alone are we in need of prayers for them, but also for us who are working at this place. Sister Gregory, who has been in the city about one and a half year, is now at Winona, Minn. We expect Bro. Hutchison to be with us for a few days next week. We are looking for a love feast here soon. Pray that the work here may be a glory to Christ!—Bertha Brunskill, 2130 Twenty-fifth Ave., North, Minneapolis, Minn., June 22.

Notice.—The work of compiling the District Meeting Minutes of the Northern District of Iowa has been completed, and the book is progressing slowly. It is the wish of the committee that the information asked for be given as soon as possible. This is quite important, if we wish to complete the compilation and have the needed data in connection. Will the brethren who read this, call their pastor's attention to this matter?—D. H. Keller, 552 West Seventh St., Winona, Minn., June 19.

Winona.—June 17 we held our love feast. Thirty members surrounded the Lord's tables. For the first time in the history of the church the sisters availed themselves of the privilege of partaking of the bread and passing it. Two visiting ministers present were Bro. John Wirt, of Lewistown, Minn., and Bro. Walter J. Barnhart, of Minneapolis, Minn. Bro. Barnhart officiated, and also preached on Sunday morning and evening. At this meeting brethren Francis Thompson, Clint Baldwin and Oscar Long were chosen and installed into the office of deacon. Sister Grace Gregory is with us to assist in the mission work during the summer.—Martha H. Keller, 552 West Seventh St., Winona, Minn., June 19.

Woodstock.—March 12 we began a series of meetings in the M. E. church at Woodstock, Minn. At that time there were four of our members in the community, all having their letters in the Washington church. Jan. 1, 1911, we organized a union Sunday-school, which has been growing gradually until it now seems to have an average attendance of sixty. During this time we have preached sixty-six sermons. The first visible results of our labors were seen June 18, when we gathered at the river, where, in the presence of about 150 onlookers, five were buried with their Lord and Savior Christ in baptism. Two more are awaiting the rite. Our elder, Bro. H. Schecher, of Worthington, Minn., was with us at this time, and had abundantly blessed us. We desire the prayers of God's people in behalf of the work at this place.—A. Ellen Woodstock, Minn., June 17.

MISSOURI.

Bethel.—Our council was held May 30, with Eld. S. B. Shirky presiding. Four were received into the church by letter. Our love feast will be held July 15 and 16. Bro. Ira Maryland, presided. Others from a distance were with us. Bro. Utz preached on Sunday morning. Bro. J. E. Crist, of California, preached on Sunday evening. A goodly number attended the services.—L. L. Alger, Mound City, Mo., June 13.

Canterview.—Our church is desirous of having another minister to locate here, to assist in the work of the church. Any brother wishing to change location and be where his help is needed, please correspond with Bro. Jacob Gause, Bro. Jesse Gause, Centerview, Johnson Co., Mo., June 20.

Kansas City.—Our Second Church met in council May 27. We held our love feast June 11. Seventy surrounded the tables of the Lord. A number of visiting members were present, all to which we much appreciated. Bro. Wine, from Virginia, officiated very acceptably. This church has been organized thirteen months, and during this time we have had three love feast meetings. We can do more and better work for the Master.—P. C. Ninninger, 2521 Askew Ave., Kansas City, Mo., June 18.

Rombauer.—Yesterday afternoon we met at the home of an aged sister for services, after which we went to the water where we had found three who were willing to accept Christ in baptism. We are few in number at this place, but we feel that we have built up, and the coming of the brethren and sisters that many more may be taught the way of the Lord more perfectly. Pray that much good may be done.—The harvest truly is plenteous but the laborers are few.—Ida Wine, 5000 Rombauer, St. Louis, Mo.

South St. Joseph Mission.—We closed a week's meeting, conducted by Bro. D. W. Crist, of California, with good interest. On the evening following the last meeting another precious soul was baptized, and a sister was restored. Last evening, the writer preached another sermon, after which the family was baptized, which brought much rejoicing to his faithful companion. The three persons who have come into the church since the Annual Meeting, and altogether thirty-eight since our coming to this field, are the first fruits of members in the church at this place. Many of them are but babes in Christ, and need much help, and the presence of the brethren and sisters that many more may be taught the way of the Lord more perfectly. Pray that much good may be done.

who is superintendent of the Brethren Sunday-school in Boston, or president of the Christian Workers' Society of the church in San Francisco? These facts are common to all churches,—the election of various minor officials are of interest to but few. What is your church doing? Is it stronger, spiritually or numerically, than when last you wrote, or a year ago? Does the spirit of missions grow? What means of importance do you employ to develop spirit and interest? These are the things which interest the wide-awake Christian, and the up-and-doing man has no time to wade through two lines to reach an item of interest that may be couched in the last line or may not be present at all.

"Something to say perhaps, but a poor manner of saying it. Something to say and a charm of style in each saying it."
—Cathell.

Let the later be your motto. The above idea is exemplified, in a measure, by the following account of our Christian Workers' Society in the Church Notes and the work we endeavor to do. The writer has been in vital touch with this organization for two years, keeping accurate records of attendance, programs, weather, sermons, etc., constantly studying same with a view of increasing the value of its meetings. We labor under a Constitution which provides the usual officers, and committees as follows: Devotions, Missions, Lookout, Mercy and Help, and General Culture. We have monthly business meetings at which time some committees are found to have been more diligent than others. We use the Christian Workers' Booklet, but vary from its subjects quite freely. We have monthly consecration meetings, at which time we recommit ourselves to a higher Christian life. We have monthly missionary meetings, a mission-study class, meeting weekly, a mission library, and are interested in the education of two medical missionaries. We are enthusiastic. We embrace every opportunity to observe special days and have special meetings, knowing they are a stimulus to increased attendance. In a period of six months we held fifteen special meetings, several of them in the midweek, in which time our average attendance rose from 70 to 82.

We believe in advertising and we advertise. We have in contemplation a special meeting, to be advertised with five hundred printed posters, one hundred of which are to be mailed. Our weekly meetings are "centered." Thus far this year the results of censure are as follows: Of twenty-one meetings, four were splendid, eight good, seven fair, while two were poor. He who feels himself responsible for any meeting, surely has a right to censure the same. Censure promotes good meetings. Good meetings provoke good attendance, and our desire is to benefit the greatest number of people possible.

In the city the attendance at services during the winter far excels that of summer,—all other things being equal. We manage nicely to keep our church members well in line, in this respect, during the summer. And now you will be interested, I am sure, in knowing what the purpose of our Society is. It is: To promote true spirituality and increase Bible knowledge in its members, and to develop them in all lines of Christian service, as a training for future work in the church."—Constitution.

We have an ideal Christian Workers' Society. It serves its purpose. It is indeed a school of development. It is participated in by every one, and monopolized by no one. Every one works because he knows there is plenty of work for all.

I hope and trust that I may have inspired some one to give us more news of vital interest to those who may be benefited by the encouragements and discouragements of others in like capacity.

MOUNTAIN GROVE, VA.

The funeral of our friend, Mr. Scott Shifflett whose death occurred at the Danville Hospital May 20, was preached at the Mountain Grove chapel June 11, at 11 A. M. Eld. S. A. Sanger conducted the services from the words, "Be ye also ready," etc. (Matt. 24: 44). The house was filled to overflowing, though the warm weather was very oppressive.

We are experiencing some of the warmest weather that we have yet had among the mountains. The water in many places is failing. The drouth has been practically broken, however, by a few good rains during the past week.

We were called to the bedside of an aged woman on Sunday afternoon, who has been in failing health for the past three or four months. She requested baptism, but owing to Bro. Sanger's appointments at Evergreen, at 3: 30, and at Pimple Hill at 8 o'clock, it was deferred until Monday.

We went back on Monday morning to administer the rite requested by the aged sister. She was unable to be taken to the water, so a large box was provided and water brought to the house. She is about seventy years of age and almost blind. She entered into the service with a strong determination of doing what she could for her Master, even at a late hour. After the services were over, she seemed bright and happy and remarked: "I ought to have done this long ago." She gave words of warning to several of her aged friends and urged them to accept Christ now. We feel that some good impressions were made, and we trust that this may be the means of opening the way for others and especially those of her own household. There is the father with a number of children, all of whom have homes of their own, and have not yet accepted Christ as their Savior.

Our Sunday-schools are growing, both in interest and attendance. My sister and I have charge of three schools. We work together at the Evergreen house on Sunday morning. My sister has charge of the Honeytown school in the afternoon, while I look after the Mountain Grove school. We have an active cradle roll at each place. We have nearly sixty names enrolled, and are kept quite busy. We have two weekly prayer meetings and a Sunday-school teachers' meeting. We have just finished a series of Bible lessons. We studied about the Children of Israel, from the call of Abraham up to the Divided Kingdom where our Sunday-school lessons began. These lessons have been proving both interesting and profitable. A number have expressed themselves as not having known before that the Old Testament contained so many rich things for us. Yes, the Bible is full of rich blessings and promises for all if we will but find them. We crave the prayers of God's people in our work at this place.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION OF THE NORTH-EASTERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

The fourteenth annual Sunday-school Convention of the Northeastern District of Ohio convened in the East Nimishillen church June 14. The roll call showed that twenty-four of the thirty schools in the District were represented by delegates. The convention organized by electing Bro. A. Cassel as Moderator; Bro. Jacob Moherman, Assistant Moderator; Bro. C. A. Helm, Writing Clerk; Bro. A. S. Shriver, Reading Clerk.

The program rendered during the convention was interesting and helpful, showing intelligent, conscientious work on the part of the committee and those placed on the program. Enthusiasm and spiritual force marked the entire meeting.

An interesting incident in the convention was the presence of a Sunday-school scholar one hundred and three years old,—Geo. Washington Austin. He was introduced to the convention by the Moderator, Bro. Cassel. Among other things, he stated that he had been in Sunday-school for over ninety years. He also remarked that he had worked at the cooper trade when he was one hundred and one years old.

The most impressive and important feature of the convention was that of the missionary work. For a number of years a committee had been quietly canvassing for a volunteer to represent Northeastern Ohio on the foreign field, but without success. A fund, started for the purpose of supporting a missionary, has grown to over $900. At this convention Sister Iva Rohrer dedicated her life to the missionary cause, to work as the Mission board may direct. She only asked that time be given her to fit herself more fully for the work. Her offer was gladly accepted, as she touchingly told of the workings of the Spirit in her young life, which finally led her to a full surrender to God's will.

When she had finished her statement, the entire assembly, on bended knees, thanked God for the blessed experience of the hour, and earnestly plead at the throne of grace that Sister Rohrer might be "thoroughly furnished unto every good work," and that she might have the sympathetic, prayerful and financial support of every member of the District. The free-will missionary offering was then taken, amounting to $58.70.

The convention showed that the Sunday-school workers of Northeastern Ohio are awake to the importance of their mission, and that all lines of work are receiving the attention.

Bro. Claude Murray, who was recently called to the ministry, Bro. Hahn and Sister Maggie Snyder constitute a committee to prepare for the convention of 1912, which is to be held in the Danville church.

PRAIRIE CITY, IOWA.

Our love feast of May 20 was indeed an enjoyable one. Several visiting members were present. The ministers were Bro. J. Q. Goughnour, of Ankeny, Iowa, and Bro. Peter Brower, of South English, Iowa. The presence of them and their wives was much appreciated. Bro. Brower officiated. Bro. Goughnour gave us an excellent discourse on Sunday at 11 A. M. In the evening Bro. Brower gave a good sermon.

We have known Bro. Brower almost from childhood, and in the years gone by we have mingled our voices together in social prayer and worship, both in the church and in the church services. After long years it seemed good to hear his voice in praise and song, and look upon his face once more.

May 27 Bro. James Bowie preached our missionary sermon. Our young brother did well. We had a program in the evening, consisting of songs, topics and recitations. One of our young sisters recited Sister Cora Berkebile's composition, "Was It a Dream?" It was quite long, but the speaker brought out each thought and part so beautifully that the audience was held in rapt attention to the very last.

My thoughts wandered to our dear sister, and I thought: Could she but hear the dear, sweet voice, taking up the work so precious to her heart, it could but bring her joy. At the close of both of these services a collection was taken, amounting to $225.

June 4, visiting preachers being present, our aged brother, Amos Moomaw, gave us a rich discourse. His health will not permit him to preach much, and he only talks when duty demands it. We are all glad when duty affords us an opportunity to hear him, for we are sure to get another rich feast. Jennie Alexander.

R. D. 2, Monroe, Iowa, June 9.

SPRING CREEK, PENNSYLVANIA.

Our love feast at Annville was held June 14 and 15. We had a very spiritual feast. Eld. H. E. Light officiated. Ministers present were Elders H. E. Light, S. H. Hertzler, S. C. Miller, A. S. Hottenstein, H. S. Sonon, Brethren Levi Mohler, Levi Ziegler, John L. Royer, A. H. Brubacher and Daniel K. Kreider. Bro. Kreider was elected to the ministry in our congregation, but is now living in the Marsh Creek congregation in Southern Pennsylvania. Our brethren gave us good advice. Eld. Jacob F. Sappington and wife, who expect to go to Sweden, lived in our congregation years ago. Our prayers go with them on their mission of love. Some of our members received a copy of "Kingdom Songs," and are perfectly pleased with it.

We have two mission points. Our congregation was organized many years ago. Eld. George Miller, who died in 1789, once lived in this congregation. He is buried close to the residence of Eld. S. Z. Witmer. Among those who have been members of our congregation were Elders Jacob Hollinger and William Hertzler. They were widely known in their day, and are not forgotten yet. Our official board at present consists of five elders, three ministers and seven deacons. They are loyal, faithful, conservative brethren. The ministers are Brethren J. H. Longaneckер, Daniel Hollinger, A. B. Gingrich, S. Z. Witmer, H. B. Hollinger, Brethren Allen Bucher, Jacob H. Gingrich and Aaron H. Hoffer. Bro. Allen Bucher is a son of Eld. Christian Bucher, widely known throughout our Fraternity.

Our deacons are Brethren Jacob Heagy, John F. Booser, J. H. Gingrich, J. B. Aldinger, George Hoffer, A. Clendenen and William Gruber. Our new meetinghouse at Bachmanville will be erected as soon as possible.

Elizabethtown, Pa., June 20. Edgar M. Hoffer.

When he was quite young he moved with his parents to Canton, Ohio. June 4, 1844, he was married to Miss Catharine Whitebiese, who preceded him to the spirit world eleven years ago. In 1847 he and his family moved to Seneca County, Ohio, and located north of Tiffin, where he lived until the time of his death. He was a faithful member of the Church of the Brethren for many years. He leaves five children. His wife and four children preceded him. Services at the Eglerh church by Eld. L. H. Dickey. Position: Text, Micah 7: 10. Interment in the cemetery near by.—Lydia Dickey, Fostoria, Ohio.

Shearer, Sister Elisabeth, wife of Bro. Elias P. Shearer, died June 12, 1911, of a complication of diseases, aged 71 years, 3 months and 24 days. She was one of the members of the church when the White Oak church was divided into two parts, and the new part was called Mastersonville, Pennsylvania. She lived near Mastersonville, Pa. Services at the Chiques church by Elders S. R. Zug and H. S. Zug, Jr., Herman, and Bro. S. S. Eshelman in English. Text, Rev. 4: 13. She leaves her husband, one son, a daughter, two brothers and one son-in-law, also a deacon.—Henry S. Zug, R. D. 1, Mount Hope, Pa.

Stover, Bro. Henry, born in Maryland Oct. 31, 1837, died in Lanark, Ill., June 14, 1911, aged 74 years, 7 months and 14 days. He was united in marriage to Sarah Priedley in 1861. To this union were born five children. His wife and one daughter preceded him. Jan. 17, 1901, he was married to Sister Sarah Boyd, of Lahark. She also preceded him in death. He leaves four daughters and one sister. He united with the Church of the Brethren Sept. 17, 1909. Services at Lanark, Ill., June 16, by the writer, assisted by Eld. P. F. Eckerle. Text, Job 33: 17; Jer. 15: 9.—C. P. Rowland, Lanark, Ill.

FLASHLIGHTS FROM REAL LIFE

BY JOHN T. DALE.

Those who have read any of the author's other books will want to read this one. The sketches and incidents given are real flashlights thrown upon things which are worth revealing. The author in his preface says: "Some of the sketches are based on facts which have come within the personal knowledge of the author, others are founded on incidents which have come under the observation of others, but they are all typical of the ever-changing experiences and mutations of life, as the grand panorama moves once moves onward."

Following are a few subjects taken from the table of contents:

Advice to Young Men
The Boy Question
Dangers of City Life
The Father's Example
The Gullible Girl
The Professor's Advice
Single and Married
The Worker's Peril
The Young Lawyer's Downfall

The Book contains 205 pages. Bound in cloth.

FIGHTING THE TRAFFIC IN YOUNG GIRLS

BY ERNEST A. BELL

DOUBTLESS the reading of this book will be a revelation many. The fact that young girls have been and are being sold and made slaves for immoral purposes is a fact generally known. This white traffic has been but recently fully exposed. In this book the facts and horrors of it have been compiled. It tells also of the fight that is being waged against this iniquitous business. Many a young girl who has in times past disappeared never to return became the victim of such as make it their business to buy and sell innocent girls.

ARE YOU INTERESTED?

If you have boys and girls you want to know about the pitfalls that are set for them and be able to prevent their being entrapped. Everyone who is interested in the welfare of the rising generations should read this book. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. This book will do it. It also contains much helpful advice to fathers, mothers, sons and daughters.

Finger Posts on Life's Highway

Showing How to Succeed in Life

By JOHN T. DALE

A new book full of pointers which point in the right direction. A book for the young, the middle aged and the old.

The purpose of the author, in gathering the material, during many years, was to assist those who are striving to gain character, intellectual power, business success, and merited esteem of their fellowmen. Out of a long and varied experience he has been able to collect into this volume more than one hundred articles on that many different subjects, touching human life from almost every possible angle. It is not a novel nor a story, nor yet a long and dry treatise upon some abstract subject, but a collection of articles on everyday topics, written in language and style easy to be understood, making the points so clear that the way is truly marked and happy life is more easily found. The book abounds in words of wisdom, caution and warning.

We have great hopes for the sale of this book, knowing that it will appeal to all classes with equal force, and be the means of accomplishing good wherever it goes. Should any of our readers be interested in taking an agency for it, write us at once. We can offer liberal commission. The book contains 626 pages, bound in cloth. Illustrated. Will be sent to any address, postpaid, for $1.50.

Minutes of Annual Meeting from 1778-1909

This volume contains every known minute of the proceedings of the general conferences held by the Church of the Brethren in the United States, 1909. Many interesting things relative to the problems of church government, and doctrinal points, methods of solving them, novices and deacons, also the Annual Meeting Reports are compiled to give the first hand information through the years in reference to their opposition to war, intemperance, secretism, worldliness, etc. They also show the change and growth of sentiment in relation to the educational, missionary, and Sunday-school movement in the Brotherhood, and how these departments of work have grown. Taking it all in all, it is one of the books which have a right to a place in the library of every Brethren home. This is a $2.50 book, but in order to bring it within the reach of all the price is placed at $1.75, which is just the cost of manufacturing and postage.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

before two were received into the church by baptism. At the meeting two were received by letter. Brethren John Wonders and C. Fuglesinger were elected to the office of deacon. Our visiting brethren were Bro. S. M. Stouffer, of Greenspring, Pa., Bro. B. F. Fogle, of Gettysburg, Pa., Bro. C. H. Sierman, of Mason and Dixon, Pa., and our elder in charge, Bro. Albert Hollinger, of Gettysburg, Pa. Bro. Hollinger was chosen for advanced meeting. Bro. Sierman held a series of meetings for us at the Salem church, commencing June 3 and closing June 11. Four were received by baptism and one was reclaimed.—Joseph Burkhart, Shippensburg, Pa., June 19.

Shade Creek.—Since our last report one has been received into the church by baptism. A series of meetings will be recently given throughout the congregation by Bro. A. B. Miller, of Curryville, Blair Co., Pa. The congregation raised for these meetings, including subscriptions for the year, amounted to $162.56. This amount will be in favor of our Juniata College, which, under whose auspices Bro. Miller labored. Our first joint Missionary and Christian Workers' Convention was held in the Scalp Level house on the 3rd. The meetings proved inspiring, as well as interesting, and we expect to hold them regularly. Our annual Children's Day exercises on Ascension Day was held in the Rummel house. We are pleased to notice a steady progress in Sunday-school work. We have, in our congregation, three schools that have reached the "Standard," required for a front-line Sunday-school and for which they received proper recognition and credit by the County Sabbath-school Association. The District Sunday-school Convention and Ministerial meeting of Western Pennsylvania will be held in the Scalp Level house Aug. 23 and 24.—J. E. Lehman, Scalp Level, Pa., June 19.

West Johnstown.—At a recent council meeting we elected three new deacons, Brethren Jacob Lohr, Jacob Hoffman, Lafe and D. A. Rummell, Jr. Our membership has been increasing very rapidly, and we are glad that our brethren here are willing to assume new responsibilities. Our Sunday-school at Roxbury has employed a regular Sunday-school secretary. They secured the services of Sister Elisabeth Carroll, of Huntingdon, who entered upon her work May 1. Her work is telling already, as more than a score have already been added to the Sunday-school since she came. Our love feast was held May 7. It was one of the best we have ever had. Bro. P. J. Blough, of Hooversville, Pa., officiated, assisted by Bro. Wm. Howe, of Johnstown. Our visitors conducted a short series of meetings at the Roxbury house, following the love feast. Sixteen were baptized and received at the rite of baptism. Their ages range from nine to sixty. This makes the ninth series of meetings held by our people in this congregation since Sept. 1, 1909. The total number of accessions at these meetings is 201.—Calvin Beam, Johnstown, Pa., June 15.

TENNESSEE.

Jonesboro.—The Brethren had services at the Pleasant View church June 10 and 11. Bro. D. G. Edwards conducted the services on Saturday. I understood that Bro. C. H. Diehl was to preach on Sunday, but owing to the serious illness of my wife I was not at church on Sunday. I request the prayers of the Brethren in the interest of the recovery of my companion.—N. T. Larimer, Jonesboro, Tenn., June 19.

TEXAS.

Portland.—Our love feast has been postponed from July 1 to July 8, at 6 P. M., so that our District evangelist, Bro. J. A. Miller, can be with us.—L. J. Porter, Portland, Texas, June 18.

VIRGINIA.

Oak Hill.—Our congregation held its council June 16. Our elder, Bro. John Cianahan, presided. We are anxiously expecting Bro. George A. Phillips with us, to hold meetings for one week in July. We shall be glad to welcome the faith us again.—Jacob W. Funk, Jr., Seven Fountains, Va., June 17.

Pleasant View.—Our church council met June 12. Bro. Michael Reed presided. Two letters of membership were received. As no business came before the church, J. Tim. 2 was read and commented upon by Eld. Wyatt Reed. Ali seemed to appreciate the services. Our elder in charge was Bro. W. H. Natt to hold a series of meetings, beginning Nov. 5. Having our council Bro. Michael Reed preached a good sermon from 2 Cor. 5: 17.—Fred Shaver, R. D. 3, Floyd Va., June 19.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Chestnut Grove.—This church met in special council at the Pleasant View house on Saturday, June 17, for the purpose of electing a minister. Bro. Jesse Cline, of Roanoke, Va., our former elder, was with us, and led in the service. Bro. Louis M. Clouse was elected to the ministry and duly installed. On Sunday, June 18, at 10 A. M., our annual Sunday-school institute convened at the same place. Eld. Miller and Bro. C. S. Ikenberry, of Daleville, Va., our District Sunday-school Secretary, met with us and took an active part in the meeting, giving us many good thoughts that will prove helpful and lasting. Good ideas were advanced by others as well. Many expressed themselves as being greatly benefited by the ideas advanced along Sunday-school lines. We feel that the institute will be good upon the schools represented. The Institute is to be held at this place next year.—Anna F. Saeger, Box 45, Bragg'ville, W. Va., June 19.

NOTES UNCLASSIFIED.

Cabool.—Our church met in council June 24. Our elder, Bro. C. W. Gitt, presided. It was decided to have an all-day meeting on the Fourth of July at the country church. We decided to hold series of meetings at both houses this fall. The meeting at one house is to follow the other. Our elder in charge was reelected for the ensuing year. An election was held for a minister, but none was elected. Another election will be held next council. Six letters were granted.—Mabel Gitt, Cabool, Mo., June 25.

Mountain Dale.—Our series of meetings will begin July 1, and continue until the 8th. The meetings are to close with a love feast. The meetings are to be conducted by the home ministers.—E. F. Sisler, Hazelton, W. Va., June 23.

Hartman.—The Lord's work at this place is moving along nicely. June 10 we had our love feast. Seventy-four communed. Several home members attended our Annual Meeting and have not yet returned. Three applications for ahead were present. Eld. S. M. Goughnour, of Iowa, officiated. The sisters broke the bread and passed the cup for the first time. Bro. Goughnour remained a few days, giving us Bible Land talks, which were enjoyed by all present. Our Sunday-school is increasing in attendance. Our Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Band have decided to give one collection each month for mission work. Our little band of workers has passed through some discouraging times, but feel thankful that the light is slowly dawning upon us.—Mary Kemper, Hartman, Colo., June 21.

Lordsburg.—Our church, from Buena Vista, Va., who is taking charge of the San Dimas Mission work, requested that we have a council meeting at San Dimas last Friday evening. The work of the Mission was considered, and the matter of ministerial help was left with them, who, was referred to Bro. Greyer. He conducts prayer meeting services each Tuesday evening, and preaches every other Sunday evening.—Grace Miller, Lordsburg, Cal., June 26.

Stoverdale.—Our Annual Meeting of Idaho and Eastern Montana and Western Canada, begins July 11 and continues for three days, instead of only on the 11th, as has been announced previously.—J. Will Shively, Newville, N. Dak., June 22.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

June 11 seven of the nine members of this church, who attended the St. Joseph Conference, spoke from three to five minutes, each, on "The St. Joseph Conference—Its Message to Me." Appropriate songs and a few earnest prayers helped to make this one of the most interesting services we have attended in a long time.

The following Tuesday evening a splendid representation of members assembled in members' meeting, preparatory to our love feast. Three letters were read and much routine business transacted.

Last Sunday was a day of unusual interest and full of spiritual life and encouragement. The Sunday-school attendance was 164. At eleven o'clock Eld. W. E. West delivered an extremely practical sermon on the subject of "Self-examination." Many searching questions and suggestive thoughts were presented for our consideration.

At 6 P. M. about twenty-nine brethren and thirty-eight sisters met for communion around the Lord's tables. Eld. J. D. Hough and Bro. Ira Moore officiated, assisted by Elders W. E. West and J. Mathis, of the Des Moines Valley church, and our home ministers.

At the close of the regular communion services Sister Catharine Eshelman called for the anointing service, which was performed by Elders Hough and the writer. Sister Eshelman has been in ill-health for some time. After reaching the church on Sunday, she experienced a slight stroke of paralysis, so that she could not participate in the love feast service. The anointing was performed in the presence of the entire audience, many of whom (even brethren and sisters) had never before witnessed the performance of this Christian rite, Virgil C. Finnell.

WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE FREE?

From the cares of investing your money? To have your income a fixed amount and promptly received? To save yourself the burden of taxes?

UNDERLYING THESE QUESTIONS

lies a still more vital one. To what use do you propose to place your money or property when you are through with this life?

If you want your relatives to have it,—and they probably have it with them and the church,—then none of these questions interest you.

If you want the Church of the Brethren to have the benefit of all or part of your property?

Then these questions are of vital interest to you NOW.

FOR BY OUR ANNUITY PLAN

1. You can place your property with the Board and no longer have any care of it.
2. The amount that passes will be exempt from taxes.
3. The income is fixed and comes to you on or before January 1 and July of each year during the life of the annuitant.

SEVEN SPLENDID ADVANTAGES.

1. Good rate of income.
2. No worry about investments.
3. No losses in income.
4. No disappointments in income.
5. Sure and safe plan for steady income for yourself, your wife or your child.
6. Assurance that when your interest ceases through death the income goes on telling the story of the Cross for the Church of the Brethren.
7. Several hundred brethren and sisters have thus placed funds with the Board, every one is pleased, and sound business men recommend the plan as safe, sure and practical in every way.

Free, a folder "Better than a $5,000 government bond," explaining fully the plan. Ask for it mentioning The Messenger.

THE FULL REPORT
OF THE
Annual Conference of 1911
SHOULD BE ORDERED NOW

This year's Report will be of special interest and value to the members of the church. These reports from year to year form an important collection of reading matter which should be preserved in every family. Some queries of vital interest will come before the Conference this year. Every speech made, with the name of the speaker, will appear in full. Besides, all the speeches made at the Educational, Sunday-school and Christian Workers' and Missionary Meetings will be reported fully.

Every member of the Church of the Brethren should be interested enough in the church to buy a Report and keep informed regarding its progress. This Report is not published for the purpose of making money, but that every one may have access to the good of these meetings. It is the only source from which you can get a complete report of the meeting. Do you want to be informed regarding the rulings of the church? If so, order the Report.

AROUND THE WORLD

Work and Prayer.

Occasionally the defenders of the liquor traffic make use of an argument intended to support their claims, while in reality it proves too much. "The Champion of Fair Play," Chicago's whiskey paper, in a recent issue said: "The minister who has determined to war on the saloon that is about to be established near his church, and does so by prayer instead of by public agitation, is following strictly the principles he professes. Perhaps, if his whole congregation should join him earnestly, the praying would not be without effect. A saloon can not live in a neighborhood solidly hostile to it." Well spoken, indeed! But "work" and "prayer" go hand in hand. With these two mighty weapons the strongholds of the liquor traffic must ultimately fall.

Only Ten in Sunday-school.

In most of the reformatories and penitentiaries much inquiry is made as to the early history of the convicts. In a recent report of the Michigan State Penitentiary the warden states: "The nine hundred men and boys in this prison, on being received were asked, 'Did you ever attend Sunday-school?' Only ten replied, 'We attended regularly.'" Eight hundred and ninety convicts acknowledged they had never been under the helpful influences of the Sunday-school. The teachings of the Blessed Book had never been permitted to mould their lives and characters, and as a consequence they had fallen into ways of sin, with the usual penalty of imprisonment. We have, in this remarkable showing, a renewed evidence of the great power of a well-conducted Sunday-school,—"a savor of life" to all who come within its salutary influences.

No Proof of the Evolution Theory.

New light on the antiquity of the human race is continually being found by the scientific world. Discoveries in southwestern France, Belgium, Croatia, and on the Island of Jersey, confirm the well-established claim that the early human type did not vary in physical essentials from the modern men. It is becoming more and more apparent that the human frame,—even the skull itself,—has undergone little change since the earliest dawn of human existence. The much-vaunted "evolution" theory,—once so confidently promulgated,—has been practically consigned to oblivion. All discoveries, dealing with man's antiquity, have disclosed nothing indicating evolutionary progress in his make-up or ancestry. As far back as science has gone, man has always been man,—rude and primitive, perhaps,—but still that being "created in the image of God."

Warfare in the Air.

Not content with the destructive power of the torpedoes in the waters of the sea, the world-famous Krupp Gun Works of Germany, has recently perfected a torpedo that can be fired from an aeroplane with much accuracy and deadly effect. Concerning this latest achievement,—if such it may be called,—a noted English writer, Mr. Galsworthy, says that it is a "prostitution of the conquest of the air to the ends of warfare." He maintains that it is a "dreadful symptom of madness, a spectacle of fear and anarchy," that man should "straightway commence to defile the element, so heroically mastered, by filling it with engines of destruction." There is certainly much truth in the words just quoted. Why, indeed, should man take his God-given powers of reason, and prostitute them to the basest of passions,—the injury and destruction of his fellow-men?

Church Manners.

One of the New York churches recently called Dr. Jowett, of Birmingham, England, to its pulpit, and since then he has been giving them some heart-to-heart talks,—not always very flattering, but undoubtedly to the point. Noticing, since his arrival, that many of his people had fallen into the pernicious habit of coming to church at a late hour, to the great annoyance of the worshipers as well as himself, he gave them some much needed lessons on church manners. While, perhaps, such an admonition from the pulpit was hardly expected by his ultra-fashionable congregation, and likely somewhat resented, it is nevertheless a fact that church manners, in many congregations, are sadly at fault. He who said that all things in the Lord's house should be done "decently and in order," doubtless included the behavior of the Lord's professed followers in the timely admonition.

Fewer Luxuries Imported.

Whether the warning voice of the economist or the better judgment of the people themselves has brought about the change,—the fact remains that, according to official figures, American importations of champagne and other imported wines has fallen off fully one-half, while importations of diamonds for simply decorative purposes have decreased, in total value, by $7,000,000. Undoubtedly still further curtailments of the above and other worse than useless articles, would go far in affording plenty of means for the promulgation of worthy objects. We can readily think of hundreds of avenues,—philanthropical and religious,—that would yield most gratifying results if the thousands of dollars, now misspent, could be directed to the conservation of their worthy aims.

Religious Liberty for Russia.

Yielding to great pressure on the part of church workers among the various Christian nations, fair promises are being made by Russia regarding religious tolerance, and especially are the Jews to receive fairer treatment throughout the Czar's domains. Whether the promises made bid fair to be fully realized, only the future can tell. Recent reports from Russia seem to indicate, however, that important concessions have been made to those who differ in religious belief from the state church of Russia,—the Stundists, Mennonites, and others. Full liberty seems to have been granted these people, and in all their settlements, throughout Southern Russia, they are permitted to worship unmolested. It would appear, therefore, that the entire Empire is now practically open for the progress of evangelical Christianity.

Good News from Madagascar.

For years Protestant missionaries on this island, just east of Africa, have suffered much from the petty persecutions of French officials in control of affairs. Native Christians were continually beset by discouraging restrictions and prohibitive measures, until further mission work was almost out of the question. All this seems recently to have changed for the better. The new Governor-general is disposed to be fair, and is not likely to interfere with the missionary enterprises now being carried on. Native converts in Madagascar have passed through many scenes of persecution. Previous to the French occupation of the island, thousands were slain by Queen Ranavalona during the days of her bitter persecution, but a remnant remained faithful, and it is gratifying to learn that better days are now in store for them.

Liquor in Dry States.

While increasing shipments of liquor to prohibition States have aroused just indignation among the friends of temperance, there is unconcealed and jubilant exultation on the part of the liquor men,—more so, however, than is warranted by the real facts in the case. Figures tell their story most emphatically. The nine prohibition States with a total population of 15,002,939, represent about one sixth of the entire population of the United States. Comparing the total amount of liquor, shipped into the nine States referred to, with the entire amount consumed in the other States of the Union, we have a ratio of one to fifteen in favor of the "dry" States. It shows that prohibition "regulates" to the extent that the States thus favored use fifteen times less liquor than the States under saloon domination. This is a showing that speaks for itself,—one that should inspire each temperance worker with new courage, for "our labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Curbing the Use of Vile Language.

Beyond all question the use of obscene and unbecoming language should be eluded by all who claim to be followers of Christ, and it is humiliating indeed when the civil powers are obliged to enforce proper decorum upon those who pose as ambassadors of God,—leaders of his people. The town authorities of Wheeling, W. Va., recently passed a rigid ordinance, which positively forbids the use of vile or objectionable language in public, and it is generally admitted that the main object is to meet the case of a widely-known evangelist who is to open an evangelistic campaign in that city, early next year. That such an ordinance in behalf of pulpit purity should be necessary, is not very flattering to the noted evangelist. He is not, however, a transgressor beyond all others, in this respect, for there are hundreds of well-meaning people who apparently lose sight of their holy profession, at times, and indulge in expressions altogether unseemly. "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?"

Replacing the Saloon with Something Better.

At Cordova, a mining town on the southwestern coast of Alaska, the saloons have, until recently, been the only means of social intercourse for its cosmopolitan population. Some time ago Mr. E. P. Ziegler, was sent to Cordova by a New York society to provide a place of helpful entertainment for the miners. This inviting place has all the social advantages of the saloon, but no drinks are served, nor are there other objectionable features. The great need of these men, after long and arduous days of hard labor, is a place where the most helpful social influences can be given them. This has been the aim of the promoters of the Cordova enterprise and much good has already been accomplished. Religious services are held in this building on Sunday with most excellent interest. While it is hard to crowd out the saloon in a mining town, it can, at least, be measurably counteracted by efforts of the kind referred to, which, with slight modifications, might be introduced elsewhere also.

The Other Side of the Picture.

Last week we referred to the splendors of the coronation, and, judging by the daily press, there must have been a lavish expenditure of millions in connection with the momentous occasion. While the gorgeous display of royalty transformed one part of England's great metropolis into a bower of beauty, gaunt poverty stalked in its wonted misery and utter despair in the crowded tenements not far away. Need we wonder if those who feel the pangs of poverty because the needed work is denied them, look with bitterness upon the waste of the millions which might be put to a better purpose? In perhaps no other city on earth are the affluence of wealth and the most abject poverty imaginable so sharply contrasted as they are in the City of London. To the well-to-do of that city, as also to those of every city and town in our own land, comes the supreme and all-inclusive message: "But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

Florida's Commendable Move.

Following in the leadership of Georgia, Florida recently decided to abolish the leasing of convicts to labor contractors. The inhuman and unjust treatment usually accorded convicts by the average contractor, has been a shame and disgrace to our nation, and has brought upon us the just censure of European countries. Florida now proposes to employ her convicts upon the improvement of her highways, thus creating a system of State roads that will be of undoubted benefit to every citizen. While it is proper and right that every convict should work, it is also imperative that humane and considerate treatment be given him, and this is likely to be the case if the State undertakes the work referred to. It is thus hoped to make the term of servitude reformatory to the highest possible extent, and by kind treatment to appeal to the better nature of every convict. "Lift up the fallen" is a scriptural precept that too often is entirely lost sight of in the effort to mete out the prescribed punishment to the transgressor.

America's Loving Gift to China.

Under date of June 26 the American Red Cross Society, announces that the total amount received by its officials for the Chinese famine relief fund was $80,300, all of which was expended most judiciously for the alleviation of the sufferers in the stricken district. The sum named above does not include amounts transmitted through other channels, and it is altogether likely that the total famine relief offering, sent by the liberal donors of the United States, will approximate more than twice the amount above stated. Representatives of the Red Cross Society in China have cabled the encouraging news that crops are now being harvested, and that the people are able to care for themselves. Throughout the famine area, and even beyond, there are but words of praise for the unparalleled generosity of the American people. Practical benevolence always seeks to express itself in deeds rather than words. "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" The Chinese, as a people, may not fully understand the finer shades of the dogmas and principles of the religion of Jesus Christ, but they can readily grasp the tangible emanations of Christian philanthropy, as it administers to the wants of the needy in the name of Christ. It is an emphatic object lesson that even the most ignorant can readily grasp. The foes of Christianity, even, can not deny the value of a religion that expresses itself in deeds of benevolence to all men, no matter of what race or religious belief.

Don't Be Sorrowful.

SELECTED BY SARAH M. GRIFFIN.

O don't be sorrowful, darling!
Now, don't be sorrowful, pray;
For, taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more night than day.
It's rainy weather, my loved one,
Time's wheels they heavily run;
But taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more cloud than sun.

We're old folks now, companion,—
Our heads they are growing gray;
But taking the year all round, my dear,
You always will find the May.
We've had our May, my darling,
And our roses, long ago;
And the time of the year is come, my dear
For the long dark nights and the snow.

But God is God, my faithful,
Of night as well as of day;
And we feel and know that we can go
Wherever he leads the way.
Ay, God of night, my darling!
Of the night of death so grim;
And the gate that leads out of life, good wife,
Is the gate that leads to him.

"Reverence my sanctuary."

"Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil" (Eccl. 5: 1).

EACH place that we frequent, in the intercourse of daily life, has its own peculiarities. Certain formalities belong to it, and certain impressions are made on the mind by it. It would not be fitting, neither would we desire to enter a court room where the trial of an important case is in progress as we would an auction room where goods are exposed for sale, and where free inspection and other privileges are allowed. Neither would we feel to enter a house of mourning as we would a house of feasting.

As we become more enlightened and refined, we not only prepare our feelings to be in sympathy with the place we visit, and to gain such impressions as the place inspires, but we desire to contribute what we can to the enjoyment of others.

This should be especially our aim when we go to the place of worship. It is then that we turn aside from the harassing cares of busy life for a respite in spiritual service. As the God we then approach asks us to "reverence his sanctuary," it becomes us to assume a different attitude to that which we show at all other places and upon all other occasions. Only such things as are becoming the place should engage the mind and soul. Business should be dismissed and forgotten. Our God has graciously given both variety and richness to his sanctuary service. It is at once a place of prayer, and song, and reading, and exhortation, and meditation, and vows, and greetings, —in short a foretaste of the meeting celestial.

The place should be entered quietly, with the heart filled with the incense of praise. Heavy walking should be guarded against. Loud talking should be avoided and boisterous laughing never indulged in. Let no irreverent conduct mar the sacredness of the place. "Let all things be done decently and in order."

The singing should be the best, the very best, that it is possible to have,—fast enough not to be dull and lifeless, and slow enough not to be operatic. It should be clear enough to sound out the words distinctly, so that the "understanding" may accompany the "spirit." If instruments are necessary to train the voice, let them be used for that purpose, but their connection with Divine service is of doubtful propriety. Their use almost invariably confines the singing to the few composing the choir, who perform the service in which all should engage. They are a fruitful source of petty jealousies and contention. Much of the church trouble originates on the organ loft. "O come, let us sing unto the Lord." "Let all the people praise thee." "Sing unto the Lord, bless his name."

The most reverent posture in prayer is kneeling. "O come let us worship and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord our Maker." It symbolizes submission, adoration and humility. When the call to prayer is made, with as little noise as possible all should fall upon both knees, shut the world out and give themselves to devotion,—enter into communion with Father, Son and Holy Spirit. The one who assumes to lead the worship of the assembly should be well acquainted with the Lord and approach him in childlike simplicity, ever remembering that we are not heard for our "much speaking."

"Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few." As the prayer is offered in the public assembly, to lead the devotions of all present, it should be expressed in a manner and tone that can be easily heard and understood. To turn the back to the congregation, or put the head down and muffle the voice in the corner of a pew, so that the prayer is only an audible murmur, destroys rather than enhances its real purpose, and detracts, rather than increases, reverence for the sanctuary.

There are a number of other improprieties that should be avoided or reduced, as far as possible, to the minimum,—such as coughing, sneezing, giggling, turning round in the pew to gaze at new arrivals, and giving children the privilege of the aisles for a playhouse. Some, or all of these things, are sometimes thought to be unavoidable. It is very noticeable, however, that they are less common among people of culture, than among the rude or careless,—not to say vulgar. If the sensation of coughing or sneezing seizes one while in company, the harshness of the sound and the offensiveness of the outburst may be smothered or restrained by the application of a handkerchief to the nose and mouth. As to giggling at any little discord in the singing, or some oddity that may occur, or some children's prattle, shows a lightness of mind that the guilty ones have need to be ashamed of. Parental instruction at home will have a wholesome effect in removing this silly habit, so common among young people.

Some little children are restless and hard to control. Mothers are often worried and embarrassed, and usually do the best they can to keep them quiet, and ministers, out of sympathy, are generally forbearing, but when the congregation can not hear the prayer or the announcement of a hymn or text, it is certainly quite annoying both to the minister and the congregation. Think what it means to a minister who has spent much time and thought in the preparation of a sermon, to be seriously disturbed when he is about to sum up his arguments, or make his application. Often he is interrupted by a racket that takes the attention of his auditors, or drowns his words, that their meaning and force are lost.

Things of this kind may, and actually do, occur to the chagrin of the preacher, the disappointment of the people and the distress of the mother, while the father is sleeping in his pew in a distant part of the house. A remedy for this is found in father and mother occupying the same pew with the children.

Occasionally ministers are put to the painful necessity of stopping in the midst of a discourse to administer a reproof for some intolerable breach of decorum. This is a very distasteful thing to do, and throws a sudden damper upon a meeting. This should never become a necessity.

Precepts for proper deportment in the house of God should be taught in the home, in the Sunday-school, in the Christian Workers' Meetings and in the council meeting.

Let reverence prevail in the sanctuary!

The Annual Church Visit.

BY S. N. MCCANN.

In Four Parts.—Part Four.

"WILL you still labor with the Brethren for an increase of holiness both in yourself and others?" This question looks after the real growth of the church both in spirituality and in numerical strength. A people who grow in holiness produce an argument for Christianity that all the arguments of the skeptic can not overthrow. The skeptic may reason away the most eloquent gospel sermon, but he can not reason away the influence of a holy life. A body of members, growing in holiness, will increase in numerical strength, though possessing but a weak ministry. It will even grow faster than a church with a strong ministry, but lacking a growth in holiness.

If every member in the church would live his answer to this question, we would be the greatest home and foreign missionary church in the world. Take a congregation of ten, fifty, or a hundred members, each laboring for an increase of holiness both in themselves and others, and what would we see? A prayer meeting poorly attended? We would see a wide-awake prayer meeting; not an absent member without great regrets, and a sense of personal loss. We would see a meeting full of the Spirit, with a manifest sense of the presence of Jesus and his power. We would see a meeting that will have such a spiritual power that others will be drawn to it, and thus to fellowship with Jesus.

With spiritually wide-awake members, would we see a live Sunday-school or one with but few members to carry it on? Surely there would be a Sunday-school full of life and push. Not a member indifferent or absent! Not a member who is not earnestly endeavoring to get others into the Sunday-school. We would see teachers and officers alive to their work, with the prayers and the help of every member of the church. The Sunday-school is a great power now, but how much greater its power might be if every one meant what he says in answering the question of our introductory paragraph!

With Spirit-filled members the teachers' meeting, the home department, the cradle roll, the organized Bible class and all other means for better work would be welcomed, and made a blessing in the work. There will not be a "Young People's Meeting" with mechanically-executed programs, but a "Young People's Meeting" in which every one comes with a message of love, a message forged from the white light of personal touch with Jesus and his Word, sent home by the power of the Holy Spirit.

With members fully alive to the Lord's work, the preaching service will not be poorly attended, with comments in every home about the poor sermon, or something else just as unedifying. No; there will be a full house, with such a band of Spirit-filled listeners that the minister can not fail. There will be a body of members so full of the Spirit that they can not fail to be edified. Such members will not allow a word of comment to escape their lips that might lead a soul astray.

With a body of consecrated members no council meeting will convene with a large per cent of members too busy to attend, and many of those present too indifferent to give their voice either for or against a measure that must be settled by vote. In the right sort of a church, council meetings are held whenever necessary, but not a member is willingly absent. Not a member but bitterly regrets it if circumstances compel his absence. Not a member indifferent to any question that concerns the church; not a member but is willing and anxious to give his voice on any question that is to be decided by vote. No question that concerns the church is too small or too great to be prayerfully answered by each member, as directed by the Holy Spirit.

In the home of a genuine believer family worship is not only held when the preacher comes around. No; there is family worship every day. To read a portion of Scripture and to pray is a joy and a blessed privilege. No member should neglect this means of grace.

If this question is answered conscientiously, our church will become a praying church, a Bible-reading church, a working church, a Spirit-filled and empowered church, a missionary church,—in short a Christed church.

Let us not only answer those questions on the yearly visit but let each member, earnestly and conscientiously, put them to practice. May each member take these questions home to his own heart and life, and see what they will do for him spiritually!

Our Ministry—Free or Salaried.

BY B. E. KESLER.

THERE seems to be a growing sentiment in the minds of a few of our writers that we are laboring under a few "unfortunate conditions," due to the fact that we have a free ministry instead of a salaried one.

It is furthermore surmised that a salaried ministry would relieve us of these unfortunate conditions; that our ministry should be relieved of any necessity to engage in secular business for a livelihood; that the great need of the church is "preachers and pastors;" that we are losing much along some very desirable lines by our past and present methods.

Now, admitting that some conditions might be improved or remedied, yet, without fearing an unfavorable showing, it is submitted to the candid discernment of the careful observer, if, in the rural churches of our Brotherhood, with a free ministry, he does not find the very best preaching (of the Word) that is to be found anywhere. Are not these rural preachers and pastors as diligent as others in visiting the sick? Have they not as intimate an acquaintance with the laity, as hearty coöperation, as deep, mutual confidence, as great interest in the work, and as true devotion as others? Are not as many of our young people in the church as in any Protestant church in the land? (We do not include, of course, christened infants.)

True, with our time-honored principles,—the free ministry, our opposition to secrecy, to pride and fashion, and to the methods of modern revivalists,—we may not increase quite as rapidly as some others, but when the number of converts we lose, to be converted over at our next revival, and counted again, is compared with those lost to other churches, we have nothing to be ashamed of.

Furthermore, if you want to hear a real, old-time, spiritual gospel sermon, delivered not "in excellency of speech of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," and if you wish to meet a pious, humble, consecrated, devout band of devoted Christians in worship, would you go to some rural country church where the preacher receives no pay, or to some fashionable city church, where the preacher receives his $1,500 or $2,000 a year, and where silks rustle, gold glitters, diamonds sparkle, and modern styles of dress are displayed?

Then, will a salaried ministry remove all these supposed "unfortunate conditions"? Nay, verily. The facts are, "Like people, like priest."

It is a delusion to fancy that a salaried ministry would raise the standard of piety, consecration, coöperation and interest, and a peculiar feature of the case is that this cry, "The Lord has ordained that they that preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel," does not come up from the faithful preachers and pastors of the rural districts.

Recently a prominent member of a church, whose pastor receives a salary and "has no other business," said, "I wish we could tie an eighty acre tract to each of our local churches in the country."

What did he mean? Why, that he would love to see his pastor situated so as to use his muscles as well as his brain, and thus maintain a strong, healthy body, which, in turn, would develop strong, healthy nerves, rich blood and strong, mental powers. And why not? The probabilities are that two years' salary, invested so he could use it, would put him on the road to self-support, and the slight loss, if any, sustained by failing to have the pastor come around every week, would be more than counterbalanced by the esteem of a grateful people who rejoice to have a pastor who is not above honest business for a livelihood.

If those who already have the "no business" system of the ministry, realize its weakness and failure, why should we vainly imagine that it would prove a "cure all" for our supposed "unfortunate conditions"? Tie an eighty or one hundred and sixty acre farm, if necessary, to our mission points and weak churches, put a minister on it, and let him "hustle" a little for his bread, and you will see things move in that church! This is no theory, merely, either. Show me such a minister and I will show you a pastor who has the esteem, sympathy, coöperation, love, and respect of a pious, godly, devout, consecrated people, who are being fed on the Bread and Water of Life, and encouraged by helpful instruction and sound gospel preaching, emanating from "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

In the New Testament we notice different classes of religious teachers. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ" (Eph. 4: 11, 12; also, 1 Cor. 12: 28; Rom. 12: 6-8).

In all some six classes are named. Omitting the apostles, we still have five classes of religious teachers. Now, who is able to separate these classes, to determine which one should have no other business but a religious calling? Or shall all of them have no other business? Or, could one church, by any known system, sustain all five of these "no business" people? Or must one church have only a prophet, another only a teacher, another only a pastor, another only an exhorter, and so on? Or, still further, must we cut out all these except the pastor, pay him, and drop the others? Is it not true that this "no other business system of the ministry" seeks to do away with all these classes but the pastor? Do we not still need all these classes? Could a church prosper with an exhorter only, or with an evangelist only (evangelist means a traveling minister)?

But we are cited to Paul's teaching in 1 Cor. 9: 14; "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." Take also verse 15, "But I have used none of these things: neither have I written these things that it should be so done unto me." There are not many Pauls nowadays, especially among the salaried ministry. Again we have verse 12, "If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless, we have not used this power, but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the Gospel of Christ."

Here we learn that Paul did not receive a salary; that his idea was to do nothing that would "hinder the gospel of Christ." Do you suppose that Paul will condemn himself because he did not "live of the Gospel," —receive a salary? Then, will he condemn the faithful minister who follows the example of his chiefest apostle?

Further Paul says, "I know this that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock" (Acts 20: 29). Now, the wolf's nature is to subsist on the sheep,—"live of the flock." Did Paul have in mind the pastor who "lives of the Gospel" on a salary, or the pastor who gives his services free, when he used this language?

Hear him again, "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered to my necessities, and to them that were with me" (Acts 20: 33, 34; also 1 Cor. 4: 12; 1 Thess. 2: 9; 2 Thess. 3: 8).

From this we learn that Paul labored "night and day." He had "some other business," you see. He did not only labor for his own support but also for them that were with him.

Now, when pastors thus strive to keep from "being chargeable," and are not able to keep themselves from want of the necessaries of life, let the church "minister unto them of their substance,"—even gold, if needed. Or, when the minister is called from his home to enter the evangelistic field, it would, indeed, be a very ungrateful people that would not administer unto him of their substance. Or, still further, when the church calls for missionaries to enter new fields, reason would say, "Support them," and "Revelation" would not forbid. Hence, what is said in this article is not intended to discourage financial or material aid in such cases.

But if there is any scripture to show that any missionary, evangelist, teacher, preacher, pastor, or apostle even, received a stipulated sum or salary in the apostolic age it has so far escaped the notice of the writer. If any one can show from the Scriptures that any settled pastor or preacher received a salary, then the pen that writes these lines will be placed on the shelf on this subject.

Stop the salary of the "hireling" preacher and pastor, and see how many of them will settle down some place, in the district where souls are perishing for the "Bread of Life," and preach the Gospel freely. May the good Lord keep us from drifting into the salaried ministry!

Moses and Stephen.

BY J. H. MILLER.

THE history of these two men is remarkable. All the details of the birth and life of Moses are given, and we are told how God led the Israelites through the wilderness, but nothing is said about the death of Moses. We are told that the Lord buried him, but how this was done, no one seems to know. Moses died in the land of Moab, and God buried him in the valley. No man, however, was able to find his sepulcher (Deut. 34: 6). "Michael, the archangel, when contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said: The Lord rebuke thee" (Jude 9).

While the Lord had placed Moses where no man could find him, the devil knew how to contend with Michael about the body of Moses. How long the dispute lasted we can not tell. It seems that the devil was anxious to have something to do with the body of Moses, to serve his own purpose. Perhaps the devil was anxious for his body to make an idol out of it, but could not use it to save his own wicked purpose. It is likely that the Lord God took Moses into Abraham's bosom, as he did Lazarus. We have no account of Elijah dying, but he went to heaven on a fiery chariot.

Moses and Elijah were with Christ in consultation on the Mount of Transfiguration. It is evident that Moses was conscious after he was buried. No soul-sleeping doctrine here.

Stephen was the first martyr. There is no account of the birth of this noble man. He was one of the seven chosen (Acts 6: 5),—a man full of the Holy Ghost. His Greek name would indicate that he was of Hellenistic origin, but of his parentage nothing is said. He was a man full of faith and wisdom. He stood far ahead of those who were chosen as workers in the church. Stephen stood in bold defense of the Gospel, so much that he was brought before the Jewish Sanhedrin. Stephen, in his defense, had much to say to the Jews to convince them that Jesus was the Christ. He made it known to his opposers that he was well acquainted with the movements of Abraham, from the land of Mesopotamia through a strange land, where they should be in bondage four hundred years. In this narrative he speaks of the time when Moses, the meekest of all the men on the earth, was born (Num. 12: 3). Stephen had wisdom enough to refer to these Scriptures, with which the Jews were conversant, to prove that Jesus was the Christ. In doing so, he said: "This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me; him shall ye hear. This is he that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sina, and with your fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us" (Acts 7: 37, 38).

Stephen tried to prove to the Jews how they did resist the Word of God. He called them "stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart." When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart. They rushed upon this noble man of God. Stephen was filled with the Holy Ghost. Looking up, he saw the heavens open, and Christ on the right hand of God. Stephen was stoned to death by a godless crowd. He, like the Revelator, had seen a vision that the multitude could not comprehend. He kneeled and cried with a loud voice: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Thus he fell asleep.

Here we have the contrast of these two noble men. Moses died and the Lord buried him. Stephen died, and we do not know who buried him. We have the details concerning the birth of Moses, and but little about his death. On the other hand, we have the details concerning the death of Stephen, but nothing about his birth. How wonderful the Lord deals with his people, to lead them to those heavenly mansions! Praise the Lord!

The Church in Denmark Forty Years Ago.

BY AUGUST BECK.

OUT in the country the Danish churches are very old, some dating back to the twelfth century. There is always a main building and a square tower. The white-washed walls, built of unhewn stone, are three feet in thickness. The long, narrow windows have numerous little panes, held in place by strips of lead. The roof is of red tile. The entrance to the church is through a smaller building, like a large vestibule. This entrance is called "the weapon house." Long ago, when no one ventured out without his weapon, each man left his equipment in this entrance, before entering the main church. There, resting against the wall, could be seen battle-axes, swords, halberds and spears.

On entering the main church we see an aisle running the whole length, right up to the altar. To the right are the men's seats, to the left the women's. These seats are straight-backed, narrow benches. The floor is of brick. Over the altar is spread a white cloth, on which stand two immense candlesticks, with candles three feet long and seven inches in diameter. Above the altar, in gilt letters on a blue ground, are verses from the Bible.

The pulpit is high up, just in front of the pews. It is reached by means of a stone staircase in the walls, and is richly ornamented. The upper edges are upholstered in red plush. Thus the minister need not hurt his hands when thumping the pulpit.

In the tower hangs an immense bell and to it is fastened a rope, reaching down to the ground outside. Every morning at sunup, and every evening at sundown, the sexton rings the bell for five minutes.

I still remember when, in days long gone by, I heard the sound of the various bells on the still summer evenings, while the sun was sinking in the West. It was something I shall never forget.

Years ago they had no way of heating these churches. On the coldest winter days men and women simply had to put on clothes enough not to freeze. When all had assembled, you might see water trickling down from the frosty white walls. The older women would tuck their feet into lambskin footstools. But pitiful it was to hear the wail of some poor infant, as it was "christened" in that ice-cold place! Its face and hands got blue with cold, but "christened" it had to be, as soon after birth as possible, for if it died unchristened, its salvation was called in question.

The Danish nation is Lutheran, religiously speaking, and its ministers are appointed and supported by the government, although the parishioners have to render offerings and taxes. A position as minister is considered very desirable, viewed from a worldly standpoint. With it goes a good farm, a fat salary and, upon retirement, a pension sufficient for all wants.

The duties of a minister, forty years ago, were light. He had to preach but one sermon each Sunday, attend to the christenings, and the solemnizing of marriages, and deliver funeral sermons. Two months of each winter the minister prepared the young people for confirmation. He explained the Bible to them for one hour three times a week.

As already stated, the minister was appointed by the government, chosen haphazard out of the graduated theological students who sent in their application. The people had no choice in the matter. Thus many filled the pulpit who would better have been out of it.

Another evil was this, that a certain text was set apart for each Sunday, and the minister had to abide by that choice. As soon as he tried to enrich his sermons by using incidents out of everyday life, the congregation would become alarmed. They would say: "He does not stick to the text!" Speedily they would send protestations to the bishop.

It will readily be seen what kind of a sermon (thus hampered and confined to narrow limits) resulted. The minister would write out his sermon for each Sunday, and in many cases use his sermons again during the next year. Thus, from year to year, he would run his rounds. The natural outcome of all this was that the people were, spiritually speaking, sound asleep. The man who should have gone among them to cheer them, to bring out the best in their nature, and to draw them closer to God, spent his spare time reclining on a lounge in his study, smoking a long pipe and reading trashy novels. Poor, deluded people! They thought him to be the best minister who could shout the loudest and thump the pulpit the hardest.

I have heard a very popular minister say to his wife, on returning from church: "I preached a d—— good sermon today." Can we wonder that some of those who saw clearer and felt deeper than the majority, cried out, in agony of spirit, for a pure Gospel, —a cry that was heard and answered by the Brethren of America?

What a rich field for work! Here is a nation bound by traditions of churchly ritual, spiritually asleep, but a nation alert and teachable. What a glaring contrast to the spiritual blessings we enjoy over here! We have Bible classes, Sunday-schools, Christian Workers' Meetings, and, above all, ministers working with might and main in the service of the Lord, not for what there is in it but for the love of Jesus Christ and suffering humanity.

Before my baptism and my connection with the "Brethren Sunday-school Extension," I had no idea that the world held so many good people. The Brethren's devotion to the Lord's service, their self-denial, honesty and simplicity are truly touching. It was their work right here, around Douglas Park, where I have lived for eight years, which first made me "sit up and take notice." When I saw brethren and sisters go into home after home, cheering the sorrowing and helping the erring ones, I got ashamed of myself. It made me long to do something for the Lord also. So I started out in my own weak way to write a little, which, by the grace of God, may do some one good. I shall never forget that God, through those dear brethren and sisters, directed me to the road of salvation.

The Resurrection of the Body.—1 Cor. 15.

BY CHARLES NOBLE STUTSMAN.

THAT there will be a resurrection of our bodies on "that great and notable day of the Lord," the Brethren have always believed, for so the Scriptures teach. But as individuals our conception of its nature and purpose, and our realization of the importance of the doctrine, sometimes appear to be lamentably vague. In order that we "err" not, as did the Sadducees, and in order that our hope may be indeed a "lively" one, and that death and the grave appear not to be victorious over us, we should "know the Scriptures and the power of God" (Matt. 22: 29).

The resurrection of the body is as sure as was the resurrection of Christ, which was the power and glory of the GOSPEL, as proclaimed by the apostles (verses 3 and 4); and any doubt of it is absurd, as Paul shows by his own unanswerable logic in verses 12 to 19 and 29 and 30.

As to order, Christ is the first (verse 20). Next are the saints "at his coming" (verse 23). Last is "the end," when the wicked shall rise to condemnation (John 5: 29). But where are the souls of the saints between the departure from the physical body and "his coming"? Then will they come "with him," says Paul (1 Thess. 4: 14). From where? From the Father's own presence, whence Christ will come at that time. Upon the cross, Jesus commended his spirit direct into the Father's care (Luke 23: 46), whence he must have received it again on that first Easter morn. Upon his knees, amid his persecutors, Stephen committed his spirit to the Lord Jesus, who was with the Father (Acts 7: 59), whence it shall come again to receive its own body at the glorious appearing of our Lord. Paul's desire "to depart and to be with Christ" (Philpp. 1: 23) likewise evidences the blessed state of "the dead in Christ," even prior to the reception of their "inheritance,"—their new body.

"But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? And with what body do they come?" There are those who would answer, "As spirits." This does not agree with Paul's declaration that it will be a spiritual BODY,—not a spirit. There are those who would answer, "Angels." This can not be true, in view of the fact that angels, which are the servants (Heb. 1: 14) of the saints, who are the heirs of salvation (Rom. 8: 17), can not be identical with, nor as great as, those to whom they minister (Matt. 10: 24), nor have they the blessed promise of reigning with Christ (Heb. 2: 5) as the saints have (2 Tim. 2: 12).

But Christ says they shall be as angels (Matt. 22: 30 and Luke 20: 36). In what respects? Let Christ explain himself. He says they "neither marry nor are given in marriage," which, while doing away with the marriage relation, removes likewise all sexual functions, or distinctions as to sex, and with the sexual relation, goes birth or generation. "Neither can they die any more." So, in that incorruptible, glorious, powerful, spiritual body of the resurrection, there will be nothing sexual, nothing temporal, nothing at all "material"! Yet it will enough resemble this one as to be recognizable, just as the new body of wheat or corn is recognized by its relation to the seed sown (verses 37, 38). Its identity is not lost, and "we shall know each other there." "Then shall I know, even as also I am known" (1 Cor. 13: 12), which is thoroughly. This could not be true, then, if our knowing were limited, to the extent that we could not know each other, as some would have us believe. "But we know, that when he shall appear, we shall be like him" (1 John 3: 2), and we know, too, that he was recognizable in his resurrected body,—by his voice (to Mary), by his habit of breaking bread (at Emmaus), by his miracles (at the seaside), by his hands and side (to Thomas), etc. It behooves us, then, to care for this present body, for it is the seed from which we must expect God to raise up for us our spiritual body. "And so shall we ever be with the Lord!"

The Basis of Christian Freedom.

BY PAUL MOHLER.

I AM sure that many people,—some of them Christians,—are just a little mystified by the seeming contradictions between the terms "Christian freedom" and "Christian service," especially when they are told that they are one and the same thing. I believe it is worth our while to get these two terms straightened out, especially in view of the fact that there is a blessing to be found in both.

One thing that, I think, helps to confuse us is the double phase Christian freedom spoken of in the Scriptures, which we do not generally have to deal with today. That is, freedom from the bondage of sin, and from that of the Mosaic law. In John 8: 31-36, Jesus promises to those that continue as his disciples, that he will make them free from the bondage of sin. Paul, in Romans 8 and in Galatians, promises freedom from the law of Moses, and in Romans 7 he shows the very close relation between bondage to the law, and bondage to sin. But not often today are we bothered with the Mosaic law. Our bondage is to sin, if we are in bondage. There is no such a thing as Christian bondage, if bondage means unwilling service. You don't have to struggle to keep from doing the will of God. No force of circumstances conspires to make you a follower, a servant of the humble, lowly Jesus. No man can ever say God made him do a good or evil thing. God does not try to dominate our lives against our wills.

But God does ask our loving, voluntary service, our coöperation with himself in the great work of saving the world. The army of salvation is a volunteer army. No man is ever drafted into it. The Captain of our salvation always leads and never drives his followers. And yet, since one can never work with others in any unity of effort without there being a leader whom the other follows, so there must be a leader in the great work that God has undertaken. What man can think of leading Christ, can think of making plans for him? It is our very highest privilege to follow such a Leader; almost beyond belief that he would ask such worthless things as we are, to be his very humblest servants. Then, what are we, to try to tell him what to do and how to do it? If he can bear with us, can humble himself to teach us, can suffer patiently our blunders and our failures, can purchase our redemption from the enemy, can give us his own blessed Holy Spirit to be our Guide and Guard and Comforter; if God can do all this for us, to train us for his service, and then, when the work is done and the victory is won, can make us sharers in the glory and the blessing as heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ, what,—are we to turn him down and say, "We will not serve thee"!

Paul speaks of service, and what a life of self-denying service he did lead! What humility, what patience, what days of toil and nights of anxious watching it took for him to found so many churches. But it was never anything but voluntary service. Paul gives to us the key to his and every real Christian's service in Galatians, the very book of freedom. "Through LOVE be servants one of another" (verse 13b, Am. R.). And love will always make us servants. Love always seeks to serve. Love that will not serve is never love,—it is cold heat, dark sunlight, a contradiction of itself.

And love makes HUMBLE servants of us. Love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. Love can serve the smallest, weakest, most unpromising child of God in the very humblest service possible and thank God for the privilege. Love can see others advanced, can help them to advance beyond her and thank God for advancing them. Love can spend her best in serving others, can be misjudged by them and robbed of all her credit, can be abused and turned off by them; and be without resentment, as Jesus was when he wept over the Holy City. Since God is love, and we are sons of God, can we refuse to love and give ourselves in loving service? Such contradictions can not be for men of sense.

There is some service in the church today, not much. Most of us serve ourselves first and don't find time for others. There is less, I think, among the Brethren than there formerly was. We used to help each other when our houses burned; now we expect everybody to insure. We used to help the widow and the orphan, and we do now, as much as our selfishness will allow us. If all of us insure our lives, we will rob each other of this opportunity. Calls come, of course, from over the sea, but it is easy to forget such calls when profitable investments offer.

When we do serve the Lord a little, we want full credit for it, first from our friends and neighbors, then from the Lord. If we are "not appreciated," we sulk and stop our service. If another is advanced beyond us, perhaps unjustly, it gives us inward pain, sore spirits and sour faces. No love in service such as that, and Paul says there's nothing else in it that's good. We can't serve God with such a spirit, no matter what it costs us. Our service must be humble, loving service to be received by God.

Does the term "servant" grate upon you? It didn't grate upon our Lord. "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." It didn't grate upon Paul, or John, or any other of the apostles. Are we above them? And they were HUMBLE servants too,—servants to the humblest of their brethren. "Whosoever would be great among you, let him be your servant." We can't get away from service if we follow Jesus; he leads us ever deeper into service. But the path through service is the path to glory, the glory of humility, of love, of Godliness and the crown of righteousness.

Brethren, let us seek for service!

The Waiting Time.

BY OMA KARN.

MANY of those who enjoy the hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," probably are not aware of the circumstances under which it was written. Its author, Cardinal Newman, was in Italy when he received a message to come to England immediately, to take up what afterward proved to be his life work. Burning with impatience to lay hold of this work, he started for England, only to be becalmed for weeks in the Mediterranean Sea. Some would have spent this time in useless repining or idle dreaming, but the author of "Lead, Kindly Light" was not given to this kind of weakness. Taking up his pen,—the only available thing with which to work,—he wrote the great hymn. The writing of it did not at that time seem an event of importance in his life. It was written to make the most of a dead calm,—one of these strange, unexplainable waiting times that will come and then come into our life,—times when the command, "Stand still" is unmistakable, and we halt in helpless despair, while the work we wanted to do, the object we had hoped to possess, the height to which we started to ascend, seem utterly unattainable.

Against this delay human nature rebels. It is not easy to stand still and wait, when one's whole nature is on fire to go forward and do. Mrs. Browning has well described this time when she says,

> "But the waiting time, my brother,
> Is the hardest time of all."

Hard though it is, yet it is the thing needful to prepare us for the use God has in view for us. "Therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you," was said to impatient Israel. Patient waiting upon the will of the Lord, and careful improvement of the time we are called upon to wait, will bring to us a greater blessing than the one our short human sight had in view.

Impatience and chafing against God's will, not only destroys the blessing which the future holds in its keeping, but also destroys what we have already built up. King Saul could not wait until the prophet appeared, and so lost his kingdom.

"Lead, Kindly Light" brought to Newman greater prominence and more lasting and real love from the people than any of, what he considered, more important service. It is said that the words he wrote in the Mediterranean were strangely prophetic of his afterlife, and wholly consistent with the purpose that controlled it. What, then, was the meaning of this trying delay but a part of the preparation of a great man for a great work? What would have been lost to Newman and what would have been lost to the world, had he given up to chafing and repining during those days of helpless drifting in the middle of the Mediterranean Sea? What is lost to us through this same useless fuming and fretting?

Before the curtain that veils our future from view is written, "Have faith in God." We have need to remember this inscription when called upon to pass through one of these waiting times. Some one has said that "God's impression within and his Word without are always corroborated by his Providence around, and we should quietly wait until these three focus into one point."

The circumstances of our daily life are to us an infallible indication of his will, when they concur with the inward promptings of his Spirit and with his Word. So long as they are stationary, wait. When the time comes to move, circumstances unthought of will suddenly present themselves, the way will open in a manner we little expect, and we see, what we longed for, opening before us far more glorious than we expected. Then we, through the discipline of waiting, take it up far better prepared than we otherwise would have been.

Burden Bearing.

BY W. R. DEETER.

"Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6: 2).

BURDEN bearing has been elevated to be a law of Christ. This, of itself, should make it very important in our estimation. There is a sense in which every man must bear his own burden. The man who spends his life in serving the devil and the world, will be brought into judgment and must there bear his own burden.

But there are many ways in which we can be helpful to one another and thus bear, or help to bear, one another's burdens. We have a very beautiful illustration of this in the case of the wounded man and the "Good Samaritan." The priest, with his self-righteous spirit, was no burden bearer, neither was the Levite; but the "Good Samaritan" went to the man, took him up, applied some curatives to his wounds, set him on his own beast, took him to the inn, had him cared for, and paid the bill himself. Well might he be called "neighbor."

In case of sickness, when the dear wife, mother, or father, is almost worn out watching and caring for the sick, what a relief it is if some trusted friend will come and give rest to the weary, tired one! I have in mind a faithful sister, whose son was very sick and though she lived in the midst of a number of her fellow-members, yet none of them came to relieve her. She cared for her son alone until she was exhausted. She would weep while telling of her sad experience, and how the members neglected her in this time of great need. Such neglect leads some to unite with secret societies.

I heard a minister say, not long since, "If the churches would do their duty, there would be no use for secret societies." While this minister admitted being a member of a secret society, himself, and said they were all right, because they do look after their members, we thought, Why not teach your church members to bear one another's burdens, instead of recommending the secret society for relief work that ought to be made available through church fellowship? It is a small thing to spend a few hours with the sick, and thus relieve the overtaxed watchers, but in this day of strenuous commercialism, the sick are often forgotten.

Then, too, the poor should not be neglected. If there was a class specially remembered by Christ, it was the poor. "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor" (Luke 4: 18). The poor need our attention, and a little from each one who is able would help them to comfort. Of course my plea has reference only to the worthy poor.

I am acquainted with the following circumstance. A poor sister was sick, her husband had no work, and winter was upon them. Their stock of provisions was low. Some of the brethren visited them. The sister told them of their condition and the brethren reported the same to the church. A few days later a young brother came, and laid a ham of meat on the table and a sealed envelop by it. When the envelop was opened, it was found to contain five dollars. What a help and relief this was to that family! Then, too, I believe that the kind donors realized "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

I am acquainted with a young brother who has been confined in a harness in a swing for years, on account of affliction. A visit to him is very helpful. It helps him bear the burden of affliction, and while helpful to him, it is an inspiration to his visitors to see him so cheerful and patient under such severe affliction.

Jesus was the greatest burden bearer the world ever knew. Listen to the old prophet: "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed" (Isa. 53: 4, 5). No one in distress ever appealed to Jesus for help that was not blessed, and if we are his disciples, we will, as far as we can, do as he did.

So important is burden bearing in the estimation of the Lord, that he says, that we, in administering to the needy, do it unto him. (See Matt. 25: 40.) To neglect our known duty to the needy is to neglect Christ himself. In the great day of reckoning there will be many surprises. The righteous will be commended for some of their burden bearing, long since forgotten, and the unrighteous will receive just censure because of their neglect of the poor and afflicted.

Our Places of Worship.

THE ROUND TABLE

Wrong and Right Thinking.

BY A. HUTCHISON.

In Two Parts.—Part Two.

In my former article reference was made to several cases showing the advantage of right thinking, and the danger of wrong thinking. In this others will be given. For one, see that of Naaman, the leper (2 Kings 5: 9-12), "So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha. And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean. But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage."

Naaman was like many others who are thinking of a self-devised way. They have a desire to be saved, but their faith is a child of their desire. Like Naaman they have thoughts, but they want things their own way, and if they can not have them that way, they are ready to go away, and many times not in the best humor.

But Naaman was prevailed upon by his servants to think right, and when he thought right, then he acted right, and as soon as he acted right, the blessing that he so greatly desired came to him in full measure. From this and other cases we all ought to learn that the Lord's way is the best. Yes, it is not only the best way, but it is the only way.

It is generally accepted as an undeniable fact, that if we are saved we must be saved by Christ Jesus. Then, should we not allow him to lay down the conditions upon which he will save us? And in however many ways we may desire the favor to come, it will never come till we get in line with his way.

Paul was looking on, while the martyr Stephen was being stoned to death. It is Paul himself who tells that he consented to that cruel act, and that he even kept the raiment of them that slew Stephen. This was while he was thinking wrong. Listen to what he says he did, as given in Acts 22: 4: "And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women."

We wonder how he could do such things. Let us hear him a little further. In Acts 23: 1 he says, "And Paul earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day."

Here we have a clearly-defined case, showing the danger of wrong thinking. We may be very conscientious in doing that which is absolutely wrong,—hence the need of careful training, so that we may know whether our conscience and faith are right. When Jesus came to Peter, and was ready to wash his feet, Peter began to think, and said, "Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" It seems that his thoughts were of the wrong kind. He refused to submit, but when he saw his error, he submitted willingly, and so must we surrender.

Homiletic Hints.

BY E. B. HOFF.

Our Destiny Depending Upon the Condition of our Hearts (Matt. 13: 3-9, 18-23; Mark 4: 1-9, 13-20; Luke 8: 4-8, 11-15).

ONE kind of seed, four kinds of ground and four results. The seed being the same, the harvest depends upon the kind of ground in which you sow.

The seed is the Word of God (Luke 8: 11). It is sown in the heart (Matt. 13: 19). The ground is, therefore, the heart. The Word of God yields according to the kind of heart into which it falls.

1. If one gives no place for the Word of God in his heart, Satan, like the birds of the parable, soon puts an end to any possible increase.

2. If the Word is not allowed to permeate thoroughly into the depths of one's being, the tribulations, persecutions and temptations of daily life, which should be sunshine to the soul, will, like the sunshine of the parable, soon scorch even the temporary attempts of Christian growth.

3. If the heart is preoccupied by the cares and pleasures of the earthly life, these engrossments, like the thorns of the parable, will sallow and sicken the tender growth, and destroy the possibilities of fruit.

4. If the heart is honest and good, and holds fast the Word in all patience, it matters not what comes, there will be a large increase. Like the parable there will be a large harvest,—as large as there can be in the strength of the ground.

Given God's Word, man's destiny depends upon the condition of his heart. "He that hath ears let him hear" (Matt. 13: 9).

God's Word, like every tiny little seedlet, has its mission. It matters not how humble the sower, the seed is still good. It matters not how humble the preacher that teaches the Word, the Word has in it the power to bear fruit unto eternal life. When our hearts are receptive, deeply open, unoccupied and honest, there will be large results.

Love's Work.

BY J. G. ROYER.

LOVE'S chief work is that of discovering good, not evil. One who constantly finds fault and points out evil in others, even though it be claimed, as is often the case, that it is done "in love," has not yet discovered and caught hold of the "taproot" principle of love.

Finding fault and pointing out evil in others may be love at work, but it is love at work not at its best but at its worst. It was said of a well-known saintly Christian worker: "Because love was the controlling force of his life, his energies went out always as a builder, never as a destroyer." He destroyed evil, of course, but he did it by building up the good.

To do its building work prudently and successfully, love must be able to see and recognize the materials for building; and that is just where true love's peculiar power lies. It sees good in others, where "unlove," so to speak, sees only faults. Then love lays hold upon the good it sees in such an eager and, at the same time, in such a tactful manner that the power of the good is increased and multiplied under love's warmth and ardor of soul. Such is love at work,—not at its worst, but at its best.

If we would grow in love,—the love that Jesus manifested,—and use it prudently as he did, let us set about this sort of building in the lives of our brethren,—yea, in the lives of all those round about us. "Let brotherly love continue." "Be kindly affectionate one to another with brotherly love." "See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently."

Mt. Morris, Ill.

The Christian Life.

BY W. B. EBY.

WHAT is the one, all-important element that makes the Christian essentially different from the person of the world? It is devotion to God, and submission to his holy will. He has heard God's call, accepted it, and has resolved to become a child of the King—a follower of the Lamb, and to do the will of his Father.

He does not claim to be without fault or to be infallible; neither do any of his friends claim that he is altogether perfect. But he seeks to do his Lord's will and he so conducts himself as becometh a disciple of Jesus Christ.

On the other hand is the man who has not surrendered his life to God. He may be kind, helpful, well-respected, good-natured and the kind of a man whom people praise; yet he is not a child of God. He has not received Christ as his Savior or the Holy Spirit as his Guide. As long as he is in this state he is not a candidate for the kingdom of heaven.

The true Christian can see across the river,—to the Father's golden shore,—to life eternal. He can lay up many treasures beforehand, because of his foresight and strength from on high. The other is as one advancing toward a dark, ghastly, fathomless gulf, into which he must plunge, with scarcely the shadow of a hope for anything beyond this veil of tears. There is naught but darkness at the end of his earthly pilgrimage.

IF believers should sit down in ease and appropriate all spiritual blessings to themselves and their own friends immediately around them, must they not be condemned as guilty of a dishonest attempt to embezzle the treasures of his grace?—Alexander Duff.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

Blest Be the Tie that Binds.

John 15: 1-7.

For Sunday Evening, July 16, 1911.

Theme.—Christian Union (Rom. 12: 5).

1. "We being many"—many as individual Christians.

2. "Are one body"—one people, mutually dependent, and having the same great interest at heart.

3. "In Christ"—one body joined to Christ, or united to him as the Head (Eph. 1: 22, 23). He presides over all.

4. "And every one members, one of another."

Christ is the common element in which the union consists, yet each feels that he is one of a band of loving, sympathizing brethren, so united that each one is of service to the other, and necessary to the usefulness of the other (1 Cor. 12: 25, 26).

Hence, the joy and comfort afforded in the singing of the "Fellowship Hymn":

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

"Before our Father's throne
We pour our ardent prayers;
Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares.

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear.

"When we asunder part,
It gives us inward pain;
But we shall still be joined in heart,
And hope to meet again."

This parting hymn was written by John Fawcett in 1772. He also wrote "The Lord hath led me on," and "Thy way, O God, is in the sea."

For a brief sketch of his life-work, see writeup in Young People.

PRAYER MEETING

Wanted! Men for Gideon's Band.

Judges 7: 2-7.

For Week Beginning July 16, 1911.

1. We Must Organize for Aggressive Work.—This is the day when systematic efforts for the overthrow of evil and the upbuilding of righteousness are highly necessary. If the members of every congregation would cooperate for A UNITED ATTACK on every stronghold of Satan, there would be trouble in the camp of the enemy. Can the Lord depend on you, on me (Philpp. 1: 27; 4: 1)?

2. Gideon's Men "Stood."—They did not seem to hurry, —they gave God a chance. Many a man has failed because he has attempted to walk ahead of God. It is a good thing to wait for orders. In Ephesians we are told about the armor we must wear, and when this armor is all on, we are exhorted, "Having done all, TO STAND." In the heat of the battle it may be hard, at times, to stand (Eph. 6: 10-18).

3. In Gideon's Band "Every Man Stood in His Own Place."—God has A PLAN FOR EVERY LIFE. How the carrying out of those plans dignifies one's experience! It may be but a plain, matter-of-fact, everyday life, but if it is God's plan, it is best of all, and we are sure of victory (Psa. 37: 5-7).

4. Gideon's Band "Stood Round About the Camp."—We are RESPONSIBLE FOR OTHERS. We have no right to live in a city, and not try to make that city better. If God has really given us a revelation of himself, we must use that revelation to become better ourselves, to make our homes better, and to make the cities better where we live. We are our brother's keeper, whether we will or not (1 John 2: 9-11; 4: 20, 21).

5. Gideon's Men Were Victorious Because of Their Obedience.—They did their part as the Lord commanded. They were willing to do the humble part allotted them, and then a glorious victory was their reward (1 John 5: 4).

HOME AND FAMILY

Rest on the Road.

SELECTED BY SARAH M. GRIFFIN.

There's many a rest on the road of life,
If we only would stop to take it,
And many a tone from the better land,
If the careworn heart would wake it.
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through
When the ominous clouds are rifted.
There was never a night without a day,
Nor an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

Odds and Ends in Housekeeping.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

"THERE goes that door again! Really it seems to me I shall scream if it gives that awful squeaking sound once more!" And Mrs. Rand looked as if she was capable of doing almost anything desperate, as she hurriedly dusted the chairs and windows. It was almost time for her husband to come to dinner and she was so anxious to finish cleaning the rooms before she left them to cook dinner.

When John came home to dinner she said, "John, would it be possible for you to oil the hinges to some of these squeaky doors? I get so nervous over them, and I have no time to look after them."

John looked surprised. It was seldom she asked him to do things around the house, although he had an hour or two every day when he might help her. That evening he got an oil-can and a feather, and went around to the doors and oiled the hinges and the locks also, thus settling the noises which had so worried his wife.

Mrs. Rand had always supposed that her husband had all he could do without helping her. In the meanwhile she employed no help and she was overworking; so it was becoming plain to her that something must be done. When they were first married, she had once suggested that he put up a shelf in the pantry. But John hated those odd jobs and he said, "Oh, send for a carpenter!" Mrs. Rand was on economical thoughts intent; she knew that if a carpenter once got into the house his bill would grow like a mushroom. So, instead of talking a little more about it, to John, and persuading him to sacrifice his own inclinations for her convenience, she waited until John was safely down town at his work. Then she armed herself with hammer and saw and put up the shelf.

She was not a nagging woman, hence said nothing to John about it. She enjoyed good health and so she continued to do all such little jobs of work, to the detriment of her temper and nerves. Gallantry belongs to all strong, vigorous men; their natural impulse is to protect and help struggling woman. But sometimes their natural aversion to some tasks makes them oblivious to the efforts their wives make, to keep the house comfortable.

Now we do not wish to be understood as advising women to shift their own duties to their husbands' shoulders. Far from it! We merely wish to say that it is better for the men themselves to become accustomed to lend a hand, here and there, in the homes that belong as much to them as to the wives, than to occupy the position of privileged boarders, who have few obligations beyond that of criticism.

There is that window which is hard to move. It will neither go up nor down unless some one makes a Herculean effort to put it where it is wanted. It is worth while to see to it and get rid of that sense of exasperation and annoyance with which you regard that window. Some drawers which need coaxing to get them in or out, might move more easily if they were rubbed with a little brown soap.

There is a bit of loose wall-paper which has worried you for some time; you are conscious of it as soon as you enter the room. It pays to take the time and paste it fast. You can not afford to have it annoy you. Then it may be a bit of fringe or gimp which is hanging loose from a chair. It looks untidy and it should be fastened. Do not put it off. See to it today; just a few moments with a tack-hammer and a few tacks, and the furniture will lose that run-down-at-the-heel sort of look that gets on your nerves and makes you feel cross. Perhaps it is a seam in the carpet which has given way and becomes a little wider and more shabby looking every day. You want to sew it up, but it is so hard to find the ten minutes in which it should be done. Perhaps the fringe is tearing off the rug and you can hardly endure the untidy effect of these breaks in rugs or carpets. It pays to let something else go and sew them.

Is the sink discolored, and covered with grease? It is easy to clean it with kerosene oil. This will remove every vestige of grease and dirt. A little gasoline in a cup and a small woolen cloth will do wonders in removing stains from carpets and draperies. Your rooms will look fresh and clean after going over them in this way. If we only had the time to do such things when they are first noticed!

Most of these odd jobs require only a few moments of our time. It is the thinking over of how many of them require her attention that makes the busy housewife nervous, and then she resolves that nothing can be done until housecleaning time. If these small tasks are attended to each day, as the necessity for them arises, it will lessen the amount of actual work for the housecleaning season when that day of trouble finally comes.

How to Win the Boy.

BY W. D. ROMINE.

WHEN I think of the boy today, I see the future posterity of the church, and it seems to me that the greatest responsibility of the parent is the rearing and training of the boy.

Some boys are naturally-born Sunday-school workers; others have to be trained to the work. The first step toward the successful training of the boy depends upon the confidence he has in his parents' religion.

Parents should always manifest a religious spirit in their work. They should take their boy into their confidence, and talk to him about different subjects relating to home life. They should let him feel that they have an interest in his welfare, but never should they allow an impression to be left in the opposite direction.

Study the Bible around the family fireside and discuss it. Always get the opinion of the boy; let him know you have confidence in his ability. If he don't agree with you, explain to him, but never once allow yourself to give way to ill feelings.

Parents should be kind and affectionate toward their children. All boys are not alike. Some are driven away from church, Sunday-school, and even from home by radical parents, while others manifest a loving disposition.

Parents should study the dispositions of their boys, and deal with them accordingly. Parents should never be radical on any subject pertaining to home or religion, lest they discourage their children. As children's minds are plastic, good literature, placed before them, will be a great incentive toward training the mind to higher ideals.

Some of our greatest men come from poor families. Boys brought up in this manner not only honor and love father and mother, but have the noble impulse within that leads them to that higher plane in life in which they can see and realize the benefits derived from a Christian life.

When I read of some of the greatest leaders of Israel, I find them to be workers after God's own heart from their very youth. It is well, therefore, to impress upon your boys the danger of waywardness! Teach them, in early youth, the beauty of a noble, Christian character that enables them to read, study, and live a consecrated life. Then, as they grow, they will take up the work of the church and Sunday-school, and help to maintain the principles laid down for us to follow.

Alone With God.

BY H. WILFORD PETERS.

THE sweetest and most profitable hours of one's life are those spent "alone with God." Many a churchmember lives and dies a pauper, spiritually, because he never gets acquainted with his Heavenly Father. He fails to talk with God, and ask for the manifold riches of heaven.

In Christ's memorable "Sermon on the Mount" (Matt. 5: 3), he said, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Shall we conclude that the Master means to teach that those who are spiritual paupers, lacking the heavenly virtues which characterize his children, are heirs of his heavenly kingdom?

Nay, verily. Those who feel their utter dependence upon God, who are filled with the riches of his grace, and who often hold close communion with him in prayer, are to be "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ."

We toil and labor for earthly treasures which satisfy not, and only endure for a season. At the same time God's storehouse of richest jewels is full to overflowing. The father is waiting and desiring to open the windows of heaven, and shower upon us blessings beyond numeration.

It is God's to give, and ours for the asking. What's the trouble? Are we afraid to talk with God? I know many brethren,—even good deacon brethren,—who, when called upon to lead in public prayer, timidly refuse and say, "I can not." Let's get acquainted with our Heavenly Father in secret,—be often found "alone with him," and then we can make our wants known to him in public.

Many of us poor, weak ministers, seriously ponder the question why we can not accomplish more effectual work for the Master. May we not, like Elisha of old, pray God to open the eyes of our understanding, and let reason tell us that it is simply because we spend so little time alone with God? Paul admonishes us in 1 Thess. 5: 17, to "pray without ceasing." He evidently felt and realized the same sacred truth as did A. B. Everett when he said,

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air,
His watchword at the gate of death,
He enters heaven with prayer."

If this statement be true, it means a great deal. As the natural body would soon cease to exist without the air we breathe, so must the spiritual man soon die unless we are often found "alone with God" in prayer.

Brother, sister, we never will be able to accomplish the work for which God created us until we rely upon him for strength, instead of upon our own. Paul says, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." But, remember, we must first ask for strength, and then the blessing will come.

John Bunyan never could have painted that beautiful picture of the Christian's pathway to heaven, nor could he have framed those wonderful allegories which bedeck the memorable pages of his "Pilgrim's Progress," which has made him famous throughout the world, had it not been for the twelve long years he spent "alone with God" within those rugged prison walls.

The Revelator John never viewed heaven in the fullness of its beauty, nor could he give a vivid description of its pearly gates, its jasper walls, and its streets of gold, until he had been banished to the lonely isle of Patmos, where he dwelt alone in the august presence of God.

Longfellow once said:

"Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wings wherewith we fly to heaven."

Solomon realized that all true heavenly wisdom came from the "father of lights," and if we would know more of the glories of heaven,—more of the riches of his grace, enjoy more heaven on earth, let us get into the inner circle with the Master; be often found "alone with God," and we will more fully realize that

"Life is worth living,
Heaven worth seeking,
And God worth serving."

"REMEMBER the Maine" may be patriotic, but to forgive your enemies is Christianity.

BRO. JAMES M. MOORE, of Chicago, was with us over last Sunday, and preached both morning and evening.

DURING the last few weeks five have been received into the church at South Ottumwa, Iowa, by confession and baptism.

A CONGREGATION of fifty members was recently organized at Prescott, Mich., with Bro. J. P. Bowman as elder in charge.

BRO. H. C. EARLY closed his revival work at Meyersdale, Pa., with nineteen putting on Christ in baptism, and three restored to fellowship.

BRO. A. P. BLOUGH has accepted a call from the Waterloo City church, Iowa, and will enter upon his duties as pastor the first of September.

IT has been agreed to divide the large and growing congregation at North Manchester, Ind., and the division will take effect the first of December.

THE members composing the Prowers congregation, Colo., are planning to build a meetinghouse, and hope to begin work about the first of September.

AFTER spending a few weeks at Prescott, Mich., Bro. Lemuel Hillery has returned to his home at Goshen, Ind., with health only slightly improved.

BRO. L. D. BOSSERMAN, of Pasadena, Cal., wishes us to say that he has changed his street address from 122 North Hudson Avenue to 286 North Menton Avenue.

THE Mission Board of Western Colorado and Utah has located Bro. A. C. Root and wife at Grand Junction, Colo., and placed them in charge of the mission in that city.

BRO. E. E. ESHELMAN, of Chicago, is now located at Batavia, Ill., and takes pastoral charge of the congregation in that city. He may be addressed at 137 Church Street.

THROUGH our correspondents we learn that a number of talks were delivered by the returning attendants at the late St. Joseph Conference. Such talks always prove interesting and helpful.

BRO. JOHN ROBINSON, of Muscatine, Iowa, recently held a series of meetings at Yale, Iowa, and nine persons put on Christ in baptism. One awaits the rite, and one was restored to fellowship.

BRO. S. E. THOMPSON, of 323 North Twenty-second St., Lincoln, Nebr., is in a position to arrange for a few protracted meetings during the fall months. He is now holding tent meetings in his own city, and writes encouragingly of the interest.

THE amount of money that came into the hands of the General Mission Board for the fiscal year, ending March 31, last, was $72,413.00. The amount raised the year before was $69,922.67, but the year before that the receipts footed up $87,049.79.

ON account of the Fourth, a holiday, falling on Tuesday, our regular press day, we go to press with this issue on Monday, but the paper is not likely to reach most of our readers ahead of time.

THE Annual Meeting missionary collection, all told, foots up $14,903.20. This includes a $500 pledge, to be paid inside of a few days. Last year the collection was $16,483.95, and the year before, $12,663.33.

BRO. PAUL MOHLER is now engaged in a series of meetings at Carrington, N. Dak., and speaks very highly of the encouraging condition and present outlook of the congregation. Six have already been baptized, and others may be induced to accept Christ.

SOME one who fails to give his name writes us about the death of Bro. L. M. Kob, of Garden Grove, Iowa, an elder in the Brethren church, who passed to his reward June 26 at the age of seventy-six years. He is said to have been an earnest and faithful minister of the Gospel.

AT our members' meeting, a few evenings ago, Sister Adaline H. Beery and Bro. Harvey Young were chosen delegates to represent our congregation at the District Meeting to be held at Mount Morris, August 3. The members at Elgin do not seem to be backward about furnishing business for the meeting, as they are sending up five queries for consideration.

THERE is more or less complaint about ministers neglecting to exchange visits during love feast occasions. It is to be feared that this time-honored custom is fast disappearing, and that in the course of a decade or two the churches will know little of the joys it brought to the souls of the sainted fathers and mothers of the past. Can we not do something to revive the custom?

WE call attention to the "Notice of a Public Debate" on page 429, this issue. Those desiring a copy of the proposed book should immediately place their orders as directed. This discussion promises to be an interesting one, and if published will doubtless make interesting reading, but the book will not be published unless enough advance orders can be secured to make the venture safe.

BRO. J. S. GEISER, who stood by and witnessed the operation to which Bro. S. N. McCann submitted at the University of Maryland Hospital, Baltimore, June 26, writes us that he is getting along splendidly. The operation occupied two and a half hours, and was one that required special skill. He feels that Bro. McCann will come out all right, but it will be necessary for him to remain at the hospital several weeks.

THE Educational, Ministerial, Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meetings for Northern Illinois and Wisconsin are to be held at Mount Morris, beginning on Tuesday evening, Aug. 1, and closing on Wednesday evening. The program is to appear next week. Following this program will be the District Meeting, which begins on Thursday morning. The elders are to meet in the afternoon of Wednesday.

MANY of our ministers are delivering series of sermons on special topics of interest to their membership, previously announcing the various phases to be treated. This affords an excellent opportunity to the membership to become well informed along those lines, and also to urge others to attend the services. Sometimes a man may not care to attend services upon a general invitation, when he would be glad to come to church in order to hear a discourse on a special topic that appeals to him.

SOME of our contributors voice their regret that the old-time practice of all-day love feasts has well nigh passed away among us. While, owing to changed conditions, this plan has given way to the briefer service of the evening only, we must confess that there was much in the "all-day feast" to recommend it. There was a better attendance by members from other congregations, far and near, and a consequent development of sociability and fellowship, not so common today. Perhaps we are too busy, these days, to devote a whole day to a love feast service.

WE should like to impress the fact on all those having occasion to write our missionaries in India or China, that every letter should bear five cents in postage for each half ounce or fraction thereof. When this is neglected, double postage is collected when the letters are delivered. We heard from one missionary sister who had to pay thirty-four cents before she could receive her mail for the week. It is astonishing how much extra postage our missionaries have to pay, just because of some one's negligence.

SISTER LIZZIE HILARY will be remembered by many of our readers as an earnest missionary worker, with experiences extending from Montreal, Canada, to several points in the United States, especially in Iowa and Minnesota. She tells us of her recent trip from Worthington, Minn., to the Annual Meeting, how she enjoyed the services and the meeting with her friends at the Conference, and also of her trip to Lawrence, Kans., where she may, for the present, be addressed, in care of John Studebaker, R. D. 4.

THE Disciples have caught the consolidation spirit, and now they are to have one paper less. The Christian Union, Des Moines, Iowa, is to be absorbed by The Christian Standard, and one paper is to have the patronage that has heretofore been divided between two well-edited journals. We shall miss the Union, especially the first page, but the editor says that on account of the short hours and high wages demanded by the Labor Union, and other conditions, he finds it impossible to continue the paper and accomplish what he had planned for his readers. Thus the consolidation of papers is a good thing. It saves money for the patrons and gives the people a better paper.

DURING the late Annual Meeting all the missionaries for foreign fields were subjected to a careful examination regarding their faith, and their fitness for the work to be entrusted to them. They were questioned concerning the authenticity of the Scriptures, the divinity of Christ, the reality of the miraculous in God's dealings with his people, the soundness of their faith, the doctrine of the New Testament, the principles of the church in general and their purpose to carry out these principles in their teachings and practice. The examination was conducted by the Board, and is said to have been sufficiently thorough to cover the doctrine and practice of the Church of the Brethren quite fully.

ON page 426, this issue, Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh tells about the death of Bro. David Emmert, of Huntingdon, Pa., which occurred June 21, though the information did not reach us in time for at least a short notice in the issue of last week. Bro. Emmert was one of the most spiritual brethren we ever met. It always did us good to be in his presence, even for a few minutes. He was not only a splendid writer, but he was an excellent artist. He had the rare faculty of putting life into his pictures. His pencil sketches, like books, may be read. His best essays and short, pointed paragraphs ought to be collected and published. They would make clean, entertaining and helpful reading. He is one of the men that society can ill afford to lose. He lived to make the world better, and, considering his health and strength, he certainly did his part.

THE first copy of the "Full Report," completed, was laid on our desk the first day of July, and before this paper reaches our patrons all orders for the Report will have been filled. After receiving the MS., it required a few days less than three weeks to bring out the work. It contains 220 closely-printed pages, and is put up in a workmanlike manner. So far as the speeches are concerned, they have been put in the best shape possible. Most of those who take part in the open Conference forget, for the time, that their speeches are to be published, and do not speak as carefully as they might. For this reason it is no easy task to report and put their speeches in proper form. Those who read the Report have no idea what a task it is to produce such a publication, and have it ready for mailing inside of a few weeks. The price is twenty-five cents a copy, and those who have not placed their orders would better let us hear from them at once.

THE elder who exhorted the members of his flock clearly to exemplify New Testament simplicity by their daily lives, and to let it appear as the hidden man of the heart, did a fine thing for his people. He gave them to understand that the hidden man of the heart should be Gospel simplicity, and that the more the heart is cultivated along this line, the more pronounced the simplicity will appear.

The Boy Problem.

THE boy problem will continue to be a big problem so long as men and women, who are members of the church, are a problem for the Lord. Whenever the brethren and sisters become as much concerned about the Sunday-school and its work as they are about their secular affairs, they are not going to find it so difficult to get the average boy to attend the Sunday-school Sunday after Sunday. Parents and Sunday-school workers must set the boy a good example, and give him to understand that there is something in the religion they profess. Parents who never attend Sunday-school and never have anything to say to their children about their work in the school, should be made to feel that they are helping to make the boy problem still harder to solve. Then the teacher who goes to Sunday-school, teaches his class, and before preaching service begins, goes home, is the second great hindrance in the way of solving the boy problem. It is a dull boy who can not see through this kind of religion. As the thinking boy views it, a religion that will not prompt church members to take a lively interest in the preaching services is of little interest to him. He likes a religion that does something for men and women, and he is just discerning enough to discover that there is a good deal of surface work in what some people call religion. To this we may add the lack of preparation on the part of the teacher. The boy admires the teacher who knows something, but in his soul he scorns the teacher who thinks she can interest him with the little goody-goody stories intended for children of but half his age. The growing boy delights in looking up. He likes heads that have something in them, and is quite willing to be led by some one who can gain his confidence.

"Duties, Responsibilities and Value of Standing Committee."

Brief Outline of Address Given at St. Joseph, Mo., Annual Conference.

(Published by Special Request.)

Historical.

THE Standing Committee, as we now know it, evolved from the necessities of the first and succeeding Conferences. The first Conference, then known as "Big Meeting," "Great Meeting," "Great Council," or "Yearly Meeting," was held in 1742. In those days there were not over a half score organized churches, all told. The bishops and elders in attendance would naturally take charge of the business to come before the Conference, and as "cases" were tried, and difficulties adjusted, letters were written to the churches interested, and signed by the Committee of bishops and elders. These were the first Minutes of our Conferences and this was our Standing Committee in its incipient stage. It was a self-appointed Committee and was not known as Standing Committee until 1853.

Gradually a change brought about the rule that the elders and bishops of the church in which the "Great Meeting" was held should nominate the Committee. When this change took place is uncertain. The Conference of 1848 decided that "all ordained elders present are to form the Committee to take in and bring before the Meeting those matters to be considered." But long before this the rule obtained which gave the elders of the church, holding the Annual Meeting, the right to nominate the Committee.

How It Was Done.

The following account of the appointment of the Committee in 1830 is from the pen of Eld. Henry Kurtz, who attended the "Great Council" that year. He says: "When worship was over, one of the oldest brethren made a brief statement, according to which it became the duty of the elders of the church holding the Meeting to nominate those brethren who were to receive the messages, etc., and conduct the business of the Meeting. This nominating was done simply thus: The brother stepped up to what may be called the minister's table and, with a sweep of the hand, pointed out those seated behind the table as his and the church's choice, without naming them, and told them to follow him to a private place." A striking example of the trust and confidence that the brethren reposed in each other in those days. It is sad to reflect that some of this has been lost in later years.

In 1853 a query was sent to Annual Meeting, asking that Standing Committee (the first time the name was used in the Minutes), be appointed by ballot from among all elders present: Answer.—"Considered unanimously to make no change from the ancient order and present usage, viz., that elders of the church, where Yearly Meeting is held, should have the privilege, as heretofore, to nominate said Committee."

The year 1866 brought about a radical change in holding Conference. State Districts were organized and delegate representation was introduced, but no change in appointing Standing Committee was made. It was provided that "The bishops and elders of the church holding Annual Meeting shall select from the bishops present the Standing Committee. Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois shall each be entitled to three, if present, and two, if present, from each of the remaining States in which churches are located, and whenever said States shall contain ten bishops each, they shall be entitled to three." Two years later it was decided "that each State District elect some one of the bishops within the State District to constitute one of said Committee." This rule, with the exception that Districts with 3,500 or more members are entitled to two representatives on Standing Committee, continues to this day.

Duties and Responsibilities.

It is the duty of Standing Committee to answer all unanswered queries. In practice the answer placed to a query by Standing Committee is passed by Conference. There are, however, exceptions to the rule. In 1902 at Harrisburg, Pa., a query asked for the appointment of a Peace Committee, and was answered favorably by Standing Committee, and so confident was the Committee that its answer would pass Conference that a Committee was nominated in anticipation of favorable action. Conference, however, refused to pass the answer.

Standing Committee may not change the import of queries sent to Conference. Annual Meeting has been very jealous of this restriction. In 1875 it was thought that the import of a query on feet-washing had been changed, and a Committee was appointed to investigate the supposed infraction, but reported that Standing Committee had not transcended its rights.

The Standing Committee elects officers for the Conference, appoints Committees to settle church difficulties where such exist, nominates all Conference and general working Committees and Boards for church work, passes on the fitness of all missionaries sent to the foreign field, selects the place for the succeeding Conference and gives advice and counsel when asked for.

Perhaps the most important and far-reaching duty of Standing Committee is the appointment of Committees to settle difficulties in churches. To select men to arbitrate and settle church troubles is a heavy responsibility. Unless great care is taken in choosing men for such work, trouble may be augmented instead of diminished. Men should be selected only after prayerful consideration and a careful study and discussion of their ability and fitness for the case to be looked into. They should be men of unblemished reputation, especially adapted, by good judgment, to see the right and wrong of close questions, faithful, pious, godly men, well known for their devotion to Christ and the church.

Conference imposes no restrictions on Standing Committee in selecting Committees save that too many should not be taken from its own body. The answer to query of 1875 is both wise and diplomatic: "We advise as Paul does,—observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality." This wise counsel should be heeded at all times. A recent Standing Committee, with some fifty members, made thirty-seven appointments and nearly half were from among themselves. Several of these were appointed on two or three Committees. This action is hardly in harmony with the advice given by Conference, especially when it is remembered we have some twelve hundred elders and bishops in the church.

The value of our Standing Committee can not be estimated. It would be impossible, under our present system, to hold a Conference without it. No deliberative body attempts to do business without suitable Committees. The Congress of the United States passes no bills or laws without first referring them to Committees for full examination, amendment and correction before they are reported to the House and Senate for discussion and action.

Standing Committee is a strong, conservative balance to our Conference, a strong support of righteousness and sound judgment. It serves, and performs the most arduous labor without compensation. Like all deliberative bodies, it may err, but, on the whole, it has been remarkably free from mistakes. It has enjoyed, and should continue to have, the sympathy, the prayers and the strong support of the entire Brotherhood.

Suggestions.

Standing Committee is not now entitled to the name. Thirty years ago we began changing the term of service until we have reached the absurdity of changing every member of the Committee each year. It seems strange that we should insist in thus proceeding with the most important Committee in our church work. We use more wisdom with other important Committees. The members of the Mission Board hold their places for many years, thus having opportunity to study and become familiar with their work. But we knock our Standing Committee to pieces every year. An immediate change is needed here. The members of the Committee should be elected for three years and be so arranged that one-third of its membership be elected every year. In this way the service of the Committee would be increased in value to the church.

As it now is, Standing Committee has too much work crowded upon it, with but little time to give it the best possible attention. It should meet two days earlier in the week, and hold shorter sessions. No one can do his best work under continuous strain and pressure. Two sessions a day should be the maximum. The night should be given to rest. Committees to churches should be appointed the week previous to the open Council. This would give more time for the consideration of cases, and of suitable men to settle them.

Standing Committee and Conference should have the right to amend queries. The rule now in force makes the District superior to Conference, which is illogical and out of line with our form of church government. First the congregation, second the District Meeting, and third and highest the Annual Conference. Queries, not being subject to change or amendment, are often "respectfully returned" because of some needed change in wording.

Committees to churches should invariably report their work to the Standing Committee. Within the last few years this is being done more frequently than in the past. It should be made the rule. Logically all appointees should report to the appointing power.

Changes in men should never be made simply for the sake of changing, neither should a few men hold place to the exclusion of others equally well qualified for the work. In State Districts the few should not always represent on Standing Committee to the entire exclusion of other able, faithful men.

Standing Committee is growing in numbers rapidly and may become unwieldy. Fifty years ago Annual Meeting was held at Beaver Creek, Va. The following named brethren formed the Standing Committee:

1. Joseph Arnold.
2. George Shaver.
3. Peter Crumpacker.
4. Martin Miller.
5. Daniel Miller.
6. John Kline, Moderator.
7. B. F. Moomaw, Clerk.

The year preceding, the Conference was held at

Limestone, Tenn., and the Standing Committee was made up as follows.

1. Peter Nead.
2. John Metzger.
3. Henry Koontz.
4. Daniel Barnhart.
5. Peter Nininger.
6. J. B. Eversole.
7. Christian Long.
8. John Kline.
9. Abraham Neff.
10. D. P. Saylor.
11. James Quinter.

At our last Conference we had fifty-one members on Standing Committee, an increase of five hundred per cent in fifty years. Next year the Northwest will send three instead of one, as heretofore. It may become necessary to change the basis of representation if the growth of State Districts continues, which God grant may be the case.

Standing Committee should be made up of good men, full of the Holy Ghost and of faith. They should be Bible students, spiritually-minded, well educated, ripe in experience, apt to teach, ruling well their own houses, of good reputation without, at their best in matured judgment and activity, without prejudice, ready to hold fast all that is good, and to adopt the new if it is better than the old, men who study the church and her needs, who judge the past, weigh the present and plan for the future, who are loyal to Christ and the church, and are willing to make every sacrifice for the interests of Zion. To men of this type the church may unhesitatingly entrust her Conference interests, give them implicit confidence, and offer for them her earnest, effectual prayers.

Our Losses.

This world is said to be a world of losses and crosses, and so it often appears from our human viewpoint, because we do not always see things as they really are, and as God sees them.

There are times when these losses seem to fall upon us heavier than at others, owing somewhat, of course, to their character, the time in which they came and the surrounding conditions. This week has been one beyond the ordinary, in depriving us of two of our active and much-esteemed deacons.

In the first part of the week our brother, Prof. Joseph Saylor, who has been at the head of the Mathematical Department of Juniata College almost from its beginning, and a deacon of the Huntingdon church ever since its organization at this place, left this place. For some thirty-five years he has filled both these positions with general satisfaction and great credit to himself. As a mathematician he had few superiors; and as a teacher he was faithful almost to a fault, as he worked at his adopted calling beyond his allotment of physical strength and endurance. As a result of his strenuous labors he needed rest and outdoor exercise, which he expects to enjoy on his farm, where he now resides, and where he expects to make his home.

As a deacon, church worker and church attendant he was faithful in the fullest sense of the word. He was always ready to go and do any act of duty in his line of work, willingly, promptly and efficiently,—no matter what the character of it was. For years he has been our church secretary and caretaker of the weekly offerings made. In this position he was scrupulously careful and honest, so that his integrity was never questioned. He leaves us, taking with him the best wishes, the respect and the kindly esteem of both the college and the church. The same is true of his wife, Sister Saylor, and their little family. May the days and years, to be lived on their pleasant farm home, be restful, peaceful and pleasant, is the prayer of us all.

As Wednesday morning, June 21, was heralded in by the songs of birds and the bright rays of the rising sun, the spirit of our brother, David Emmert, passed out of its house of clay in which it had been suffering for a number of days and weeks. As he was in the midst of the greatest work of his life, he battled determinedly against the foe that, it seemed to him, had come to cut short the work that lay so heavily upon his heart. But the conflict was an uneven one, and he was overcome, because the Master was ready to call him up higher. And so, with a deep-seated hunger resting on his soul, to continue his work for the relief and lifting of the orphans and neglected children, he yielded to the call, and in the end quietly fell asleep.

Bro. Emmert was born in 1854, near Benevola, Washington County, Md. In early life he accepted the religion of Jesus Christ, and united with the Church of the Brethren. In starting out in life he had the advantage of a good common school education, and more than an ordinary gift of mental possibilities. In the beginning of his active life work he learned the carpenter trade. And though he had evidence of success in this craft, while engaged in it, he longed for a wider field, and one that would be more in harmony with the active trend of his mind.

In 1877 he came to Huntingdon and at once entered into the work of the school, which had been opened the year before by his special friend, Prof. J. M. Zook. During these early years of school work his mind began to center on one of the natural passions of life, and by careful study, determined practice, and attending art schools, he made rapid progress. He became the art teacher of the college, made himself a reputation in the profession and had promise of success.

In the midst of his artistic success the Lord directed him into another avenue of usefulness,—that of human philanthropy, or the care-taking and uplifting of orphans, homeless, and neglected children. And out of his ceaseless and tireless efforts, in looking after the poor orphans and homeless children, grew, in 1881, the Orphans' Home of Huntingdon, and also one in Hagerstown, Md.

So strongly did this class of children appeal to his mind, heart and sympathy, that he gradually devoted more and more of his time and service to it, and so deeply did the work impress the hearts of the people that soon the means were forthcoming for enlarged facilities. Land was purchased, suitable buildings were erected for a temporary home for the children, until good homes could be secured for them. An organization was effected, and Bro. Emmert was made its efficient superintendent. Since then he has been devoting all his time and service to the betterment of unfortunate children. The great joy of his life has been the children, whom he saved, lifted up and cared for, that are now growing up to call him blessed. He that blesses others, shall himself be blessed.

Just before and during his late sickness he succeeded in raising twenty-five thousand dollars endowment, to be used in looking after and caring for the children that have already and may yet be placed in homes, as, in his mind, this was one of the very important parts of the great work for which he was willing to give his life.

Bro. Emmert was an incessant worker, and to be idle was painful to him. Whatever he undertook to do, he did with his might, and never rested until he could see that something was done. Just how the work will be affected by his being called from it, is yet to be learned. It has been committed into the hands of his eldest son, Bro. Lewis Emmert; and we have every reason to believe that he will be true and faithful to the trust placed in him.

Bro. Emmert was of strong faith in the religion of Jesus Christ, and always made his work and plans subjects of earnest prayer, believing that the Lord was the Great Source from which all blessings come.

Soon after coming to Huntingdon he was chosen to the office of deacon, in which office he served faithfully and well. He was imbued with the true and ideal spirit of the Christian religion,—that it was not a matter of empty forms, but of the Saint James kind; and, better still, the Christ kind which shows itself in its best light by "going about and doing good." Yes, we will miss him.

The Death Cup.

A good deal is being said, these days, about abolishing the "death cup,"—the cup found at public drinking places,—and in fact, some of the States are getting rid of it by passing laws against its use. But there is a cup more deadly than the public cup, and yet most States are extremely slow to recognize the fact. We refer to the intoxicating cup. We care not how often the cup may be cleaned, it is the cup of death all the same. It might, more properly, be called the cup of devils. When a little girl, a short time ago, by the use of the public drinking cup, received into her system poison germs that caused her death, the papers all over the country demanded the abolishing of the public cup. Yet in the very city where the innocent little girl lost her life on account of the public drinking cup, there are hundreds of people poisoned each year by the cup of devils, and the great dailies, the papers that aroused the feeling against the public drinking cup, treat the matter with a cool indifference. Because a little girl dies, the whole nation is stirred, but when a thousand children, a thousand men and women, meet with a worse fate, nothing is said. If the press of this country means to be fair and sincere, why does it not rise up against the intoxicating cup? When it comes to denouncing the public cup, the papers manifest a zeal worthy of the cause they espouse, but when it comes to defending suffering humanity against the cup of devils they shrink from duty.

Controversy in the Messenger.

While attending the St. Joseph Conference a number of our readers spoke to us about the exchange of views permitted in the Messenger on rebaptism and some other subjects that happened to be open questions. They thought such an exchange of views might be proper if the circulation of the paper were limited to our own membership; but since the paper is very largely read outside of the church, they feared that the controversial feature would prove detrimental. A number of the Mission Boards are using the Messenger in their respective mission fields, and for that reason would like to see controversy eliminated, as far as possible. The reasons offered for a paper entirely free from controversy are certainly worthy of some consideration, but just how to manage it, in the face of the demand for an exchange of views on open questions, is what puzzles us. Our people ought to have an opportunity, within reasonable limits, of discussing the live questions before the Brotherhood, and yet we ought to keep in mind the good that may be accomplished by circulating a prudently-edited paper on our mission fields. We confess that the best policy to adopt, in order to meet the needs of the different conditions, is not clear to us.

A Correction.

Much to the annoyance of some local churches a few secular papers are saying that the late Conference adopted a dress report that removes the former restrictions. It is not our purpose to discuss the subject or to explain the report, but we do say that the report, as adopted, was not intended to remove any clearly-defined restrictions. The report is a condensed restatement of our teachings and position on the matter of Christian attire, and if properly studied and prudently carried out, should prove helpful in maintaining New Testament simplicity. The restatement, however, is intended to take the place of all other decisions on the subject, and is meant to be applied with all due consideration for the saving of the soul, as well as for the maintenance of the Gospel principles so long held sacred by the Brethren. Instead of discussing the report, we need to study it, and plan for carrying it out in good faith.

Sleeping Churches.

One of our exchanges says that it is time for the churches to wake up. We wonder why there should be any necessity for churches to wake up. Why should churches sleep? Whose fault is it when a church goes to sleep? Is it the elders' fault? Is it the preachers' fault? Or is it the fault of the body as a whole? But more to the point: Is it your church that is asleep? If so, should you waken it or should you fall asleep, too? We must admit that some churches are fast asleep. They hardly realize what is going on around them, and their condition is serious. Somebody should sound the alarm of death and the judgment, or they will soon enter the sleep of death. But, after all, why should there be sleepy churches, and who is to blame?

FROM MAINE.

Perhaps it will be interesting to our members to learn that the work of our church has been taken up in Maine, and, with God's help, is to be pushed forward. The writer has held several meetings in a schoolhouse in Bowdoin, about seventy miles from his home. All things being favorable, he will locate there this fall, and carry on the work.

We recently gave a Bible reading at the home of an invalid friend, and have a very urgent invitation to come again soon. We expect to speak at Bowdoin, on Sunday, July 2, and also to address a union Sunday-school picnic at the same place July 4. We shall surely emphasize two great points: (1) The freedom of our souls and bodies from the sins of this world. (2) The sane Fourth. We desire the prayers of the Brotherhood in general, for our success in this work; also that the old State of Maine may never go back on the grandest and holiest law ever placed on its statute books,—the prohibitory liquor law, which will come before the people in September.

THE STANDING COMMITTEE OF 1911 AND HER WORK.

The Standing Committee of 1911 consisted of thirty-two members, whose average age was fifty-two. Twenty-four of these served for the first time; twelve, twice; seven, three times, and eight four or more times. The Committee held twenty-seven sessions, aggregating fifty hours of hard, mental labor, intensified by the anxiety as to the future outcome of the business disposed of. There were twenty-three queries and petitions to answer, besides some thirteen protests, calls for Committees and the setting forth of certain grievances mentioned.

The Committee wrought deliberately, cautiously, carefully and prayerfully, and they did what was done conscientiously, and with a constant consciousness of the promptings of the Holy Spirit. What has been done is now a matter of record. May we all pray that the results may indeed be for the good of our beloved Fraternity!

Could there possibly be a single brother or sister that would think for a moment that this body of representative elders of mature age, from the different Districts and sections of our Brotherhood, as a creature and servant of the church, could possibly have anything personal or selfish in their work? God forbid, if mistakes were made, it is because of an error of the head and not of the heart.

May the strongest desire and prayer of all be that we may be one; that the General Conference, the District council, the work of the home congregation, and each individual act in unison. "That they may all be one, even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Daleville, Va., June 22.

SEMINOLE, FLORIDA.

We have been here nearly three months and so far like it very well. We are getting acquainted with the people and the country. We have an opportunity to preach the Word.

There is an M. E. church about three rods from our house, and as they are rather weak, and their pastor can come only once a month, he and the people asked me to preach for them, so we have arranged for meetings the second and fourth Sundays; on the second Sunday, at 7:30 P. M., and on the fourth Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7: 30 P. M. The attendance and attention are good.

We have distributed some tracts and given our Messenger to some. The people seem to think well of our doctrine and have shown us great kindness, for which we pray God to bless them.

This incident will show how they respect us. A little over a week ago it was announced that a little child would be buried at the cemetery, less than a mile from our place. A neighbor said to my wife: "Come and go along to the cemetery." So when the time came they went. The family that lost the child are poor and from another neighborhood, and their minister could not come to comfort them, on account of sickness in his own family. So when Sister Felthouse got there, they wanted her to have a little service at the grave. So she, with her head covering, as directed in 1 Cor. 11, opened the service by prayer. Some one handed her a Bible. She spoke a few words of exhortation and read some comforting words from a part of John 14, and again led in prayer. Those present sang several hymns. They were all glad for the service, and Sister Felthouse thanked the Lord for his grace and goodness to his children.

Dear brethren and sisters, God always blesses those who do their duty. Always be ready for every opportunity. Pray for us down here alone, with no Church of the Brethren within a hundred miles. If there is any church nearer, please write to us. Love to all God's children!

Seminole, Fla., June 21. J. V. Felthouse.

OUR STREET MEETINGS.

Bro. James M. Moore came to us June 11, and inaugurated our series of meetings by a Saturday evening street service, which since then is being continued each Saturday evening. It was a venture for us, in a city of this size, and not a few of us had some misgivings as to the results.

A few consecrated brethren and sisters first gathered in a quiet place for special devotion and for guidance before venturing out into the throngs of people, largely given over to pleasure. When the singing began on the street corner, a crowd of eager listeners gathered around us. One man expressed himself thus, "When I heard the singing, I could not help coming." After singing several of the good old hymns, Bro. Moore mounted the stool above the curbing, and heralded forth the plain, simple Word of Truth. It was the glad tidings of God's saving a lost world through the life, death, and intercession of his Son. There was no levity, but words of soberness and righteousness were greeting the ears of these attentive listeners, composed of unbelievers and Christians,—foreigners and native-born.

The second Saturday night was even more encouraging, though it had rained and there were not so many people on the streets. This time the gathering was larger than the first. Although there was the calling-out of hack-men for passengers to resorts and the passing of large placards, inviting people to a dance, and though there were other things to distract attention, the listeners remained to the last.

It is needless to say that this kind of work puts one to the test more so than most other activities. It requires the constant help of the Father. But it does inspire one to do more to reach the unsaved. This is the Bible way of reaching the people. Jesus, Moses, the prophets, John Baptist, Jesus Christ, Paul and others preached in this way. Shall we not have more of this kind of work for the Master who promised to be with us?

It carries an impression to others that such people are in earnest. It arrests many souls in their onward rush towards the whirlpool of worldlyism. Ezra Flory.

THE RIGHT KIND OF HIKES.

The Sunday-school editor, in the July issue of the Teachers' Monthly, gives his views as to understand that, while he believes in the class of hikes that make fine men and noble women, he has no confidence whatever in the cross-country hikes that lead the boys and girls away from home. We clip the following:

We have on our desk before us a paper containing the following words under the above caption:

"Cross-country hikes are especially popular in the early spring of the year. These are excellent means of cementing class friendship. One class takes a 'hike' once a week during the month of April. The boys meet early in the morning, walk several miles, stop at some attractive place for a simple camp breakfast is enjoyed, and the return tramp is made in time for school or office."

The hikes referred to are in connection with organized class work in the Sunday-school. This is an age of planning and organizing, wise and otherwise. Every conceivable thing is offered as a means to make the Sunday-school go.

We are not opposed to proper plans or proper organization, but we are frank to confess that we are tired of a good deal of the hiking. It is hike here, hike there, and hike yonder. No one has yet proposed to hike off home and help father or mother. The reason, probably is, that most of the hikers are disposed to get as far away from work as possible. Camping, fishing, playing and hiking suits them so much better.

What we need is a truer view of the duties of Sunday-school workers, a saner view of what the Sunday-school ought to accomplish, a saner view of what constitutes real life and real religion. We need to turn our attention and our energies to character building in home life and the home altar. It is unfortunate that so many plans are offered for Sunday-school workers, that take the boys and girls away from home. There are enough things to take them away from home without so-called Sunday-school workers planning more to take them away, and that before breakfast.

We need a call, "Back to the home and fireside!" Some have already done too much hiking. What is needed is to hike back home to father and mother.

We can not refrain from saying, that we hope none of our Sunday-school teachers will be so thoughtless as to take up with the Boy Scout movement now popular in many localities. Let us have our eyes open and not be caught napping. It is no part of our business to raise and train a generation of Scouts. It is our business to develop a generation of good men and noble fathers, men who have been taught and who believe the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

PREVALENCE OF DIVORCES.

According to the census reports more than a million divorces have been granted in this country during the last twenty years. During the past ten years there has been one divorce for every ten marriages. Should the number of divorces increase, during the next few decades, in the same ratio as for the past ten years, it will equal the marriages.

There is little doubt that, in the great majority of cases, there was no justifiable cause whatever for many of the divorces. They were without excuse or apology. The wanton and reckless disregard of marriage vows not only reveals a deplorable lack of truth and sincerity, but betokens, if possible, even a worse state of affairs for the coming years.

The citadel of a nation is the home, and the deadliest foe to the home is the divorce court. The present greatness of our nation has been achieved through the peace and purity of the home. Whatever, therefore, threatens this, should be dreaded more than death, and shunned more than dishonor. Certainly we confront, in this question, a serious problem and one which calls for speedy and drastic treatment. There should be a campaign of education in which our young people should be taught the solemnity and responsibility of marriage.

Let those who are to be joined in the holy bonds of matrimony be made to feel that their lives are one till separated by death. Let us not approach the marriage altar without serious thought and earnest prayer. Then shall it come to pass that marriages which are made in heaven shall not be broken on earth. It would be timely, also, for those who have or are contemplating separation, to picture to themselves the bankrupt home, the half-orphaned children and the bitter but unavailing regret. Think about the poor children who are governed by people who have so little respect for themselves that they will marry a person who has a living companion. What a shame on our American civilization to see the divorce evil assuming such appalling proportions!

If every true citizen would raise his voice against this evil, we could do much toward removing this great sin from our land, and establish peace and happiness in the home. Leander Smith.

WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Some time ago I wrote an article, entitled "Mission Work in the South," and in response to this the brethren and sisters have donated, to the best of my recollection, about thirty yearly subscriptions to the Messenger, and the Publishing House sends twenty copies each week. These go, principally, into families that know nothing of our faith and practice. I have been hearing from them, and each one speaks very highly of the Gospel Messenger. I know from their expressions that there is reading being done, and it is having an impression on the minds of some.

A brother and his wife wrote me, a short time ago, for names for the Missionary Visitor. I sent him fifteen names. The copies sent from the Publishing House I take to Sunday-school with me, and if there are any strangers there, I give a copy to each, and the balance of them I give to people who, I know, will read them. There are a few yet that do not live here who would like to have the Messenger, but we are not able to furnish it.

My dear brethren and sisters, this work will surely be the means of accomplishing much good, if we were only able to put in able men in the field to gather the fruits of this seed sown. A brother, who has been in the Northern mission field, wrote me some time ago in regard to the work here, and said he hoped to come into this field to work. Could there not be a way fixed for him to come?

I see in the Missionary Visitor that a small amount has been donated for the Southern field. We pray that there may be enough means soon to send a man into this field. A brother has contributed ten dollars and asked me to let the readers know, once in a while, how this work is progressing. So I am writing this. Our Heavenly Father only knows whether I shall be able to keep this work up or not, as we lost practically everything we had by fire on the 14th inst. Not being financially able to rebuild, we do not know yet what we will do, but the Lord's will, and not ours, be done. If we are to stay here he will provide some way. If we do not stay, we will try to leave it in some one's hands that will carry it on for the work. But our hearts are in this work and we do not want to give it up, if it can be helped. We ask an interest in the prayers of the dear brethren and sisters in our behalf, in our time of trouble. Francis M. White.

OUR PLACES OF WORSHIP.

ship." As Jesus was found in the temple at the age of twelve years, so we should be found, on Sunday, at the place of worship. We should approach and enter the house of God with respect and godly fear. All worldly thoughts should be obliterated.

There are, in the Church of the Brethren, many places of worship. Some are in cities and some in rural districts. Some of them have stood for many years. The father above sees all these meeting-houses, from the Atlantic Coast to the Golden Gate in California. Yea, all over the world his eye is ever upon them.

Years ago our fathers built the meetinghouses in the country, but now many are built in cities and towns. There are still many in the rural districts, however.

Every State, with few exceptions, still has these old country churches. Here our fathers worshiped in days gone by. Here they sang and prayed. Here they preached the Gospel in the power of the Holy Ghost. Many of the faithful ones have sung the last song, offered the last prayer, and preached the last sermon. Many have long since fallen asleep, and are sweetly sleeping in the silent graveyard, near the old church. Winter winds no more chill them. The snow has often fallen on their graves, but it does not disturb their repose.

Many of these meetinghouses were built in valleys, others on hills. Many are surrounded by shade trees. How beautiful in summer, on a bright Sabbath morning, to worship here! The sun is shining brightly, the birds are praising their Maker, and this old earth seems to be like Paradise. The old songs are sung, earnest prayers are offered, and good sermons are preached.

Yes, we love our places of worship. Many of those that preached in days gone by are with us no more, but others fill their places. There are meetinghouses standing where Eld. James Quinter and other prominent elders of former years preached.

Annual Meetings were held in meetinghouses in former years. District and Ministerial Meetings are still held in them, and for some of these gatherings the large seating capacity of some is very much too great.

Some of these meetinghouses have a good deal of history connected with them. There is the old Marsh Creek church, in the vicinity of the Gettysburg battlefield. Then there are others which figure largely in church history.

One of the most attractive meetinghouses that the writer ever saw is the Black Rock house in York County, Pa., close to the Maryland line. Near the meetinghouse is running water of the finest and best. There may be others just as attractive as this one, but the writer never saw them. There are, in Eastern Pennsylvania, many of these old country churches. Here the love feasts are held, and large crowds assemble on those occasions.

As we think of these old churches and the good they have done, let us love them all the more. Many of our western brethren remember the old churches in Pennsylvania or Virginia. They think of the good meetings they attended there and they think of loved ones resting close by. Many of them can say,

"In a lonely graveyard, many miles away,
Lies your dear old mother, 'neath the cold, cold clay."

Others, in the East, can think of churches out West in the same way. After all, we are but pilgrims, and can stay here but a short time. We must soon pass away, and like ourselves, these old meetinghouses will also pass away.

"A few more meetings here,
Shall cheer us on our way;
And we shall reach the endless rest,
The eternal Sabbath Day."

Elizabethtown, Pa.

I SPOKE a kind word, almost thoughtlessly, and a long time afterward one thanked me for it with tears in his eyes. Then I thought, since kindness costs so little and helps so much, why am I not always kind!—William E Barton.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

CALIFORNIA.

Santa Ana.—We held our love feast June 17. Brethren B. F. Masterson and A. L. D. Martin. We had Long Beach Dal, officiated. We appreciated Bro. Martin's singing while with us. About sixty members communed. We feel thankful that the brethren and sisters from Long Beach, Covina, Los Angeles, San Diego and Whittier were present. Our Sunday-school met at 10 A. M., and at 11 A. M. Brethren Masterson and Henry Larick, of Long Beach, Cal., addressed us. Dinner was served at 12 M. to all present. At 3 P. M. we had a social meeting for everybody to take part. The house was full at the morning services. All enjoyed the two days' meetings.—Lizzie R. Pugh, 606 East First St., Santa Ana, Cal., June 20.

CANADA.

Sharon.—We met in council June 16. Our elders, Brethren Shamberger and Shatto, presiding. The business was disposed of in order. Bro. William Holingburg was elected for superintendent. We decided to hold our love feast July 22.—A. G. Sailer, Nanton, Alta, Can., June 26.

COLORADO.

Bethany.—Today we had our first service in our new church. We had children's day exercises and preaching. We are not able to complete the house now, but it is finished so far that we can use it for services. The Sunday-school, Conference of our whole congregation will be held here July 23. We anticipate an interesting and profitable convention.—Our Sunday-school and preaching services are growing in interest and attendance.—Wayne Kesler, Bend, Colo., June 26.

Grand Junction Mission.—We are glad that our Mission Board has succeeded in locating Bro. A. C. Root and wife, of Denver, in this city. They now have charge of the work here and we feel that much good work has been given to us. The attendance at our Sunday-school and preaching services has been steadily increasing during the last two months. Bro. Root has been a faithful pastor and visits the flock. On account of the faithful members here, we hope that before long we will have a strong congregation here, and a live part of the city. Some improvements are now being added to our building, and we expect to start in taking on our life.—Lena I. Swank, 833 West Main St., Grand Junction, Colo., June 26.

IDAHO.

Twin Falls.—Our church met in council June 16. Our elder, Bro. Harry Hilton, presiding. Seven letters were granted. Bro. O. Fahrney was elected delegate to District Meeting. Our Christian Workers' Meeting and organization was held. Elmer Flory as president. We will have children's day June 27.—Ella Fahrney, 761 Second Ave., North, Twin Falls, Idaho, June 27.

ILLINOIS.

Pleasant Grove.—Our council meeting met June 26. Our elder, Bro. George Miller, presided at the meeting. Two were received into membership. Our church letter was also desired, and Bro. Henry Lillgh was chosen as our elder for one year. Lyman Hall was elected trustee. Bro. Ulery was chosen to represent us at District Meeting, and Bro. Ira Stutsman as alternate. Our communion services will be held Sept. 25. Bro. Miller presided over the Love Feast held Sunday and Sunday night. One has been received into fellowship by baptism since our last report.—Robert C. Wells, Sheller, Ill., June 27.

INDIANA.

Elkhart Valley church met in council June 24. Our elder, Bro. Frank Kridler, presided. Two letters were read. Since our last report three other letters were read at another meeting. All these letters were granted at the meeting mentioned. We decided to hold our harvest meeting Aug. 12. It is to be an all-day meeting. We will have a basket dinner in the forenoon, and a temperance lecture in the afternoon. Bro. David Anglemyer is to do the preaching.—William Brubaker, Elkhart, Ind., June 26.

Atwood.—Our church met in council June 17. Our elder, Bro. Peter Hout, presiding. Two letters were read. Four home ministrators were appointed to do Sunday-school mission work. Our elder having moved away, Brethren Jno. Rice, and Bro. John W. Flora was elected elder for one year. Three our last report a young sister and his wife were baptized.—Goldie Henry, R. D. 1, Kokomo, Ind., June 28.

Ladoga.—Mrs. M. Flory, of Girard, Ill., just closed a very successful series of meetings at this place. There were only two accessions, the young daughter and son of the writer, yet the meetings were enormously well attended. The attendance and interest were excellent throughout, in spite of the extremely busy season. Sister Flory had charge of three anointing services. The earnest prayers of these people will follow them.—Lulu Godown, Ladoga, Ind., June 28.

Maple Grove congregation announces the date of an all-day harvest meeting to be held July 23. Bro. Walter Warstler will conduct the services. Bro. Warstler is the son of sister Clara E. Burtfield, New Paris, Ind., June 23.

Middle Fork church met in council June 19, with Ed. J. H. Wright, presiding. One letter was received. Sunday-school officers were elected, with Bro. D. D. Hufford as superintendent; Bro. S. H. Irick, secretary. Our Sunday-school visiting officers were also elected, with Bro. Dennis Hufford as president. Our harvest meeting has been fixed for Aug. 26. A committee was appointed to arrange for a program in the afternoon. Sept. 22, 5 & P. M. will have our love feast. We expect Bro. C. B. Smith, of Kansas, to hold a series of meetings in this congregation in August.—Florence G. Replogle, Owaseo, Ind., June 26.

Mississinewa church met in council June 19, with Ed. J. H. Wright, presiding. One letter was received. Sunday-school officers were elected, with Bro. D. D. Hufford as superintendent; Bro. S. H. Irick, secretary. Our Sunday-school visiting officers were also elected, with Bro. Dennis Hufford as president. Our harvest meeting has been fixed for Aug. 26. A committee was appointed to arrange for a program in the afternoon. Sept. 22, 5 & P. M. will have our love feast. We expect Bro. C. B. Smith, of Kansas, to hold a series of meetings in this congregation in August.—Florence G. Replogle, Owaseo, Ind., June 26.

Nettle Creek.—Our church met in council June 17. Bro. D. M. Byerly presided. Two letters were granted. Our elder was asked to hold our love feast Sept. 16, but owing to other arrangements, Bro. Jno. Norris, we concluded to have it with us later, Sept. 23. The love feast is to be followed by a series of meetings, to begin Sept. 26. Bro. Norris, Eld. J. M. Blough, Creek church, gave us an interesting sermon last Sunday, and also preached for us in the evening.—Maggie Bridge, R. D. 11, Reynolds, Ind.

Spring Creek.—The joint Sunday-school Meeting of the Sugar Creek, Spring Creek and Pipe Creek churches was held at the Spring Creek church June 26. The attendance was good, considering the wet weather. Services began promptly at 10 o'clock. The topics were discussed with much power. The next meeting will be held in Pipe Creek church in the near future.—Nora A. Ross, Sidney, Ind., June 28.

Tippecanoe church met in council June 17. As our elder was not present, Bro. F. O. Richcreek, our pastor, presided. One letter was granted. The writer was elected clerk. We also decided to hold our harvest meeting sometime in August. Bro. William Overholser is to do the preaching.—Josiah Garber, R. D. 3, Syracuse, Ind., June 26.

Union.—Eld. Geo. L. Studebaker, of North Manchester, will assist in our harvest meeting July 15. Our neighboring churches will please make a note of this and be with us.—A. Laura Appelman, Plymouth, Ind., June 26.

Upper Fall Creek.—We met in council at the old church on Saturday. There was not much business on hand, but we felt that it was good to be there. We were well admonished by our brethren, and we feel that we were strengthened and encouraged to press on in the good work. Bro. Henry Fadely was moderator, in the absence of our elder. Our love feast is appointed for Nov. 3, at 10:30 A. M. We will begin a series of meetings two weeks previous to the love feast. We also expect to secure Bro. Edson Ulery's services to hold a Bible school next August.—Florida J. E. Green, Middletown, Ind., June 28.

White church met in council June 24. Our elder, Bro. A. C. Crosswhite, presided. No special business came before the meeting. Two letters were granted, and the writer elected was elected to take the place of Sister Martha Groff as Messenger correspondent. We will have visiting brethren and sisters, enjoyed a very spiritual love feast held June 24, at 7 P. M. Eld. A. C. Crosswhite, Bro. John W. Kelley, our field representative for the Brethren Publishing House, was with us with interesting statements on German Sunday-schools, which was very interesting.—Lelah Wall, R. D. 38, Clarksbill, Ind., June 26.

IOWA

Curlew.—Our meetings, conducted by Bro. J. S. Zimmerman, of Waterloo, Iowa, have been brought to a close. One put on Christ in baptism. We believe that others were almost persuaded. Bro. Zimmerman came right from Annual Meeting. He was filled to overflowing and the Spirit was there. We thank God for the good sermons he preached, and pray that he will be blessed in every effort put forth for the saving of souls. Our church met in council June 16. Bro. William H. Beahm presiding. Sister Maud Whitehead was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school; Bro. Carl Buhn, secretary-treasurer; Bro. Geo. Delaney, church secretary-treasurer and solicitor. We had our love feast June 17. About all of our members were present. Bro. J. S. Zimmerman officiated. Bro. Geo. Brallier preached a good sermon from Song of Solomon, "The Travels and Life of Paul," which was very interesting.—Grace Prentice, Curlew, Iowa, June 24.

Franklin County church met in council June 16. Bro. Harvey Eller presiding. Two letters were taken in the welfare of the church. We received ten letters of membership. June 17 we had a Sunday-school meeting, which was very interesting and uplifting meeting. Bro. Gillum, of Prospect Grove, Iowa, accompanied by Bro. D. N. Beahm, of Virginia, conducted the Word unto us very effectively during the service. Bro. Hood officiated. Bro. Gillum gave us two very good sermons on Sunday.—Frank K. Allen, Dumont, Iowa, June 26.

Keene.—Our church love feast was held at this place. Bro. I. N. H. Beahm, of Virginia, officiated at the communion. The services were well attended and much enjoyed. Following the love feast a very interesting two weeks' series of meetings was held, conducted by Bro. Beahm. Many Gospel truths were presented very forcibly under the Spirit of our brother. He is a faithful worker for the cause of Christ. Twelve united with the church by baptism, and more were reclaimed. Our Sunday-school is arranging to hold a social meeting, picnic style, at the Fair Grounds July 4. The attendance at our Sunday-school is encouraging. The number present June 20 was 152, with an average attendance of about 106. A cradle roll was started June 13, with Sister Pete as superintendent. There are now fifteen members on the roll, with a chance for more. Our Ministerial Workers' Meetings were deferred during our series of meetings, but will be resumed July 1, with Bro. Beahm as chosen for the next six months. One of our Sunday-school workers has moved to Keene, Iowa, and has been baptized. Others among us.—J. F. Eikenberry, Greene, Iowa, June 26.

Grundy church met in council meeting June 21. We will hold our love feast July 3. A committee was chosen to arrange for a series of meetings this coming winter. During this meeting we should like to have a Bible study each evening before the sermon. We also decided to have a Bible conference next winter.—Hannah C. Messer, Grundy Center, Iowa, June 25.

Indian Creek.—Bro. H. A. Stahl, of Pennsylvania, has been with us the past two weeks, holding a series of meetings. We had spiritually built up in our church work. Four were made willing to confess Christ. Our love feast was held last Saturday. Our ministerial help was ample. Bro. Samuel Ankrum, Bro. Jno. Wise, Bro. M. W. Wagoner, Bro. Dallas Center, Iowa, and Bro. Ida D. Faidley, of Des Moines, Iowa, were with us. Eld. H. A. Stahl officiated. Bro. Carmon Lookingbill was elected and installed into the church.—Rebecca M. Beal, R. D. 1, Maxwell, Iowa, June 26.

Osceola.—We reorganized our Sunday-school with Bro. L. M. Fisher as our superintendent; Sister Cora Wolf, secretary. Last Sunday three boys and girls decided that they seemed to be impressed.—Emma Folger, Osceola, Iowa, June 26.

Panora.—Bro. John Robinson, of Muscatine, Iowa, came to us direct from Annual Meeting and commenced meetings at Yale. Though the weather was unfavorable, cold, rainy and dry, the attendance was good from the start, with a growing interest. At the close of the meeting we decided to continue part of the time, but the crowd followed him. Nine have been baptized, one reclaimed and two reclaimed by the baptism. The meetings closed tonight, and Bro. Robinson goes to other fields of labor. He has the prayers and best wishes of the many friends he made while here.—Mrs. Ida Hamon, Panora, Iowa, June 26.

Waterloo.—June 20 our church met in council in the city and enjoyed a very spiritual meeting. Our elder, Bro. A. P. Blough, presiding. Bro. Samuel H. Hoff was present. He had been our elder in former years. We shall not soon forget the touching sermon he gave us. We met upon his love for the old church building of almost half a century that neither shall we forget the many sacred hours spent therein. The sermon given by the ministerial body present, when it was thought the building condemned his acceptance of the church as her pastor. He will begin his duties as pastor July 1. Bro. Sunday-school enthusiasm has been sweeping over our city, and both our city and country churches have caught the inspiring spirit. Many are the visitors and enrollment of over two hundred. Our prayer is that, as we have entered upon a new work, we may be prayerfully.—Edith Witter, Randolph St., Waterloo, Iowa, June 28.

KANSAS.

Maple Grove.—We met in council June 22. Our Sunday-school officers were elected, with Bro. G. W. Bishop as superintendent; Bro. Galen Wertenberger, secretary. We decided to hold our love feast Sunday, at 2 P. M., and basket dinner at the church. Bro. J. E. Bryant, of Colorado, stopped on his way to Annual Meeting and gave us some interesting sermons which were appreciated very much. Our church work is all moving along nicely. We have recently elected a watchful elder, Bro. A. J. Wertenberger.—Minnie J. Deeter, R. D. 1, Oronoque, Kans., June 26.

Neosho.—April 9 we were made glad by the presence of our elder, Bro. J. S. Clark. He was with us in our Sunday-school in the morning, and in the evening he gave us an encouraging sermon, which was much appreciated. June 25 was a day long to be remembered at this place. Eld. F. G. Edwards, our District Sunday-school Secretary, preached for us in the morning and in the evening examining services were held which were appreciated very much. Our church work is all moving along nicely. We have recently elected a watchful elder, Bro. A. J. Wertenberger.—Minnie J. Deeter, R. D. 1, Oronoque, Kans., June 26.

Neosho.—April 9 we were made glad by the presence of our elder, Bro. J. S. Clark. He was with us in our Sunday-school in the morning, and in the evening he gave us an encouraging sermon, which was much appreciated. June 25 was a day long to be remembered at this place. Eld. F. G. Edwards, our District Sunday-school Secretary, preached for us in the morning and in the evening examining services were held which were appreciated very much. Our church work is all moving along nicely. We have recently elected a watchful elder, Bro. A. J. Wertenberger.—Minnie J. Deeter, R. D. 1, Oronoque, Kans., June 26.

of members could move into our midst to help with the work. We expect to have a members' meeting here on the evening of July 5.—F. E. Miller, Galesburg, Kans., June 26.

Paint Creek church met in council June 28, with a fair attendance. Bro. Ruff presided. Three letters of membership were read. We are very glad to have Bro. Reed and family, of California, to move in and help us in the work of the church and Sunday-school. There is still room for others. We decided to have a harvest meeting the second Sunday in August.—Lucia Richard, Timberville, Va., June 29.

Vermillion.—We met in council June 24, with Bro. John Eby presiding. Our series of meetings will be held sometime in October. We have secured Bro. T. A. Elsenbise to do the preaching. We elected our Sunday-school officers for a year, viz: Bro. A. O. Cotes as superintendent. We also decided to have a Sunday-school Board to elect teachers, secretary, etc. Sister Ida Pratt was elected one of the board as superintendent and his assistant. The three comprise the board. We decided to hold our love feast some time in October.—Lizzie Deibenbaugh, Bentle, Kans., June 27.

Watseka.—We are glad to report one more faithful worker added to our number by baptism June 8. It was a very beautiful service. The elder being assisted by Bro. Jas. Hoover, of Newton, Kans., had charge of the service. We hope to have Eld. George Manson to hold a series of meetings for us in August.—H. B. Myers, Walton, Kans., June 26.

MICHIGAN.

Chippewa Creek.—We held our love feast June 17. The visiting brethren were Elders S. M. Bowser, of Ohio, and Bro. Wilkins, the latter officiated. We had a good meeting with the best of order.—Laura R. Kepner, Rodney, Mich., June 26.

Marilla.—The following is taken from our Sunday-school Secretary's report for the second quarter ending with conference: forty-six; average contribution, fifty-six cents; largest number present on any Sunday, sixty-five; largest contribution on any Sunday, eighty-five cents. The primary class was the banner class for the quarter. Thirteen scholars received their perfect attendance buttons. We have our supplies for the third quarter paid, and have a balance of $6.60 in the treasury.—C. E. Hawbecker, Lyons, Mich., June 26.

Prescott.—Eld. Lemuel Hillery came to us several days ago. He was very ill in body, but his spirit was bright. His sermons and fatherly counsel to us, I trust, will not be forgotten. He preached several sermons in the "Big Meeting," where he staid, and twice at the schoolhouse. He has not recovered from his fall in April, but his great anxiety for the cause of Christ holds prompting him to come on the trip. His asthma has been somewhat relieved, but his other sufferings are pitiful. Through it all he is full of faith and service during our meetings, and that was just after he had preached a long discourse yesterday forenoon. The last evening he started for his home in Goshen, accompanied by Eld. S. R. Zuck. His advice and kindly doctrine were a blessing what we need. There are many prayers that he may yet be spared for the Master's work.—Eva G. Blocher, Prescott, Mich., June 27.

MISSOURI.

Nevada.—June 24 Eld. D. L. Mohler, of Leeton, Mo., came to our place on Sunday morning. He conducted the general review of the Sunday-school lessons after the sermon, which was interesting and very instructive, and at 11 A. M. he gave us a good missionary sermon that inspired our people with new zeal. In the evening he gave us a good sermon on "The Pure Life."—Leander Smith, 230 North Oak St., Nevada, Mo., June 26.

Nevada.—Our church met in council with Eld. Leander Smith presiding. Only one letter was read, and the meeting proclaimed. Other business of importance was disposed of. A committee of two was appointed to look after our church. The decision of the late Annual Meeting on the "Dress Question" was read by our elder, who exhorted the members to exemplify the order of the church in dress as an expression of the "hidden man of the heart."—Mary Smith, 230 North Oak St., Nevada, Mo., June 27.

Pleasant View.—Our church met in council at the West house June 24, with Eld. Geo. Bright, elder, presiding. We are to have series of meetings at both of our churchhouses sometime this fall.—Ruth A. Fuller, Richmond, Mo., June 26.

MONTANA.

Medicine Lake.—We met in council June 24. Eld. J. E. Keller presided. Considerable business was disposed of. Our Sunday-school was reorganized for the summer with Bro. B. M. L. Williams as our superintendent; Bro. Harvey Cookson, secretary-treasurer. We are in the midst of a series of meetings with good interest. Two of our Sunday-school scholars have been baptized. Others are interested and desire to come soon. Bro. D. F. Landis will be with us on the 5th.—Katie B. Keller, Antelope, Saint, June 24.

NEW MEXICO.

Sunshine.—June 3 we met in called council preparatory to our love feast of June 16. The visiting brethren reported that all are living in love and union. We feel encouraged in our doings in the little town of Yeso. We had a good attendance and the best of interest throughout our meeting. At the immediate result, two precious souls came into the fold of Christ and were baptized, at 4 P. M. we were buried with him in baptism. We began our examination services at six o'clock, after which seventeen members surrounded the communion table. Our dear brother, Eld. Samuel Weimer, officiated. We feel very much encouraged by the great interest which was manifested during our short revival. We are sorry to have to close so soon, but the weather was very warm and Bro. Weimer lives near Burlington, twelve miles away. Notwithstanding the long drive and warm days, our faithful brother has attended at every service, always ready to do his part in the good work. Bro. Vankirk Maxey assisted and led the song service. His help was quite helpful. We enjoyed his visit. We feel that we had a very profitable series of meetings. Our Sunday-school at this place is progressing nicely.—Miriam A. Maxey, Yeso, New Mexico, June 24.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Cando church met in council June 24, at the Zion house. Four letters were asked, two, granted, and two, deferred. District Meeting are Brethren J. D. Kesler and Geo. K. Miller; our representatives of the Sunday-school Board are Bro. Kesler and Singer. After the District Meeting Bro. Paul Mohler will give a series of Bible lessons and sermons in the Zion church, which are to continue until our love feast, July 29; or longer if expedient. The Brethren feel quite optimistic over the present prospects of a bountiful harvest here. May our order be equally great for a harvest of souls.—M. F. Lehby, Cando, N. Dak., June 26.

Egeland church met in council June 17. Eld. J. D. Kesler officiated. The following church officers were elected: Bro. M. Sharp and G. A. Stevens will represent this church at District Meeting. Eld. Moses Deardorff will be in charge of the series of meetings at the Pleasant View house. The attendance and interest are good. We have just met three Sundays at our Mission Sunday-school held in the Coe schoolhouse. We have an attendance of about fifty. Much interest is manifested. We have preaching services each Sunday after Sunday-school.—Alice Stevens, Egeland, N. Dak., June 26.

Minot.—On Monday night, June 26, Bro. Isaac Frantz preached to an attentive audience in our regular room for services. We were very much encouraged to have him with us, and will be glad to have him return at any convenient time. Our Sunday-school officers and teachers were lately chosen for another six months. Bro. E. S. Petry, the District Sunday-school Secretary, will be with us July 2, in behalf of his Mission and we will have another good meeting. The Sunday-school will be represented by a delegate at the Sunday-school Meeting at Newville, July 11.—D. W. Brock, Box 525, Minot, N. Dak., June 28.

Rock Creek church met in council June 21. Our elder, Bro. J. E. Joseph, presided. Two letters were granted and one received. The writer was elected church correspondent. Our query was sent from this place to District Meeting. A donation of $6.55 for the China Orphanage will be sent with Bro. Hilton to China. Eld. J. E. Joseph was chosen as our delegate to District Meeting. We decided to hold a series of meetings. It was left in the hands of the elder and the minister to do the preaching. We will have our love feast July 15, at 3 P. M. We extend a hearty welcome to any home from District Meeting are urged to be present. As we are few in number, we ask that all visiting brethren remember us if they are willing to be with us.—Rosa M. Wolf, R. D. 1, Denbigh, N. Dak., June 28.

OHIO.

Greenwood.—On Saturday afternoon our congregation met in council, with Eld. Jacob Hoover presiding, assisted by Bro. R. Wyatt, of Missouri, Bro. Frank Hochstetter was elected elder. In the evening we had preaching by Bro. Wyatt, on Sunday an all-day meeting. Both services were soul-inspiring, and we feel inspired to give better service to the Giver of all things.—Max Hartsough, Glenford, Ohio, June 27.

Mohican.—Our congregation met in council June 15. Love and union prevails in our midst. We decided to hold our meeting at the time of our love feast, resulted in the calling of Brethren Ed. A. Ikenberry and D. P. Eller. They will be installed at a later meeting. Eld. A. I. Heestand, who has had charge of the work here for the past year, tendered his resignation, which was very reluctantly accepted, and the writer was appointed to succeed him for the year. Our love feast, held June 17, was a source of strength to all. We are encouraged by the coming of a number of members from neighboring churches. Brethren A. I. Heestand and A. B. Beelman were the ministers present. Bro. Heestand officiated. Our District Sunday-school Secretary, Mary Cook, was present and addressed the Sunday-school on Sunday forenoon. It was a meeting full of good things for us.—Ida E. Long, Mansfield, Ohio, June 29.

OKLAHOMA.

Big Creek church met in council June 17. Sunday-school officers were elected for the next six months. Bro. Harvey Pilmore is superintendent. We expect to have a meeting July 4. Bro. Wilmore, from Texas, preached four excellent sermons for us while he was here on his way to Annual Meeting. One has been baptized since our last report.—Mrs. Minnie Pilmore, Cushing, Okla., June 26.

Guthrie church met in regular council June 17. Our elder, Bro. J. W. Beahm, presided. Our Sunday-school was reorganized for the next six months with Bro. R. W. Ninegar as superintendent and Sister Ida Beahm as secretary. Our series of meetings, to be conducted by Bro. N. S. Gripe, of Coyle, Okla., will begin Oct. 8.—Birdie R. Lehman, R. D. 3, Guthrie, Okla., June 25.

Mound Valley church met in council June 24. Our elder, Bro. J. Quinter, presided. Sunday-school officers were elected, with Bro. L. M. Dodd as superintendent; Sister I. O. McAvoy, secretary. Bro. Dodd was appointed delegate of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Bro. Chas. Showalter, secretary. In the absence of Bro. Dodd, Bro. Showalter's committee on arrangements was appointed for the District Meeting, which will be held in this church. Bro. Dodd's addition to our church is finished, and we have decided to have Bro. C. H. Zuck, of Coyle, Okla., preach the rededicatory sermon the first Sunday in September. Following this, Bro. Brown is to hold a series of meetings for us. We decided to use the Sunday-school birthday offering to help defray the debts in the annex of our church. Bro. J. L. Thomas officiated at our recent love feast. The last report from the number that has been received by baptism, and another by letter. The interest in the Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting is full. The average attendance at Sunday-school last quarter was eighty-one; largest number, 105. The last Sunday of each month the collection is used for mission work. This church has a membership of 107, and the future outlook for work in this number are young people. We feel the need of a worker to devote his time to mission work in our town, and to train these young people who are willing to do active business in the church.—Elsie K. Sanger, Thomas, Okla., June 27.

OREGON.

Williams Creek.—Bro. B. Bowser, of the Oakland church, came to us June 4 and commenced meeting June 5. We had two meetings each day and continued the meetings for two weeks. He labored faithfully and had large congregations. He did much good preaching in the meetings. They applied for membership. One was baptized and the other postponed it for a while, on account of poor health. Others seem to be near the kingdom and we hope will soon be in with us, for they say they know we have the right faith. Sister Laura Lewis died very suddenly on the 14th instant. The members were much built up in the faith. The glorious meeting we have had gave us new courage and hope. Sunday morning Sister Detwiler, Brethren Decker and Swisshelm bade us good-bye and left for their homes. Brethren Bowser, Ely had such pleasant Christian associations. Saturday night, June 17, Bro. Bowser preached on "The Fruits of Faith." Had great credit to the faith of the Brethren. We had a called council to ask admittance into the District and send delegates to District Meeting.—Ida B. Bowser, Williams, Oregon, June 19.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Mechanic Grove.—Our church had a very pleasant love feast June 24. The spirit surrounded the Lord's table. Brethren Cyrus Gibble and John Brumbaugh officiated, Brethren Ing brethren in the pulpit. Brethren Chas. Livengood and Cyrus Gibble were elected to the ministry. Bro. Ing, with their companions, were installed the following day.—Mary E. Hawbecker, Mechanic Grove, June 26.

Red Bank.—Our church met in council June 25. Bro. A. C. Wine presided. Sunday-school superintendents for the ensuing school, to serve the remainder of the year, beginning July 1. Our school got off to a good start with a large number of visitors, which is an evidence of a desire to study to show themselves approved unto God. The Lord has richly blessed us, as a church, during the past few months, and owing to the devotion of our members we expect still greater things in the future.—L. R. Holsinger, R. D. 5, New Bethlehem, Pa., June 26.

WASHINGTON.

Wenatchee church met in council today. Eld. Jesse Peters presided. Nine letters of membership were received, and four granted. Bro. Peters was elected church clerk. Bro. T. Bro. J. E. Smith was chosen to take care of the preaching service in the Sunday-school. Committee appointed. Sister Bert Steele was elected Sunday-school superintendent; Sister Louise Eberhart, secretary-treasurer.—Wallace M. Peters, Wenatchee, Wash., June 24.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Pine church met in council June 3. We decided to have our love feast Sept. 23, at 3 P. M. Bro. Ezra Pike, of Egion, W. Va., will begin a series of meetings at the White Pine church Sept. 21. We had our children's day June 25. A large crowd was present. Two interesting services in the morning, and Bro. B. W. Smith, of the Beaver Dam congregation, preached for us in the afternoon. The day was enjoyed by all. Children did progressively well, every at this place.—Robert A. Rinker, Purgitsville, W. Va., June 26.

CORRESPONDENCE

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches"

NOTICE OF PUBLIC DEBATE.

Referring to the debate, to be held at Beaver Dam, Ind., Aug. 8, I am very anxious that the debate may be brought out in book form.

It will make a book similar in size to the "Miller and Sommer Debate," or "The History of the Brethren," and will cover all the differences between the Church of the Brethren and the Church of Christ (Disciples). This will make it one of the most interesting discussions by the two churches, thus far printed.

If you should like to have the debate in book form, drop a card to Eld. J. G. Stinebaugh, Akron, Ind., saying you want a copy of the book. The price will range from $1.50 to $2.50, according to style of binding and size of the book. We can not get the book out unless there is a certainty in regard to sales, so please drop a card as above, and when sufficient advance orders are received, notice will be given in the Messenger.

Please get busy NOW, for the time is short, and it will be too late, after Aug. 1, to arrange the matter. Join the advance order club NOW.

MARKLE, INDIANA.

June 11 Bro. D. B. Garber, our home minister, instead of preaching a regular morning sermon, gave us a talk concerning the Christian Workers' Meeting to be attended. His talk was very interesting. It did our souls much good to hear personally of the spiritual work of our church. We were made to feel that we ought to stand more firmly for Christ and the church. In the evening we had our children's meeting. The recitations were very enjoyably rendered by the children. Quite a number attended these services. The church was crowded, but the little folks feared nothing and did well indeed. June 17 our church met in council with Bro. D. B. Garber presiding. One letter was received. We decided to have our harvest meeting the first Sunday in September. Our love feast will be held Oct. 28,—an all-day meeting. An invitation is extended to all who may be with us at these meetings. A missionary committee of three was appointed to work along this line, to try to arouse a greater consecration as to our duty in missionary work,—not that the church is doing all it can, but to become more interested in this work of the Lord.

LESLIE, IDAHO.

As I returned from our recent Conference, at St. Joseph, Mo., I stopped for rest a few days with my friend and sisters at Leslie, Ida. While there I held a council meeting and preached once to a very attentive audience. The services are held in a log schoolhouse, the only building now available. It is already too small for the growing Sunday-school and public services. People seem to be hungry for the preached Word. One old gentleman said, on the Sunday I was there, "This is the first time I have been to church for forty years. I have enjoyed it and will come again." There are about fifteen members living here. They hold services each Sunday. Bro. S. I. Driver, late 'ol Ohio, is the only minister, but is doing a good work.

I am well impressed with what I saw. Land is cheap and there is water in abundance. Free fuel is close at hand. Brethren who intend moving west might do well to investigate this place, where a great work can be done for the Master. Some homestead filings may yet be had.

Boise, Ida, June 24. L. E. Keltner.

LOST RIVER VALLEY, IDAHO.

Our church met in council June 17. Eld. A. C. Wine, our elder, Bro. Keltner, of Boise, was present. This was the first council for the congregation here, as this is a new point which has just been started this spring. As Bro. Keltner was on his return from the Annual Conference, he deemed it advisable to be with us and get us lined up properly for the work we have undertaken. Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely, and the residents around Leslie are taking an interest in the Sunday-school here. Bro. Keltner delivered one of his soul-stirring sermons, and thus our little band received an impetus that means much for the work here. We have services each Lord's Day, with Bro. S. I. Driver in charge of them. With such an able Christian leader we feel sure of success. June 25 Bro. D. C. Campbell came to us. During his short stay he gave us two of his splendid lectures on the Holy Land. We feel encouraged in having these aged veterans of the cross encourage us in the work. Since opening our Sunday-school at Leslie, another has been organized at Darlington, five miles to the south. Bro. Garmon was chosen superintendent. It is not a Brethren's organization. By this it will be seen that our people are well to the front, although very little was known of our church before opening up the work here. We trust it may continue so to be!

Leslie, Idaho, June 26. Rollo Troup.

HUNTINGTON CITY, INDIANA.

Our church met in council June 26, at 7:30 P. M. Eld. J. D. Mishler and wife, of South Whitley, Ind., were present. Bro. Mishler presided over the meeting. Two letters of membership were received, and we are glad to have members come into our city.

The usual business was attended to, after which the Sunday-school officers were elected for the next six months. Bro. J. B. Bailey is our superintendent; Sister Grace Powerbaugh, secretary. Sisters M. E. Bailey and M. A. Powerbaugh have charge of the home department. Sisters Lulu Pauling and Addie Pair have charge of the Christian Workers' Meetings.

The elder then gave us encouragement to press on in the good work. He said he was glad that such a Christian spirit was manifest in the meeting. He urged the strongermembers to help those who were more easily tempted by the attractions of the world. The city has so many temptations and worldly amusements that it requires a strong mind and a steady hand to overcome all the evils of the world, and to live to be an example in the cause of Christ.

We were very glad to have Sisters Nora Ross and Grace Fox, of Sidney, Ind., visit us and attend our services. The Lord is sending us beautiful sunshine and refreshing rain, and the prospects for abundant crops and all kinds of fruit never were brighter.

While we are in the land of plenty, yet we are also in the land of sickness and sorrow. Sister Kitch, who came into our midst a short time ago, but who has been a member for several years, and has been afflicted with dropsy in its worst stages, called for the Elders, and Eld. J. D. Mishler and I. B. Wike performed the anointing service. We ask to be remembered at the Throne of Grace.

JOHN B. BAILEY.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA.

Our church assembled in council June 16. Eld. W. E. Trostle presided. Only a small amount of business came before the meeting, all of which was disposed of. Sunday-school officers for the next six months were elected, with Bro. C. M. Heckman as superintendent. Christian Worker officers were also elected, with Sister A. L. B. Martin as president; Sister Belva Heckman, secretary. We have reasons to hope for very effectual work being done by these officers.

The church also decided to have our pastor, Bro. A. L. B. Martin, to conduct a series of meetings sometime during the month of July or August, as that is the season when a great many of the members take their annual vacation at the beach. We earnestly desire their assistance that, while we spend a few weeks in our vacation, the Master's cause may be built up and his church strengthened.

Our pastor, Bro. A. L. B. Martin, has been doing very effectual work here, since he has taken up the pastoral work, both in the homes and in the public services among the members, as well as among those who are not members. Yesterday he gave us two very strong sermons to large and attentive congregations.

Our midweek Bible reading, conducted by Bro. Martin, has also increased in attendance and interest. So we have great reasons to be encouraged with the outlook here. Three letters of membership were read since our last report.

Our summer so far has been very fine and cool. We could hardly realize that the East had such warm weather during the late Annual Conference. J. M. SHIVELY.

OUR GREAT NEED TODAY.

We are almost overburdened, today, with the cry for help and assistance in effecting organizations and furnishing needed equipments.

This cry indicates that help is needed, that the work is growing, and that those in charge of the work feel the need of more effectual efforts.

Yet, even with these needs pressing their claims upon us, and our efforts to meet them, is there not grave danger of our relying too much upon these aids and helps, and depending upon organization and equipment to accomplish the work of the Lord, instead of depending upon the Spirit of the Lord?

There is no doubt that we have all needed, perhaps, and are greatly appreciated and used. They have their place and mission to perform, but we should not allow them to become the backbone of our work. They are simply helps and should be wisely used only as such.

The words of Zechariah (4: 6) are very significant on this question: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

As we study the Word and see the workings, and power of the Holy Spirit, and behold, in the Life of Christ, and his apostles, and of the early church in general, the wonderful manifestations of his enabling and qualifying power for service, we are made to wonder whether we are not depending too much upon outside help instead of inside help, or the Spirit's enabling.

As we survey the situation and see our lack of accomplishment, and seeming waste of effort, we come to this conclusion, that surely we do not depend upon the Holy Spirit enough, neither in our individual or in our church life.

The Holy Spirit is the sanctifying, cleansing, and enabling power of this gospel dispensation.

It is God's abiding presence within the believer that gives us the dominion over sin, or, rather, that sin shall not have dominion over us.

It is through the workings of the Spirit that souls are convicted of sin and brought to Christ. It is through the Holy Spirit that the "love of God hath been shed abroad in our hearts," and we are brought into the unity of the faith.

If, then, to any extent, we lose sight of the Spirit's place in the work, and depend upon human help and plans, might or power to accomplish the work, we will simply fail.

The minister who depends mainly upon his natural ability, or the commentary, or other men's sermons, or novel subjects, or the countless other helps that are thrown in his way, to draw people and to hold their interest, may succeed for a while, but will ultimately fail in his mission. His constant dependence must be upon the illumination of the Spirit, in whose power he is but an instrument to proclaim God's message.

Likewise with a Sunday-school teacher or superintendent, or any other Christian worker. Novel methods and prizes will not suffice to keep up interest and attendance, or reach the heart of men. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit."

Some churches are burdened with organization and red tape until pastor and laity, teacher and pupil are so occupied that there is very little time or inclination left for devout Bible study. Keep all the people busy; but at doing the right thing.

A Spirit-filled pastor, teacher, or Christian worker will have no trouble about keeping up an interest.

Organization is all right,—it is simply "a place for every one and every one in his place," but do not have the rules so rigid and tight that there is no room for the Holy Spirit to shift things occasionally and get in his work.

Helps are all right, but we should not tie ourselves down to them. We must leave room for individual thought of our own, that the Spirit can reveal to our own minds God's truth.

The thoughts of others are helpful and often very suggestive to our own mind, but we should not substitute them for our own. We should generate within our minds new, deeper, broader, and higher thoughts, to enable us to feel and experience the truth for ourselves. When the Holy Spirit takes the great truths of the Word and burns them into our hearts, it is then that the soul is fed and nourished, and we feel springing up within us wells of salvation, until in the joy of our salvation, we begin to bubble over, and the soul of men will be nourished on the words of eternal life.

It is more of the Spirit that we need today! That means to us consecration, self-surrender to the Spirit's control in our lives. We need more of the Spirit in our pulpits,—in our Sunday-schools,—in our Christian Workers' Meetings, and in our councils. But if we need and want more of the Holy Spirit in our public services and church work in general, we will have to begin at home first, with self, brother and sister, and become more spiritual. As the "fruits of the Spirit" manifest themselves in your life and mine, it will draw others closer, and they, too, will become more spiritual.

More study and meditation in the Word, more prayer and supplication, more hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and the Spirit's influence will be felt in our lives, and God's name will be glorified. More of the Holy Spirit in our lives, and we will find more consecration, more readiness for the fell, more means to support them, and more efficient work everywhere.

Ah, beloved, when the Holy Spirit takes possession of an individual, his all,—life, friends, lands and possessions,—is Christ's.

Brethren, we are not our own. "We have been bought with a price. Therefore glorify God in your bodies and your spirit, which are his."

LONG LAKE, MICHIGAN.

Our church met in council June 16, with Bro. J. Edson Ulery as presiding officer. Bro. John H. Landis was clerk of the meeting. Bro. M. M. Sherrick was with us and gave us a Scripture reading, after which he explained its meaning, which proved very inspiring to us all. The members of this place were well represented except three. Brethren Daniel Landis, William Landis and William Bittel were elected trustees. We have changed the time of our teachers' meeting. Previous to this meeting we have held it from house to house among the members living at this place. Now we are going to try to have it at one home.

We have also chosen Bro. D. E. Sower as permanent leader of our teachers' meetings. Bro. Daniel Landis was elected Sunday-school superintendent for one year. The writer was elected as his assistant for the same time. Bro. D. E. Sower was elected delegate to District Meeting; Bro. William Landis, alternate. This has been the first council meeting held at this place, but it has proved to be very interesting.

Bro. Ulery was with us last Sunday, and gave us a very inspiring sermon. We certainly appreciated the brother's kindness in giving us this fine sermon. We are going to have an outing on the Fourth of July. If the weather is good we will go to the lake and have refreshments, after which a program will be given by the Sunday-school.

Freesoil, Mich., June 19. WILLIAM BITTEL.

WEST CREEK MISSION.

By the aid of the District Mission Board and the members at this place, we have been favored in this part of the Master's vineyard to help carry forward the great work of soul saving. We are a little band of thirteen members, ready and anxious to do all we can to declare the Gospel message.

Since we have been here, we had preaching services twice each Sunday, and the attendance and interest have been excellent. We also have a good union Sunday-school, superintended by a well-qualified Methodist sister. The attendance averages about sixty. June 11 the Sunday-school gave a very interesting children's program.

June 17 we enjoyed a very spiritual love feast. Just fourteen members surrounded the Lord's table, but we felt that the Lord was with us to bless. Some were present who had never before seen the sacred ordinances observed as the Brethren observe them. Eld. S. E. Lantz assisted in the services.

On Sunday morning Bro. Lantz gave us a soul-stirring sermon, pointing out to us the real responsibilities of life. He has preached scores and perhaps hundreds of times to the people here, but they are always glad for him to break to them the Bread of Life.

We are sure that the Lord has some souls to save, here in our midst, and we feel that it is the Lord's hand that has led us here. Therefore, we earnestly desire the prayers of the saints that we may accomplish the work that he has for us. J. S. SHERFY.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord"

Burns, Sister Lucinda Emma, born in Marshall County, Ind., Jan. 24, 1862, died of tuberculosis, in the bounds of the Surrey congregation, N. Dak., May 30, 1911, aged 49 years, 4 months and 10 days. She moved to North Dakota in March, 1901. She was married to Jonathan Burns, Dec. 25, 1881, to 5, 1883, who survives her; also three sons, two daughters, an aged mother and other relatives by the home brethren. Interment in the Surrey cemetery.—Manerva Lambert, Surrey, N. Dak.

Crossman, Sister Mary E. wife of Orin Crossman and daughter of Bro. Robert and Sister Mary Taylor, born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, died at the home of her son, Robert Crossman, Pueblo, Colo., May 21, 1911, aged 80 years, 10 months and 20 days. After spending her last two years in California, she went home with her son on his return from a visit to Pueblo. It was there they were when death suddenly claimed her by a rupture of a blood vessel of the heart. She united with the Church of the Brethren about forty-five years ago, and held her membership in the English River congregation, Iowa, until emigrating to Kansas, where she was deprived of the privilege of uniting the church of her choice, but retained the faith she had embraced until the end. Her body was then taken to Bluff City, Kans., for burial beside her husband and two sons, at which place her funeral services were held. She leaves two sons and two daughters, two sisters and one brother (the writer).—H. R. Taylor, 720 E. Villa St., Pasadena, Cal.

Craig, Mr. William, born in Snyder County, Pa., Aug. 31, 1834, died at his home in Clear Creek township, in the bounds of the Huntington country church, Huntington County, Ind., June 15, 1911, aged 76 years, 9 months and 15 days. May 3, 1866, he was married to Penniman Landis, of Center County, Pa., to this union five children were born. His wife is a member of the Church of the Brethren. His wife, two sons and one daughter survive. Services by the writer. Text, Job 14: 2.—I. B. Wike, Huntington, Ind.

Douglas, William, born Nov. 7, 1839, died at the home of his granddaughter, near Akron, Ohio, June 16, 1911, aged 81 years 7 months and 9 days. He was married to Sister Lucy Gress July 4, 1861. Seven children were born to them. His wife and daughter preceded him in death. He is survived by the son, Socrates by the William Dexter. Text, Hosea 6: 12. Interment in the Springfield cemetery.—Alice C. Mumaw, Nappanee, Ind.

Frantz, Bro. Reily, born June 30, 1850, died June 3, 1911, at his home near Frystown, Berks Co., Pa., aged 61 years,

11 months and 3 days. He was united in marriage to Sister Amanda Crouse. This union was blessed with seven sons and six daughters, all of whom survive. He united with the church some time ago and was faithful until death. Services at the Frystown meetinghouse by Brethren Jacob W. Meyer, E. D. Edris and Ira D. Gibble. Interment in the adjoining cemetery. Text, John 11: 25.—H. M. Frantz, Myerstown, Pa.

Hansell, Sanford Orlin, died June 12, 1911, aged 10 years, 4 months and 12 days. With his mother he was visiting at Bisbee, N. Dak., when he went bathing with another small boy in a coulee. There was not much water in the coulee, but the water covered an open well which was unknown to the boys, and in it Sanford came to his sad death. Services in Bisbee, the former home of the family. The body was interred in the Bisbee Lutheran cemetery.—D. W. Shock, Minot, N. Dak.

Holmes, Sister Florence Viola, born in Dubuque Co., Iowa, Nov. 28, 1887, died near Arcadia, Nebr., June 12, 1911, from a complication of diseases, aged 23 years, 6 months and 14 days. She united with the Church of the Brethren about two years ago, and remained faithful in the service of the Master. She has been deaf since she was a small child, and was educated at the Omaha (Nebraska) Institute for the Deaf. Since uniting with the church she has read from the Bible every night. Most those she would not try to speak to strangers, but about two days before her death her tongue was loosed and she could speak so that any one in the house could understand her. Her plea was to "go home," and she asked each one that came in, to meet her in heaven. She would not be satisfied until she received some affirmative. She leaves a father, mother, and two sisters (one of them is a saint). Services at the Brethren church by the writer, Rev. 21: 1, 1. c.—J. J. Yawser, Arcadia, Nebr.

Horner, Bro. Jeremiah, born July 13, 1841, near Scalp Level, Somerset Co., Pa., died June 20, 1911, in the Johnstown hospital. He had undergone an operation which apparently was a success. He was improving for three weeks when he was taken with hemorrage and lived only four hours. The deceased leaves a widow, three sons and three daughters. Bro. Horner united with the Church of the Brethren thirty-six years ago and lived a faithful life until death. Funeral at the Windber church by the writer, assisted by Eld. D. M. Adams, of Scalp Level.—Wm. Beal. Burial in the family cemetery in a one-half miles northeast of Windber, Pa.—B. B. Ludwick, Somerset, Pa.

Keagy, Sister Magdalena, nee Long, born in Bedford County, Pa., April 11, 1838, died June 3, 1911, aged 73 years, 1 month and 19 days. She was married to Patrick Keagy April 7, 1861. He died May 3, 1911. Seven children preceded her to the spirit world. Six of them survive. She was a faithful member of the Brethren church for over sixty years. She was the last of a family of seven children. She was indeed a mother in Israel—a kind and helpful mother in every time of need. Services at the Bright Eye church by Bro. S. J. Burger.—Pearl Agley, Howe, Ind.

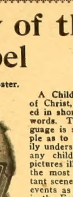
Miller, Mary Ann, nee Hester, born in Shippensburg, Northumberland Co., Pa., in 1840, died at the home of her brother near Silver Lake, Ind., June 12, 1911. She was married to Jacob S. Miller in 1860, to whom were born three sons and two daughters. Her husband, one son and two daughters preceded her. She leaves two sons, one brother and two half-brothers. Services by Bro. Daniel Snell at the Spring Creek church. Interment in the adjoining cemetery.—Nora A. Rose, Sidney, Ind.

Mowman, Bro. John, son of Moses and Mary Mowan, born in Mahoning County, Ohio, Aug. 29, 1850, died at his home in Sidney, Ind., June 19, 1911, aged 60 years, 9 months and 21 days. Sept. 19, 1875, he was united in marriage to Luretta Heckman. To this union were born three sons and two daughters. One son and one daughter preceded him in death. He leaves his wife, three sons, one daughter, five half-brothers and three half-sisters. He united with the Church of the Brethren at about the age of thirty-four years. He was called to the office of deacon in the Northern church near Muncy, Minn. He was one of the pioneer members of that church. Services by Bro. D. Mishler, in the Spring Creek church, Ind. Text, Num. 23: 10. Interment in the adjoining cemetery.—Nora A. Rose, Sidney, Ind.

Nevinger, Sister Elizabeth Jane, only child of M. M. K. and Rachel Van Dyke, born in Clarion County, Pa., Nov. 14, 1853, died June 7, 1911, aged 57 years, 6 months and 13 days. She moved with her parents to Bond County, Ill., in 1867. Dec. 26, 1875, she was married to Melville Nevinger. To them were born two sons and six daughters. They moved to Colorado in 1906, and to Otero County, N. Mex., in the same year. She and her husband united with the Church of the Brethren May 5, 1877, and remained faithful until she was called up higher. She served with her husband in the office of deacon, minister and elder, and in all their trying duties she manifested her high Christian ideals by her pure mind, clean thoughts and holy life. And to those who knew her best and who loved her most she spared not her strength or comfort for the sake of their encouragement. She leaves an aged father, a devoted husband and six living children. Services by the undersigned, assisted by the home ministers. Text, 2 Cor. 5: 1. Interment in the Valley View cemetery near Rocky Ford, Colo.—John Bjorklund, Rocky Ford, Colo.

Shutt, Sister Cecelia Eva, nee Ault, born in Frederick County, Md., Aug. 20, 1824, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. H. Shutter, near Marion, Ind., April 22, 1911, aged 86 years, 8 months and 2 days. About the year 1850 she was married to Samuel Hiller. To this union were born three sons and two daughters, one son having preceded her in death. Her husband died twenty-five years ago. For many years she was a faithful member of the Church of the Church, of the Brethren. During her late illness, which continued about three months, she bore her suffering patiently and bravely. Services at the home of her daughter by Bro. W. H. H. Sawyer. Interment in the Hiawatha cemetery.—Hiawatha, Kans.—Belva E. Smith, Morrill, Kans.

Smith, Sister Sarah, born in Virginia, Pa., Oct. 4, 1834, died near Lena, Ill., in the bounds of the Waddams Grove congregation, June 11, 1911. She was the daughter of Bro. William and Sister Mary Yarger (deceased). She was married to Bro. Noah Smith June 25, 1852, who died Sept. 23, 1909. They were baptized about the year 1870. Twelve children were born to them. Eleven of them survive. Services by Eld. E. Keltner. Text, 2 Tim. 4: 1-4. Interment in the Louisa cemetery.—Albert Myers, Waddams Grove, Ill.



Spahr, Jesse Edward, infant son of J. F. and Myrtle Spahr, born in Granville township, Mercer Co., Pa., Feb. 28, 1911, died April 20, 1911, aged 1 month and 19 days. Little Jesse leaves his father and mother, three brothers and three sisters. Services at the Holsopple cemetery by Bro. Jacob S. Weston, Ohio.

Spangler, Sister Rutha, born in Floyd County, Virginia, died May 11, 1911, aged 84 years. She was a member of the Church of the Brethren fourteen years. She was married to Jacob Spangler, from the same county and State. They were the first members who united with the church here at this place, twelve years ago. She was injured by a fall and was much afflicted. She was strong in the faith and in hope were bright for her future home. She earnestly talked to the people about coming to Christ. Services by Bro. E. T. Clower. Text, Rev. 14: 13.—S. T. Mink, Shrewsbury, W. Va.

Troyer, Sister Eve, known as "Aunt Eve," born Feb. 13, 1831, died at the home of her daughter, Sister Susan Crist, June 8, 1911, aged 92 years, 3 months and 25 days. She was united in marriage to Isaiah Troyer in 1857, and united with the church in 1865. For several years she was deprived of her eyesight. She leaves an aged husband and one daughter. Services by Eld. J. W. Gish.—Lydia Dell, Beatrice, Nebr.

The Story of the Gospel

By Charles Foster.

A Child's Life of Christ, printed in short, easy words. The language is so simple as to be easily understood by any child. The pictures illustrate the most important scenes. The events as related in the Four Gospels are not repeated, but the details of each event are placed in their proper order, thus making one full, complete and interesting account of the Life of the Master.

The value of this book to those who wish to instruct the young in the truths of the Bible can scarcely be overestimated. It is very general use, and the sale of more than 180,000 copies is one of its merit and popularity. Bound in fine cloth, stamped in gilt and colors; with ornamental design. One hundred and fifty illustrations. 366 pages.

Price, postpaid, 65 cents.

WAR VERSUS PEACE

By Jacob Funk

The subject treated in this book is one which, more than any other, vitally concerns the civilized nations of the world, and the interest in it is growing. It is important that the people be intelligent on this subject. All need to know just the things that are herein given. The following subjects are taken up:

The Causes of War. The Evils of War. The Cost of War. The Relief of War. The Peace Movement, and Ways of Advancing Peace.

The information concerning each of the above subjects is given in brief form and in a style which makes it interesting reading. It contains the cream of facts gleaned from many historical works, reports of conventions, published articles, etc.

The reading of the book gives one a clear vision of the horrors of war, the enormous cost in money and human life of it, and will be sure to inspire greater zeal in the hearts of the people in the peace movement. It deserves a wide circulation.

Traits of Character

by
H. F. Eletzing, A. M.
Author of "Progress of a Race"
and
E. L. Eletzing, A. M.
Principal in Chicago Public Schools.

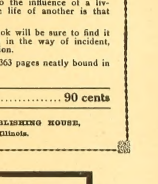
The book is divided into four parts; Part 1. Traits of Character Illustrated; Part 2. Marked Manhood and Womanhood; Part 3. Marred Manhood and Womanhood; Part 4. Sidelights.

In Part 1, the truths intended to be taught on the printed page by figure or anecdote, are rendered doubly impressive by the apt illustration appearing in connection therewith.

Part 2, in connection with their portraits, gives brief sketches of the lives of men and women who, by means of great and noble things accomplished, sometimes by making good use of high birth, wealth, good fortune, etc., and again in spite of adverse circumstances, stand out as beacon lights to those who follow them in life's pathway.

Part 3, in a similar way, shows how men and women of bright intellect and strong personality, but lacking in character, have marred their lives by yielding to temptation.

In Part 4, the truths are mostly illustrated in lighter vein, but none the less forcibly brought to the mind of the reader.



Character may be defined as that sum of qualities, which distinguishes one person from another. Some of these qualities, primarily, are doubtless hereditary, but all these qualities are susceptible of development and training. The influences which surround men's lives are character builders. Next to the influence of a loving personage over the life of another is that of the books he reads.

The reader of this book will be sure to find it full of helpful material in the way of incident, biography and illustration.

The volume contains 363 pages neatly bound in cloth.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED

Tropico church met in council June 24, at 2 P. M. Our elder, Bro. Wm. Stutsman, presided. We had a very pleasant meeting. Bro. E. A. Stutsman was elected superintendent of our Sunday-school for the next six months. Our love feast will be Oct. 7, at 2 P. M. We decided to hold a series of meetings this fall, and a committee of three brethren was appointed to secure a minister.—Lucinda Stutsman, Cor. Editor and Sinclair, Glendale, Cal., June 30.

Bellefontaine church met in council June 10. Bro. E. D. Yoder presided. We decided to hold our love feast Sept. 9, at 7:30 P. M. Eld. G. A. Snider has consented to labor with us in a series of meetings in February, 1912. The local union temperance committee elected me secretary. Our M. E. Sunday-school elected A. P. Yoder and M. V. Shawver. Sister Hazel Bowman was chosen on our Christian Workers' Committee. A call was made for the District Meeting of 1912. Bro. Hoff has been accepted. The Bellefontaine Sunday-school will unite with the Kingsley and Logan schools in a Union Sunday-school Meeting July 4. An interesting program has been arranged. Bro. Cool and wife, of Lima, Ohio, were with us from June 25, at the evening services. Bro. Cool gave us an excellent sermon on "Opportunities." Our elder, Bro. E. D. Snyder, recently gave us an interesting talk on the late Conference.—Mary L. Cook, 203 Water St., Bellefontaine, Ohio, June 28.

Bryan.—We met in council June 24, with Bro. Homer Ulom in charge. Bro. Samuel Studebaker, from Illinois, was present and gave us some good suggestions. The principal business of the meeting was the perfecting of plans preparatory to the building of a Mission Church. Bro. William Ellenberger was appointed solicitor. We have only thirty-five members in this part of the congregation. Most of them are children and young people; therefore there are only a few to bear the expenses. But the efficiency of these urged us to build and are pledged financial support, therefore we decided to move on in the face of obstacles. Trusting God to help us, we hope to have a Sunday-school to begin work Sept. 1. There is only one other church in Wiley—the Methodist church. We have seven members from there. We think it is a fruitful field, and we invite others to help to occupy it. June 18, at our regular services at the Star schoolhouse, three confessed Christ and were baptized. June 25 our Sunday-school was reorganized, with Sister Lulu Ulom as superintendent. Irrigation water has been plentiful during the last three weeks, and the alfalfa, corn and oats are spending plentifully, in spite of rainfall and weather and wind. We have just had a good rain.—Laura Ulom, Lamar, Colo., June 26.

North Manchester church met in council June 1. Eld. Wright presided. Eleven letters were received and twenty-eight granted. Bro. Jesse Byerly was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. The adjoining elders, Brethren Daniel Snell and Samuel Leckrone, being present, Brother and Sister Byerly were installed in that office. The installation of Brother and Sister I. B. Rook to the eldership, which had been postponed at the December meeting, took place at this time. The text of the sermon was called for and given. We met again in council June 13. The question of dividing the church district was taken up at this meeting, and action was decided in favor of a division, the same to take effect Dec. 1, 1911. Five letters of the 28 granted have been received.—Alice Mummert, North Manchester, Ind., June 29.

South St. Joseph Mission, met in council June 23. Bro. W. A. Deardorff and wife and Sister Mary Phillips were granted letters of membership. We elected Sunday-school and Christian Worker officers for the next six months. All of them are young in years, and young in the church. Three sisters, two of the officials, were installed in office. The writer and wife were advanced to the second degree of the ministry. We decided to have our love feast July 15, at 7 P. M. Bro. W. R. Miller preached for us last Lord's Day morning at 10:30. For 13, and Bro. Minnick, Mohler, of Mott, N. Dak., preached for us in the evening at 3 P. M. His subject was, "The Wages of Sin Is Death." Our monthly meeting number 124.—E. N. Riddlemoser, 13 Kentucky Street, St. Joseph, Mo., June 27.

Woodbury on 26 was the day set for our Children's Meeting. We had a good attendance and a good program. The various organizations were well rendered. Bro. Minnich, our Sunday-school is moving along nicely. We also have Christian Workers' Meetings. Brother and Sister Culler are with us during their vacation from Bethany Bible School. They will give us lessons on Bible Study on Sunday nights before Christian Workers' Meeting.—Mary Brubaker, Weiersville, Ohio, June 29.

Mt. Hope church met in council June 24. Our elder, Bro. J. C. Mininger, presided. Bro. Mininger is to begin a series of meetings at this place July 16, and continue with the meetings we will hold our love feast Aug. 5, beginning at 6 P. M.—E. Howell, Crescent, Ohio, June 26.

Sidney church met in council June 29, at 7:30 P. M. Three letters of membership were granted. Bro. Lehman was with us Bro. Sylvan Buckwalter, a member of the Mission Board; also Bro. Herbert Richards, of Circleville, Ohio, who will remain over next Lord's Day and preach for us. One was added to the fold by baptism. We expect to meet with the Brethren of Bellefontaine and Stony Creek in a Joint Sunday-school Meeting on the Fourth of July. We expect to take our little children with us for an outing. July 9 we expect Bro. W. R. Miller to begin a week's lectures and stereopticon views on the Bible Lands.—Mrs. A. M. Bierman, Park St., Sidney, Ohio, June 30.

Meyersdale.—Bro. H. C. Early, of Penn Laird, Va., delivered eighteen able sermons at the Meyersdale church. The meetings began June 10, and closed with the love feast, June 25. His sermons were broad and deep, and touched the hearts of the many who came to hear him. Nineteen precious souls were buried with Christ in baptism, and three were reclaimed. We are glad for the interest aroused by Bro. Early among the people at this place. Bro. J. C. Beahm, of Woodbury, Pa., conducted the singing, which was a great help to us during the meetings. Our Sunday-school is doing well, and the interest and attendance are good.—Ella Jen M. Fike, Meyersdale, Pa., June 30.

Bethel church met in business meeting June 24. Our elder in charge, Bro. Jacob Wyland, of Portland, Tenn., was with us, and some important work was done. Bro. F. E. Strohm was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. The Brethren's equalized plan of raising money for church work was adopted. Sister Minerva Strohm was chosen Sunday-school superintendent to the end of the year, to fill the vacancy caused by Bro. J. A. Strohm's going away. One letter was granted since our last report.—Lee Dadisman, R. D. 1, Kenedy, Texas, June 26.

HELP! HELP!! HELP!!!

The General Temperance Committee desires to be more helpful than ever. But they can be as helpful as they ought to be only after they get the help they ought to get. They should get help from all who can give it.

(1) To the District Committees: Where are you getting help? Tell us where and how, and all about it.

(2) To every reader: (a) What temperance books and tracts have you found exceptionally good? Tell us where and how to get them. Supply us if you can. (b) Who, of our brethren, have specially helpful as temperance speakers, and whose services could be secured by the churches? Give us names and addresses. (c) Help us to get acquainted with brethren and sisters who are gifted as writers, and who are, at the same time, interested in the temperance cause. We want their help. Send us names and addresses.

Help us now. Do not wait two weeks. We desire to send out soon another general letter full of helpful hints. We are glad to record that marked enthusiasm prevailed at both meetings with the District Committees at St. Joseph on May 31 and June 1, and that the temperance program on Monday evening was remarkably well received. At these meetings 19 Districts were represented by no less than fifty delegates.

Let us further "plan our work" and both carefully and constantly "work our plan" so that one year hence we can have and enjoy still larger and more helpful meetings at our Annual Conference in the East. Send all communications to the writer.

PRESCOTT, MICHIGAN.

June 24 Elders Wilkins and Smith met with us at Bro. W. F. Mason's, in whose barn we convened for organization and where we held our first love feast. This territory has been a part of the Riverside congregation, and those of her members, living here, with the newcomers who presented letters, make fifty in our new church. Bro. J. P. Bowman was chosen elder for one year; Bro. L. R. Myers, clerk; Bro. John S. Horning, treasurer. Eld. Bowman and Brethren Chas. Hostetler and W. F. Mason, were chosen as committee to look out a church and cemetery site. Sister Ruth Blocher was elected Messenger correspondent. Sunday-school superintendents and delegates to District Meeting were also chosen.

In the evening, fifty-one communicants surrounded the tables, with Eld. Wilkins officiating. In the morning he talked to the children, followed by Eld. Hillery, and Eld. Smith in the afternoon.

We had good meetings throughout, and we are much encouraged. The elders sent to us, were very careful, in the organization, and we feel we are beginning our work with bright prospects. Some members in Oscoda County, forty miles north, drove to the meeting. By the help of the Mission Board we will try to give them some meetings. Since March 1 two have been baptized and one reclaimed, and a number are interested. Our young people are asking for a Christian Workers' Meeting, and we meet P.M. Bro. Roy Swigart is our pastor.—Mrs. Edgar Mason, Fourth-of July Meeting at Bro. Oscar Mason's.

Brethren, there is much work here, to be done, and we crave your prayers, that we may be guided by heavenly wisdom. Ira G. Blocher.

INDIA: a Problem

By W. B. Stover.

Here is a reliable record of facts concerning conditions in India as collected by our first missionary in that field. Many of these facts are such as came from the personal experience and observations of the author; others are such as were gathered from the records of various missions in different parts of India. The last, but not least important, chapter is a discussion of the problem, "What of the Future?" This, after all, is the paramount question concerning foreign missions, and what Brother Stover says on this matter will be a source of inspiration to the interested reader. The book is interspersed with numerous illustrations, which alone speak volumes. 344 pages, substantially bound.

AROUND THE WORLD

Bible Sales in Palestine.

With all restrictions removed that in bygone years hindered Bible distribution in Palestine, the British and Foreign Bible Society is doing some most effective work. One of their colporteurs recently spent some days in the villages around Hebron. Here the natives are intensely fanatical. They claim to be in the line of direct descent from Mohammed, and have always been considered as being hard to reach. Strange as it may seem, however, the colporteur succeeded in selling seventy-two Bibles to them, the Moslems being more ready to buy, seemingly, than the Christians in other villages. This readiness of the Mohammedans to buy the Bible is so remarkable as to point forward to still more wonderful results in the future.

Why the Great Loss?

Probably it is not always wise to gauge religious influence and power by the narrow limits of bare figures, and yet we can not help but be startled when we are told that of the 14,000,000 Sunday-school attendants, in this country, only 2,700,000 ever join any church. Whether this be a picture too gloomy or not, there is abundant cause for deep concern when the workers of a Sunday-school fail to bring their scholars to an open confession of Christ. The leakage between the Sunday-school and the church, even in our own ranks, is a most serious one, and he who can help in the conservation of the most important resources that we, as a church, possess, will render a most valuable service. Somehow, somewhere, there are defects that must be discovered and remedied.

Why Mormonism Succeeds.

Perhaps it would not be difficult to tell why Mormonism succeeds, if we would take a more careful look at the thorough organization of the Mormon church. Nearly two thousand Mormon missionaries are now working in the various parts of the world. Quietly they are visiting from house to house, their personal and persevering methods never relaxing for a moment. With the immense tithing system of the church, there are ample means for the most extensive and far-reaching efforts. It is surprising how all these workers, with nothing but a bare support, are filled with a spirit of intense devotion to the cause, undergoing much hardship and suffering uncomplainingly. Though their doctrine is erroneous, what a lesson they teach in zeal and devotion! "What manner of persons we ought to be," who have been "taught the way of truth more perfectly," and what is the sacrifice we should willingly make?

Encouraging Progress.

It really seems as if the continued pleas for a sane and safe Fourth of July are having a decided effect. Where the headlines of prominent newspapers in other years chronicled the fateful number of the slain and wounded, most of them now report the celebration of the national holiday without a single person either killed or injured. To the newspapers of the land much of the credit for this notable improvement must be ascribed. Whatever city was prevailed upon to prohibit the sale and use of fireworks and dangerous explosives, enjoyed to the fullest measure the blessings of immunity from death or injury, so common under the old-time conditions. "Prohibition of all that portends danger," is the present-day key-note of a "sane and safe Fourth." Why not apply it also to the still more treacherous enticement of the fatal cup which, after deluding its millions, at last "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder"?

Religious Vagaries.

The apostle, in his day, found abundant reason to warn against possible "departures from the faith once delivered to the saints," and his emphatic injunction not to be led astray "by every wind of doctrine," is well worth careful consideration by the people of today. Recently one of the Chicago courts was compelled to scrutinize the life and character of one of these religious (?) pretenders, who, while posing as a promoter of the "absolute life of purity" was shown to be a base deceiver. A word of warning by one of the dailies is well worth the careful consideration of every lover of truth and righteousness: "If the self-styled 'prophet' does not pervert the morals of his deluded followers, he is altogether likely to prey, more or less, upon their property. If the 'would-be' prophet does not seek sensual gratifications, he will be sure to add to his financial resources at the expense of his blinded adherents. The gods of the altars of these 'man-made' creeds are usually to be bought for a price, either of human decency or of money." Christianity, as interpreted by its great Head and Founder, implies sterling character, with no room in prudent, righteous conduct. It is not enough that a man say to Christ, "Lord, Lord," unless he prove his rightful claim by consistent Christian living. One may justly question any phase of religious activity, whose motives to worship imply intense self-indulgence.

Increasing Church Attendance.

In a late issue of the "Gospel Herald," the wide-awake journal of our Mennonite friends, we notice that at one of their preaching points arrangements have been perfected by which a large conveyance brings to church all those who can not otherwise come. This, we understand, is to be a permanent practice—and a good one it is, in our opinion. Wherever the Word of the Lord is preached in its fullness, there, surely, is a rich banquet for hungry souls, and why not make arrangements by which "whosoever will may come"? There are brethren in every congregation who, while not able to minister in spiritual things, are abundantly able to assist in an effort by which people may be enabled to attend services. It is an avenue of usefulness that can be made a valuable factor in many congregations, and especially so during a series of meetings.

Signs of the Times.

When the Roman Pontiff, with his far-extended influence, thinks it worth while to give hearty endorsement to President Taft's world-wide campaign for international peace, and promises his most hearty support, there is abundant reason to feel encouraged. It is a well-established fact that men of prominence everywhere are today espousing the cause of peace who they would not have ventured to do so a decade ago. Another remarkable antiwar tendency is seen in the decreasing number of candidates for the West Point Military Academy. Not many years ago there were dozens of applicants for every vacancy, but now the incoming classes are smaller than they have ever been, and even the most glowing inducements fail to fill the depleted ranks. Somehow the pomp and circumstance of war fail to charm the aspirations of the average young man today. Always we feel sure that the dignity and popularity of the peace movement have effectually dimmed the delusive splendor and glory of shoulder straps and swords?

A National Anti-Tobacco Crusade.

Backed by many of the nation's most prominent men, a league against tobacco smoking was recently formed in New York. The special aim of the movement is to insist upon the enforcement of all public laws, ordinances, rules and regulations against smoking in public and semi-public places, and to cooperate with the Boards of Health, police and other peace officers in the enforcement of these laws. The organization aims to assume nation-wide proportions, and hopes to secure the active cooperation of all persons in control of public buildings, halls, restaurants, hotels, street cars, railway cars, stations, etc., in order to provide a most effective curb of the smoke nuisance. Any one who has been compelled to breathe the foul air of a room overcharged with tobacco smoke, will probably be in hearty sympathy with this or any movement that promises to work a much needed reform. Pure air in abundance is given to man at the hands of the Great Creator. Man, alas, has too often poisoned and defiled this choicest of health-preserving elements.

The Danger of Vast Armaments.

Advocates of vast military armaments are pleased to say that these precautionary measures are the best possible guarantee of peace. Col. Gadke, a noted German military critic, in a recent article, takes the opposite view. He says that large armies may well be called a standing menace to peace. "All Europe," he claims, "appears to have been converted into a great armory in which all the material and national and moral forces are bent to the service of destruction, the bloody struggle for existence. More than 3,500,000 men are under arms day in and day out, withdrawn from peaceful labor and trained only for battle. The eight military powers of the world are expending $2,000,000,000 a year on armies and navies." This, we must remember, is written by a man who is fully conversant with the facts in the case, and the statements submitted are well worth serious consideration. Advocates of peace have a most serious task before them ere the goal of world-wide peace is reached, but, "pressing on towards the mark," they must not become weary, for theirs is the blessing of the Prince of Peace.

Christianity and Health.

"Godliness," we are told, "is profitable in all things" and it is not surprising that the recent testimony of medical experts should prove beyond all doubt that, all things being equal, there is a soothing influence in the Christian religion, tending to improve health and body vigor. Dr. Henry Reynolds, a physician of prominence, asserts that his extensive practice has shown him the value of Christian principles as the best possible preservative of health and vigor. Worry, fear and anxiety, he says, are more exhausting than hard work. He who worries, or fears he may have a disease, is much more likely to have it, as he is thereby weakening his system and rendering it more susceptible to the disease that he fears. Faith, hope, trust, and peace of mind constitute, when properly employed, a powerful protection against diseases of all kinds. Truly, the Christian has many incentives on his earthly pilgrimage,—"a promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

The Impending Struggle in France.

While the people of the United States have problems of their own in their battle against the giant octopus, known as the drink evil, France is awakening to the destructive ravages of "absinthe," an intoxicant rendered still more fatal than ordinary drinks by the addition of the powerful drug from which it derives its name. Forty years ago the amount consumed was of insignificant proportions. Ten years ago the consumption was reported at 5,250,000 gallons, and in spite of determined and heroic endeavors, on the part of Government officials, the quantity still in use is felt to be a national menace. The proposed anti-absinthe bill, which is to take effect at an early date, forbids all importation of absinthe, and provides for the absolute cessation of the sale and manufacture within two years. France, in this respect, is showing commendable energy and determination,—a lesson of value to nations as well as individuals, in the eradication of practices that sap strength and vitality. "Quit you like men; be strong," should be the clarion call to a higher and better life!

A Revival of Righteousness.

A chaplain of the American Congress, in his opening prayer recently, called attention to impending unrest threatening the stability of the republic, closing with the words: "Rouse the rich, O Lord, to understand that the time has come for grinding, selfish monopoly to cease, that corporations may get souls in them with justice, conscience and human kindness." That there is abundant reason for such a petition is well borne out by existing conditions in our cities. A cry of misery and want comes from all directions. In New York City 200,000 women work twelve to fourteen hours a day for fifty cents, and other cities show similar conditions, proportionally. One is made to wonder what the end will be. Remedies have validly been sought to alleviate the deplorable social conditions. Legal enactments, as best, are but palliatives. What we need is a revival of righteousness,—right doing,—within the heart of each citizen,—a conviction that will lead to the recognition of human brotherhood and the responsibility we owe to each other. That is a remedy that can not fail.

Russian Spies at the Philadelphia Conference.

At the recent meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Philadelphia, Pa., there were some representatives in attendance whose presence was neither solicited nor warmly welcomed. Not long after the opening of the Conference it became known that Russian spies were gathering. Possibly the Government had serious misgivings lest Russian intolerance of Baptists, during past years, be unfavorably commented upon by the Alliance, and desired to be fully informed. The Chairman of the Conference, when apprised of the situation, suggested that the utmost care be taken in discussing Russian conditions, in order to save all possible trouble for their brethren in the Czar's domains. The incident also shows the widely-ramified machinations of the Russian secret service, which not only was fully informed as to the importance of the Baptist Alliance Conference at Philadelphia, but sent its representatives thousands of miles to get any possible facts of interest to the administration. A similar zeal in behalf of righteousness and justice to the oppressed people of her realm, would place Russia in the forefront of the world's nations.

The Reaper's Song.

BY B. F. M. SOURS.

I am singing a song of the reaper today,
Of the joy when the toil is done.
I am singing the crown at the end of the way
When the whole of the race is run.
There is toil, there is sweat, there are blistered hands,
There are weary feet, we know;
But the harvester's joy is a worthy joy,
No matter what winds may blow.

I am singing a song of the reaper today,
Of the treasure of golden grain.
The seed was sown, and the months of toil
Brought sunshine and gentle rain.
Hope thrilled, in the lullaby of wealth;
Fear searched for the dangers nigh:
And,—yes, we prayed that the drops would fall,
For the earth was parched and dry.

I am singing a song of the reaper today,
For the time of the joy has come.
Let hearts of glad praises join my song,—
Let the lips of the faithless be dumb.
God rules in the destinies of the field,
And after the summer showers
Do the sunbeams play on a brighter day,
And more beautiful are the flowers.

I am singing a song of the reaper today,
Of the reaper of heavenly grain;
For the figure is true, and the heaven of blue
Is the mirror of life again.
For we pray and we cry, and we wring our hands,
Till the shadows have done their part,
And the sunshine breaks on a fresher world,
And a humbler, a holier heart.

I am singing a song of the reaper today.
Trust to God for the harvest sown.
In the afterwhile, where the garners are,
We shall know as we are known.
And the joy of the reaper, the tides of joy
That bless the glad life below,
Is the trust we have that the blessed Christ
Will gather the seed we sow.

Strange Doctrines.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

WE are admonished by the apostle not to allow ourselves to be "tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the slight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." And, again, we are "not to be carried about (or away) with diverse and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace."

The plain and obvious meaning of the Gospel is that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." That he made an atonement for original sin, and now people are held responsible only for their own sins. To insure pardon of these, faith, repentance and baptism are required and, if complied with, the Holy Spirit will be given as a Light and Guide. This was plainly expressed or implied in every conversion recorded in the New Testament. Compliance with these requirements is necessary to complete the great change called the new birth. "Except ye be born of the water and the Spirit, ye can not enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3: 5). "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Peter 1: 22, 23).

In other words, Christ has laid down conditions by means of which, if complied with, pardon will be given, the promise of eternal life secured. Even a life full of good works and devoted to the keeping of God's commands leaves the individual an "unprofitable servant," so that, after all, it is God's free grace that saves him. No one will be saved by his works, neither will he be saved without them. This is plain, and a "wayfaring man though a fool shall not err therein." Any other view mystifies the plain and simple teaching of the Scriptures, and leads to all sorts of "strange or diverse doctrines."

There is very much teaching extant that is a perfect "Babel," and serves to confuse rather than enlighten, and many books are published and sold cheaply, or distributed freely, that would answer a much better purpose in the stove than in the hands and minds of the people. Some persons, filled with strange notions and a fruitful imagination, will make a hobby of some peculiar notion and exploit it until people become utterly confused. Their doctrine may contain some truth, or have a root in the truth, but contain nothing that is practical. Or it may be just a wild vagary, or be a mere matter of opinion that is supported by scripture that has been wrested, if not tortured, to make it prove what they want. The uninitiated think it must be right because it is supported by the Scriptures. One will have everybody saved because Christ died. His blood cleanses from all sin. Another holds that people will be saved if they "only believe." With another it is "according to your faith." Another holds to grace without any works, or maintains that one may be sanctified at conversion without the possibility of sinning afterward.

One believes that the soul sleeps with the body in the grave; another puts it in a prison in some intermediate state. Some believe in its utter annihilation, while others see it restored to happiness after a time of purging by fire. These, and still other doctrines, may cause us to think and wonder, and if held as private opinions may be innocent. The caution given by the apostle is, "Be not carried away with diverse and strange doctrines." When people are "carried away" from the practical truths and duties of Christianity by any belief, it is being "tossed to and fro, and carried about" to the ruin of the soul.

There is another doctrine of which a hobby is made by many, concerning which some of our ministering brethren need to heed the admonition of the apostle, quoted above. It is the second coming of Christ, and the final consummation of all things. They divide time up into different dispensations or ages, find just what belong to each, and then take up the prophecies and find proof in obscure and irrelevant texts. By reading a suitable meaning into the various figures and reducing the days, weeks and years of prophecy to definite periods, they claim to open the "sealed book of Daniel" and the mysterious symbols of Revelation till the whole subject becomes so clear that the exact time of Christ's coming, the "taking away of the church," the dawn of the millennium, and the resurrection of the dead and the final judgment are set down to a nicety that is fairly entrancing.

These may not be classed as strange doctrines, but they are strangely interpreted. They are construed in a way not intended by their author. At best they deal more with results than they do to attain the results. Christ will surely come. He promised to come. His work seems to demand his coming, and nothing on earth or in the regions of darkness can prevent his coming. But he has told us plainly that we do not know the time. Angels do not know it. He himself does not know, yet some of his professed friends have the unblushing effrontery to set the time and proclaim it abroad and delude enough people to have a fairly good following.

Now people may do all this and feel very happy, shout themselves hoarse and clap their hands into blisters, and yet neglect the salvation of their own souls, and be utterly unprepared for the Savior when he does make his appearance.

And what is true of one "strange doctrine," or a strange way of interpreting any one, is true of all. It is not so much for us to know when Christ will come, or when or how we will be judged as, "Are we prepared?" "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." "Be ye also ready." If there ever will come, to this sin-cursed world, a blissful time when we can live a thousand years without a tempter, we can rest assured of a better chance of admittance if we, here and now, in this day of grace, comply with the conditions of salvation than if we "neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by our Lord and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." "The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night."

The Message of the Blue Myrtle.

BY OMA KARN.

IT was near the close of a beautiful July day, during the summer of 1909, that I stood in a little country cemetery, two miles from North Manchester, Ind., beside a grave,—the resting place of the father of whose love and care my life has been deprived, and of whose earthly existence I have not even the comfort of a memory.

For years this occasion had been longed for. From early youth imagination had pictured this loved spot as lonely and neglected, with no near and dear one to kneel sorrowfully at its side, and no hand to lay upon it the floral remembrances that,—like the spicery, carried to the tomb of Christ by the hands of love,—so plainly tell, that our loved ones are not forgotten, though they have passed from our mortal vision.

The condition imagined would have been very near the real condition, had it not been for something found there. This something was a luxuriant growth of blue myrtle, that covered not only the grave, but the surrounding ground as well, effectually hiding, with its clinging loveliness, the depression of the mound and the lack of loving attention about which I had so troubled. Silently, lovingly, more eloquently than human lips could have done, did this bit of nature speak of life,—life over there, in that beautiful world to which the spirit of the still sleeper in the narrow home, it so beautifully screened and covered, has flown.

Life? Yes, life, eternal life! We deposit the seed; it dies, but it soon reappears in new life. We lay away our dead to molder back to earth again, and the darkness of sorrow settles over our life. But wait! See the brightness of a new day, as it triumphs over the darkness of the night. "From death comes life."

"The grain that seems lost in the earth below,
Will return manifold in the ear
By death comes life—by loss comes gain,
Heaven's joy for a tear—heaven's peace for the pain."

Then, why grieve over the departure of loved ones? Death is not the end of existence. It is only an incident of uninterrrupted life. The grave is not the end of all things. It is the portal that opens into Paradise.

"Death's but a path that must be trod,
If man would ever pass to God."

Death is only the way to Father and home. And what unspeakable joy awaits us there! How completely all the griefs of this life will be compensated by the felicities found there! There partings will not be known. A thousand years will seem as one day, and there we will be growing happier and happier as the ages roll on and on.

Sifting.

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

"And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren" (Luke 22: 31, 32). "And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest."

AFTER teaching his disciples along this line, and showing them who is the really greatest, Christ spoke the solemn words, as given above, to Peter. Peter's name is repeated to show the strong feeling that Christ had for him, as well as solemnly to impress the truth following on his mind. The lesson teaches us that Satan is the adversary of God and man. He falsely accuses God's people day and night, that he might be permitted to destroy them. "The accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night" (Rev. 12: 10). "Your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter 5: 8).

"God's sieve drives away the chaff, and saves the wheat. Satan's sieve saves the chaff, and drives away the wheat.—Van Doren." These few words have a depth of meaning, but all are very true. To destroy the good is Satan's aim. All the trials, temptations, and persecutions, that Satan is allowed to bring upon God's people are intended to toss them to and fro, that they might fall away from faith in God. While Satan sifted Peter, and found some chaff, yet God took care of the wheat. His faith failed not. Christ was his Mediator, and prayed for him.

The reader must ever remember that the Bible often speaks of God doing that which he, in his Divine Providence, permits to be done. We all know that Satan afflicted Job; but in Job 42: 11 we read, "And they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him." Of Christ it is said, "It pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief." God permitted Satan to sift Christ, but he found no chaff in him. Pilate said, "I find no fault in him." False accusations were all that Satan could trump up against Christ. Truly did Christ say, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me." Why, then, did God permit Satan to sift Christ so severely? "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."

This is the chaff that God wanted removed. He wanted to gather the wheat into his garner. God aims to remove and destroy the evil, that he can save and use the good. Satan aims to destroy the good, that he can use the evil. But if God does permit Satan to sift any one, he will surely take care of the good, or wheat. Of course Judas was all chaff, and hence he fell, and "went to his own place." But not so Peter. True, Christ could not use him till the chaff was removed. Christ saw the good in Peter, hence he could pray to God that his faith fail not.

Christ said to Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Some think that Peter was converted when he went out and wept bitterly. Why, then, did the young man tell the women, "Go your way, tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee" (Mark 16: 7)? Christ's piercing look brought conviction to Peter's heart. All admit that Peter was fully converted when Christ gave him the heart sifting of John 21: 15-22. Satan got all the chaff that was in Peter, but God took care of the wheat, and used it for much good. Peter was all the better for this sifting. He did strengthen his brethren.

This is a world of probation. We are on trial now. We will enter on active service in another world. Well might Peter say, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy" (1 Peter 4: 12, 13). Satan is permitted to sift that his purposes might be frustrated, and that his real character as "false accusers," or "devil,"—as Clarke renders 2 Tim. 3: 3, and Titus 2: 3,—might appear to all. From this it appears that all "false accusers" are "devils."

Job's sifting is in line here. "The Lord said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?" Satan then falsely accused Job before God. To frustrate Satan's purpose, and to show his false accusations to all, God permitted him to sift Job severely. But Job came out as gold tried in the fire. Might not Job have said, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me"?

Some of the sorest siftings that Satan inflicts on God's people are through "false apostles, false brethren, and false accusers." Well may Paul say, "In the last days perilous times shall come." They always sift for the "chaff," but labor hard to destroy the "wheat." Surely Peter's assurance was in Christ's words, "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not." Christ is the Mediator, the Intercessor and Advocate of all, while they are being sifted. Might not much wheat be saved if we were all true CHRISTIANS in this line? Only those who obtain the victory over Satan's sifting, can comfort and strengthen those who are being sifted.

We all have our infirmities, but "we have not an high priest which can not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." In him, therefore, we can find the promised "grace to help in every time of need."

May not these be some of the reasons why God permits his people to pass through those fiery trials? God seeks helpers. Are we touched with the feeling of the infirmities of the tempted and tried? At least let us pray more, and condemn less. Wonderful assurance of Amos. 9: 9!

A Practical Example.

BY S. N. M'CANN.

IN 1884 I stopped, for a number of days, with one of our good Pennsylvania Brethren families. They lived in a well-cared for, beautiful country home. They were thrifty, energetic farmers, and in full sympathy and love with the doctrine of the church, as was clearly manifest in their appearance as well as in their conversation. They were intelligent above the average. One of their daughters was a prominent writer for the Brethren literature from the seventies on for a number of years. Our schools were just in their infancy at that time, and while two of the young men wanted an education, the parents did not feel able to send them to college. The young men were especially interested in Bible study, and learning of an endowed institution that offered special privileges to Bible students, they determined to avail themselves of its advantages and special privileges.

They entered with free tuition, free room rent and such other opportunities as an endowed institution holds out to worthy young men. They stuck to the work until they graduated. They came out of the institution as able ministers of the Gospel, but they were lost to the Church of the Brethren. One of them soon took the chair of "New Testament Exegesis" in his "Alma Mater," which he held as a specialist until his death, a few years ago. He has written some excellent works along exegetical lines, which are quoted by exegetes everywhere. The hearts of the father and mother, brothers and sisters were made sad to feel that they had lost the influence of these dear ones in the service of the church they loved.

The father said to me, "If we would have such privileges in our own church, my sons today would be working for the church. I was helpless when the boys determined to have an education and when this was their best opportunity."

If we could read the history of our church's loss for the past fifty years in young men who have been taken from us by money, consecrated to Bible work in endowed seminaries, endowed Bible chairs, and other ways of consecrating money to the work in hand, we would be stirred to action in reference to this kind of work. Our schools can not hope to succeed if they must compete with endowed institutions, without an endowment.

Money invested in such a way as to cause young men to consecrate their lives to the cause we love, to the salvation of the lost, is money saved for the Lord.

Lessons from the History of Jonah.

BY JOHN ZUCK.

JONAH has been assigned a place among the minor prophets, yet there has been as much controversy concerning some of the incidents of his life, as that of any of the prophets. In Old Testament history he is referred to, in 2 Kings 14: 25, as the son of Amittai, the prophet, which was of Gath-hepher. He is referred to as the servant of the Lord God of Israel. Hence we conclude that Jonah was a preacher of righteousness, whom God called out to declare his messages to Israel.

At one time the Lord had a very important message to deliver at Nineveh, a very wicked city, and he chose Jonah as the messenger. As the Lord's preacher, he was not self-authorized. He was called by the Lord, and sent by the Lord. He was given the message and told where and how to deliver it. And this was made so plain that there could be no mistake about it. Jonah may have had some preconceived notions about results, after delivering the message of destruction, for God had undoubtedly manifested his great mercy, especially when men would repent, and so he concluded not to go to Nineveh, as directed by the Lord.

There is quite a contrast between this and what Elijah the Tishbite did, as it is written of him, "So he went and did according to the word of the Lord." He is a faithful preacher, who obeys to the very letter.

But Jonah was derelict,—unfaithful to his charge and hastens down to Joppa. Being prepared for the necessary expenses he pays his own fare, and takes to the trackless sea to Tarshish, instead of following the free land road to Nineveh. His course, and what follows, may serve to illustrate what may befall even the Lord's preacher, when he intentionally tries to evade a plain and clear command of God. Hence we learn:

Departure from duty is not departure from God's control. Jonah premeditatedly intended "to flee from the presence of the Lord." How foolish indeed! The Psalmist, in considering this, breaks forth in these words: "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me and thy right hand shall hold me."

The young man, Saul, learned this to be true, when he tried to hide "among the stuff," when Samuel wanted him, but it was of no avail, neither will it be for you or me, my brother, if we try to evade duty enjoined by the Lord.

Again; we notice that favorable circumstances do not always lead to the desired end. Jonah had the money to travel, and may have reasoned (as preachers now do sometimes), "I may as well use some of my hard-earned cash, and take a vacation, rest up, and recuperate my health, and this sea voyage will be just the thing." True, this is not wrong, if needs be, and by so doing the Lord's preacher is not evading duty, in making a run-away Jonah of himself.

Everything seemed favorable when he got to Joppa. The ship was there, ready to sail, and with fine weather and a smooth prospect was most inviting. However favorable at our start the wrong way may appear, God can soon obstruct the way and cause a halt, and that, too, to our great humiliation.

Notice: "The Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken." Hence a further consideration is:

A departure from God (duty) is more expensive than obedience to God. This fact is shown in other cases: Korah, Dathan and Abiram suffered great loss of life and property for their self-will and disobedience to Moses. Achan was a thorn in Israel's side. But why should the shipmaster and mariners be at such loss of lading of the ship, on account of disobedient Jonah? Notice, they became accessories to Jonah's disobedience by taking him on board and assisting him "to flee from the presence of the Lord." "For the men knew that he fled from the presence of the Lord, because he had told them." The seamen do all in their power to save the ship, by casting out their wares, and, as a last resort, call on their gods, but the storm does not abate.

Think of all this storm, the vessel tossed, the cargo cast out, men crying and calling on their gods, and down in the hold of the ship lay a man fast asleep. Men and even women can sleep in the very face of a preacher, when he is doing his utmost to instruct in the way of the Lord; but for the Lord's preacher to sleep under such conditions, as above referred to, is marvelous. Well did they go to him and say, "What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise, call upon thy God." Then they cast lots, and the fatal choice fell on Jonah. He makes a clean breast of his shortcomings, and confesses, like David, "I am the man that hath sinned." He not only confessed his sin, but became his own judge, and affixed his own sentence,—a dreadful one too, it was,—but apparently the only one that could calm the storm and give relief. He says, "Take me up and cast me into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you."

In this Jonah became a most noble example,—a true preacher of righteousness. Often the old ship Zion gets storm-caught because some disobedient preacher, deacon, or laymember is aboard, that ought to be confessing his error, judging and passing sentence, not upon others, but upon himself, so that the sea might become pacified, and the old ship Zion sail on in safety.

But while Jonah and the mariners were arranging the sacrifice, God was preparing the great fish (of which so much has been said) to demonstrate that salvation is by the way of sacrifice.

That Jonah, by this act, typifies Christ, in being willing to die that others might live, and that he might be a sign of Christ's burial and resurrection, many years hence, seems plausible. During the three days that this great fish had charge of Jonah, the prophet had ample time to consider God's love and power, as well as prayer, fasting and repentance, so he cried "by reason of his affliction" unto the Lord, and pledged himself to "look again toward his holy temple." So Saul of Tarsus was smitten blind, led to Damascus, and for three days engaged in prayer and fasting. He was made a willing ambassador for Christ. God delivers Jonah on dry ground, and delivers to him the same message, as he formerly did.

It is worth our while to remember that God does not change his place of service to suit Jonah. He does not change the message one iota. But the same charge, exactly, is given him: "Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee."

The Lord's preacher must always do this to be faithful, and to meet the approval of the Lord. The Lord's message does not change with the years, the times, the peoples, or the age in which it is to be delivered. When Moses threw down the tables of stone and broke them, he had to go back and place the very same commandments on another set. When that wicked King Jehoiakim reigned in Judah, and had the prophecy of Jeremiah read to him, he became offended at the message, and thought to destroy it by cutting it up piece by piece and throwing it into the fire. But the Lord did not authorize words adapted to his views, but had Jeremiah to dictate, and Baruch the scribe to write, another roll, the very same as that which Jehoiakim had destroyed.

The Lord's preacher must preach what he is bidden. He dare not add to nor take from the perfect law,—the Gospel,—the power of God to the believer.

So Jonah, being made willing, went to Nineveh, and "entered into the city a day's journey, and he cried and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." His preaching soon began to work like leaven hid in the meal. This sea-tanned messenger may have had an uncouth appearance to the city folk, but it was the message rather than the messenger in which they became so intensely interested. A condition very unlike prevails in many places today, where the preacher's appearance, and his ability to entertain are more sought after than to be edified in the ways of the Lord.

Jonah was becoming intensely in earnest, and so were the people. As he went from street to street, proclaiming, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown," the pedestrians halt, gaze, and listen, the shopkeepers are told in their places of business. Merchants, clerks, mechanics,—all rush to the streets to hear this wonderful story of their condemnation and destruction. Domestic life is stirred, business is paralyzed, and the whole city becomes thoroughly aroused, as it is written, "So the people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them. For word came unto the King of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes." He then had published a decree, for fasting and prayer, and that all might repent and turn away from their evil way, that God might turn away from his fierce anger and spare them. The people repented and God spared the city.

While God was pleased, Jonah was grieved, and left the city, angry, moody, and desiring death. He makes himself a booth to protect him from the scorching sun,—a place in which he might await results.

Selfishness is one of the greatest hindrances to spiritual happiness and Christian progress, and this was one fatal characteristic of Jonah. But few are entirely clear of it. Jonah must be taught to think better of humanity, and he must have more love and sympathy for precious souls. And as God prepared a great fish by which he might instruct him, so he prepares a fine gourd, with its palm-like leaves, to grow up and cover his booth, giving it a splendid appearance and a most soothing shade. Jonah was exceeding glad for the gourd.

Ah, how we are when Providence smiles upon us. But earthly joys are fleeting. Job once had occasion to say, "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away." But the patient man further said, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

God prepared a great fish; also a gourd, and now he prepares a worm, and it smote the gourd, and when the sun arose, the gourd withered, and the Lord further prepared a vehement east wind, so that Jonah's head was soon exposed to the scorching rays of the sun. In his agony he says, "It is better for me to die than to live." Then the Lord tells him, "Doest thou well to be angry with the gourd? Thou hast had pity on the gourd, for the which thou hast not labored, neither madest it grow, which came up in a night, and perished in a night: And should I not spare Nineveh, that great city wherein are more than six score thousand persons that can not discern between their right hand and their left hand, and also much cattle?"

Dear reader, these are helpful lessons for you and me. They teach the brevity of all earthly comforts. Earthly pleasures are fleeting. Riches, honor and fame may vanish like the mists of the morning. Very trifling causes may blast our happiness here. Let us set our affections on things heavenly, abide in the love of God, and find permanent and lasting joy and comfort in duty to God and humanity.

"Rebuke."—Micah 4: 3.

BY D. J. BLOCHER.

WHO can deny that the rebuke referred to is not beginning to be administered to the great nations of the earth? Who can not take courage and review their cause with the Lord?

We are living in a wonderful age, though dark with wickedness. We are living in an age when much can transpire in a very few years. We are living, or beginning to live, in an age when a nation may be "born in a day," so to speak. This means much to the faithful. The signs now are beginning to run parallel with the prophet's words.

Brethren, do we look forward in faith to our redemption? Some can see nothing but darkness all around, on account of wickedness everywhere, on account of the present preparations for war and bloodshed. A lost world brought the Lord to this earth the first time. Christ's plan of salvation will, in its onward march, make use of whatever favors his work here, and when the strongest nations of earth begin to plan for the abolition of international wars, we may rest assured that it is of the Lord.

Some will say that such a happy state can not be, at the rate weapons of warfare are manufactured these days. The prophet says that these will be made into pruning hooks and plowshares. Did you ever think that there are not enough weapons in the world today to supply the pruninghooks and plowshares? Inspiration does not tell us all in connection with the great events. It simply deals with some signs which we must accept in faith. It must be a living faith,—a faith that believes and works.

Jesus said on one occasion: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Again he says that when we see commotion and strife we should not be troubled, but rather look up. If, in strife and commotion, we are to look to the Father for redemption, why should we not do so when the good signs are manifesting themselves? The prophet does not say that all wickedness will be put down before this comes to pass, or that the world will first experience some other great change, or that preparation for war by everyone will cease. He simply states what the great nations will do about international strife as a step in a forward move when the Lord will rebuke them.

If we never make a move in the right direction until we are good all over, and have previously laid aside all vestige of evil, we will never make the start. So it is with nations in the direction of national reform and general betterment.

Death of Elder E. W. Stoner.

BY CHAS. D. BONSACK.

SELDOM, in the history of a community, has one man lived so long and labored so faithfully for the church as did Bro. E. W. Stoner, who died at Union Bridge, Md., July 3, 1911. Born July 26, 1833, on a farm about three miles from town, he lived all the seventy-eight years of his life in the immediate vicinity of Union Bridge. But while the community had a large share of his service, it was by no means confined to it.

Bro. Stoner was born of godly parents, both of whom had early united with the Church of the Brethren. With this splendid heritage he began active service for the church early in life. He was baptized in 1855, elected to the ministry in 1861, and ordained to the eldership in 1885. Being much interested in the work of the church, and blessed with good health, his fifty years of the ministry were active up to the recent months of sickness. He never allowed the care and worries of business to interfere with his work for the church. The calls to councils, on committees, funerals, etc., were many, but his enjoyment of ministerial work and his love for the church made him a willing and helpful servant. There are few homes in the community and but few churches in the eastern part of our Brotherhood that he did not, at some time, visit and give words of counsel and exhortation.

Bro. Stoner, as a man, was well poised in judgment and spirit,—not easily excited, patient and thoughtful. Tolerant toward others who differed from him in opinion, yet he was devoted and loyal to the church and her councils. Like all of us, he had his preferences and prejudices, but was always genial and kind. While he seldom laughed heartily, he always carried a smile of friendliness.

While his nature and disposition never made him an aggressive leader in constructive work for the church, yet he possessed keen judgment on the value or danger of a proposition, and every good work had his hearty approval and encouragement. In the beginning of Blue Ridge College, he gave of his means and time, and he always counseled freely with the management, that the best interests of the church and community might be subserved.

Bro. Stoner was well read in the literature of the church. He was a student of conditions and problems with which the church had to do. He was a regular attendant at the Annual Meetings for many years. Frequently he was used in committee work; several times on the Standing Committee. He enjoyed traveling among the churches, and the company of church workers and leaders. All this gave him much experience and knowledge of church polity and of the conditions of the church at large.
